A. It is incorrect in that he wanted to know about the new rules interpretation, how it affected his defenses, some offenses in which we might be found guilty of illegal defenses, and Coach Bryant said that he knew that over the period of the summer that there were some rules changed that had to do with a defense on an end run or something, and I saw it explained on television one night, but I still don't understand it, and that—and that he had tried to get Coach Butts several times to remember exactly what the offense was that would cause the illegal defensive technique to be used.

Q. Did Coach Bryant tell you that he asked Coach Butts to let him know what the offensive techniques were?

[fol. 1556] A. Well, he said that if he did call, and if he did call him back, that this would have been one of the things that he could have talked to him about; he didn't say specifically; no, sir.

Q. Continuing from the letter, the last portion, "And on September 14th he called Coach Bryant and told him." Is that a correct statement?

A. Was there a call on September 14th? I have been so confused about these dates?

Q. I am asking you, sir, if it is a correct statement?

A. I am not sure, but taking that Coach Butts did call Coach Bryant on the 14th, of course, Coach Bryant said this could have been one of the things that he called him about.

Q. Where did the September 14th date come from that is in your letter?

A. Apparently in my notes.

Q. Which were taken in your meeting—

A. With Mr. Aderhold.

Q. Do you recall they used the date September 14th?

A. There was some confusion about it. I think the dates that I had when I got back here were not—not exactly the dates that corresponded with telephone conversations. I mean, with telephone records, but they were close and I didn't know exactly.

Q. Are you saying there was a confusion about the date in the meeting there at Commissioner Moore's office?

A. No, sir. I just wrote down the dates that were given.

Q. Were the dates given to you in that meeting, September 14th?

A. That's the only place I could have gotten it.

Q. Next sentence. "There was a question about another one of the offensive plays of the Georgia team that could [fol. 1557] seriously penalize the Alabama team, and bring on additional injuries to a player. Tell me, did Coach Bryant tell you that?

A. No, sir, but this was one of the things that he tried to explain to me on that end play, and defensive techniques where he said that Lee Roy Jordan would, instead of rushing in would pull out and run out to the end. Now, I don't know what that means, but I did see it explained on a television program, it looked pretty good to me then; but, I still don't know anymore about it.

Q. All right.

Let's go on. "Coach Bryant asked Coach Butts to check on that play, which he did, and called back on September 16th," is that correct?

A. Coach Bryant said that could have been what the call was about, but he wasn't sure. He wasn't even sure he made the call.

Q. That is an incorrect statement, that last statement?

A. Yes, sir, but my best interpretation of what the calls were.

Q. Did Coach Bryant tell you, before this letter was written, that he did not know whether he had made the September 16th call to Coach Butts?

A. He said he didn't remember it, but he said he could have done it.

Q. Did he also say he didn't remember what was discussed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Am I correct in understanding that is what he has told you up to the present time?

A. That is what he told me just recently again.

Q. But, he doesn't remember the calls and he doesn't remember what was said?

A. All he remembers is that they talked many times [fol. 1558] about all of these things, but that he doesn't remember specifically.

Q. Either the call or what was talked about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next sentence.

"It was then that Coach Bryant changes his defenses and invited Mr. George Gardner, head of the Officials of the Southeastern Conference, to come to Tuscaloosa and interpret for him the legality of his defenses." Is that right?

A. That's wrong. He had Commissioner Moore bring Gardner here before.

Q. Is it correct that he changed his defenses?

A. He said that he and his coaches decided that they had better change some of their techniques.

Q. So that the word defenses should be defenses techniques?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also correct the date of Mr. Gardner's visit?

A. Yes, sir. I believe that was sometime in August, but I am not sure about that.

Q. That would explain then the next sentence where you say this, "This Mr. Gardner did the following week." That's also incorrect?

A. Yes, sir, but I want to say this; that Coach Bryant wasn't even clear in his own mind about that.

Q. All right.

"The defenses were changed, and Coach Bryant was grateful to Coach Butts for calling this to his attention."

Is that a correct statement?

A. I asked him, well, do you think that you got anymore information from him? He said, well, there is no doubt it has been most helpful and that anytime you do not get yourself penalized or any boy is hurt, all coaches are concerned about players, and their being hurt. And he went on to talk about how unfortunate it was that Chuck Granning [fol. 1559] had gotten hurt and his concern about it, and his concern about his own boys.

Q. Well, is the statement, the defenses were changed, and Coach Bryant was grateful to Coach Butts for calling this to his attention; is that correct?

A. The defensive technique, but the statement like it is is not exactly correct.

Q. It should be defensive techniques?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With that addition, it would be correct?

A. My interpretation of what Coach Bryant was stating to me, yes.

Q. That would be correct as you understood Coach Bryant to tell you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next sentence.

"Coach Bryant informs me that calling this to his attention may have favored the University of Alabama Football team, but that he doubts it seriously", is that correct?

A. This was after an interrogation like you are giving me that I just kept pressing him on it, but Coach Bryant had every confidence that while he was glad there wasn't any penalties or any serious penalties in the game, and no public criticism of the game in terms of what the sportswriters over there called hard-nose football and roughness, that he didn't need any information to beat the University of Georgia.

Q. Well, was it correct that Coach Bryant informed you that calling this to his attention may have favored the University of Alabama Football team, but he doubts it seriously?

A. Yes, sir; that's correct.

Q. Next sentence. "He, meaning Coach Bryant, did say that it prevented him from using illegal plays after the new change of rules." Is that correct?

[fol. 1560] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, skipping down, I see we are getting on to your deadline.

You say, "Dr. Aderhold, this continues to be a serious matter with me, and if you have any additional information, I would appreciate your furnishing me with it as I am not only anxious to work with you, but to satisfy my own mind."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Doctor, several times during the course of your previous testimony you indicated that you feel you could write a better letter or clearer letter after having the benefit of talking to people and understanding the matter better?

A. Yes, sir, but I still don't think, sir, that I could write a legal document on it, or anything that would prove any points in court or have any substantial changes. I think in that letter I have conveyed to Dr. Aderhold that I have looked into the accusations that he has made, and that I cannot find the evidence that he was looking for and that there was no rigging or fixing that football game.

Q. Are you saying that you couldn't write a clearer letter of March 6th?

A. I think I could write a more correct letter and use better terminology, but I still don't think that I could write a letter that you couldn't sit there, as a legal mind, and pick to pieces, because I haven't had any legal training. I am not a scientific football coach. My field is philosophy and theology. That's the reason I have members of the staff to take care of these departments.

Q. Coach Bryant ever admitted to you that he did call Coach Butts on September 16, 1962?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1561] Q. Did he ever admit to you what he talked about on that date, September 16, 1962?

A. No, sir, but he did tell me that he could have called him and this could have been what they talked about; but, he didn't know for sure.

Mr. Runzer: Excuse me. Off the record.

(Off the record discussion.)

Q. Doctor, before we stop, you are aware that we asked for your calendar book and some of your checks?

A. Yes, sir. Here it is, and here are my checks. I will need those checks for income tax purposes.

Q. I was going to suggest, and in view of your time deadline, if the Court Reporter photostats that material, we won't have to have those and could return those to you.

Mr. Pritchard: Perfectly willing to do so.

A. How do we handle it?

Mr. Pritchard: Give it to him right now.

A. This is all I have got.

Q. Doctor, just a few more infamous questions. This trip that commenced on the morning of March 5th, do you have any idea how long it took?

A. No, sir, I don't. I can't tell you exactly.

Q. Do you know how you travelled?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know where you went?

A. I am not sure where I went.

Q. Where do you think you went? What is your best recollection?

A. That has to be confidential.

[fol. 1562] Mr. Bennett: Could we go off the record?

Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Q. Doctor, is it my understanding, from your off the record statement, that these—this trip had nothing to do with the Butts-Bryant incident?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you consider the matters that you discussed and the people you discussed them with confidential?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Q. Dr. Rose, where did you go when you left the University on the morning of March 5th?

Mr. Bennett: Now, at that point, you have been advised by me that you are free to refuse to answer on the grounds that your trip had nothing at all to do with the matter at issue and involves your confidential relationship as President of the University of Alabama.

Q. You do so refuse to answer on that basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who did you see on that trip?

Mr. Bennett: Same advice.

A. I refuse to answer that,

[fol. 1563] Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Q. How long did the trip take?

Mr. Benhett: Same objection, and can you just repeat the same grounds for refusal each time?

Mr. Runzer: And you do refuse to answer on advice of counsel?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were your expenses reimbursed to you through the University for these trips?

A. No, sir.

Q. You absorb them yourself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the means of transportation you used?

Mr. Bennett: Same objection.

A. I don't believe I will answer that.

Mr. Bennett: Same grounds.

Q. You refuse to answer?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you recall the name of the places that you went to?

Mr. Bennett: Same advice and same grounds.

A. I refuse to answer.
[fol. 1564] Q. Will you tell us the name of the Hotel or Motel where you stayed—

Mr. Pritchard: Same objection.
Mr. Runzer: I would appreciate it—
Mr. Pritchard: We object to it.
Mr. Runzer: I would appreciate it—
Mr. Pritchard: You have got enough to test your question, go ahead.
Mr. Runzer: I—
Mr. Bennett: Let the record show he refuses to answer on the same grounds.
Mr. MacLeod: Let him finish.
Mr. Pritchard: I object to it.
Mr. Runzer: Not in the middle of my question.
[fol. 1565] The Witness: When you present this to the judge, will we have an opportunity to present—
Mr. Pritchard: We will be right there, don't worry.
The Witness: Will this be a public hearing or can you get—
Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Mr. Bennett: If we can make certain, back on the record, that he refused to answer the last question on the same grounds that we resaid it before.

Q. Doctor, I would just like to go briefly into the background of your relationship with Mr. Bryant prior to his coming to the University, that is, the University of Alabama. When did you first meet him?
A. The first year that he became President of the University of Kentucky.

Q. The first year he became President?

A. I mean, Coach at the University of Kentucky and I believe that was 1946 or '47.

Q. Did you meet him in a business way?

A. No, sir, at a social gathering at a country club.

Q. Did a personal relationship develop out of this meeting?

A. No close personal relationship. I knew him and went to his ballgames and would see him from time to time and we had mutual friends.

[fol. 1566] Q. Did you ever entertain he and his wife in your home?

A. No, sir.

Q. He and his wife ever entertain you in their home?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you continue to have a relationship with him when he went to Texas A & M?

A. No, sir.

Q. Ever correspond with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you meet him during that period?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, am I correct that you are responsible for bringing him to the University as football coach?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long had you been President when he arrived?

A. I was elected President on September 5th, 1957, and I made trips down every week to the University, but I remained on as President of Transylvania until December 10th, I believe it was, of 1957, as President of Transylvania. Then, I made trips back and forth from here and made administrative decisions, and during this period I obtained the resignation of the coaching staff and assumed the responsibility of employing a new coach and Athletic Director and coaching staff. I employed him on December 1st, 1957, effective January 1, 1958.

Q. And where was he employed at the time you secured him, do you know?

A. Texas A & M at College Station, Texas.

Mr. Runzer: Doctor, you can make your plane.

A. Bless your heart.

[fol. 1567] Mr. Pritchard: Thank you all.

Civil Action No. 63-166

PAUL BRYANT, Plaintiff,

CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, a Corporation, Defendant.

Filed February 28, 1964

Continued Deposition of Dr. Frank Anthony Rose, resumed in the above-styled cause on the 17th day of January, 1964, commencing at 3:45 p.m. at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, pursuant to recess of said deposition on the 8th day of January, 1964, and following the order of the Honorable H. H. Grooms, District Judge, pertaining to the examination of said witness.

APPEARANCES

Mr. Winston McCall, of the firm Pritchard, McCall & Jones, Frank Nelson Building, and Mr. Francis Hare, Sr., of the firm Hare, Wynn, Newell & Newton, City Federal Building, Birmingham, Alabama, for the Plaintiff.

[fol. 1569] Mr. Eric Embry, of the firm Beddow, Embry & Beddow, 2121 Building, Birmingham, Alabama, for the Defendant.

Mr. James Bennett, Attorney at Law, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, appearing for the witness.

Reported by Jerry L. Rotruck

Deposition

FRANK ANTHONY ROSE, recalled as a witness, being by me duly sworn to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, was examined and testified as follows:

Examination by Mr. Eric Embry:

Q. To refresh your recollection, Doctor, going back to the occasion of the prior questioning—you have a copy of that I see that Mr. McCall is giving to you—at page 138 of the deposition which was on the 8th day of January of this year—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —you were asked this question: "This trip that commenced on the morning of March 5, do you have any idea how long it took", and I believe you answered, "No, sir, I don't. I cannot tell you exactly."

"Q. Do you know how you traveled", and you answered, "No, sir."

Now, you previously answered you did not know where you went on this occasion, is that correct, sir?

A. Now, where are you on here, what page?

Q. 138.

A. 138.

[fol. 1570] Q. The last—

A. Yes.

Q. —complete answer on that page.

A. I am not sure where I went.

Q. I want to pick up there, if I may.

A. All right.

Q. Do you have any recollection, Dr. Rose, of where you went on that date on March 5th?

A. Mr. Embry, I don't know what legal term or what a lawyer means by "recollection." If you are talking about a guess, I can make a guess. I have done everything I can from checking my notes, notebook, my wife's notebook and talking with members of my staff trying to ascertain exactly where I went that day.

Q. Have you been able to determine in order to form any recollection of your own as to where you did go on that date?

A. I wouldn't say recollection, but if you want me to guess, I can guess where I went.

Q. Well, if you define your best recollection as a guess it is all right with me, just whatever any of us can draw upon in our minds or intellects as we best recall what we did and when we did it. That is the context I am asking you this in.

A. Yes, sir. I would guess that I went to Montgomery.

Q. Montgomery, Alabama?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, on that occasion do you know how you traveled? Do you have any recollection as to how you traveled?

Mr. McCall: We object.

[fol. 1571] Mr. Bennett: At this time, Dr. Rose, I would advise you that as I remember the order of the court at the hearing of this week on this matter it extended only to the question of your recollection as to where you went, not as to mode of transportation or who you saw or where you stayed, but to what city did you go?

By Mr. Embry:

Q. I don't interpret it that way. Of course, this is a matter that would probably be some point of contention between the attorneys in the case, but my understanding of the intent of the judge's order is that if you do have any recollection of where you went that I am permitted reasonable bounds of inquiry as to place, time and situation in order to identify the places you may have been.

A. I have not found out any information that would tell me definitely where I was that day, but I am having to guess at it, and I would guess that it was Montgomery.

Q. Do you have anything to which you can make reference to refresh your recollection, an appointment calendar?

A. I had an appointment calendar. You have it now.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. There was not anything there.

Q. Do you have any other thing of that nature that would serve to refresh your recollection?

A. No, sir. I have tried to find everything that I possibly could.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to who accompanied you?

A. No, sir.

Mr. McCall: Objection.

[fol. 1572] The Witness: I would have to guess at that. I just don't know.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do you have a recollection whether or not you, on advice of counsel, are willing to disclose? Do you have any recollection as to what mode of transportation you used?

Mr. McCall: I object on the ground it is repetitious.

Mr. Embry: I am asking if he has a recollection. I am not asking what it is.

Mr. McCall: I object on the grounds it is repetitious. You asked do you know how you traveled and he answered no, sir, on page 138, and I object on the grounds it is a repetitious question and it has already been answered in the record.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. You have had an opportunity, I assume, between the 8th and today, as you have stated, to check references in order to refresh your recollection.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in light of that I am asking you whether you do have any recollection, not what your recollection is, but whether you have a recollection as to what mode of transportation you used.

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. You do not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whom you saw on the occasion of the visit?

Mr. Bennett: At this point I would advise you that as [fol. 1573] I understand the direction of the court on this particular part of the motion being heard filed by counsel for the plaintiff that you are not required to answer that question.

Mr. Embry: Do you decline on the advice of your attorney to answer.

Mr. McCall: We further object on behalf of the plaintiff on the grounds it goes beyond the scope of the examination and is contrary to the specific instructions of Judge Grooms.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. I just want to know if the Doctor declines to answer on the advice of this attorney, Mr. Bennett?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to the places, physical places—

Mr. Bennett: As to this point again—

By Mr. Embry:

Q. —at which you visited.

Mr. Bennett: At this point again I would advise that you have the right to decline to answer under the ruling of Judge Grooms for the same reasons outlined in the earlier advice to you.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do I take it that upon such advice to you that will be your answer and that you will decline?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any recollection whether you stopped at a hotel or motel or a place of lodging on that occasion?

Mr. Bennett: If I might make a short rendition, you are advised as to the same question for the same reasons.

[fol. 1574] By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do I take it that upon such advice you should not answer say it and I will take that is your answer to decline to answer us.

A. All right.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whether you visited any dining establishments or a restaurant on that occasion?

Mr. Bennett: Your advice is the same for the same reason.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do you have any recollection whether you had occasion to stop at a filling station or such a place as a filling station?

Mr. Bennett: Your advice is the same for the same reason.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Or any other place of public service?

Mr. Bennett: Same advice.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whether you visited any state offices of the State of Alabama on that occasion, and, if so, do you have a recollection of what offices you visited?

Mr. Bennett: Your advice is the same for the same reasons, Dr. Rose.

By Mr. Embry:

Q. Do you have any recollection of the names and identities of any persons you saw on that occasion?

Mr. Bennett: Your advice is the same for the same reason, Dr. Rose, that this was a content of a hearing of earlier this week.

[fol. 1575] Mr. Embry: We will conclude on that.

Further deponent saith not.

APPEARANCES:

Mr. William S. Pritchard and Mr. Winston B. McCall, of the firm Pritchard, McCall & Jones, Frank Nelson Building, Birmingham, Alabama, appearing for the plaintiff.

[fol. 1578] Mr. James Runzer, of the firm Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, 123 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Mr. Roderick MacLeod, Jr., of the firm Beddow, Embry & Beddow, 2121 Building, Birmingham, Alabama, appearing for the defendant.

Mr. James J. Bennett, University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, appearing for Mrs. Park.

I, Carmen Zegarelli, Court Reporter and Notary Public, State of Alabama-at-Large, Acting as Commissioner, certify that on this date as provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States District Court and the foregoing stipulation of counsel, there came before me at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, beginning at 2:00 p.m., Mrs. Marian H. Park, witness in the above cause, for oral examination, whereupon, the following proceedings were had and done:

MARIAN H. PARK, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Examination by Mr. Runzer:

Q. Mrs. Park, I am going to ask you questions, if you don't understand me, because my voice is starting to fail, if you don't hear me, stop me and make me ask it again. I want you to understand my questions before you begin to answer it.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Bennett, who represents you, has said that you will waive the signing of this deposition; is that correct?

A. What does that mean, Mr. Bennett?

[fol. 1579] Mr. Bennett: That means that you not require the deposition to be sent back to you for you to read and does not require your signature.

The Witness: Well, the last deposition was sent back to me.

Mr. Bennett: The other deposition that was taken today the same stipulation has been entered into and I just advise you to accept it.

The Witness: All right, I do.

Mr. MacLeod: We have the same stipulation and agreement as to objections that we had with Dr. Rose's deposition, that is, that it is not necessary at this time to state objections to questions except as to form of the questions.

Mr. Pritchard: Yes.

Mr. Runzer: And any objections can be made as appropriate at the time of the deposition is used.

Mr. Pritchard: That's agreeable.

Q. Would you give us your full name, please, ma'am.

A. Marian H. Park.

Q. Are you Dr. Rose's personal secretary?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1580] Q. Now, I understand you have brought with you today your notebook containing the letters that were dictated to you somewhere in the vicinity of March 4, 5 and 6 of 1963; is that correct?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you located in that book the notes of a letter dated March 6, 1963, addressed to Dr. Aderhold, President of the University of Georgia?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you open to those notes, please. Now, does your notebook indicate the day on which it was dictated?

A. Yes, it does. That is about the fifth letter on March 5th.

Q. Does your notebook indicate the time of the day it was dictated?

A. No, sir, it does not.

Q. Are you able to figure, from going back through your notebook, the time that it was dictated?

A. No, sir, I cannot.

Q. Do you have any independent recollection of the time of day it was dictated?

A. No, sir, I just can't recollect.

Q. Do you recall the letter being dictated?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Did it strike you as an unusual letter when you took it?

A. Well, the only thing unusual about it was that Dr. Rose asked that it be confidential, which I have in my notes here, and that it be mailed as soon as possible.

Q. Do you recall whether Dr. Rose and you had any conversation about the letter either before, during or after the dictation?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not recall?

A. We did not have any.

[fol. 1581] Q. Would you read the stenographer the notes as you have them there?

A. Yes, I will.

Dr. O. C. Aderhold, President.
University of Georgia.
Athens, Georgia.

Dear Dr. Aderhold:

I have spent a great deal of time investigating thoroughly the questions that were raised at our meeting in Birmingham and have talked with Coach Bryant at length on two occasions and as best I can ascertain this is the information that I have received.

Coach Butts has been serving on the Football Rules Committee and at a meeting held last summer of the Rules Committee the defenses used by Coach Bryant, Louisiana State University, and Tennessee, were discussed at length and new rules were drawn up that would severely penalize these three teams unless the defenses were changed, particularly on certain plays.

Coach Butts had discussed this with Coach Bryant and the two were together at some meeting and Coach Butts had told Mr. Bryant that the University of Georgia had several plays that would severely penalize the Alabama team and not only would cause Leroy Jordan, an Alabama player, to be expelled from the game, but it could severely injure one of the offensive players of the Georgia team.

Coach Bryant asked Coach Butts to let him know what the plays were and on September 14th he called Coach Bryant and told him. There was a question about another [fol. 1582] one of the offensive plays of the Georgia team that could seriously penalize the Alabama team and bring on additional injury to a player and Coach Bryant asked Mr. Butts to check on that one and he did. Just a moment. Check on that one and he did call back on September—wait just a minute. To check on that one and he did and called back on September 16th. It was then that Coach Bryant—this is a new paragraph.

It was then that Coach Bryant changed his defenses and invited Mr. George Gardner, head of the officials of the Southeastern Conference, to come to Tuscaloosa and interpret for him the legality of his defenses which Mr. Gardner did the following week. The defenses were changed and Coach Bryant was grateful to Coach Butts for calling this to his attention.

Coach Bryant informs me that calling this to his attention may have favored the University of Alabama football team but that he doubts it seriously. He did say that it prevented him from using illegal plays after the new changes of rules.

I have checked into other matters that were discussed and can find no grounds for Mr. Bisher's accusation and as I understand it he too has decided for lack of information to drop the matter.

Dr. Aderhold, this continues to be a serious matter with me and if you have any additional information I would appreciate your furnishing me with it as I am not only anxious to work with you but to satisfy my own mind.

Thanking you for coming to Birmingham to meet with me and for sharing this information I am

[fol. 1583] Most cordially yours

Frank A. Rose.

Mr. Runzer: Now, Mr. Reporter, would you read that back to Mrs. Park so she will be certain of her transcription, and will you follow his reading against your notes so there is no mistake talking about the same letter.

(Whereupon, said letter was re-read by the reporter to the witness.)

Q. Did Mr. Zegarelli read back the letter the way it is contained?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. At several points punctuation is indicated in your notes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was dictated?

A. No, sir.

Q. Those were your additions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the paragraphing also your addition?

A. I don't recall, sir. Sometimes he dictates paragraphs and sometimes I use my own judgment in making the paragraphs.

Q. You recall this letter being dictated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it a—did it strike you he was dictating easily or was it a letter he was struggling with?

A. Well, Dr. Rose always dictates very slowly and thoughtfully and I don't recall having the feeling that he was struggling with it.

Q. Would you say there was anything different about [fol. 1584] his manner of dictation with this letter than any other letter that he writes?

A. No, sir, I don't think so.

Q. Now, did I understand you to say that he told you he wanted this letter to go out as soon as possible?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he also tell you to check with Mr. Bryant before the letter went out?

A. Yes, sir, he did.

Q. Do you recall that you started transcribing it right away or did something else transpire?

A. No. I apparently did not, because the letter was dated March 6th.

Q. Now, does your book indicate that other letters were dictated to you on the 5th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many more letters after this one?

A. May I count them?

Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

(Off the record discussion.)

A. Twenty-seven.

Q. Twenty-seven after this letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this was the fifth letter he dictated that day?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be 32 letters that were dictated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall how long it took to dictate those letters?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Can you give me any estimation from your notes how long it would take, in your best estimate, a matter of hours? [fol. 1585] A. Well, I would say between maybe an hour and an hour and a half.

Q. Were they dictated in one long session or was he interrupted?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Do you recall how long he stayed in the office after the letters were dictated?

A. No, sir, I don't. I just don't recall.

Q. Did he tell you any of these other letters had to be gotten out right away?

A. I don't have any indication on my notes and don't recall.

Q. Would you ordinarily write on your notes if he told you that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is the only letter that was dictated to go out in a hurry; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you remember the time of day on March 5th it was dictated?

A. I assume that it was in the morning.

Q. Well, now, ma'am, when you say assume, do you recall?

A. No, I do not recall, except that Dr. Rose usually dictates first thing in the morning.

Q. In other words, it is his usual custom to dictate then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he plan to be out of the office that day?

A. The best of my knowledge, he left the office.

Q. When did he return?

A. Now, I did not see him on the 6th. He could have possibly have been in the 7th; I just don't recall.

Q. Any letters in your book indicating letters on March 4th?

[fol. 1586] A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many letters did he dictate on March 4th?

Mr. Runzer: Let the record show that the witness is referring to her stenographic notebook.

A. Twenty-six.

Q. Now, when is the next dictation after March 5th?

A. March 14th.

Q. Could you show me where you indicate the date on your book?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 3/5/63?

A. It will either be right here or here (indicating).

Q. And you put that on each page?

A. No, I do not, just when I start the dictation.

Q. And you do not make other entries of the date until the date changes?

A. That's correct.

Q. Do you recall where the doctor went on March 5th?

A. I do not.

Q. Did he not tell you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, was the letter dictated in this office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dr. Rose was seated in the chair where you now are?

A. That's correct.

Q. And you don't recall how long it took you to get to the transcription?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Did you start on the letter to Dr. Aderhold first?

A. I don't recall.

Q. In any event, you did ultimately begin to transcribe it?

[fol. 1587] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read the letter back to Dr. Rose after it was dictated?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Does he ever ask you to read letters back to him?

A. Very seldom.

Q. Now, where did you transcribe the letter?

A. At my desk.

Q. Which is in the next room here?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Is it still the same desk now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Same typewriter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the exception of whatever age was done in the last six months it is exactly as it was at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You typed it from the notes you just read?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the day you transcribed it?

A. Well, the letter is dated the 6th. Our mail is picked up here in this office around four o'clock in the afternoon. Occasionally I will transcribe letters after the mail is picked up and date them for the next day because they won't go out until then; I can't remember.

Q. So, based on your custom it would have either been transcribed after four o'clock on the afternoon of the 5th or sometime during the day of the 6th?

A. That's correct.

Q. Can you explain if it was dictated to you in the morning why it took so long?

A. I can't, unless I had something to do in here in the office.

Q. You can't recall why it took you so long?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1588] Q. When the letter was transcribed, I assume you proofread it for typographical errors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall that?

A. No, it's just habit.

Q. Did the letter have to be retyped?

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Do you think you could recall it if you had to?

A. I doubt it.

Q. When you proofread, do you proofread for grammar, punctuation or spelling, or do you try to improve Dr. Rose's syntax?

A. As far as I am capable, I try to send out a letter that is grammatically correct and correct in context.

Q. Did you make any changes in this letter?

A. Not that I remember, no.

Q. Now, did you show the transcribed letter to anyone?

A. I may have shown it to Mr. Bennett, but I can't say that I actually did. Occasionally if there is a letter—for instance, I couldn't get in touch with Coach Bryant, I knew a letter had to go out, I might have shown it to Mr. Bennett; I don't recall.

Q. You do not recall whether you did that or not?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether Mr. Bennett made any changes in the letter?

A. I know of no changes that were made in the letter.

Q. Anyone make any changes in the letter?

A. No, sir.

Q. When you transcribed this from your notes, you attempted to get in touch with Coach Bryant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By telephone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were not able to do so?

[fol. 1589] A. No, sir.

Q. Who did you talk to, do you know?

A. No, sir, just the girl who answers the phone in the Athletic Department.

Q. Were you informed where he was?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you informed how long he would be away?

A. I probably did inquire.

Q. So, then, after you were informed you couldn't get in touch with Coach Bryant, you may have shown it to Mr. Bennett?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You showed no one else?

A. No, sir.

Q. No one including yourself made any changes in the letter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was the letter that went out dated March 6th that I show you which was attached as Defendant's Exhibit 8 to your previous deposition, look that over, is that a copy of a letter that you typed up and sent out?

A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. Now, Dr. Rose has told us that he had to leave in a hurry. So, I assume he didn't dictate any first draft or anything of that nature?

A. No, sir.

Q. The letter was typed up in final form?

A. Yes, sir. Now, right here I notice I made two sentences here. Occasionally he will dictate long involved sentences and I will cut it down into two shorter sentences and I may have done that in this first paragraph.

Q. You would do that when you transcribe the letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As you read from your notes, part of your secretarial job is to make slight changes necessary in grammar?

[fol. 1590] A. Yes, sir.

Q. No first draft or anything shown to anyone on this letter?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are absolutely certain?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The letter was sent out presumably the 6th, that's the date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I presuppose no copy was made of this letter?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is usual procedure here to make copies of letters, isn't it?

A. Usually.

Q. Any specific reason why no copy was made in this case?

A. None, except Dr. Rose told me not to make a copy.

Q. In other words, the reason you did not make a copy was because Dr. Rose told you not to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it had been left to you, you would have made a copy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you retain any copy of this letter in your file?

A. No, sir.

Q. And so I am perfectly clear, this represents what you typed up from your notes?

A. It does.

Q. No one made any changes?

A. No, sir.

Q. No one read over any draft and dictated a new version?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you read any over, any draft, and retype it?

[fol. 1591] A. No, sir. I say that, I don't recall, but I just never do that.

Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Mr. Pritchard: We are going to object to encumbering this record with any letters in that notebook saving except they be letters that shed some light on the controversy here or that would be material evidence in the trial of this cause.

Mr. Bennett: Off the record.

Q. In the course of those other 31 letters that were dictated on March 5th, is there any other letters to an individual which would relate to the so-called Butts-Bryant affair?

A. I see none other except one addressed to Bernie Moore, Commissioner Moore of the Southeastern Conference in which Dr. Rose informs him that: I got in touch with Coach Bryant in Washington and he informs me that he can meet with us on Tuesday, March 12, at 10:00 a.m. in my office. I sincerely hope that this meets with your schedule.

Q. Excuse me. Did you just recite the actual wording from your notes?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you repeat it, I missed it.

Mr. Bernie Moore
Commissioner
Southeastern Conference
[fol. 1592] Redmont Hotel
Birmingham, Alabama

My dear Bernie:

I got in touch with Coach Bryant in Washington and he informs me that he can meet with us on Tuesday, March 12, at 10:00 in my office. I sincerely hope that this meets with your schedule.

Looking forward to seeing you soon, I am

Most cordially,

Q. Did you try to get in touch with Coach Bryant in Washington the day this letter was dictated?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Well, I would like to place in the record the addresses of the other letters that were dictated on the date of March 5th.

Mr. Bennett: Marian, at this point, I am going to advise you that if your testimony would show that none of those other letters are related to the Bryant-Saturday Evening Post matter, you can refuse to testify on the ground that it is not related to the matter at issue.

Mr. Runzer: Of course, we take the position that the discovery of this correspondence may give us some indication of Dr. Rose's whereabouts which is of issue in the case.

Mr. Pritchard: And further we want to object on the grounds it is purely prejudicial. Sheds no light on the con- [fol. 1593] troversy here and Dr. Rose's private correspondence which in no way relates to the controversy here and would not be material in any sense of the word, we object to going into his private and personal business which in no way is concerned with the trial of this cause.

Mr. Bennett: My advice was based on the assumption that this other correspondence is not related to this matter and I assume that is the same basis of your objection.

Mr. Pritchard: Exactly.

Mr. Bennett: Then my advice still stands.

The Witness: That the only letters that relate to this case—

Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Q. Will you state the names of the addressees of the other letters that Dr. Rose dictated on the day of March 5th?

Mr. Pritchard: We re-interpose the same objection and I advise you that you certainly don't have to answer the question unless the Court tells you to.

Mr. Bennett: I advise you can refuse to answer this [fol. 1594] question on the ground that your testimony would not bear any relationship to the matter at issue.

Mr. Pritchard: Purely a private correspondence of Dr. Rose. It is not fair for us to question with whom he is corresponding.

Q. Would you read from your notes the body of the 30 other letters that were dictated on March—

Mr. Bennett: Once again I advise you can refuse to answer this question on the ground that your response would bear no relationship to the matters at issue and are concerned with the private business of Dr. Rose as President of the University.

Q. Would those letters, when transcribed, show the date of their transcription?

Mr. Bennett: You can answer the question.

A. Yes, they would.

Q. All right. Now, I will ask you to produce the transcribed copies of those letters.

Mr. Bennett: Once again, I advise you you can refuse to produce the transcribed copies of the 31 other letters on the ground they have no bearing on the matter at issue and only concern Frank Rose as President of the University.

Q. Do you have available a copy of the letter of Mr. Moore that you previously read from?

Mr. Bennett: You can answer.

A. Yes, sir, I do.

[fol. 1595] Q. Do you have any objection to showing us that?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Runzer: Let the record show that the witness is leaving the room to obtain a copy of the letter.

(Witness leaves room.)

Mr. Runzer: Let's identify the notes as Defendant's Exhibit 1, and we will make this two. Mr. Reporter, would you mark the notebook as Defendant's Exhibit No. 1 to Mrs. Park's deposition?

Mr. Bennett: Now, let's go off the record, if I might.

Mr. Runzer: Sure.

Q. Mrs. Park, you were subpoenaed to bring here today your notebook. Is that the notebook in front of you?

A. It is.

Q. Would you hand it to me, please, ma'am?

Mr. Bennett: I will advise you that you can refuse to hand to him the full notebook providing your testimony would show that only the two letters previously referred to have any bearing on the matters at issue and that the others are concerned with the other responsibilities and private affairs of Dr. Rose.

Mr. Pritchard: And I want to suggest to you, in view of [fol. 1596] the attorney's attitude about it to take it away, it would be a mistake on your part to hand it to him and I will so tell the Judge.

Q. Do you refuse to give me the book that has been subpoenaed?

Mr. Bennett: I advise you that you have the right, if you choose to do so, and I have advised you on the ground which you refuse to do so.

The Witness: Just the two letters that concern this case, the one to Dr. Aderhold and the one to Commissioner Moore.

Q. Have you looked through that entire book? Can you state here and now that those are the only two letters that concern the Butts-Bryant incident?

A. I have looked through the transcription of the fourth and the fifth. The next date is the 14th. I have not looked at that.

Q. Have you looked at any time preceding the 4th?

A. I believe that's the first transcription in the book.

Q. And you do not refuse on the advise of counsel to hand me that book that was subpoenaed here today?

Mr. Bennett: You have that right under my advice to you.

A. Except for the two letters, I refuse to do so.

Q. Will you hold the book, since it's been subpoenaed, I ask you to hold it until the judge makes a determination.

A. Yes, sir, indeed I will.

Q. And you will see that no one else will take it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where will you keep it?

A. I will lock it in my desk.

[fol. 1597] Mr. Runzer: Off the record.

Mr. Runzer: And you refuse us the right to mark the exhibit, Exhibit 1, not to look at, but have it marked?

Mr. Bennett: At this point I would remind you of your right to refuse to offer the entire notebook in response to the question based on the assumption that the entire book would reveal the only two letters that you have testified to. If you are not certain of that and you cannot state that your testimony would so show, you should now examine the letters from the 14th on in order to make certain that the position you have taken, that you refuse to produce the entire notebook is well taken.

Mr. Pritchard: And I suggest you do it now.

Mr. Bennett: Let the record show that she is now examining that portion of her notebook from March 14th, '63, to the end.

The Witness: This is a letter here, Mr. Bennett, that Dr. Rose received expressing confidence in Coach Bryant.

Mr. Bennett: Any response to that sort of letter?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

[fol. 1598] Mr. Bennett: That is a letter related to the Coach Bryant-Saturday Evening Post affair which will be the third one.

Mr. Runzer: Will you permit her to testify to that, details of that letter?

Mr. Bennett: I wouldn't advise her not to, no, sir.

Q. What is the date of that letter?

A. I should put it on every page, shouldn't I? I think it is the 22nd. The 22nd of March.

Q. 1963?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is the letter addressed to?

A. Dr. Harold G. Martin Minister
Mount Vernon Methodist Church
2400—24th Avenue North, Box 5281
Birmingham 7, Alabama.

You already have a copy of this letter which was in the letters I carried to Birmingham.

Q. Will you read it into the record now, please, ma'am?

A. Dear Harold:

I received your good letter of March 20th and appreciate the kind things you had to say regarding your confidence in Coach Bryant. There is no doubt in my mind that Coach Bryant has represented the University of Alabama in the finest way and that this is an effort on the part of the Saturday Evening Post to try to destroy him.

[fol. 1599] Because the Georgia people made so much over the fact of Mr. Burnett taking a lie detector test, Paul Bryant asked on his own to take the test in order that there would be no doubt regarding the whole incident.

Thanking you for writing me and wishing everything for you, I am

Most cordially,

Frank A. Rose.

Q. I assume the witness is still looking through the letters.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bennett: Yes.

A. This is another letter of which you have a copy in your possession.

Q. The date of the letter, please, ma'am?

A. The 22nd. Was that the last date I gave you? Yes, March 22nd.

Q. Yes, ma'am. Who is it addressed to?

A. Mr. J. N. Groinger.

Q. All right. Would you read that?

A. Mr. J. N. Groninger
563 Downer Place
Aurora, Illinois

Dear Mr. Groninger:

I received your letter of March 18th and I appreciate your writing me regarding the recent story in the Saturday Evening Post. Coach Bryant and Coach Butts have entered suits against the Saturday Evening Post that will involve [fol. 1600] Mr. Burnett and I have no doubt in my mind that they are going to win their cases.

Thanking you for your—it doesn't look like a letter, I can't read what it is, wishes. May I continue reading now?

Q. Yes.

A. Here is another one, same date, March 22nd.

Mr. Stephen H. Alex
Town Center Plaza
1000—6th Street Southwest
Washington 24, D. C.

Dear Stephen:

I received your gracious letter of March 18 and it was a real pleasure hearing from you again. I can think of no better group I would rather have behind me at this time than the Dragoons, D-r-a-g-o-o-n-s. This is a very personal letter, because they are the finest damn people I know anywhere, particularly at times like this.

The whole thing is beginning to clear up and from three separate—there is a word here I can't read, investigations, it appears that an effort has been made by a sports writer to take his vengeance out on Coach Bryant that has been building up over a period of years through a national magazine. Great damage has been done to Coach Bryant and the University but we are getting so much support from other national magazines and people across the country it may be that we can reclaim some of our prestige.

Thank you for your good letter and hoping to see you sometime soon, I am [fol. 1601] Most cordially. Now, we start backwards. Another letter on the 22nd to the Honorable Gessner T. McCorvy.

Honorable Gessner T. McCorvy
P. O. Box 1070
Mobile, Alabama.

Mr. Bennett: Could the record at this point show that Mr. McCorvy is Chairman Pro-Ten with the University of Alabama?

Mr. Runzer: Certainly. No objection.

A. Dear Mr. McCorvy:

I received your letter of March 20th regarding Bear making the proposed announcement that he and Coach Butts did not talk on the telephone and this has been discussed with Mr. Winston McCall and Coach Bryant on the day we made our television appearances. We discussed it at great length and Mr. McCall thought it would serve the best interest of Bear's case if nothing more was said than had been said at the present time. However, I will discuss this with Bear today and if he should decide to go ahead I'm sure you will hear about it.

Thanking you for calling this to my attention, I am

Most cordially,

Frank A. Rose.

[fol. 1602] Another letter on the 22nd.

Mr. Edward P. Curkuff
11 Kerney Street
Oneonta, New York

Dear Mr. Curkuff:

I received a copy of your letter to the Saturday Evening Post dated March 31st in which you praised them for their story in the March 23rd issue. You may be assured that Mel Allen, who has been one of our active alumni does not share the view which you have taken and I am disappointed that alumnus of the University of Alabama which subscribes to the philosophy that a man is guilty before his defense has been offered.

I assure you that five responsible agencies of our Federal Government, the State of Alabama, and the State of Georgia have been conducting a thorough investigation and as of this date have found nothing that would indict Coach Paul Bryant or Coach Wallace Butts in rigging, fixing, or betting on a football game.

I think you should also know that Coach—now, I have Coach B here, at this date, I don't remember which it was. Has a $500,000 libel suit against the Saturday Evening Post on an article that was printed last year that was without foundation or fact and a deliberate effort has been made—that's Coach Bryant, and are being made to try to fight this case in public to the destruction of the character of Coach Bryant and the integrity of the University.

[fol. 1603] Hoping you will follow the coming events rather carefully in order that you might know the whole truth, I am

Sincerely yours,

Frank A. Rose.

Another letter the same date, the 22nd.

Mr. Marvin J. McGarity
1416 Sutherland Place

Dear Mr. McGarity:

I received your good letter of March 24th and I want you to know my deepest appreciation for the kind things you have to say about Coach Bryant. All of us feel the same way you do about him and there is no doubt in my mind but that he is one of our finest citizens.

Thanking you for sharing your letter with me, I am

Most cordially.

Now, we go into a long line of letters answering letters about Coach Bryant, copies of which you have. Would you like me to read them just the same?

Q. Yes, I would.

A. Mr. Eddie Leitman.

Q. This is also March 22nd?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1604] Mr. Eddie Leitman
President Student Government Association
University of Alabama
University, Alabama.

Dear Mr. Leitman:

I received your good letter of March 21st enclosing the resolution on behalf of Coach Bryant and I want you to know my deepest appreciation for this action. I am sure your expression of confidence in support of Coach Bryant will mean a great deal to him as it does to all of us who served as his colleagues.

Thanking you for this resolution, I am

Most cordially yours.

Same day:

Honorable George Huddleston, Jr.
Member of the United States House of Representatives.
Washington, D. C.

My dear George:

I received your memorandum with your remarks to the House of Representatives and I want you to know my appreciation for this good thing you have done on behalf of Coach Paul Bryant and the University of Alabama. We will forever remain indebted to you.

Thanking you again for your many services, I am

Most cordially.

[fol. 1605] Another letter the same date.

Dr. Marten ten Hoar
4 Forest Lake Drive
Tuscaloosa, Alabama

Mr. Bennett: At this point let the record show that Dr. ten Hoar is Dean Americus for the College of Arts and Sciences for the University of Alabama.

A. That's spelled with a small t-e-n and capital H-o-a-r. Marten is spelled M-a-r-t-e-n.

My dear Marten:

I received your letter of March 25th and I assure you it came at a time which was a most helpful period. I don't believe I have ever gone through a day as I did yesterday and I hope I shall not have to go through another one in the next few months. However, I believe that everything worked out pretty well and we are about to find the "rat in the woodpile" in Atlanta.

Hoping all is going well with you and Marie and we can get together sometime soon, I am

Most cordially.

On the same day:

Honorable William Inge Hill
P. O. Box 116
Montgomery, Alabama

[fol. 1606] My dear Inge:

I received your gracious letter of March 25th enclosing the resolution from the Montgomery County Alumni Association and I want you to know my deepest appreciation for this confidence you have expressed in Coach Paul Bryant and me. Everyday we continue our investigation confirming the innocence of Coach Bryant and we feel that we are about to get hold of some information that will help us to understand the whole problem.

Thanking you for your continued loyalty and interest in the University, I am

Most cordially.

Another letter on the same day:

Mrs. Elizabeth Gaines Jackson
526—looks like W-i-l-l-a-i-n-t, and I don't have the whole town here. Looks like River Falls, I don't know where the town of River Falls is.

Dear Mrs. Jackson:

Q. Excuse me, is that an Alabama town?
A. I don't think so, no, sir. Do you know, Mr. Bennett?

Mr. Bennett: I can't answer.

A. Excuse me. I don't believe it is an Alabama town.

[fol. 1607] Dear Mrs. Jackson:

I received your letter of March 21st enclosing a copy of your letter to the Editor of the Saturday Evening Post and I have never read anything that was finer nor more incensive than you have written.

I want you to know that we have found nothing after four and a half weeks of investigation that would reveal that Coach Bryant has done anything wrong or unethical. There is no doubt in my mind but that this is an effort to try to destroy an outstanding man.

Thanking you for speaking in our behalf, I am

Most cordially.

This is a letter dated the 29th of March.

Honorable Fred W. Nichols
Circuit Solicitor
City of Tuscaloosa. I don't have it down here. Mr. Bennett—

Mr. Bennett: I can't respond.

A. Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

My Dear Fred:

Is it possible for me to convey to you my deepest and most profound appreciation for taking the time to come to Birmingham and administer the Polygraph test to Coach Bryant and then making a special effort you made yesterday to come to Montgomery to testify before the [fol. 1608] Legislative Committee. In all my years of public service I have met no one in whom I have greater confidence or respect more than I do you and it was on the basis of this confidence that I informed Attorney General Cook of Georgia that it is my conviction that there is no man better qualified or more honest that could have improved upon the Polygraph test that you gave Coach Bryant. He too was impressed when I informed him about you but apparently let his politics alter his judgment and the integrity.

In order to keep our records official, I would appreciate your sending me a statement for services rendered as I not only feel strongly that you should be compensated but I believe it will help our cause with the Southeastern Conference to keep it professional.

Thanking you again for the good thing you have done on our behalf and on the behalf of justice and fairness, I am

Most cordially yours.

There is a letter on the 29th:

Mr. Ben A. Green, Editor
The Voice of the Tennessee Walking Horse
Shelbyville, T nnessee

Dear Mr. Green:

I received your gracious letter of April 1st enclosing a copy of your address and I want to express to you my deepest appreciation for this good thing you have done on behalf of Paul Bryant. All of us who know him know of [fol. 1609] his integrity and honesty and not have been shaken one bit by the political situation in Georgia.

I am passing on Kipling's quote "IF" for him to hang on his wall.

Thanking you again, I am

Most cordially.

This is a letter on April 9th:

Dr. Curtis Jones
Minister of the Union Avenue Christian Church
St. Louis, Missouri

Dear Curt:

I received your good letter of April 2nd regarding your recent luncheon discussion with Dr. Charles Allen Thomas and I appreciate your expressing concern to me regarding our present football investigation. Needless to say it's been a most difficult period for all of us but a great deal of light has come on the subject in the last few days when Dr. Carmichael, the President of an insurance company in Atlanta revealed that he saw the brief notes taken by Mr. Burnett who accused Coach Butts and Coach Bryant of rigging the football game, stating that the notes were not the same as those in the Saturday Evening Post article and that even Mr. Burnett confessed to him that the two men were discussing illegal defenses which were brought about because of football rule changes. The Justice Department, the Commissioner of the Southeastern Conference and I are now of the opinion that this was an effort on the part of Mr. Furman Bisher, sportswriter, Atlanta Con-
[fol. 1610] stitution, against whom Coach Bryant has a $500,000 suit, to attempt to blackmail and smear Coach Bryant.

Coaches like businessmen, college presidents, and preachers, discuss techniques, tickets, football players and anything else pertaining to their business and this has been confirmed by ten of the leading coaches in America that there was nothing in the notes that would confirm anything illegal or unethical.

Hoping that you will keep this confidential until I make my final report, I am

Most cordially.

Mr. Bennett: Off the record.

Mr. Runzer: Show him these intervals that Mrs. Park is referring to her notebook. I think it is only fair to her to show that.

The Witness: That's it. Now, just let me start here at the beginning and it won't take but a minute to do that. This is on the 22nd of February. That's it.

Q. Now, do you have with you the notebook that contains the letters for the first days of March which are not contained in that book? That book started with March 4th, you told me.

A. No. This book starts with the 22nd of February.

Q. And there are no other letters except the ones that you told us, except the ones that are connected with the Butts-Bryant incident?

[fol. 1611] A. That I have in my possession. On the last deposition I gave, I stated I do not ordinarily keep notebooks but for a few months. I think I have them now through August.

Q. And this notebook runs from February—

A. 22nd.

Q. Until—

A. April 16th.

Q. Now, I want to identify this as Defendant's Exhibit No. 1.

(Whereupon, said letter was received in evidence and marked "Defendant's Exhibit No. 1," and is attached to the original deposition of Mrs. Park.)

Q. What is the date in April?

A. Sixth.

Q. Mrs. Park, I show you a letter marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 1, which is a copy of a letter dated March 6th from Dr. Rose to Mr. Bernie Moore. Was that a copy of a letter that was dictated to you by Dr. Rose and transcribed by you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And dictated on the 5th and transcribed on the 6th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where in the order does that come? The letter to Dr. Aderholt was the fifth letter of that day?

A. Yes. Now, I have lost my place. Letter to Dr. Aderholt was the fifth and that is No. 16.

Q. Is this your customary initial on the letter, M/H/P?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does anyone else at the University use those initials that you know of?

[fol. 1612] A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And, of course, F.A.R. stands for Frank A. Rose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dr. Rose told us on the week beginning February 24, 1963, he was out of town most of that week; do you recall that?

A. No, sir, I don't. I will have to look at Dr. Rose's calendar.

Q. Do you recall previous to him writing Dr. Aderhold that he received a letter from Mr. Bryant?

A. No, sir.

Q. If such a letter came in, would you merely place it on his desk for his attention when he came back?

A. Yes, sir,

Q. Would you necessarily even read it?

A. I would unless it were marked personal or confidential.

Q. Does this office date stamp the receipt of letters?

A. No, sir, we don't.

Q. Excuse me one moment, please.

Off the record.

(Off the record discussion.)

Mr. Runzer: I think that will be all.

Mr. Bennett: Off the record a moment.

Mr. Runzer: It is agreed that the notes relating to those letters which Mrs. Park read us as relevant events to the Butts-Bryant incident will be produced, photocopied, and [fol. 1613] the other notes will be held by Mrs. Park pending a determination by the Court.

Mr. Pritchard: Correct.

Mr. Runzer: All right, that's all.

Further deponent saith not.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Before Rives and Brown, Circuit Judges, and Spears, District Judge.

OPINION—July 16, 1965

Spears, District Judge: This is a libel suit. Curtis Publishing Company[1] published an article in the March 23, 1963 issue of the Saturday Evening Post[2] entitled "The [fol. 1617] Story of a College Football Fix", characterized by the Post in the sub-title as "A Shocking Report of How Wally Butts and 'Bear' Bryant Rigged a Game Last Fall."

---

[2] Also referred to herein as the "Post".

On March 25, 1963, Wally Butts,[3] former Athletic Director of the University of Georgia, instituted this action against Curtis. In August, 1963, the case was heard before a jury, which returned a verdict against Curtis for $60,000 general and $3,000,000 punitive damages. Conditioned upon the failure of Butts to remit that portion of the award for punitive damages in excess of $400,000, the trial court granted Curtis' motion for a new trial. At the same time, Curtis' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied. On January 22, 1964, after Butts had filed a remittitur, Curtis' motion for new trial was denied, and judgment for Butts in the amount of $460,000 was entered. Thereafter, Curtis filed motions for new trial under Rule 60(b), F.R.Civ.P., which were denied on April 7, 1964. This appeal is taken from the judgment of January 22, 1964, and from the trial court's denial of Curtis' motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for new trial. We affirm.

Curtis publishes various magazines including the Post. Prior to the publication of the story in question, the editor-in-chief, undoubtedly hoping to attract more readers, had decided to "change the image" of the magazine by making it an "expose" type, and embarking upon a policy of "sophisticated muckraking", in order "to provoke people" and "make them mad".[4]

[fol. 1618] The article[5] involved was based upon a claim by one George Burnett that on September 13, 1962 he had

[3] Sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Butts" or "plaintiff".

[4] See note 25, infra.

[5] The following editorial comment was inserted at the beginning of the story:

"Not since the Chicago White Sox threw the 1919 World Series has there been a sports story as shocking as this one. This is the story of one fixed game of college football.

"Before the University of Georgia played the University of Alabama last September 22, Wally Butts, athletic director of accidentally overheard, and made notes of, a long-distance telephone conversation between Butts and "Bear" Bryant, football coach at the University of Alabama, in which Butts divulged certain information about football plays the University of Georgia would use in its opening game against Alabama. Georgia was subsequently defeated 35-0.

About four months after the alleged telephone conversation Burnett contacted various people, including Georgia football coach Johnny Griffith, and then decided to tell his story to the Post. A writer, Frank Graham, Jr., was assigned by the Post to investigate and write the story, and [fol. 1619] an Atlanta sports editor was retained to advise him. Graham never saw Burnett's notes, as they were at the time in the possession of Georgia school officials; he did not interview a witness known by him to have allegedly discussed the notes with Burnett on the same day the telephone conversation purportedly took place; he never viewed the game films; and neither he nor anyone else on behalf of the Post ever contacted Butts or Bryant. He agreed that both he and Curtis knew publication of the article "would ruin Coach Butts' career".

Georgia, gave Paul (Bear) Bryant, head coach of Alabama, Georgia's plays, defensive patterns, all the significant secrets Georgia's football team possessed.

"The corrupt here were not professional ballplayers gone wrong, as in the 1919 Black Sox scandal. The corrupt were not disreputable gamblers, as in the scandals continually afflicting college basketball. The corrupt were two men—Butts and Bryant—employed to educate and to guide young men.

"How prevalent is the fixing of college football games? How often do teachers sell out their pupils? We don't know—yet. For now we can only be appalled.—THE EDITORS."

In the story itself it is stated, among other things, that "(t)he Georgia players, their moves analyzed and forecast like those of rats in a maze, took a frightful physical beating". Georgia coach Johnny Griffith was quoted as saying bitterly to a friend, "I never had a chance." The next sentence read: "When a fixer works against you, that's the way he likes it."

On March 11, 1963, eleven days before the article was published, Curtis was informed by telegram and letter, both sent by Butts' counsel, of the "absolute falsity of the charges" contained in the proposed story. The record does not disclose that any additional investigation was initiated, and the telegram and letter went unanswered. In addition, a long-distance telephone appeal that the article not be published, made by Butts' daughter prior to publication, was rejected. After the article was published, Curtis refused a demand that it publish a retraction.

The Post took the position from the beginning that the statements made in the article concerning Butts were true, and that because of their nature it had exercised great care by thoroughly checking every significant source of information as to their truthfulness and accuracy, in advance of publication.

Curtis chose not to use as a witness either the author of the article or any of its editors who had made contributions to the article after it had been submitted. Nor did it [fol. 1620] use the Atlanta sports editor who had assisted in the preparation of the story. As one of its principal witnesses it called upon George Burnett, who was known by Curtis to have been convicted of writing bad checks, and to be on probation at the time he claimed to have listened in on the conversation.

Both Butts and Bryant testified. Each emphatically denied the charges contained in the article and stated that there was never any conversation between them having as its purpose the fixing or rigging of any football game. Several football players, past and present, expressed their opinions to the effect that the outcome of a football game cannot be rigged or fixed without participation by the players themselves, and that there is no way in which two coaches can rig or fix the outcome of a football game without the players' knowledge. Other "experts" stated their opinion that the information contained in the "so-called" Burnett notes would not be of any assistance at all to the University of Alabama in preparing for its game with the University of Georgia. In several instances Butts' witnesses denied direct quotations attributed to them in the article.

In an opinion written by the district judge the facts are stated in some detail,[6] and no useful purpose could be served by repeating them here, although portions thereof pertinent to specific issues later discussed may be utilized. It is significant, however, at this point, to say that in view of the verdict it rendered, the jury undoubtedly accepted [fol. 1621] Butts' version that the story was "willfully, maliciously and falsely" published, as a result of which he has suffered substantial injury to his "peace, happiness and feelings", as well as to his "honor, reputation and integrity". As the trial judge saw it: "The article was clearly defamatory and extremely so. . . . The guilt of the defendant was so clearly established by the evidence in the case so as to have left the jury no choice but to find the defendant liable."[7] We wholeheartedly agree with that appraisal.

The Issues Presented

Curtis submits twenty-eight specifications of error which are argued in its brief under ten propositions. The issues involved are: (1) Was the article libelous per se? (2) Does the court's judgment violate Curtis' rights under the First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments? (3) Did the arguments of Butts' counsel, not objected to at the trial, require a new trial? (4) Did the court err in excluding certain testimony offered to impeach the credibility of Butts and the witness John Carmichael? (5) Were the extrajudicial statements of George Burnett, and the statements made to him by third person, properly excluded? (6) Did the trial court commit plain error in instructing the jury? (7) Did the trial court err in refusing to charge the jury that it should construe Butts' testimony "most strongly against him"? (8) Did the trial court err in refusing to charge the jury that it should disregard the entire testimony of any witness whom it found to have knowingly and wilfully testified falsely? (9) Does the "newly [fol. 1622] discovered evidence" offered in Curtis' motion under Rule 60(b), F.R. Civ. P. require a new trial? (10) Is the award of punitive damages so excessive that it cannot be cured by the remittitur?

The Article as Libelous Per Se

The trial judge charged the jury that the article was libelous per se. This was objected to by Curtis on the ground that Butts was not actively engaged in the profession of a football coach at the time of publication, and, that no special damage was shown.[8] Curtis took the same position in its motions for directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Curtis' contention in this regard cannot be sustained. This is a libel suit as distinguished from a slander suit.[9] Under Georgia law, a plaintiff may recover in a libel action where the defamation is apparent from the writing itself, without the necessity of alleging or proving special damages,[10] and it is not necessary that he be engaged in the

[9] Ga. Code Ann. § 105-701 (libel), § 105-702 (slander).

[10] Floyd v. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., 102 Ga. App. 840, 117 S.E. 2d 906 (1960), the leading case in Georgia, states that words which, if merely spoken, would not be actionable in absence of special damage, may be libelous when printed if false and tend to injure reputation and bring one into public hatred, contempt or ridicule. Ordinarily, only general damages need be alleged in an action for libel.

[fol. 1623] pursuit of his trade, business or profession at the time of publication.[11]

But even if the law necessitated a showing that Butts was actively engaged in the profession of a football coach [fol. 1624] at the time of publication, we think this requirement has been satisfied.

[11]Ga. Code Ann. § 105-701, defines libel as the "false and malicious defamation of another, expressed in print . . . tending to injure the reputation of an individual and exposing him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule . . .", without the requirement that the charges be calculated to injure one in his trade, office or profession. A newspaper libel is described in Ga. Code Ann. § 105-703, as being "any false and malicious defamation of another in any newspaper, magazine or periodical tending to injure the reputation of any individual and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule", again without the requirement that the charges refer to one's trade, office or profession. Only in the area of slander is a reference to one's trade, office or profession required. Ga. Code Ann., § 105-702.

The case of Floyd v. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., supra, note 10, in its definitive statement of the Georgia law of libel explains that written words are sufficient to constitute libel per se if they tend to bring a man into public hatred, contempt or ridicule. Damages will be presumed from the nature of the words themselves and their harmful effect and no proof of special damages is necessary. Where the only possible construction is that the words are libelous per se, upon proof thereof, the only remaining question for the jury is that of damages. See also Restatement of the Law Second, Torts, Tentative Draft No. 11, April 15, 1965, Section 569, wherein Georgia is named as one of the majority of states following this rule, and, as explained in the notes to Restatement of the Law of Torts, 1938, Vol. III, Sec. 569, Comment e, pp. 168-9, it may be libelous to impute misconduct in one's trade, etc., although he is at the time no longer engaged in the pursuit of the trade, business or profession.

Curtis cites many cases in support of its position (see note 8, supra). However, these are part of a group of cases known in Georgia as the "delinquent debtor cases" and, as explained by the Floyd case, stand in a class by themselves, and have no bearing on causes of action other than those involving charges that one owes a debt and refuses to pay, or owes a debt long past due. In this isolated situation the charge is, as a matter of law, uniformly held in Georgia, not libelous per se, and it is in these cases that Curtis finds language to the effect that falsely spoken or written words that do not contain a charge made in reference to one's trade, office or profession are not actionable without proof of special damages.

The story was purchased by Curtis on February 22, 1963. Butts resigned as Athletic Director effective February 28, 1963. The article was published in the March 23, 1963 issue of the Post. Thus it may be assumed that Butts was at least temporarily out of work on the day of publication, but it hardly follows that he had completely abandoned the coaching business.

Actually, Curtis admitted in its answer that Butts "has enjoyed a national reputation as a successful and respected member of the coaching profession", and that he "has been approached and offered employment as head football coach by several colleges and professional football teams in the country due entirely to his reputation as a successful member and leader in his profession." This admission, in and of itself, would indicate a recognition that Butts was still identified with some phase of football activities.

Upon Curtis' insistence, its second defense asserting that the statements contained in the article were true, was held to be a valid plea of justification. By interposing this plea, Curtis admitted a prima facie case,[12] but gained the valuable right to open and close. The complaint alleged that "plaintiff's career as a member of the football coaching profession had been ruined and destroyed by this scurrilous and contemptible defamation." (Emphasis supplied.) Without regard to any question as to whether the [fol. 1625] plea constitutes an admission that the remarks were made with malice, it is our view that it necessarily carries with it an admission, not only that the libelous statements were made by Curtis, but also that they were made in relation to Butts "as a member of the football coaching profession". Under all the circumstances, it is untenable to say that simply because Butts was temporarily out of a job at the time of publication, he was not actively engaged in the coaching business as a means of livelihood.[13]

We hold that the trial court correctly charged the jury that the article was libelous per se, and that he did not err in denying Curtis' motions for a directed verdict and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Curtis' Constitutional Rights

Curtis contends that the trial court's judgment violates and abridges its rights of freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the First, Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. It relies upon the case of New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed. 2d 686 (1964), decided subsequent to the trial of this case, in which it was held that in order for a public official in a libel suit to recover any damages he must prove that a statement against his official conduct was published "with actual malice—that [fol. 1626] is knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not". 376 U.S. at 279-80. This holding, says Curtis, "drastically changed the constitutional principles applicable to libel actions", by announcing new safeguards which "make it manifestly clear not only that the rules of law which were applied in the trial of the instant case were unconstitutional, but also that the result reached by the jury is a patently unconstitutional result which cannot be permitted to stand".

Countering this, Butts says that the invocation of the constitutional defenses in libel cases has received emphatic and substantial attention by scholars and Courts over the years; that the Times case resulted in no fundamental change of law, but merely gave new sanctions to a long standing rule; and that in any event, Curtis did not invoke those defenses even though they are more broadly stated in the Georgia law than in the Times case.[14] Moreover, [fol. 1627] Butts emphasizes that the Times' constitutional grounds now asserted were not timely raised or preserved below. In fact, they were presented for the first time in the F.R.Civ.P. 60(b) motion filed on March 23, 1964, long after trial.

The record reflects that Curtis did not object to the trial court's instructions.[15] The Times case was decided by the Alabama Supreme Court on August 30, 1962. A petition for writ of certiorari presenting constitutional questions identical to those now being urged by Curtis, was filed in the United States Supreme Court on November 21, 1962, four months prior to the filing of the complaint in this case on March 25, 1963.[16] Certiorari was granted in the Times case on January 7, 1963. The jury verdict in the instant case was returned on August 20, 1963, and the trial court's judgment thereon was entered the same day. A Birmingham, Alabama law firm, which represented the New York Times in the case brought against it by Sullivan, also, together with Curtis' General Counsel, represented Curtis in a libel suit Coach Bryant had filed against it in the United States District Court at Birmingham, Alabama. A member of this law firm had sent information to Curtis about the alleged telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant, and had talked with the author, Graham, about the matter prior to publication of the story. The same lawyer, together with another member of the firm, [fol. 1628] sat (as did the General Counsel for Curtis) at Curtis' Counsel table throughout the trial of this case.[17]

While it is true that the Supreme Court did not decide the Times case until March 9, 1964, it would be contrary to reason and common sense to assume that there had not been, at all times during the pendency of this case, full communication among Curtis' counsel, particularly concerning trial strategy. The facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times.

[16] We have examined the petition for writ of certiorari presenting the constitutional questions, and find that it was filed by the New York Times Company on November 21, 1962. The brief for respondent in opposition was filed on December 15, 1962, and petitioner's reply thereto was filed on December 29, 1962.

[17] The Birmingham law firm of Beddow, Embry and Beddow, which represented the New York Times in the Supreme Court of Alabama, is also shown to be counsel for the Times in the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Roderick Beddow of that firm represented Curtis in the case of Paul Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company, in the United States District Court in Birmingham, and both he and Mr. T. Eric Embry of that firm sat, along with the General Counsel of Curtis, Mr. Philip H. Strubing, at the Curtis counsel table throughout the trial of this case. Butts' brief states, without contradiction, that Mr. Beddow "initially 'sent them (Curtis) this information' about the alleged telephone conversation and was a principal in the initial work of the author Frank Graham."

The Supreme Court said, in Michel v. Louisiana, 350 U.S. 91, 99, 100 L. ed. 83, 76 S. Ct. 158 (1955), that "(t)he test (in making a claim to a constitutional right) is whether the defendant has had 'a reasonable opportunity to have the issue as to the claimed right heard and determined by the . . . court.'" It then cited the case of Yakus v. United States, 321 U.S. 414, 444, 88 L.ed. 834, 64 S.Ct. 660 (1944), for the proposition that "(n)o procedural principle is more [fol. 1629] familiar to this court than that a constitutional right may be forfeited . . . by the failure to make timely assertion of the right."[18]

[18] Michel v. State of Louisiana, 350 U.S. 91, 76 S. Ct. 158, 100 L. ed. 83 (1955), involved a Louisiana statute requiring any challenge to the composition of a Grand Jury to be made before the end of the term of the Grand Jury, holding that the statute was not unconstitutional, and that since the petitioners had not, under that statute, made timely challenge to the constitutional composition of the Grand Jury, they waived any such right to so challenge the Grand Jury. The court announced that the test was whether the defendant had had a reasonable opportunity to have the issue as to the claimed right heard and determined by the court.

On the other hand, in the case of Reece v. State of Georgia, 350 U.S. 85, 76 S.Ct. 167, 100 L. ed. 77 (1955), decided at the same time as the Michel case, the state court had refused to consider the defendant's motion to quash the indictment filed before his arraignment on the ground of the composition of the Grand Jury, because, by Georgia practice, objections to the Grand Jury must be made before the indictment is returned. The court held that there had been no waiver there, and that due process had been violated, because defendant, a semi-illiterate Negro, had no counsel until the day after his indictment, pointing out that "the right to object presupposes an opportunity to exercise that right."

In Kewanee Oil and Gas Co. v. Mosshamer, (10th Cir. 1932), 58 F. 2d 711, where the constitutionality of a state statute was raised on appeal, the court stated that "if the constitutionality of a statute is not raised in the pleadings ordinarily it may not be raised at the trial."

Other cases decided by district courts, and holding that constitutional questions ordinarily must be raised at the trial, are: Alexander v. Daugherty (D.C. Wyo. 1960), 189 F. Supp. 956 (only where failure to raise the constitutional question at the trial was due to ignorance, duress or other reason for which petitioner could not be held responsible, may redress be had, and then if "it is made to appear that there had been such gross violation of constitutional right as to deny the defendant the substance of a fair trial"); Houck v. Eastchester P.U. District (D.C. Alaska 1952), 104 F. Supp. 588; Mount Tivy Winery v. Lewis (N.D. Cal. 1942), 42 F. Supp. 636; and White Cleaners and Dyers v. Hughes (W.D. La. 1934), 7 F. Supp. 1017.

Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, 85 L. ed. 1037, 61 S. Ct. 719 (1941), an unusual case in which the Supreme Court allowed the Tax Commissioner to assert for the first time on appeal in the Court of Appeals the taxability of income under another section of the code, but stated that "ordinarily an appellate court does not give consideration to issues not raised below . . . (but) there may be exceptional cases where injustice may otherwise result except where express waiver is given."

through its interlocking battery of able and distinguished attorneys, of the issues involved in the Times case, and was afforded every reasonable opportunity to have those same issues heard and determined by the trial court in the case at bar. What the Supreme Court would, or might, hold in Times was not decisive. What was important was that Curtis had to invoke any constitutional claims in an appropriate way, and at an appropriate time. Considering the resources of Curtis, both practical and legal, and the contemporary awareness of constitutional rights pervading [fol. 1631] even problems of local jurisprudence, Curtis' complete and utter silence amounted to "an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege." [21]

Without expressing any opinion as to whether Times fundamentally changed the substantive law applicable to libel cases, or whether the charge on malice given by the trial court was adequate under Times,[22] or whether Butts

[22] The trial court's charge on malice was, in part, as follows:

> "At this point, I think it is well that I should explain to you the meaning of malice under the law of defamation. Malice, in the law of defamation, may be used in two senses. First, in a special or technical sense to denote absence of lawful excuse or to indicate absence of privileged occasion. Such malice is known as implied malice or malice in law. There is no imputation of ill will to injure with implied malice. Secondly, malice involving intent of mind and heart or ill will against a person is classified as express malice or malice in fact . . .
> "Where it is established that the defendant was inspired by actual malice in the publication of the defamatory matter, the jury, in its discretion, may, but is not required, to award punitive damages. As previously stated to you, actual malice encompasses the notion of ill will, spite, hatred, and an intent to injure one. Malice also denotes a wanton or reckless indifference or culpable negligence with regard to the rights of others. The purpose of punitive damages is to deter the defendant from a repetition of the offense and is a warning to others not to commit a like offense. It is intended to protect the community and has an expression of ethical indignation, although the plaintiff receives the award. The plaintiff charges that the column was written and published both with actual malice and in utter and wanton disregard of his rights . . . ."

[23] In a second opinion dated April 7, 1964 (See Butts v. Curtis Publishing Company (N.D. Ga. 1964) ..... F. Supp. ....., at .....), denying Curtis' motions under Rule 60(b), the trial judge gave the following as his views concerning Butts' status as a "public official":

"In the present motion at hand, the defendant contends that plaintiff's action comes under the Times ruling in that plaintiff was a public official, and that the verdict and judgment was awarded plaintiff as damages for injury to his reputation as a football coach on account of a publication made by the defendant concerning plaintiff's actions while acting as Director of Athletics at the University of Georgia. In the trial of the case, movant defended the action by entering a plea of justification, and no defense was made or evidence introduced concerning Butts' position as Athletic Director or as a public official. Georgia law provides under certain conditions communications concerning the acts of public men in their public capacity and reference therewith to be deemed privileged. Georgia Code Annotated, Section 105-107(6). Just where in the ranks of government employees the 'public official' designation extends, the Supreme Court in the Times case did not determine. The decision did determine that Sullivan, as an elected city commissioner of Montgomery, fitted into the category of public officials.

"Under Georgia law, members of the Board of Regents of the University System are public officials. Georgia Sessions Laws, 1931, Pages 7, 45. The evidence presented at the trial shows that plaintiff was Director of Athletics at the University for some two years prior to February, 1963, at which time he resigned. The article complained of was published in the defendant's issue of March 23, 1963. The Board of Regents at both the University of Georgia (located in Athens) and the Georgia School of Technology (located in Atlanta) control the athletic programs of the two institutions, but the details are handled at each institution by an athletic association composed of faculty members and alumni, and each is incorporated to facilitate such business transactions as improvement of athletic grounds and equipment at the two institutions. The schedule of athletic contests for each year is approved by the faculty and by the Regents. The separate athletic associations at both institutions are wholly under the control of the Regents and are their agents. For further details of the athletic setup, see Page v. Regents of University System of Georgia, 93 F. 2d 887, 891-892. As was stated in the Page case, the 'coaches' are also members of the faculty.

"Plaintiff Butts was Director of Athletics at the University. The Athletic Director, along with the various coaches in the Athletic Department, were employed by the separate incorporated athletic association. However, the defendant seeks by this motion to extend the category of 'public officials' to one employed as agent by the University of Georgia Athletic Department. Even if plaintiff was a professor or instructor at the University, and not an agent of a separate governmental corporation carrying on 'a business comparable in all essentials to those usually conducted by private owners' he would not be a public officer or official. Under Georgia law, the position of a teacher or instructor in a state or public educational institution is not that of a public officer or official, but he is merely an employee thereof. Regents of the University System of Georgia v. Blanion, 49 Ga. App. 602(4); Board of Education of Doerun v. Bacon, 22 Ga. App. 72. To hold plaintiff, an employee of the University Athletic Association, a public official would, in this court's opinion, be extending the 'public official' designation beyond that contemplated by the ruling in the case of New York Times Company v. Sullivan, supra."

The case of Barr v. Matteo, 360 U.S. 564, 3 L. ed. 2d 1434, 79 S. Ct. 1335 (1959), cited in the Times case, held that in the reciprocal situation where two government employees were suing the director of an important United States Government agency for his alleged libelous conduct, the director, a public official, has absolute privilege, regardless of the existence of malice, in defense of the alleged libel, although his conduct was within the outer perimeter of his line of duty. The policy of this position is to aid in the effective functioning of government by assuring that government officials shall be free to exercise their duties without fear of damage suits with respect to acts done in the course of those duties.

In cases decided since the Times case, the "public official" designation has not been extended. The court, in the case of Garrison v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 64, 13 L. ed. 2d 125, 85 S. Ct. 209 (Nov. 1964), in reversing the conviction of the New Orleans Parish District Attorney for the criminal defamation of eight judges of the Criminal District Court of the Parish of New Orleans, stated that "the rule protects . . . the free flow of information to the people concerning public officials, their servants . . . ", whatever touches upon "an official's fitness for office is relevant . . . . A candidate must surrender to public scrutiny and discussion so much of his private character as affects his fitness for office". Justice Goldberg, in his concurring opinion, stated that "libel on the official conduct of the governors (of the people) . . . can have no place in our Constitution."

The Second Circuit, in Pauling v. News Syndicate Company, Inc. (2nd Cir. 1964), 335 F. 2d 659, considered the possible extensions of the doctrine of the Times case, stating that a candidate for public office would seem an inevitable candidate for extension, and that once an extension is made, the participant in public debate on any issue of grave public concern would be next in line. Quoting the Times case, the court then said: " 'The profound issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open', now applied to confer immunity on 'vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasant sharp attacks on government and public officials', may some day be found to demand still further erosion of the protection heretofore given by the law of defamation."

The Henry v. Collins and Henry v. Pearson cases, 380 U.S. 356 (1965), reversed a judgment for the plaintiffs on the ground that the lower court's charge to the jury on malice was error under the Times and Garrison cases, thus indicating that a County Attorney and a Chief of Police would come within the privilege. Justices Black, Douglas and Goldberg concurred, not due to the error in the charge, but on the ground that such a suit would violate the First and Fourteenth Amendments under the Times case, where the

The record reflects that Curtis was represented at the trial by several attorneys. One argument for each side was made on Friday and the remaining arguments were completed the following Monday. Much of the argument of which complaint is now made was offered on Friday. Yet, no objection to any portion of the arguments was raised until Curtis filed its motion for new trial nine days after the jury verdict was returned.

[fol. 1635] The trial court correctly disposed of this matter in the following language:

> "It is an elementary principle of federal law that a new trial will not be granted where a party seeks to raise for the first time, on a motion for a new trial, (the objection) that opposing counsel was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury, where such conduct was not excepted to during the trial." [24]

If, as Curtis' counsel now claim, the arguments were, among other things, "grossly improper and inflammatory", "intemperate and inexcusable", "appeals to passion and prejudice", "corruptions of the evidence", "completely unsupported by the evidence", and "unsworn testimony of counsel", it is inconceivable to us that they would have delayed so long without raising the slightest hint of an defendant published his criticism of the plaintiffs' performance of their public duties.

This court in Buckley v. The New York Times (5 Cir. 1964), 338 F. 2d 470, after deciding the case on procedural grounds, stated in dicta that "a judicial determination by this court of the proposition that the principles of (the Times case) should be extended to candidates for public office, must await an appropriate case."

objection. Leeway must often be allowed counsel in objecting to argument lest the objection itself magnify the harm. But to say nothing during argument, the extended week end recess, and for nine days thereafter, leaves us with the conviction that they did not consider the arguments objectionable at the time they were delivered, but made their claim as an afterthought.

Furthermore, after carefully considering the entire record, we do not consider that the arguments belatedly objected to would have required a reversal, even if timely objections had been made. Some of the argument was in- [fol. 1636] vited, but the very nature of the case made it virtually impossible to discuss the evidence free of emotion or drama. The editor-in-chief of the Post set the tone and the stage for the attack. He openly boasted that the Post's new policy of "sophisticated muckraking" was the "final yardstick" of editorial achievement since it meant "we are hitting them where it hurts." It was no wonder that the author Graham was equally callous in admitting that he knew that "when this article was published that was the death of Wally Butts in his chosen profession" and that "Curtis Publishing Company knew that when that article was published it would ruin Coach Butts' career." The policy of the magazine so bluntly stated[25] was by itself

[25] In the deposition of Clay D. Blair, Jr., editor-in-chief, it was developed that for the first quarter of 1963, Curtis showed a loss of about $1.1 million, compared to a loss in 1962 for the same quarter of $4.7 million; that in 1960 the amount of advertising revenue was $106 million; that in 1961 the figure had dropped to $86 million; that Blair was made a vice-president of Curtis in June of 1962; that circulation is one of the factors that affects advertising revenues; that demography is important, because "all circulation in Russia would not be appealing to General Motors;" that Blair wrote a memo to his staff, which found its way to a national magazine, in which he was quoted as saying: "The final yardstick is the fact that we have about six lawsuits pending, meaning that we are hitting them where it hurts, with solid, meaningful journalism"; that he was not being facetious when he used the phrase "sophisticated muckraking"; that he meant it when he said it and when he testified; that he was correctly quoted as being

[fol. 1637] more than enough to inflame the jury. Counsel for Butts could only gild the lily.[26]

The Exclusion of Testimony

Butts was asked by Curtis' counsel on cross-examination if he recalled having made a statement over television, on a date prior to the institution of this action, that he "would never at any time and never . . . (had) done anything that would injure the University of Georgia". He responded that he had made a statement to that effect, but that "as far as my services at the University of Georgia are concerned that represents only my opinion". Proffered evi-

"concerned with the image of the Post and in trying to get a new image, portray a different type of magazine"; that he did change the image of the Post; that the Butts issue was representative of the new type magazine Curtis was interested in publishing; that "we have perhaps come . . . 25 per cent of the way with this issue . . . toward the goal of the magazine that I envision"; that this issue is a step in the right direction; that he was acquainted with the term "muckraking" prior to using it in the interview which led to an article in Newsweek on November 19, 1962; that in the interview with Newsweek he stated that he intended to "restore the crusading spirit . . . the sophisticated muckraking, the expose in the mass magazines . . . to provoke people, make them mad"; that he further stated in the interview: "But careers will be ruined, that is sure", and he could not quarrel with the fact that Butts' career was one of the careers to which reference was made in that statement.

[26] The trial court also pointed out that Butts was unquestionably one of the leading figures in the national football picture; that responsible officials of the Post knew that after the article was published Butts' career would be ruined; that Butts, through his attorney, had notified Curtis before publication that the article was false; that one of Butts' daughters had telephoned long distance to a Post official with a plea that the article be withheld from publication; and that after publication Butts had, pursuant to Georgia law, requested a retraction from Curtis, which was refused. The court then commented that the jury was warranted in concluding from all the facts in the case, including "the persistent and continuing attitude of the officers and agents of the defendant that there was a wanton or reckless indifference of plaintiff's rights." Supra note 6 at 919.

dence which Curtis asserts "is replete with incidences of Butts' unfaithfulness and disloyalty to the University of Georgia", was excluded by the trial court. Curtis insists, however, that the evidence should have been admitted, not only to demonstrate Butts' true character, but to impeach his credibility as a witness.

[fol. 1638] We are in agreement with the trial court that proof of Butts' character could be made by reputation only, and that particular acts of misconduct are irrelevant.[27]

The rule that "a party may be cross-examined to bring out matters, even though they may be collateral, which are inconsistent with the testimony given by him",[28] is not applicable here. The answer given by Butts to the question asked by Curtis' counsel concerning a statement previously made out of court, was not such an affirmative profession of faithfulness and loyalty to the University of Georgia, made at the trial, as would open the door, for the purpose of impeachment, in mitigation of damages, or otherwise, to the admission of alleged incidents of "unfaithfulness and disloyalty" to that institution, either by cross-examination of Butts, or by direct evidence from other witnesses.

Complaint is made that Curtis was not permitted to show that Butts had refused to answer certain questions in his deposition, and that evidence offered as to purportedly false testimony given by Butts in his deposition was rejected. Butts' refusal to answer was on advice of counsel. The answers sought were subsequently supplied, but Curtis argues that because of the delay it was denied adequate discovery and thereby "lost valuable time in the preparation of its case".

The trial judge was clothed with broad discretion in controlling the extent of direct and cross-examination,[29] and [fol. 1639] we cannot say that he abused that discretion in excluding the proffered evidence.

Similarly, we do not think the trial court abused his discretion in refusing to admit evidence that the witness Carmichael, while a minor in Ohio, had been convicted of petty larceny in 1933. The ruling was based upon lapse of time.[30]

Curtis sought to introduce into evidence certain extrajudicial statements made by George Burnett, and statements made to him by third parties. These included inquiries made by Burnett of the telephone operator and her replies thereto,[31] a telephone conversation between Burnett and one Milton Flack, purportedly made immediately after Burnett had overheard a telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant,[32] Burnett's conversation with one Bob Edwards about the notes he had taken;[33] Burnett's statements at meetings with officials of [fol. 1640] the University of Georgia; and statements of these university officials made in checking Burnett's story at meetings with him.[34] All of these incidents had been reported in the article.

[31] Curtis says this was offered only to show that a telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant had actually taken place. Butts, however, contends no such limitation was placed on this testimony.

[32] Burnett testified that he had been trying to contact Milton Flack by telephone when he intercepted the alleged call between Butts and Bryant, after which he says he hung up the phone and sat for about twenty or thirty seconds before picking up the phone and again calling Flack's number. Curtis wanted to prove that Burnett asked Flack: "Is Wally Butts in your office now Milt", to which Flack is supposed to have replied that Butts was at that time in his office making a telephone call. The court allowed Burnett to state that he called Flack, but excluded as hearsay anything he might have said to Flack.

It was, of course, important from Curtis' standpoint that it show its good faith in publishing the article. The proffered evidence would have tended to show that these statements as set forth in the article had, in fact, been made, and we think the trial court should have admitted it for that limited purpose only. However, the full import of most, if not all, of that evidence got before the jury in some form before the trial was concluded.

In any event, none of the testimony involved related to the real "sting of the libel", and we do not consider that substantial error was committed in its exclusion. Curtis had the burden to show more than nominal error to secure reversal for rulings of evidence,[35] and this it has failed to do.

The Jury Instructions

Complaint is made that the trial court committed plain and prejudicial error in instructing the jury. No objections

[33] Bob Edwards was division manager of the company with which Burnett was connected. Burnett testified that he had a conversation with Edwards on January 4, 1963 about the notes he had taken on September 13, 1962. The court sustained an objection to the conversation itself on the ground that it was hearsay. On cross-examination, Burnett testified that he did not have his notes with him when he first talked with Edwards on January 4, 1963, but did show them to Edwards some two weeks later.

[34] Curtis contends that the investigation conducted by the officials of the University of Georgia would support Burnett's credibility, because it demonstrated his willingness to cooperate, and to have his story questioned.

[35] Rule 61, F.R.Civ.P.; Jennings v. United States (5 Cir. 1934), 73 F. 2d 470, 471.

[fol. 1641] to any instructions were made at the trial of the case.[36] Rule 51, F.R.Civ.P., provides in part that:

> "No party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless he objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection. Opportunity shall be given to make the objections out of the hearing of the jury."

Full opportunity was afforded counsel for Curtis to make any objections before the jury was permitted to consider its verdict. Under Rule 61, F.R.Civ.P., all errors which could not change the result of the trial, or which did not affect the substantial rights of the parties, are harmless and must be disregarded. No action taken by the court with respect to any instruction now under attack appears inconsistent with substantial justice, or to have affected the substantial rights of the parties, and we agree with the trial court that Curtis may not now complain.[37]

The Refusal to Give Requested Instructions

There is no merit to Curtis' contention that the trial court erred either in refusing to charge the jury that it should construe Butts' testimony most strongly against him, or in refusing to charge the jury that it should disregard the entire testimony of any witness whom it found to have knowingly and wilfully testified falsely.
[fol. 1642] The court's charge fully covered the general rules relating to the credibility of witnesses. The question concerning the credibility of any witness, and whether or not he had been successfully impeached, was left entirely to the jury. There was no showing that any witness had knowingly and wilfully testified falsely, and the evidence was more than adequate to support the verdict, even if the jury had completely disregarded the alleged equivocal testimony of Butts.

The "Newly Discovered Evidence"

In its motion for new trial under Rule 60(b) (2), F.R. Civ.P., Curtis contended that new evidence discovered since the trial conclusively demonstrates the falsity of the testimony of two of Butts' witnesses, Dr. Frank A. Rose and Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant, and strongly supports the defense of justification.

The trial court rejected this contention because (1) Curtis had not exercised reasonable diligence, (2) the evidence would merely tend to affect the weight and credibility of the testimony of Dr. Rose, and (3) the evidence would not have changed the verdict in this case.[38]

We are in accord with the trial court's conclusions, and do not find that he has abused his discretion.

[fol. 1643] Punitive Damages

The trial judge gave his reasons for requiring the remittitur of all punitive damages in excess of $400,000.[39] There is not the slightest suggestion that he thought, or even intimated, that the larger award was based on passion or prejudice. On the contrary, fully aware of the distinction between a verdict excessive in amount which may be reduced by remittitur, and one resulting from improper influences such as passion and prejudice which may not be corrected in this way, the judge necessarily rejected the idea that this verdict had been infected by such destructive elements.

The Georgia Code expressly provides for punitive damages.[40] Under Georgia law, three things are left for the

[38] In his opinion dated April 7, 1964 the trial court fully discussed this matter. (See supra note 23, at 16.)

[39] Supra note 6, at 919.

[40] Ga. Code Ann. § 105-2002: "In every tort there may be aggravating circumstances, either in the act or the intention, and jury to determine: (1) "when punitive damages shall be allowed"; (2) "the amount of such damages"; and (3) the purpose of the award as "either to deter the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass or as compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff."[41] Obviously there are, and can be, no precise standards for these determinations. Not for the first time in the common law tradition, the law turns to the jury. And Georgia prescribes that "(t)he [fol. 1644] measure of . . . punitive damages . . . is to be fixed by the enlightened conscience of an impartial jury."[42] What the "enlightened conscience" of one impartial jury might consider to be fair may not satisfy another impartial jury with an equally enlightened conscience. A wide variance in the amounts of such awards is inescapably inherent in any submission of the issue of punitive damages.

But, of course, no one would suppose that it is left wholly and solely to the jury. As with every other issue traditionally for jury resolution, the trial judge must still determine whether, as a matter of law, the verdict comports with law. The law recognizes that an award of any type of damages—compensatory or punitive—made by a jury free of bias, may be too small or too large. When that occurs—when the judge concludes that the law regards the verdict as too small or too large—then appropriate action must be taken by the court. Reviewing the amount of the verdict and reaching the conclusion that it is more than the law would permit is not, therefore, the equivalent of the judge's determination that excessiveness is due to a runaway jury, under the spell of passion or bias.

The trial judge had the duty of determining whether as a matter of law (a) any allowance for punitive damages could be made, and (b) what the maximum would be. As to (a), the trial court not only expressed the opinion that the article was extremely defamatory, and that the jury had no choice other than to find Curtis liable, but he also thought that there was "ample evidence from which a jury could have concluded that there was reckless disregard by [fol. 1645] defendant of whether the article was false or not." [43] Upon determining (b) he had then to decide whether to grant a new trial or require a remittitur as to the excess.[44] The latter is a permissible course and does [43] The trial court said, in its April 7, 1964 opinion (see supra note 23, at 16), that:

> "If it were conceded that plaintiff Butts was a 'public official', the case of New York Times Company v. Sullivan would not permit the vacating of this court's previous judgment, as the ruling in the Times case does not prohibit a public official from recovering for a defamatory falsehood where he proves 'actual malice'—that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. (Italics supplied.) In the trial of this case, there was ample evidence from which a jury could have concluded that there was reckless disregard by defendant of whether the article was false or not. See the court's ruling on defendant's motion for a new trial dated January 14, 1964. Butts v. Curtis Publishing Company, 225 F. Supp. 916."

[44] State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Scott (5 Cir. 1952), 198 F. 2d 152.

Curtis cites Crowell-Collier Publishing Company v. Caldwell (5th Cir. 1948), 170 F. 2d 941, where this Court held that the refusal to set aside a libel verdict of $237,500 was an abuse of discretion. Judge Hutcheson found that "litigants, witnesses, lawyers and jury seemed to regard the contest as a sporting event, a wager by battle, in which the best battler ought to and would win"; that the trial judge "held himself a little too aloof from the trial . . ., with the result that the trial got out of hand;" and that "when counsel for defendant made vigorous objections to the argument as highly improper, inflammatory, and prejudicial, and requested the court to instruct the jury to disregard them, the court said merely: 'Objection overruled. Request denied. Exception noted' ". Obviously, the same circumstances were not present not infringe upon the Seventh Amendment's guaranty of a jury trial.[45] In making his determination as to (b), he [fol. 1646] pursued the correct standard of keeping the verdict "within reasonable bounds considering the purpose to be achieved as well as the corporate defendant's wanton or reckless indifference to the plaintiff's rights."[46] Obviously, in deciding the matter the judge had to pick a dollar figure beyond which the law would not go. He selected the sum of $400,000 as the maximum which the law would accept to deter Curtis from repeating the trespass or to compensate the wounded feelings of Butts.[47] Although the reduction required, and the sum remaining, were each substantial, there was ample basis for the trial court's judgment.

To have granted a new trial might appear to have been an easier way out. But that is really no solution. On a retrial, the judge could not instruct the next jury as to the dollar maximum of any such verdict. So that jury would be pretty much on its own, under the unavoidably vague, elastic standards prescribed in the Code, as measured by the enlightened conscience of an impartial jury.[48] The trial judge, on the second trial, would then be forced to repeat the process of testing for (a) and (b). If, as urged [fol. 1647] by Curtis, the determination by the judge that the amount is too much, necessarily means a new trial, it is quite possible that the case would never end. Georgia has prescribed the "punishment" for aggravated willful torts. The law ought not to frustrate the vindication of that policy by an unrealistic procedure. The jury verdict, as reviewed and reduced by the trial judge, is the tortfeasor's assurance that such damages will not exceed that which the law would tolerate to achieve the Georgia objective of deterring repetition or compensating wounded feelings.

[47] Supra note 6, at 919. Butts, in arguing that the district court was far more lenient to Curtis in reducing the award than was justified, said: "The jury in the case at bar recognized that a 100 million dollar corporation with a circulation of between six and seven million copies and a readership of approximately 22,000,000 persons can be deterred by no less than three million dollars as a charge for its misuse of a cherished American freedom —the freedom of every man to live unthreatened by calumny. This jury believed that anything less than this amount would merely add to the audacious course of 'sophisticated muckracking' upon which the Curtis Publishing Company has admittedly set its sights." See also note 26, supra.

Conclusion

This is no ordinary libel case. The publication of the article by the Post, in the face of several specific appeals that it refrain from doing so, was part and parcel of a general policy of callousness, which recognized from the start that Butts' career would be ruined. The trial judge's appraisal of the evidence, with which we are in complete accord, was that it was sufficiently strong to justify the jury in concluding that what the Post did was done with reckless disregard of whether the article was false or not.

The case was fully developed during extensive pre-trials, and in a jury trial lasting two weeks. The record itself comprises 1613 pages. We have given full consideration to the entire record, as well as to the more than 650 pages of briefs submitted by both parties, the numerous authorities cited therein, and the oral arguments of counsel. We think that Curtis has had its day in court. It apparently thought so too until the jury verdict was returned. This is attested by the fact that practically all of its present complaints were not even raised until after the trial.

[fol. 1648] . Believing and so finding that the trial was fair, and that the judgment of the trial court was correct and proper in all respects, it is Affirmed.

In view of our holding, we have given no consideration to Butts' cross appeal.

RIVES, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

Wallace Butts, former Athletic Director of the University of Georgia, instituted this diversity action in the district court against the Curtis Publishing Company, publishers of The Saturday Evening Post. The complaint demanded $5,000,000 general and $5,000,000 punitive damages for an alleged libel contained in an article entitled, "The Story of a College Football Fix," which was published in the March 23, 1963, issue of the Post. The action resulted in a jury verdict against the defendant for $60,000 general damages and $3,000,000 punitive damages. The district court granted the defendant's motion for a new trial, conditioned upon the failure of the plaintiff to remit that portion of the award of punitive damages in excess of $400,000. The district court was of the opinion that the award of $60,000 for actual damages was not excessive, but the court concluded that the award for punitive damages was "grossly excessive." Pursuant to the district court's order, the plaintiff filed a remittitur and thereafter the district court overruled the defendant's motion for a new trial and entered judgment for the plaintiff in the amount of $460,000. Approximately six weeks after the district court entered judgment, the Supreme Court decided New York [fol. 1649] Times Co. v. Sullivan,[1] and the defendant filed its motion for new trial under Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The defendant contended that the previous judgment should be vacated and a new trial ordered in light of the New York Times Co. case. The district court denied the motion.

It is my view that the district court erred in not granting a new trial in light of New York Times Co. If mistaken in that view, I am nonetheless convinced that the part of the judgment awarding $400,000 in punitive damages cannot stand in the light of the first, fifth and seventh amendments to the Constitution.

First, however, let me say that this record makes clear beyond controversy that the questions of fact are for the jury's determination. The district court denied the plaintiff's motion for a directed verdict. Plaintiff's counsel insisted and the following colloquy ensued:

> "Mr. Lockerman: —on the point that the defendant had not, under the evidence that it has shown, proven the truth under the burden that it had of the things that it has said against the plaintiff in this article.
> "The Court: Mr. Lockerman, I think it would [be] in error for this Court to withdraw that issue from the Jury."

[fol. 1650] In ruling on the motion for a new trial, however, the district court commented: "The guilt of the defendant was so clearly established by the evidence in the case so as to have left the jury no choice but to find the defendant liable." The majority opinion quotes that comment and adds its "Amen" thus: "'We heartedly agree with that appraisal." I do not think that any such appraisal should be made. Even a casual reading of the record demonstrates that the questions of fact should be left to the jury.

I. Sullivan v. New York Times Co. necessitates reversal of the judgment in toto.

The Supreme Court in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan held that the Constitution limits state power, in a civil action brought by a public official for criticism of his official conduct, to an award of damages for a false statement made with "actual malice," that is with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not.[2] The district court did not think the New York Times Co. case governed the present action for the reason that the present plaintiff was not a "public official" as contemplated by the New York Times rule, and for the reason that ample evidence existed from which a jury could have concluded that there was reckless disregard by the defendant of whether the article was false or not. [R., pp. 1467-68.] The district court stated that "to hold plaintiff, an employee of the University Athletic Association, a public official would, in this Court's opinion, be extending the 'public official' designation beyond that contemplated by the ruling in the case of New York Times [fol. 1651] Company v. Sullivan. . . ." [R., p. 1467.] The plaintiff held to be a "public official" in New York Times Co. was Commissioner of Public Affairs, one of three elected Commissioners of the City of Montgomery, Alabama. His duties involved the supervision of the Police Department, Fire Department, Department of Cemetery and Department of Scales.[3] The Supreme Court noted:

> "We have no occasion here to determine how far down into the lower ranks of government employees the 'public official' designation would extend for purposes of this rule, or otherwise to specify categories of persons who would or would not be included. Cf. Barr v. Matteo, 360 U.S. 564, 573-575. Nor need we here determine the boundaries of the 'official conduct' concept. It is enough for the present case that respondent's position as an elected city commissioner clearly made him a public official, and that the allegations in the advertisement concerned what was allegedly his official conduct as Commissioner in charge of the Police Department."[4]

It is clear that "public officials" as contemplated by New York Times Co. are not limited to elected officials. In Garrison v. Louisiana,[5] decided subsequent to New York Times Co., the District Attorney for Orleans Parish, Louisiana, was convicted of criminal libel for issuing a statement disparaging the judicial conduct of the eight judges of the Criminal District Court. The Supreme [fol. 1652] Court's decision, which brought the District Attorney's statement within the purview of criticism of the official conduct of "public officials" and entitled to the benefit of the New York Times Co. rule, did not hinge on whether the eight judges were elected officials. No mention was made of how the judges obtained their positions. Moreover, it is clear from the Court's statement in New York Times Co., quoted above, that the rule applies to "government employees." The question reserved by the Court was "how far down into the lower ranks of government employees the 'public official' designation would extend . . . ."[6] A precise formula for designation of "public officials" for the purpose of the New York Times rule was not attempted. Indeed, it is clear from the background and reasons for the rule that to fashion and apply a precise formula for designation of "public officials" for the purpose of the New York Times rule would be a formidable, if not impossible, task.[7]

The first amendment secures freedom of expression upon public questions. The constitutional safeguard, the Supreme Court has said, "was fashioned to assure unfettered interchange of ideas for the bringing about of political and social changes desired by the people."[8] Similarly, "[I]t is a prized American privilege to speak one's mind, although not always with perfect good taste, on all public institutions."[9] Mr. Justice Brandeis has stated that "those who [fol. 1653] won our independence believed . . . that public discussion is a political duty; and that this should be a fundamental principle of the American government."[10] New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 1964, 376 U.S. 254, 269-70. As was said in Garrison v. Louisiana,[11] the First and Fourteenth Amendments embody our 'profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, and that it may well include vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials.' New York Times Co. v. Sullivan . . . ." It was against this background that the Supreme Court in New York Times Co. stated that the newspaper advertisement, which contained an inaccurate description of events occurring in Montgomery in connection with the civil rights movement, was an expression of grievance and protest on one of the major public issues of our time and would seem clearly to qualify for the constitutional protection.[12]

It is therefore necessary to examine the facts and weigh the circumstances to determine whether the allegedly defamed plaintiff is involved in the "conduct of the public business"[13] to an extent which attains constitutional significance.

The plaintiff held his position of Athletic Director of The University of Georgia by reason of a contract with the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, which hired him as an employee. [Brief for Appellee, p.

Moreover, he generally supervised "the entire athletic program of the school." [R., pp. 654-55; Brief for Appellee, pp. 69-70.] The education of youth in the State of Georgia is unquestionably a matter of public concern. By his position the plaintiff is intricately involved with a significant public issue, that is, the education of the youth who attend The University of Georgia—a public institution. According to the Duke of Wellington, "The battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton." The ever-increasing difficulties to be faced by this nation require the utmost integrity in the training of its youth. I think the plaintiff is a "public official" as contemplated by the New York Times Co. decision.

The article, which the defendant published under the subtitle, "How Wally Butts and Bear Bryant Rigged a Game Last Fall," concerned alleged information on Georgia plays given by Wallace Butts to Coach Paul Bryant relating to the University of Alabama and the University of Georgia football game played in Birmingham in September 1962. The article charged Wallace Butts with being corrupt and with betraying his players. It charged that the players were forced into the game like "rats in a maze" and "took a frightful physical beating." In an italicized preface to the article, "The Editors" stated that Wallace Butts and Coach Bryant were participants in the greatest and most shocking sports scandal since that of the Chicago White Sox in the 1919 World Series. In the same preface, [fol. 1655] Wallace Butts was relegated to a status worse than that of "disreputable gamblers" and a corrupt person who, employed to "educate and guide young men," betrays or sells out his pupils. [See R., pp. 88-89 (order granting motion for new trial.)]

I think it clear that the defendant's statements are within the purview of criticism of the official conduct of public officials. As stated by the Supreme Court, "the public-official rule protects the paramount public interest in a free flow of information to the people concerning public officials, their servants. To this end, anything which might touch on an official's fitness for office is relevant. Few personal attributes are more germane to fitness for office than dishonesty, malfeasance, or improper motivation, even though these characteristics may also affect the official's private character.[14]

The district court charged the jury that general damages were recoverable absent proof of actual malice. The plaintiff argues that even if the New York Times rule is applicable, the district court's failure to charge that malice is a prerequisite for actual damages is harmless error since the district court charged that actual malice was required for an award of punitive damages and the jury awarded punitive damages. I do not agree that the district court's charge complies with the New York Times rule.

In dealing with the question of punitive damages, the district court charged the jury:

> "Where it is established that the defendant was inspired by actual malice in the publication of the defamatory matter, the jury, in its discretion, may, but [fol. 1656] is not required, to award punitive damages. As previously stated to you, actual malice encompasses the notion of ill will, spite, hatred and an intent to injure one. Malice also denotes a wanton or reckless indifference or culpable negligence with regard to the rights of others." [R., p. 1356] (Emphasis supplied.)

I think it clear that the district court's charge does not embrace the New York Times Co. definition of actual malice, which is with knowledge that the statement was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. The New York Times rule emphasizes "the knowingly false statement and the false statement made with reckless disregard of the truth," [15] and not merely intent to injure the individual or negligent disregard of the rights of others. The necessary requisite to a showing of actual malice under the New York Times standard is proof that "the lie . . . [is] knowingly and deliberately published about a public official" or published "with reckless disregard of the truth." [16]

[14] Garrison v. Louisiana, 1964, 379 U.S. 64, 76-77.

Since the jury might well have understood the district court's charge to allow recovery on a showing of intent to inflict harm or even the culpably negligent infliction of harm, rather than intent to inflict harm through falsehood, the charge does not comply with the New York Times standard.[17]

The majority of this Court have held that the defendant "has clearly waived any right it may have had to challenge [fol. 1657] the verdict and judgment on any of the constitutional grounds asserted in Times." While I respect the judgment of the majority, I do not share that judgment.[18] In short, I do not think the defendant may be said to have waived by "silence" a constitutional right not enunciated at the time; it was not even enunciated by the counsel who petitioned for certiorari in the New York Times Co. decision.

In the New York Times Co. case, the trial judge charged that the portions of the advertisement in issue were "libelous per se," that "general damages need not be alleged or proved but are presumed," that the plaintiff was entitled to recover both such "presumed" and punitive damages if the jury decided that the words related to and concerned him and that the damages awarded were not excessive. The jury awarded damages of $500,000. The questions presented to the Supreme Court in the petition for a writ of certiorari dealt with the award of $500,000, the sufficiency of the evidence and the lack of proof of special damages in light of the first amendment as embodied in the fourteenth.[19] Conspicuously absent is any suggestion [fol. 1658] that the first amendment, as embodied in the fourteenth amendment, requires that a public official must prove actual malice against critics of his official conduct.[20] [19] In detail, the questions presented were:

"1. Whether, consistently with the guarantee of freedom of the press in the First Amendment as embodied in the Fourteenth, a state may hold libelous per se and actionable by an elected City Commissioner, without proof of special damage, statements critical of the conduct of a department of the City Government under his jurisdiction which are inaccurate in some particulars.

"2. Whether there was sufficient evidence to justify, consistently with the guarantee of freedom of the press, the determination that statements, naming no individual but critical of the Police Department under the jurisdiction of the respondent as an elected City Commissioner, were defamatory as to him and punishable as libelous per se.

"3. Whether an award of $500,000 as 'presumed' and punitive damages for libel constituted, in the circumstances of this case, an abridgement of the freedom of the press."

Petition for Writ of Certiorari, p. 2, New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 1964, 376 U.S. 254.

[20] In three of the 105 pages of their petition for certiorari, counsel dealt with "the doctrine espoused by the court below . . . that a public official is entitled to recover 'presumed' and punitive damages for a publication critical of the official conduct of a governmental agency under his general supervision, if that publication tends to 'injure' him 'in his reputation' or to 'bring' him 'into public contempt' as an official—unless a jury is persuaded that it is entirely true." Except for the statement of the case and facts, malice was mentioned in one sentence. See Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Alabama, p. 13, New York Times Co. v. Sullivan.

Apparently this is due to the fact that the defendant's objections in the trial court were directed to the absence of a requirement of proof of special damages.[21] Only by looking at the New York Times Co. case in retrospect can it be said that the defendant has waived the great constitutional rights contemplated by the New York Times rule. But applying the same "retrospective look" to the present case,[22] it is also clear that had the defendant contended the same as did the defendant in the New York Times case, i.e., that the first and fourteenth amendments were "infringed by holding the publication libelous and actionable without proof of special damage,"[23] it would not have affected the trial of the present action; for the district [fol. 1659] court ruled, in dealing with the motion for new trial, that the New York Times rule was not applicable to the present plaintiff. [R., p. 1467.]

The fact that the present defendant offered no defense under Georgia law, which provides that communications concerning the "acts of public men in their public capacity" are deemed privileged under certain conditions, cannot be said to constitute a waiver of a defense that the plaintiff is a "public official" under the New York Times standard. As recognized by the plaintiff, members of the athletic department are, like members of the faculty, "employees" under Georgia law and are not considered in "public office" or "officers."[24] Thus, although the Georgia statute which grants a privilege to "comments upon the acts of public men in their public capacity and with reference thereto"[25] appears as broad, if not broader, than the "public official" as contemplated by New York Times Co., the plaintiff recognizes that the Georgia case law results in a narrow application of the privilege and the present plaintiff is not covered.

Moreover, I think that Henry v. Collins,[26] reflects that the Supreme Court does not intend to allow the great constitutional rights inherent in the New York Times rule to be ignored in a case such as the present one.

In Henry v. Collins, the most recent Supreme Court decision interpreting the New York Times rule, the Court reversed per curiam the judgments obtained by a county [fol. 1660] attorney and a chief of police in their libel actions against the petitioner. The petitioner had charged that his arrest for disturbing the peace was the result of "a diabolical plot." The trial judge had charged "that malice does not necessarily mean hatred or ill will, but that malice may consist merely of culpable recklessness or a wilful and wanton disregard of the rights and interests of the person defamed." The Supreme Court reversed since the trial judge's instructions concerning malice did not comply with the New York Times rule. The trial of the plaintiff's suit and the decision of the Mississippi Supreme Court affirming the judgments occurred shortly before the Supreme Court handed down New York Times Co. Like the present defendant, the defendant in Henry raised his first amendment question by a motion for a new trial. However, the defendant in Henry filed a motion for a directed verdict at the same time which also raised the first amendment question. Both motions were overruled. Significant is the fact that the constitutional questions raised by the motions were raised for the first time after the close of the plaintiffs' case.[27]

Since the majority of this Court are not of the opinion that the judgment must be reversed, considerations of effective judicial administration do not require me to review the evidence in the present record to determine whether it could constitutionally support a judgment for the plaintiff should the plaintiff seek a new trial.[28]

[fol. 1661] In summary, I think the present diversity action was brought by a public official for criticism of his official conduct; therefore, he was limited to an award of damages for a false statement made with "actual malice" —that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. The present action was tried on a definitely stated theory which was fundamentally and constitutionally deficient. The present action should be tried on the theory set forth by the Supreme Court's decision supervening the district court's judgment, that is, New York Times Co. v. Sullivan. In such a situation, it has been held, as far back as 1937, that the duty of the district court is to grant the motion for a new trial.[29]

II. That part of the Judgment awarding $400,000 punitive damages violates the defendant's rights under the first, fifth and seventh amendments.

On the question so far discussed, that is, whether New York Times v. Sullivan necessitates reversal of the judgment in toto, I would concede that there is a debatable issue of waiver on which I differ from the majority. The questions hereafter discussed had their genesis in the jury's verdict and are unquestionably preserved for review by the defendant's first motion for new trial (R., pp. 46-48).

[29] Sulzbacher v. Continental Cas. Co., 8 Cir. 1937, 88 F.2d 122. It should be noted that the learned district judge in the present case did not deny the defendant's motion for a new trial on the basis that the defendant had "waived" the constitutional rights defined in New York Times Co., but, instead, considered the motion for new trial on its merits. [R. pp. 1464-68.]

[fol. 1662] As to the questions now to be considered, there can be no issue of waiver.

The punitive damages, either as found by the jury or as fixed by the court, are many times greater in amount than the general damages. Under the court's instructions to the jury, the general damages included compensation "for the mental anguish, pain, mortification, and humiliation he has experienced as a result of the publication." (R. 1354) The punitive damages included no element to which the plaintiff was entitled by way of compensation, but, according to the court's instruction to the jury, "the purpose of punitive damages is to deter the defendant from a repetition of the offense and is a warning to others not to commit a like offense. It is intended to protect the community and has an expression of ethical indignation, although the plaintiff receives the award." (R. 1356) The statute which allows the jury to impose punitive damages is Georgia Code Annotated § 105-2002, which reads:

> "In every tort there may be aggravating circumstances, either in the act or the intention, and in that event the jury may give additional damages, either to deter the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass or as compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff."

In the present case "compensation for the wounded feelings of the plaintiff" had been included in the general damages. [See R., p. 1354, quoted supra.] The trial court expanded considerably on the alternative purpose "to deter [fol. 1663] the wrongdoer from repeating the trespass"; it included also "a warning to others not to commit a like offense," the protection of "the community," and "an expression of ethical indignation." [See R., p. 1356, quoted supra.] The jury was bound to observe the instructions of the court. For the purpose of considering whether the jury's award of punitive damages exceeded constitutional bounds, it is of no moment that it may also have exceeded the limits set by the statute.[30] The court further instructed the jury that, ". . . if you decide to award punitive damages, the sum you award need have no relationship to any amount that you may award for general damages. It may be greater or it may be less. That is a matter which rests in your sole discretion." [R., p. 1356.] The jury could reasonably infer that no limit was placed on the exercise of its discretion.

If the defendant corporation had been tried under the Georgia criminal libel statute,[31] it might have been punished by a fine "not to exceed $1,000."[32] As it is; the defendant stands subjected to a judgment of $400,000 for punitive damages, four hundred times the maximum fine for criminal libel. Evidently, the $400,000 sufficed to express the trial judge's sense of "ethical indignation" while that of the jurors swelled to $3,000,000—3,000 times the [fol. 1664] maximum fine which could have been imposed in a criminal prosecution.

Further, in a criminal proceeding, the defendant was subject to no fine unless proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, while here the judge charged the jury that ". . . the defendant, Curtis Publishing Company, has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the statements contained in this article are true . . . ." (R., p. 1347.)

I would not imply that the return of punitive damages in the ordinary case is constitutionally suspect, for more than a century ago the Supreme Court commented:

[30] According to the brief of the appellee, plaintiff (p. 86): "It is apparent that the purpose of this Code section in cases of defamation is to deter the defendant from republishing this one particular libel at a later date. It does not prevent the defendant from publishing any other matter, whether thought libelous of the plaintiff or not." (Emphasis the appellee's.)

[32] Ga. Code Ann. § 26-2101.

> "It is a well-established principle of the common law, that in actions of trespass and all actions on the case for torts, a jury may inflict what are called exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages upon a defendant, having in view the enormity of his offence rather than the measure of compensation to the plaintiff. We are aware that the propriety of this doctrine has been questioned by some writers; but if repeated judicial decisions for more than a century are to be received as the best exposition of what the law is, the question will not admit of argument. By the common as well as by statute law, men are often punished for aggravated misconduct or lawless acts, by means of a civil action, and the damages, inflicted by way of penalty or punishment, given to the party injured."

Day v. Woodworth, 1851, 54 U.S. (13 How.) 362, 370-71. [fol. 1665] The theory of punitive damages involves a blending of the interests of society in general with those of the aggrieved individual in particular.[33] There can be no serious question but that the Georgia statute permitting "additional damages" [34] is constitutional upon its face.

However, as that statute was applied by (1) the court's instructions to the jury, (2) the jury's verdict, and (3) the reduced judgment ultimately entered by the court on motion for new trial, the award of punitive damages in the present case is tantamount to a criminal fine or penalty. As said in the very recent case of United States v. Archie Brown, U.S. Oct. Term, 1964, No. 399, decided June 7, 1965:

> "It would be archaic to limit the definition of 'punishment' to 'retribution.' Punishment serves several purposes: retributive, rehabilitative, deterrent—and preventive. One of the reasons society imprisons those convicted of crimes is to keep them from inflicting future harm, but that does not make imprisonment any the less punishment."

Similarly, in Trop v. Dulles, 1958, 356 U.S. 86, 96, it was said:

"In deciding whether or not a law is penal, this Court has generally based its determination upon the purpose [fol. 1666] of the statute.[18] If the statute imposes a disability for the purposes of punishment—that is, to reprimand the wrongdoer, to deter others, etc.—it has been considered penal.[19] But a statute has been considered nonpenal if it imposes a disability, not to punish, but to accomplish some other legitimate governmental purpose.[20]

"[18] Of course, the severity of the disability imposed as well as all circumstances surrounding the legislative enactment is relevant to this decision. See, generally, Wormuth, Legislative Disqualifications as Bills of Attainder, 4 Vand.L.Rev. 603, 608-610; 64 Yale L.J. 714, 722-724.

Footnote 18 to the text just quoted makes clear that the enormity of the verdict and even of the final judgment are relevant factors to be considered in determining whether the punitive damages amount to a criminal fine.

I submit that there is no difference in substance between the punitive damages imposed in the present case and criminal punishment—an ex post factor punishment 400 times as great as the defendant could have anticipated [fol. 1667] from the criminal libel statute,[35] and imposed without any of the procedural safeguards which are required in criminal proceedings by due process.[36]

If there should be any doubt that the award of $400,000 in damages strictly punitive violates the due process clause for lack of the safeguards required in criminal proceedings, there can be none, I submit, that it amounts to a prior restraint upon freedom of the press. The rule as announced in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 1964, 376 U.S. 254, 277-78, has clear application to the facts of this case:

> "What a State may not constitutionally bring about by means of a criminal statute is likewise beyond the reach of its civil law of libel. The fear of damage awards under a rule such as that invoked by the Alabama courts here may be markedly more inhibiting than the fear of prosecution under a criminal statute. See City of Chicago v. Tribune Co., 307 Ill. 595, 607, 139 N.W. 86, 90 (1923). Alabama, for example, has a criminal libel law which subjects to prosecution 'any person who speaks, writes, or prints of and concerning another any accusation falsely and maliciously importing the commission by such person of a felony, or any other indictable offense involving moral turpitude,' and which allows as punishment upon conviction a fine not exceeding $500 and a prison sentence of six months. Alabama Code, Tit. 14, §350. Presumably a person [fol. 1668] charged with violation of this statute enjoys ordinary criminal-law safeguards such as the requirements of an indictment and of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These safeguards are not available to the defendant in a civil action. The judgment awarded in this case—without the need for any proof of actual pecuniary loss—was one thousand times greater than the maximum fine provided by the Alabama criminal statute, and one hundred times greater than that provided by the Sedition Act. And since there is no double-jeopardy limitation applicable to civil lawsuits, this is not the only judgment that may be awarded against petitioners for the same publication. Whether or not a newspaper can survive a succession of such judgments, the pall of fear and timidity imposed upon those who would give voice to public criticism is an atmosphere in which the First Amendment freedoms cannot survive. Plainly the Alabama law of civil libel is 'a form of regulation that creates hazards to protected freedoms markedly greater than those that attend reliance upon the criminal law.' Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70." [37]

For yet another reason the award of $3,000,000 by the jury, or of $400,000 by the court, as punitive damages is unconstitutional and void. There was no semblance of definite standard or controlling guide to govern the award.[38] Can any standard be more vague or arbitrary than "an [fol. 1669] expression of ethical indignation" first on the part of the jury and then on the part of the trial judge? It must be remembered that stricter standards of permissible vagueness are applicable to a rule having a potentially inhibiting effect on freedom of the press than are applicable to rules relating to less important subjects.[39]

Still further, I submit that the remittitur violates the defendant's rights under the seventh amendment. The trial judge concluded "that the award for punitive damages in this case was grossly excessive. It is the court's considered opinion that the maximum sum for punitive damages that should have been awarded against Curtis Publishing Company should be $400,000.00." [R., p. 95] In another part of his opinion on motion for new trial, the district judge commented: "The award for punitive damages in the case under consideration is more than seventeen times larger than the highest award for punitive damages ever sustained." [R., p. 93.] The district judge's opinion is silent as to the underlying reason for such a grossly excessive verdict. The majority opinion says that ". . . the judge necessarily rejected the idea that this verdict had been infected by such destructive elements [as passion or prejudice]." [Majority opinion, p. 28.] With deference, I submit that that conclusion is not based on the record or on anything said by the trial judge. To the contrary, in colloquy with counsel, the judge may well have disclosed his view as to why the judgment was excessive: "Suppose the court should determine that probably a certain portion of the argument was improper, and [fol. 1670] therefore the verdict was excessive, and grant you a new trial on that ground, and then it was tried again . . . ." [R., p. 1373.]

The majority of this Court labors under a different impression. It several times refers to the defendant's new policy of "sophisticated muckraking" without benefit of what the defendant claimed that it meant by that expression [R., pp. 37-38, 1019.]:

> "Defendant admits that beginning in the latter part of 1962, The Saturday Evening Post adopted an editorial policy of 'sophisticated muckraking' in the sense of printing the truth about the grave dangers facing the country, including the threat from outside the country and the deterioration of moral values within the country." [R., pp. 37-38.]

It was, of course, for the jury to say whether the defendant's explanation was true. In any event, I agree with the majority that the expression "was by itself more than enough to inflame the jury." [Opinion, pp. 21-22.] If, as is impliedly conceded, the jury was "inflamed," then was not passion and prejudice the most probable cause for its grossly excessive verdict? The majority continues, "Counsel for Butts could only gild the lily." [Opinion, p. 22.] I am tempted to facetiously comment on their plentiful supply of "gilt," but, in a more serious vein, I must express my shock and surprise that this Court will leave standing what amounts to severe criminal punishment of the defendant in the face of the highly improper and prejudicial argument of plaintiff's counsel.

[fol. 1671] The majority says that "some of the argument was invited . . .," but is not more specific as to the particular argument of defendant's counsel which amounted to an invitation. However, the appellee's brief (p. 93) refers to the following:

> "Mr. Cody's exact words were: (R. 1267)
> > " 'The point I want to make is that a man [plaintiff] that will go to one of your public officials [Comptroller General], bet enough to start into this business and a lot of other businesses while he is charged with the duty of Athletic Director, but it is worse, in order to obtain the license to do that, to misrepresent your financial condition.' (Emphasis added)."

In response, there is attached to appellant's reply brief as Exhibits A and B, the affidavit of Mr. Cody supported by the affidavit of Rufus L. Hixon, the official court reporter. The court reporter's affidavit is to the effect that "after deponent had examined his stenotype notes, he telephoned Mr. Bondurant to state that the word 'bad' had been used by Mr. Cody in his closing argument but that the word 'bet' had been erroneously transcribed." [Exhibit B, p. 8a, Appellant's Reply Brief.]

In addition, I would note that in beginning his argument, counsel for the defendant referred to his attachment to the University of Georgia and to the fact that the trial judge, opposing counsel, and he had received their training in that institution. The arguments of counsel are set forth in the record (pp. 1257-1341). They do not, in my opinion, [fol. 1672] disclose any invitation or provocation to justify or excuse the improper and inflammatory argument of plaintiff's counsel. The following excerpts are only samples of the objectionable parts of that argument, but, I submit, that they speak so loudly as not to require comment:

> "Since he talked to you about the University of Georgia and when he was there, I think I likewise have a right to mention to you briefly that I probably have known Wally Butts longer than any man in this case. I was at Mercer University with Wally Butts when he played end on the football team there. He was in some respects a small man in stature, but he had more determination and more power to win than any man that I have ever seen in my life. I would not stand before you in this case today arguing in his behalf if I thought that Wally Butts would not tell you the truth when he raises his hand on this stand and swears to Almighty God that what he is going to tell you is the truth. [R., p. 1289]

There is no law against it, and the only way that type of, as I call it, yellow journalism can be stopped is to let the Saturday Evening Post know that it is not going to get away with it today, tomorrow, or any more hereafter, and the only way that lesson can be brought home to them, Gentlemen, is to hit them where it hurts them, and the only thing they know is money. They write about human beings; they kill him, his wife, his three lovely [fol. 1673] daughters. What do they care? They have got money; getting money for it.

"I am looking to you for my protection. Heavens (sic) knows, if you let them out of this case for five million dollars or less, and boy, it's been worth it to them, I may be next, because they are not going to stop with that. You may be next; my wife; my children; yourself. We have got to stop them now, and you are the only twelve in the world that can stop them. [R., p. 1319.]

". . .

"I say, Gentlemen, this is the time we have got to get them. A hundred million dollars in advertising, would ten percent of that be fair to Wallace Butts for what they have done to him? Would a fifty cent assessment on each of the twenty-three million issues which they wrote about him there, would that be a strain or a burden on them? I think it would teach them that we don't have that kind of journalism down here, and we don't want it down here, and we don't want it to spread from 666 Fifth Avenue any further than that building right now.

"My time is up, I have done the best I can. I have lived in agony with this man since I got the first notice that this was what was going to happen, this Post article was coming out. I have seen him deteriorating even since it came out, and I have lived in agony along [fol. 1674] with him, and it may be that the personal first-hand knowledge that I have had since almost living with him and his family every day, I may have said some things or done some things or conducted myself in some manner that was displeasing to you. All I can say, I have done my best, and if I have done any of those things, don't hold it against Wallace Butts.

"You know, one of these days, like everyone else must come to, Wallace Butts is going to pass on. No one can bother him then. The Saturday Evening Post can't get at him then. And unless I miss my guess,

> They will put Wallace Butts in a red coffin with a black lid, and he will have a football in his hands, and his epitaph will read something like this: 'Glory, Glory to old Georgia.'" [R., pp. 1321-22.]

If this dissent serves no other purpose, it will at least preserve for posterity the colorful peroration last quoted. Seriously, it seems to me that "the public interest requires that the court of its own motion, as is its power and duty, protect suitors in their right to a verdict uninfluenced by the appeals of counsel to passion or prejudice." N.Y. Central R.R. Co. v. Johnson, 1929, 279 U.S. 310, 318. That would be true even if the prejudicial argument had not been followed by a grossly excessive verdict. I submit that the $3,000,000 punitive damage verdict was so clearly the result of passion and prejudice that it could not be cured by remittitur.[40]

[fol. 1675] It is difficult in any case to reconcile the practice of remittitur with the constitutional right of a defendant to trial by jury.[41] The logic of Professor Carlin's article on Remittiturs and Additurs (1942), 49 W.Va. LQ 1, 17, 18, quoted in 6 Moore F.P. (2d ed.) 3738-39, seems to me unanswerable.[42]

That logic is peculiarly applicable to the circumstances of this case, where only punitive damages are reduced and there is no rule or standard by which the judge can separate any good part of the verdict from the bad. In effect, the remittitur from $3,000,000 to $400,000 represents nothing more specific than the difference between the jury's and the judge's sense of "ethical indignation." The jury's verdict cannot be recognized in the final judgment.

I appreciate that in the federal courts the right to a jury trial is to be determined as a matter of federal law in diversity as well as other actions.[43] It is, however, both interesting and instructive to refer to Georgia law. The statute permitting the award of punitive damages,[44] says that " . . . the jury may give additional damages . . . . " (Emphasis supplied.) Another statute prescribes: "The question of damages being one for the jury, the court should [fol. 1676] not interfere, unless the damages are either so small or so excessive as to justify the inference of gross mistake or undue bias." Ga. Code Ann. § 105-2015.

It has long been the law of Georgia that "the trial judge has no power to order that, as a condition to the refusal of a new trial, a portion of the verdict shall be written off as excessive, except where from the application of the law to the evidence, the excess can be accurately ascertained." Syllabus 4 by the Court, Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Perkerson, 1901, 112 Ga. 923, 38 S.E. 365. That action was for the death of a railroad employee. The plaintiff recovered a verdict for $10,833.33. The trial court ordered a new trial conditioned on the plaintiff's consent to a remittitur of the part of the verdict in excess of $8,500.00, and, upon plaintiff's consent, entered judgment for that amount. On defendant's appeal, the Supreme Court of Georgia reviewed the authorities at length and reversed. A part of its opinion reads:

> "It is manifest that the verdict for $8,500 was rendered by the judge, and not by the jury, and it is impossible to ascertain from the evidence in the case how he arrived at that exact amount. It is evident from his order that he was dissatisfied with the verdict, as to the amount of damages found, and that, if he had not thought he had the power of remitting a portion of the damages, he would have set the verdict aside and granted a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was excessive. The judge may have the power to determine that a verdict is grossly excessive, and for that cause to order it set aside, and yet have [fol. 1677] no power to fix the exact amount for which it should stand. 'The power to control does not include the power to find. Like the executive veto, it arrests, but does not by its exercise bestow the power to enact.'"

Nonetheless, it does seem anomalous for the federal courts to require the state courts to accord the strictest guaranty of jury trial when indicated by a federal statute (e.g., the Federal Employers' Liability Act), and then, in a diversity case to refuse to recognize the requirement of jury trial imposed by a state statute.

[44] Ga. Code Ann. § 105-2002, quoted supra p. 47.

Even more pertinent is a very recent case where the trial court, with plaintiff's consent, reduced the exemplary or punitive damages awarded by the jury from $4,000 to $1,500. The conditional judgment for new trial was reversed with directions that a new trial be granted. The Court said:

"In determining punitive or exemplary damages it is impossible to lay down any fixed rules for a precise mathematical calculation; 'and in every such case the amount of the finding must be largely in the power of the jury, who have no other guide but their enlightened consciences. To say, therefore, in such cases that this finding should not have exceeded a certain sum, is to invade their peculiar province, and to assume their functions; and to require a portion of the amount so found by them to be remitted, and the balance to stand as their verdict, seems to us unauthorized either by the words of the law, or by the precedents and practice in such cases.' Savannah, Florida & Western Ry. v. Harper, 70 Ga. 119, 123-124 [citing many other authorities].

"It is our wish to make it clear that nothing held here or in any of the authorities cited is subject to the inference that a trial judge is restricted in the [fol. 1678] exercise of his exclusive discretion to grant or deny a motion for new trial on the general grounds. We do emphasize that where the determining of the amount of a particular class of damages lies exclusively with the jury, the trial court must either grant or deny a new trial on the basis of the jury's award. The trial judge cannot condition the exercise of his discretion in granting or denying a new trial on an acceptance by the parties of a different sum selected by him."

City Motor Exchange v. Ballinger, Ga. App. 1964, 138 S.E. 2d 925, 926-27.

The seventh amendment guarantees a right of trial by jury to the defendant as well as to the plaintiff. I cannot escape the conviction that by the remittitur in this case that right has been denied to the defendant.

Both because New York Times v. Sullivan is convincing that this case was tried upon fundamentally erroneous principles of law, and because the enormous award of punitive damages and the remittitur violate the defendant's constitutional rights, I would reverse the judgment of the district court. I therefore respectfully dissent.

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 21,491

[Title omitted]

PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC AND BRIEF IN SUPPORT THEREOF—Filed August 4, 1965

[fol. 1683] Appellant Curtis Publishing Company respectfully moves the Court to grant a rehearing en banc upon the unusually important questions presented and to secure uniformity in the decisions of the Court for the following reasons:

The majority of the panel of this Court found that the Appellant Curtis Publishing Company knowingly and intentionally waived basic rights under the First Amendment even before they were announced by the Supreme Court in The New York Times Company v. Sullivan, [fol. 1684] 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964). The Times decision for the first time extended the protection of the First Amendment to libel. Not even the New York Times' counsel who prepared the petition for certiorari anticipated the grounds on which the Supreme Court ultimately decided the Times case. The refusal of the majority to consider these basic constitutional issues is in direct conflict with the decisions of the Supreme Court in Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, 61 Sup. Ct. 719, 85 L. Ed. 1037 (1941) and Helvering v. Richter, 312 U.S. 561, 61 Sup. Ct. 723, 85 L. Ed. 1043 (1941), and that of this Circuit in Cobb v. Balkcom, 339 F.2d 95 (5th Cir. 1964) and the cases cited therein.

The refusal of the majority of this Court to consider the important constitutional principles announced in The New York Times Company v. Sullivan is based upon a deciding vote by District Judge Spears. Since Judge Rives' opinion conflicts directly with that of Judge Brown on this issue affecting basic rights under the First Amendment, a rehearing en banc should be granted in order that uniformity in the decisions of this Court may be insured. "[I]t is primarily the task of a Court of Appeals to reconcile its internal difficulties." Wisniewski v. United States, 353 U.S. 901, 77 Sup. Ct. 633, 1 L. Ed. 2d 658 (1957). Rehearings en banc have been granted by this Court in many cases in which there was a strong dissent and even without a District Judge casting the deciding vote on the panel. See e.g., Noah v. Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, 267 F.2d 218 (5th Cir. 1959); Howard v. United States, 232 F.2d 274 (5th Cir. 1956).

3.

The applicability of the new First Amendment principles of The New York Times case to the plaintiff as a "public official" is a question of major importance which has been expressly left by the Supreme Court to be decided by the lower federal courts in the first instance and should be decided by this Court en banc in order that the trial courts in this Circuit may be guided thereby.

The affirmance of the unprecedented and excessive award of punitive damages violates Appellant's constitutional rights:

(a) The granting of a remittitur rather than a new trial where the $3,000,000 verdict for punitive damages has been held by the trial court to be "grossly excessive" violated the defendant's right to trial by a fair and impartial jury, which is guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment.

(b) The award of punitive damages in such an excessive amount is tantamount to a penal sanction which, under The New York Times Company v. Sullivan case and others, cannot constitutionally be imposed without the procedural safeguards which are required in criminal proceedings and sufficient standards for jury guidance.

The Court incorrectly allowed an excessive jury verdict, which was the product of erroneous trial rulings [fol. 1686] and instructions, as well as passion and prejudice, to stand.

[fol. 1695] Brief in Support of Petition for a Rehearing En Banc

I.

The Refusal of the Majority to Consider the Fundamental Constitutional Issues Presented Under the First and Fourteenth Amendments on the Basis of the Subsequent Decision of the Supreme Court in The New York Times Company v. Sullivan Because of the Alleged Waiver of These Basic Rights by the Defendant is Clear Error and Directly Conflicts With the Decision of the Supreme Court in Hormel v. Helvering.

[fol. 1696] In The New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L.Ed.2d 686 (1964), the Supreme Court for the first time extended the protection of the First Amendment to libel cases. These new constitutional principles, under which false statements, as well as those which are true, received constitutional protection, unless shown by the plaintiff to have been made with "actual malice—that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not," radically changed the substantive law previously applicable to libel cases.[1] Until the decision in the Times case, the Supreme Court had repeatedly stated that "libelous utterances are not within the area of constitutionally protected speech." Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, at 483-84, 77 Sup. Ct. 304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957); Beauharnais v. Illinois, 343 U.S. 250, at 266, 72 Sup. Ct. 725, 96 L.Ed.2d 919 (1952); Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 Sup. Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357 (1931).

Despite the clear applicability of the new constitutional [fol. 1697] principles,[2] the majority refuses to apply them

[1] The Times case forbids the recovery of general or punitive damages unless the plaintiff proves with "convincing clarity," not only that the statements were false, but that they were published with knowledge that they were false or with reckless disregard of whether they were false or not. In the Times case, the failure of the New York Times to check information in its own files which would have disclosed the falsity of its charges was held insufficient to prove reckless disregard of truth with "the convincing clarity which the constitutional standard demands." In Garrison v. Louisiana, 379 U. S. 64, 85 Sup. Ct. 209, 13 L. Ed. 2d 125 (1964), proof that the libelous charges were made "without a reasonable belief in their truth" was held insufficient under the Times case. It cannot be seriously argued that these decisions did not drastically change the constitutional principles heretofore applicable in libel cases.

[2] Since Judge Rives was prevented by considerations of judicial administration from reviewing the evidence in the present record to determine whether it could constitutionally support a judgment, and since the majority declined to review the evidence which unquestionably demonstrates the lack of actual malice on the part of the Post, the following summary is necessary:

> The defamatory charge in the instant case was that Butts, while Athletic Director of the University of Georgia, gave information about the Georgia football team to the Alabama Coach, Paul Bryant, prior to the Georgia-Alabama game, which was calculated to affect the outcome of the game. There is no evidence to show that the persons in the Post organization having responsibility for the publication of the article "knew" that the charges contained in "The Story of a College Football Fix" were false, either at the time of its publication or at any other time. Indeed, the evidence is clearly to the contrary, and it convincingly demonstrates the belief of the

to the present case because of what the majority asserts to be a waiver of these rights by the defendant. This waiver is based on alleged facts, most of which are outside the record, and a consequent finding that Curtis was repre-

Editors of the Post in the truth of the article. (R. 945-46, 957, 1014-15).

Nor is there evidence that the Post article was published "with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not." From the outset, Post had been interested only in getting the truth of the entire story. (R. 957). Post employed Frank Graham, an experienced sports writer, to make a complete investigation. (R. 952, 954, 957). Graham was instructed to be careful, that this was a big story. (R. 957). He was to proceed with the utmost thoroughness (R. 954, 957), to dig to get all available facts (R. 952-53), and to verify the story. (R. 926). After Graham had completed the article, he submitted it to Davis Thomas, Managing Editor of the Post. (R. 1021). Because of the nature of the charges made in the article, Thomas reviewed the article to make certain great care had been exercised (R. 1015, 1021) and that every significant source of information had been checked in advance of publication. (R. 1014-15). In approving the article for publication, Thomas attached prime significance to the affidavit executed by Burnett, which confirmed Thomas' belief in the truth of statements contained in the article. (R. 1015). The article was then submitted to Clay Blair, Editor-in-Chief of Curtis Pub-[fol. 1698] lishing Company, for his approval. Blair was careful to see that the article had been checked thoroughly as to its truth. (R. 945-46). The article was approved for publication only after Blair was satisfied that the statements contained in the article were true and accurate. (R. 945-46).

The Post relied on information given it by George Burnett in which he described in detail the substance of the September 13 call between Wallace Butts and Paul Bryant. This information was reaffirmed in a sworn affidavit signed by Burnett at Post's request. (R. 494, 508, 1015). The Post also knew that the September 13 call had been confirmed by long distance records of the telephone company. (R. 909). The defendant knew that the person who was best able to evaluate this information, Georgia Head Coach Johnny Griffith, had stated his opinion that if such information had been given to Coach Bryant prior to the Georgia-Alabama game, it could have affected the outcome. (R. 219, 317, 901). Burnett's story was further confirmed by the knowledge that the sented in Alabama by the same attorneys who had [fol. 1699] represented the New York Times in the lower courts. On the basis of this novel "finding" the majority imputed knowledge of the yet unannounced constitutional principles of the Times case to Curtis' trial counsel.[3] The majority thus held that the constitutional protections afforded by the Times case to have been knowingly and in-whole matter had been thoroughly investigated by the University of Georgia and the Board of Regents. (R. 911). The Post knew that in the course of this investigation, Burnett had voluntarily taken and passed a lie detector test administered by a recognized expert. (R. 908). The Editors of the Post were also aware that Butts, when confronted with the information disclosed by the University's investigation, had refused to submit to a lie detector test, and had abruptly resigned on the following day. (R. 879).

Further confirmation of the story was provided by the discovery that an outstanding local sports writer, Furman Bisher, investigating this matter independently from different sources, had reached substantially the same conclusions. (R. 494). As an additional precaution, however, Bisher was employed to complete the investigation, particularly in talking to University authorities with whom he had more entrees. (R. 494). The final story was later submitted to Bisher, who made no corrections. (R. 518).

It is hardly necessary to argue that appellant's refusal to retract the article on demand was "not evidence of malice for constitutional purposes." 376 U.S. at 286. Indeed, the Supreme Court expressed doubt that a refusal to retract could ever constitute such evidence; certainly it cannot amount to such evidence when other uncontradicted evidence demonstrates affirmatively that the publisher justifiably believed in the truth of the defamatory statement.

The evidence outlined above makes it quite clear that no finding of malice on the part of the Post can be sustained under the principles of the New York Times and Garrison cases.

[3] Appellate courts do not allow a party to depart from the record on appeal by becoming an unsworn witness for his client. See Lawn v. United States, 355 U.S. 339, 78 Sup. Ct. 311, 2 L.Ed.2d 321 (1958) ("we must look only to the certified record in deciding questions presented"). The obvious reason for such a rule is that the court may be misled to an unsound conclusion. Such is the instant case in which the majority has concluded from unsup-tentionally waived by the defendant's failure to raise them in a timely manner at the trial.

The majority seeks to attribute knowledge of the unannounced constitutional principles of the Times case to Curtis based upon "its interlocking battery" of counsel, one of whom also represented the Times in the Alabama courts. Yet, as Judge Rives has emphasized, even the petition for certiorari filed by Herbert Wechsler, the eminent constitutional authority and lead counsel for the New York Times, did not enunciate the constitutional principles which [fol. 1700] were ultimately decided by the Supreme Court. Thus, it was impossible for trial counsel to predict the outcome of the Times case.

The tortuous theory of "waiver" found by the majority to preclude review is in direct conflict with the decisions of the Supreme Court in Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, 61 Sup. Ct. 719, 85 L.Ed. 1037 (1941), and Helvering v. Richter, 312 U.S. 561, 61 Sup. Ct. 723, 85 L.Ed. 1043 (1941). In Hormel v. Helvering, supra, the taxpayer sought review before the Board of Tax Appeals of a deficiency which had been assessed against him on the basis of income from a family trust. The Commissioner defended the assessment solely on the basis of Sections 166 and 167 of the Internal Revenue Code. In that proceeding, the Commis-ported statements in Butts' brief, which for the most part are not true, that there was "full communication among Curtis' counsel" in regard to the possible applicable constitutional decision in the Times case, which led to Curtis' intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right." As is shown by the attached affidavits of Mr. Philip H. Strubing, Curtis General Counsel; Mr. Welborn B. Cody, leading trial counsel in the Butts case; and Mr. Eric Embry, Curtis counsel in the Bryant libel action in Birmingham, Alabama, the Alabama counsel attended the Butts trial merely as spectators and at no time were they consulted in regard to trial strategy. More important, at no time prior to or during the trial were they asked to, nor did they suggest, the raising of any constitutional defenses. None of Curtis' counsel intended to waive any constitutional defense which Curtis may have had in the Butts case. It is certainly shocking that a party can be deprived of basic constitutional rights upon such a tenuous basis.

sioner was represented by W. Frank Gibbs. Four months prior to the Hormel case, the Commissioner, represented by the same attorney, W. Frank Gibbs, had successfully asserted a deficiency against income from a similar trust under Section 22(a) of the Internal Revenue Code. George B. Clifford, Jr., 38 B.T.A. 1532, CCH Decision 110,446-B. Notwithstanding this fact, however, no claim under Section 22(a) was made by Mr. Gibbs before the Board of Tax Appeals in the Hormel case. On January 31, 1939, the Board of Tax Appeals rejected the Commissioner's position under Sections 166 and 167. Hormel v. Comm'r., 39 B.T.A. 244 (1939). Six months thereafter, on July 19, 1939, the Clifford decision was reversed by the Eighth Circuit [Clifford v. Helvering, 105 F.2d 586 (8th Cir. 1939)] and the Commissioner petitioned for certiorari.

On February 26, 1940, while the Commissioner's appeal in the Hormel case under Sections 166 and 167 was [fol. 1701] pending before the Eighth Circuit, the Supreme Court decided the Clifford case and held the trust income to be taxable under Section 22(a). Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331, 60 Sup. Ct. 554, 84 L.Ed. 788 (1940). Because of the change in judicial interpretation of the Clifford case, the Commissioner was permitted to assert liability under Section 22(a) for the first time in the Court of Appeals, notwithstanding the fact that Section 22(a) had not been relied upon before the Board of Tax Appeals. Helvering v. Hormel, 111 F.2d 1 (8th Cir. 1940). Affirming the decision of the Eighth Circuit, the Supreme Court held, "[W]e are of the opinion that the Court below should have given and properly did give consideration to Section 22(a) in determining petitioner's liability." 312 U.S. at 559. (Emphasis added.)

Said the Court:

> "These decisions and others like them, while recognizing the desirability and existence of a general practice under which appellate courts confine themselves to the issues raised below, nevertheless do not lose > sight of the fact that such appellate practice should not be applied where the obvious result would be a plain miscarriage of justice. Analogous in principle is the philosophy which underlies this Court's decisions with relation to appellate practices in other cases: . . . [particularly] those in which there have been judicial interpretations of existing law after decision below and pending appeal—interpretations which if applied might have materially altered the result. Whether articulated or not, the philosophy underlying the exceptions [fol. 1702] to the general practice is in accord with the statutory authority given to courts reviewing decisions . . . [d]ecisions not in accordance with law should be modified, reversed or reversed and remanded 'as justice may require.'" 312 U.S. 552, at 557-59 (Emphasis added).

In the companion case, Helvering v. Richter, 312 U.S. 561, 61 Sup. Ct. 723, 85 L.Ed. 1043 (1941), the refusal of the Third Circuit to consider the applicability of Section 22(a) under Clifford on grounds that it had not been raised by the Commissioner before the Board of Tax Appeals was reversed by the Supreme Court. See also Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A.G. v. McGrath, 343 U.S. 205, 212-13, 72 Sup. Ct. 618, 96 L.Ed. 888 (1952). These decisions make it clear beyond dispute that the failure of the defendant to raise the then unannounced constitutional principles of the Times case at the trial is not a basis for this Court's refusal to consider these new constitutional issues on appeal. In view of the a fortiori decisions of the Supreme Court in the Hormel and Richter cases, the refusal of the majority to consider these issues is clearly untenable.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that, whenever a fundamental change of law occurs between the trial of a case and the appeal, it is the duty of the appellate court to follow the later decision, even though the issue was not raised in the trial court. United States v. Schooner Peggy, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 103; 2 L.Ed. 49

The duty of the appellate court under such circumstances is not discretionary. As Chief Justice John Marshall said in United States v. Schooner Peggy, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 103; 2 L.Ed. 49 (1801):

> "It is in the general true that the province of an appellate court is only to inquire whether a judgment when rendered was erroneous or not. But, if, subsequent to the judgment, and before the decision of the appellate court, a law intervenes and positively changes the rule which governs, the law must be obeyed, or its obligation denied." 5 U.S. at 110 (Emphasis added).

Only last term the force of these decisions was recognized and applied by the Supreme Court. Hamm v. City of Rock Hill, 379 U.S. 306, 85 Sup. Ct. 384, 13 L.Ed.2d 300 (1964); see Linkletter v. Walker, —— U.S. ——, 85 Sup. Ct. 1731 at 1735-36, —— L.Ed.2d —— (1964).

The majority has thus imposed the impossible burden upon trial counsel of raising constitutional defense in the trial court even before its enunciation by the Supreme Court. The most counsel could have said is that, "I object because the procedure in this case violates some constitutional principle which may be decided by the Supreme Court in the Times case." He could do no more. Since under Rule 46 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure [fol. 1704] the grounds for an objection must be specifically stated, such an objection would present no issue upon which the trial court might rule and would be woefully inadequate to preserve any issue for purposes of an appeal.

As the Supreme Court has said, "The rule is universal that where an objection is so general as not to indicate the specific grounds upon which it is made, it is unavailable on appeal . . ." Noonan v. Caledonia Gold Min. Co., 121 U.S. 393, 7 Sup. Ct. 911, 915, 30 L.Ed. 1061 (1887); Knight v. Loveman, Joseph & Loeb, 217 F.2d 717 (5th Cir. 1954); 2B Barron & Holtzoff, Federal Practice and Procedure §1021; 5 Moore, Federal Practice ¶46.02.

The authorities are in agreement that the purpose of the requirement of objection in the trial court is two-fold: "(1) to apprise the Court of the litigant's position so that the Court in the furtherance of justice might correct its ruling where shown to be in error; and (2) to permit an opponent to obviate the defect where possible." 5 Moore, Federal Practice ¶46.02, page 1902; 2B Barron & Holtzoff, Federal Practice and Procedure §1021, at page 310. It is clear that these purposes are not served by the requirement of an objection in the present case. Since the constitutional principles applicable to libel cases had not yet been enunciated by the Supreme Court, there was no occasion to present them to the District Judge for a ruling. Indeed, had any First Amendment question been presented, the District Judge would have been obligated to find, under the prior Supreme Court decisions which were then controlling, that "libelous utterances are not within the area of constitutionally protected speech" (Roth v. United States, supra), for there was no other authority under the First [fol. 1705] Amendment. As the Fourth Circuit emphasized in Walker v. Peppersack, 316 F.2d 119 (4th Cir. 1963):[4]

> "Had timely objection been made to the admission of the illegally obtained evidence when it was offered, there is nothing to indicate that the trial court would have excluded it simply because the searching officers had no warrant. Nor is there any reason to believe that Walker would have been successful had he raised the point on direct appeal. Under the Maryland rule of law, no search warrant was required but this rule was in direct and violent conflict with the later decision in Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684, 6 L.Ed.2d 1081 (June 19, 1961).

"The classic statement on waiver of constitutional rights is found in Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 58 S.Ct. 1019, 1023, 82 L.Ed. 1461 (1938): 'A waiver is ordinarily an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege.' At the time of Walker's trial and first appeal, it is clear that he did not intentionally abandon a known right since there was then no such right for him to abandon. That was before the Supreme Court's decision in Mapp." 316 F.2d at 127-28. (Emphasis added).

The Court is not required to speculate as to the possible effect which an objection might have had upon the [fol. 1706] trial in the present case. After the decision of the Supreme Court in the Times case, the defendant moved immediately for a new trial based upon that decision. Although the plaintiff argued waiver, the District Judge recognized that there had been no waiver of the defendant's rights under the First Amendment by the failure to make an objection at the trial and considered the constitutional defenses under the Times case on the merits. Even though the constitutional principles of the Times decision were then known and were specifically stated by counsel, Judge Morgan rejected them on the ground that Butts, the Athletic Director of the University of Georgia, was not a "public official" within the meaning of the Times case.

Thus, the defendant has been deprived of a determination of controlling constitutional issues of paramount importance solely on the purely technical basis of its failure to make a formal objection at the trial on the unknown constitutional grounds, even though it is clear from Judge Morgan's later ruling after Times, that any such objection would have been completely futile.

Such a rigid adherence to procedural technicalities was condemned by the Supreme Court in Hormel v. Helvering, supra:

> "Rules of practice and procedure are devised to promote the ends of justice, not to defeat them. A rigid and undeviating judicially declared practice under which courts of review would invariably and under all circumstances decline to consider all questions which [fol. 1707] had not previously been specifically urged would be out of harmony with this policy. Orderly rules of procedure do not require sacrifice of the rules of fundamental justice." 312 U.S. 552, at 557.

As the Supreme Court recently emphasized in Fay v. Noia, 372 U.S. 391, 83 Sup. Ct. 822, 849, 9 L.Ed.2d 837 (1963):

> "The classic definition of waiver enunciated in Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 58 Sup. Ct. 1019, 1023, 82 L.Ed. 1461—'an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege'—furnishes the controlling standard." (Emphasis added).

And it has been repeatedly recognized that "courts indulge every reasonable presumption against waiver of fundamental constitutional rights." Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 58 Sup. Ct. 1019, 1023, 82 L.Ed. 1461 (1938).

The question of "waiver" presented here is the very antithesis of Michel v. Louisiana, 350 U.S. 91, 99, 76 Sup. Ct. 158, 100 L.Ed. 83 (1955), relied upon by the majority. The constitutional claim there involved of systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries had been established for more than three-quarters of a century.[5] The defendant's failure to invoke this established constitutional right at the trial was [fol. 1708] held to preclude its assertion for the first time on appeal. However, in a series of decisions, this Court, notwithstanding the absence of objections, has repeatedly refused to find a knowing waiver of this established constitutional right. See Judges Rives, Bell and Spears in Cobb v. Balkcom, 339 F.2d 95 (5th Cir. 1964); Judges Tuttle, Wisdom and Carswell in Whitus v. Balkcom, 333 F.2d 496 (5th Cir. 1964); Judges Rives, Brown and Wisdom in United States v. Wiman, 304 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. 1962), cert. den., 372 U.S. 915, 83 Sup. Ct. 717, 9 L.Ed.2d 722 (1963); Judges Rives, Brown and Wisdom in United States v. Harpole, 263 F.2d 71 (5th Cir. 1958), cert. den., 361 U.S. 838, 80 Sup. Ct. 58, 4 L.Ed.2d 78 (1959). The unwillingness of this Court to find an intentional waiver of established constitutional rights which characterizes these cases is impossible to reconcile with the attenuated theory of waiver which the majority utilizes to bar its consideration of the principles of The New York Times Company v. Sullivan.

Further, even if the majority were correct in concluding that the defendant had been guilty of some technical procedural default, the New York Times case makes it clear not only that the rules of law which were applied by the trial court were unconstitutional, but also that the result reached by the jury is a patently unconstitutional result which cannot, consistently with the First Amendment, be permitted to stand. As Judge Rives emphasized:

> "The present action was tried on a definitely stated theory which was fundamentally and constitutionally deficient. The present action should be tried on the theory set forth by the Supreme Court's decision super- [fol. 1709] vening the district court's judgment, that is, New York Times Co. v. Sullivan. In such a situation, it has been held, as far back as 1937, that the duty of the district court is to grant the motion for a new trial." [6]

[6] Nor can a waiver of defendant's rights under the First Amendment be inferred from its failure to plead fair comment under

[fol. 1710] II.

The Exorbitant Award of Punitive Damages Even as Reduced by the Trial Court Was So Grossly Excessive as to Violate Defendant's Rights Under the Federal Constitution and Could Not Be Cured by Remittitur.

At the close of the evidence, in the present case, the plaintiff moved for a directed verdict on the issue of liability

Georgia law. In addition to the deficiencies pointed out by Judge Rives, it is clear that the Georgia fair comment rule added little to this defense of truth. In this respect, the Georgia fair comment was identical to that of Alabama, which was held to be constitutionally insufficient in the Times case. Prior to the Times case, the law of Georgia, like that of many states, afforded no protection for factual misstatements or errors no matter how innocently such errors may have been made. Under Georgia law, the statutory defense of "fair comment" protected only nonmalicious comments which were based on facts which were proven to be true. If any of the underlying facts were untrue, the defense of fair comment was inapplicable and afforded the publisher absolutely no protection, irrespective of his good faith. See e.g., Barwick v. Wind, 203 Ga. 827, 831, 48 S.E.2d 523 (1948); Holmes v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 241, 249, 48 S.E. 934 (1904); Kirkland v. Constitution Publishing Co., 38 Ga. App. 632, 635, 144 S.E. 821 (1928) (4); Ga. Code Ann. §105-709; Restatement, Torts §606. In Barwick v. Wind, 203 Ga. 827, 831, 48 S.E.2d 523 (1948), the Supreme Court of Georgia said:

> "Section 105-709 declares that 'comments upon the acts of public men in their public capacity and with reference thereto' are deemed privileged communications. However, a publication of and concerning the acts of public officials, if untrue and libelous, is not afforded immunity under this section of the Code. While the acts and conduct of public officials are subject to just criticism and comment by the press, the exercise of such right should be unrestricted only where the statements made in the publication are supported by the facts. A public officer has the same right to protection against newspaper libel as a private citizen. Freedom and 'liberty of the press' do not give a publisher the right to publish libelous statements. Lowe v. News Publishing Co., 9 Ga. App. 103 (5) (70 S.E. 607); Horton v. Georgian Company, 175 Ga. 261 (165 S.E. 443)." (Emphasis added).

upon grounds that the defendant had not "proven the truth under the burden it had" of its charges against Butts. Judge Morgan overruled this motion on the express ground that "it would [be] error for this Court to withdraw that issue from the Jury." This contemporaneous ruling of the trial judge and, in the language of Judge Rives, "even a casual reading of the record," demonstrate, beyond dispute, that the issues of fact were properly submitted to the jury which might have found the Post's charges to have been true. Under those circumstances, the jury's award of $3,000,000 in punitive damages, even as reduced by the trial court, is so grossly excessive as to constitute a violation of defendant's rights under the First, Fifth, Seventh, and Fourteenth Amendments. Judge Rives has expressed it far more eloquently than can counsel:

> " . . . The questions hereafter discussed had their genesis in the jury's verdict and are unquestionably preserved for review by the defendant's first motion [fol. 1711] for new trial (R., pp. 46-48). As to the questions now to be considered, there can be no issue of waiver."

Notwithstanding the absence of any such waiver, however, the majority declined to even discuss the following constitutional questions emphasized by Judge Rives:

> "If the defendant corporation had been tried under the Georgia criminal libel statute, it might have been punished by a fine 'not to exceed $1,000.' As it is, the defendant stands subjected to a judgment of $400,000 for punitive damages, four hundred times the maximum fine for criminal libel. Evidently, the $400,000 sufficed to express the trial judge's sense of 'ethical indignation' while that of the jurors swelled to $3,000,000—3,000 times the maximum fine which could have been imposed in a criminal prosecution.

reasonable doubt, while here the judge charged the jury that ' . . . the defendant, Curtis Publishing Company, has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the statements contained in this article are true. . . . ' " (R., p. 1347).

"[t]he enormity of the verdict and even of the final judgment are relevant factors to be considered in determining whether the punitive damages amount to [fol. 1712] a criminal fine. I submit that there is no difference in substance between the punitive damages imposed in the present case and criminal punishment—an ex post facto punishment 400 times as great as the defendant could have anticipated from the criminal libel statute, and imposed without any of the procedural safeguards which are required in criminal proceedings by due process.

"If there should be any doubt that the award of $400,000 in damages strictly punitive violates the due process clause for lack of the safeguards required in criminal proceedings, there can be none, I submit, that it amounts to a prior restraint upon freedom of the press. The rule as announced in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 1964, 376 U.S. 254, 277-78, has clear application to the facts of this case:

'What a State may not constitutionally bring about by means of a criminal statute is likewise beyond the reach of its civil law of libel. The fear of damage awards under a rule such as that invoked by the Alabama courts here may be markedly more inhibiting than the fear of prosecution under a criminal statute. See City of Chicago v. Tribune Co., 307 Ill. 595, 607, 139 N.W. 86, 90 (1923). Alabama, for example, has a criminal libel law which subjects to prosecution "any person who speaks, writes, or prints of and concerning another any accusation falsely and maliciously . . . " and which allows as punishment upon conviction a fine not exceeding $500 and a prison sentence of six months. Alabama Code, Tit. 14, §350. Pre- [fol. 1713] sumably a person charged with violation of this statute enjoys ordinary criminal-law safeguards such as the requirements of an indictment and of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. These safeguards are not available to the defendant in a civil action. The judgment awarded in this case—without the need for any proof of actual pecuniary loss—was one thousand times greater than the maximum fine provided by the Alabama criminal statute, and one hundred times greater than that provided by the Sedition Act. And since there is no double-jeopardy limitation applicable to civil lawsuits, this is not the only judgment that may be awarded against petitioners for the same publication. Whether or not a newspaper can survive a succession of such judgments, the pall of fear and timidity imposed upon those who would give voice to public criticism is an atmosphere in which the First Amendment freedoms cannot survive. Plainly the Alabama law of civil libel is "a form of regulation that creates hazards to protected freedoms markedly greater than those that attend reliance upon the criminal law." Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70.' (Emphasis supplied).

"For yet another reason the award of $3,000,000 by the jury, or of $400,000 by the court, as punitive damages is unconstitutional and void. There was no semblance of definite standard or controlling guide to govern the award. Can any standard be more vague [fol. 1714] or arbitrary than 'an expression of ethical indignation' first on the part of the jury and then on the part of the trial judge? It must be remembered that stricter standards of permissible vagueness are applicable to a rule having a potentially inhibiting effect on freedom of the press than are applicable to rules relating to less important subjects.

> " . . . I must express my shock and surprise that this Court will leave standing what amounts to severe criminal punishment of the defendant in the face of the highly improper and prejudicial argument of plaintiff's counsel."

The majority concedes that if the unprecedented $3,000,000 punitive damage verdict which Judge Morgan found to be "grossly excessive" was the result of "improper influences such as passion and prejudice," it could not be corrected by remittitur but only by a new trial.

The majority also recognizes that Judge Morgan found the $3,000,000 punitive damage verdict to be "grossly excessive" and that it exceeded by more than six times the $400,000 "maximum which the law would accept." Although Judge Morgan made no finding as to the reason for the gross excessiveness of the verdict, as Judge Rives has emphasized:

> " . . . in colloquy with counsel, the judge may well have disclosed his view as to why the judgment was excessive: 'Suppose the court should determine that probably a certain portion of the argument was im- [fol. 1715] proper, and therefore the verdict was excessive, and grant you a new trial on that ground, and then it was tried again. . . . ' [R., p. 1373]."

The cause of the jury's passion and prejudice is not of importance. What is of paramount importance is that, whatever the cause, "no verdict can be permitted to stand which is in any degree the result of appeals to passion and prejudice." Minneapolis, St. P. & S.S.M. Ry. Co. v. Moquin, 283 U.S. 520, 51 Sup. Ct. 501, 75 L.Ed. 1243 (1931).

As this Court held in Brabham v. Mississippi, 96 F.2d 210, at 213 (5th Cir. 1938):

> "Verdicts made excessive by the passion and prejudice springing from indulgence in the jury room in such feelings cannot be cured by a remittitur, but only by a new trial."

While the majority blandly asserts that "there is not the slightest suggestion that [the trial judge] thought, or even intimated, that the [$3,000,000] award was based on passion and prejudice" it points to no other basis for this unprecedented award. In Ford Motor Co. v. Mahone, 205 F.2d 267 (4th Cir. 1963), Judge Parker held the refusal of the trial court to grant a new trial after finding a $234,330 personal injury verdict to be excessive by $100,000, to be an abuse of discretion. He said:

> "Verdicts of juries must be kept above suspicion and a judge should not hesitate to set a verdict aside where it is so grossly excessive as to be explained only on [fol. 1716] the basis of sympathy or prejudice. . . . Nothing else in the record explains the size of the verdict which was more than nine times the maximum amount allowed by law of the state for wrongful death." 205 F.2d at 272-73. (Emphasis supplied)

Indeed, the Sixth Circuit considered precisely this situation in National Surety Co. v. Jean, 61 F.2d 197 (6th Cir. 1932), in which the trial court made a similar finding of excessiveness. After the jury had returned a verdict of $25,000, the trial court ordered a remittitur of $5,000 and overruled the defendant's motion for a new trial. The Sixth Circuit held that in view of the trial court's finding of excessiveness, a new trial, and not remittitur, was the only proper remedy. Said the Court:

> "[A]fter a rather full discussion touching the elements of damage involved, the court concluded that its conscience would rest easy if it should suggest a remittitur of $5,000. The memorandum continued: 'I believe if a remittitur of $5,000.00 be entered I will overrule the motion for a new trial.'

"This was a definite, though indirect, holding that the verdict was excessive, and, although the memorandum contains no specific statement to that effect, we infer that the court ascribed the error to passion, prejudice or caprice as these were the only causes urged as a basis for its action or mentioned in the memorandum. Indeed, an examination of the record discloses no other reasonable explanation for the holding. [fol. 1717] The suggested remittitur was accepted, judgment for $20,000 was entered, and the motion for a new trial was overruled. Appellant excepted and assigned error.

"The granting or denial of the motion was in the sound discretion of the trial court, and is not reviewable except for a clear abuse of discretion [citations omitted], but we do not find it necessary to determine whether there was such abuse in the present case since the trial court itself evidently found that the excessive verdict was the result of passion, prejudice, or caprice. Our question is whether after such finding the trial court may correct the mistake by the suggestion and acceptance of a remittitur and the answer is that it could not. See Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Ry. Co. v. Moquin, 283 U.S. 520, 51 Sup. Ct. 501, 75 L. Ed. 1243; Schendel v. Bradford, 106 Ohio St. 387, 394, 140 N.E. 155. The remedy is a new trial." (Emphasis supplied) 61 F.2d at 198.

As Judge Rives concluded:

" . . . it seems to me that 'public interest requires that the court of its own motion, as is its power and duty, protect suitors in their right to a verdict uninfluenced by the appeals of counsel to passion or prejudice.' N.Y. Central R.R. Co. v. Johnson, 1929, 279 U.S. 310, 318. That would be true even if the prejudicial argument had not been followed by a grossly excessive verdict. I submit that the $3,000,000 punitive damage verdict was so clearly the result of passion and prejudice that it could not be cured by remittitur.

[fol. 1718] Even if the majority were correct in attributing the unprecedented $3,000,000 punitive damage verdict to some other cause, it is, nevertheless, clear that the attempt of the trial court to arbitrarily fix damages at $400,000, without any semblance of a standard to guide it, constitutes a direct invasion of the defendant's right to trial by a fair and impartial jury on the issue of damages which is guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment. As the Supreme Court has said, such a "calculation . . . can be little better than speculation as to the extent of the wrong inflicted upon [the defendant]" Minneapolis, St. P. & S.S. M. Ry. Co. v. Moquin, 283 U.S. 520, 521-22, 51 Sup. Ct. 501, 75 L.Ed. 1243 (1931). This fact was emphasized by Judge Rives:

> "It is difficult in any case to reconcile the practice of remittitur with the constitutional right of a defendant to trial by jury. The logic of Professor Carlin's article on Remittiturs and Additurs (1942), 49 W.Va. LQ 1, 17, 18, quoted in 6 Moore F.P. (2d ed.) 3738-39, seems to me unanswerable.
> "That logic is peculiarly applicable to the circumstances of this case, where only punitive damages are reduced and there is no rule or standard by which the judge can separate any good part of the verdict from the bad. In effect, the remittitur from $3,000,000 to $400,000 represents nothing more specific than the difference between the jury's and the judge's sense of 'ethical indignation.' The jury's verdict cannot be recognized in the final judgment."

It is, of course, no answer to suggest that to grant a [fol. 1719] new trial on grounds of gross excessiveness will result in a second trial at which the question may again be presented. As Judge Rives said:

"The seventh amendment guarantees a right of trial by jury to the defendant as well as to the plaintiff. I cannot escape the conviction that by the remittitur in this case that right has been denied to the defendant.

"Both because New York Times v. Sullivan is convincing that this case was tried upon fundamentally erroneous principles of law, and because the enormous award of punitive damages and the remittitur violate the defendant's constitutional rights, I would reverse the judgment of the district court. I therefore respectfully dissent."

III

The Majority Has Sanctioned an Excessive Verdict—the Product of Erroneous Trial Rulings and Impassioned Pleas Which Effectively Prevented Defendant From Presenting Its Defense of Truth and Good Faith Position to the Jury.

Throughout the entire trial the Court entered vital rulings against the defendant and allowed Butts' counsel to inflame the jury, all to the prejudice of Curtis and its right to a fair trial on the merits. The detrimental effect upon Curtis' case is apparent when the central [fol. 1720] issue in the case and the parties' contentions in regard thereto are analyzed.

The defendant's liability centered upon the question of whether Butts gave Bryant information about the Georgia football team which could have affected the outcome of the Georgia-Alabama game. George Burnett, the defendant's principal witness, testified that he overheard a telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant during which Butts gave Bryant significant information concerning the Georgia team, and that Butts was going to give further information to Bryant in a telephone conversation to take place a few days later. Records of the telephone company established that these two telephone conversations actually took place.

Although Butts did not deny that the telephone calls took place, he did profess to be unable to recall the nature and substance of them. He even testified that on being shown Burnett's notes he stated that "such a telephone call might have been overheard." (R. 634). His only hope then of successfully negating the Burnett evidence that he gave improper information to Bryant was to convince the jury that he did not do such a thing because of his loyalty and devotion to the University of Georgia. This defense or theme was developed and emphasized throughout the trial by Butts' own testimony,[7] by his own witnesses,[8] [7] "Q. Coach Butts, hasn't the University of Georgia been pretty good to you over the years?

"A. Yes, sir; they have given me a wonderful opportunity, and I appreciate it very much, and I might add, I will always be loyal to the University of Georgia, regardless." (R. 685-6).

"Q. Coach Butts, do you recall a statement that you made over television on March the 29th, 1963, as follows:

"'Gentlemen, I came over here today to see the Attorney General of the State of Georgia, Mr. Gene Cook. My express purpose was to check with him things that I had read in the papers and heard on T.V., that in some respects might imply that I had at some time or another been connected with gambling interests. I assured Mr. Cook that I never had been interested in gambling. I have never been interested in associating with people that were known gamblers, and that I would like to repeat that what I have said many times before. My greatest love of all and interest is in the University of Georgia, and I would never at anytime and never have done anything that would injure the University of Georgia, and that is all I have to say.'

"Did you make that statement?

"A. Mr. Cody, I have heard so many statements, and been around you lawyers so much, might be a few words out of line there, but I made a statement to that effect. I would like to say that as far as my services at the University of Georgia are concerned, that represents only my opinion." (R. 692).

As this latter statement was made a mere four days after suit was filed, it shows the early point at which Butts and his counsel conceived their defense.

[8] When John Carmichael, plaintiff's chief witness, was asked on direct examination about his calling Butts in Philadelphia to

[fol. 1721] by the cross examination of defendant's wit-
[fol. 1722] nesses," and, as Judge Rives emphasizes, by his inform him of Burnett's report of the Butts-Bryant telephone conversation, Carmichael stated that Butts said there was nothing to the matter because he "would never do anything to hurt Georgia." (R. 345). Carmichael's testimony was:

> "Q. What conversation took place between you can [sic] Coach Butts when he called you back?
> "A. Well, I didn't know whether Coach Butts would know who I was or not, at first, so I told him over the phone who I was, and I asked him if he remembered me, and he said: 'Yes, I do, John.' And so then I told the Coach what Mr. Burnett told me on the morning of September the 13th, when he received the telephone call, and I told the Coach what Mr. Burnett had told me that morning on January 30th, what he had done, and the Coach said to me, he said: 'Well, John, I appreciate your calling me, but,' he said, 'I'll tell you this,' he said: 'I am sure there is nothing to it, because I don't know whether I called Coach Bryant or not, but I will tell you this,' he said, 'I talk to a lot of coaches, and I don't remember making a call on that particular day, but if I did,' he says, 'I will assure you there was nothing to it, because I would never do anything to hurt Georgia.' And he thanked me for calling him, and it was a very short conversation. It only lasted three or four minutes at the most, and that was all there was to that conversation." (Emphasis added.) (R. 845).

Similarly, when plaintiff's witness, William Hartman, was asked on cross-examination whether Butts denied the telephone call, he volunteered:

> "The only thing he denied was that he had ever done anything to hurt Georgia and he repeated that several times." (R. 998).

Seizing upon this opportunity, Butts' counsel, upon redirect examination, questioned Hartman:

> "Q. He [Butts] didn't deny that [he never did anything to hurt Georgia]; he asserted it, did he not?
> "A. He asserted it." (R. 999).

After defendant's witness, Dr. Aderhold, had testified that upon being shown Burnett's notes, Butts "indicated that the call was made, and that these items [in the notes] were probably discussed" (R. 1102), Butts' counsel asked Dr. Aderhold:

[fol. 1723] counsel in their closing arguments.[10] It was obvious therefore, that the crucial prop for Butts' case was the proposition that he had always been loyal to and had never done anything to hurt his University.[11] The trial court's refusal to permit cross-examination of the plaintiff or the introduction of evidence to contradict this false

"Q. Let me put it this way. You did testify he told you and the others he would never do anything that would hurt the University of Georgia, didn't he?

"A. He said, 'I didn't do anything that I thought would hurt the University of Georgia and I never would,' or something to that effect.

"Q. All right, sir. These notes that he had there in his hand, if they contained information that might have helped an opposing coach, that would have hurt the University of Georgia, wouldn't it?

"A. Well, presumably so.". (R. 1139).

Plaintiff's witness, J. D. Bolton, was similarly utilized by Butts' counsel on cross-examination to re-emphasize the same point:

"Q. Going back to the topic I was questioning you about at the beginning of this examination, I have in my hand a transcript prepared by the Court Reporter here of your testimony when you were on the stand last week. This question—I ask you if you remember this question being asked you by Mr. Cody: 'Could you recall for the Jury what comment he did make,' referring to Wallace Butts? Answer by Mr. Bolton: It got down—'It's just conversation, ordinary football talk among coaches, and that you know I would not give Old Bryant anything to help him and hurt Georgia, and I wouldn't do anything to hurt Georgia.' Do you remember giving that answer?" (R. 1160).

[10] Butts' counsel completed the theme of Butts' loyalty to the University when in his emotionally charged argument to the jury which described Butts as "Mr. Georgia" (R. 1300), and concluded with:

". . . they will put Wallace Butts in a red coffin with a black lid, and he will have a football in his hands, and his epitaph will read something like this: 'Glory, Glory to Old Georgia.'" (R. 1322).

[11] In addition, the plaintiff interjected his "integrity" into the case by his own pleading. See pages 167-68 of Appellant's principal brief.

theme of Butts' unswerving loyalty to the University was clearly error.

The evidence which the defendant offered and which was excluded would have clearly shown that Butts had committed frauds upon the University, and that he was disloyal to the public trust which the University had reposed in him. Every specific act of misconduct offered by Curtis involved a fraud upon the University of Georgia, of which Butts was Athletic Director. Certainly, a man who had charged more than $2,800 of personal telephone calls to his University over a period of approximately sixteen months was not one who had never done anything to hurt the University. Similarly, could a man who carried on an open and notorious relationship with a woman not his wife (and charged a substantial part of the cost of that relationship to his University) be the University's loyal servant who set a fine example for his pupils? As is explained in [fol. 1724] more detail on pages 154 and 155 of Appellant's principal brief and in the Record at pages 822-840, Curtis was denied the right to cross-examine Butts in regard to many instances which would have clearly shown that his principal defense to the Post charge—that he had always been loyal to and had never done anything to harm his university—was false.

The Appellant was also denied its fair right to cross-examine Butts in regard to his deliberate false testimony upon deposition (See Point IV B of Appellant's principal brief) and as to his and his counsel's policy of evasiveness and concealment by Butts' refusal to answer relevant questions on deposition (See Point IV E of Appellant's principal brief). These prejudicial effects were multiplied when Butts' counsel was allowed to "testify" in closing argument as to his good character and truthfulness (R. 1289, 1321) and imply that other witnesses had similarly testified (R. 1290, 1305,[12] 1309.[13])

[12] "Seated there with him throughout for two weeks has been his lovely wife, Winnie and his three daughters. That is a glowing

Defendant was similarly prevented from attacking the credibility of plaintiff's principal witness, John Carmichael, in regard to his prior convictions and his propensity to give false statements to public officials (Point IV F of Appellant's principal brief). Butts' counsel subsequently stated that it made little difference whether John Carmichael had previously been convicted of crimes and [fol. 1725] given false statements in evaluating his credibility, but at the same time they claimed that the Post officials should not have believed George Burnett, whom they termed a "hot check artist" (Br. 7) and a "man who is always one step ahead of the Sheriff" (R. 1297), because he had been arrested for passing two bad checks. Similarly, the majority infers that Burnett, "who was known by Curtis to have been convicted of writing bad checks, and to be on probation at the time he claimed to have listened in on the conversation," was not trustworthy.[14] It was, of course, Carmichael who directly contradicted Burnett's testimony in several crucial respects. See Appellant's principal brief at pp. 189-90.

The trial court's totally unjustified refusal upon hearsay grounds to allow Burnett to testify in regard to vital checkpoints in his story bore directly upon the liability as well as the punitive damage aspects of the case.

tribute, as glowing a tribute as were those four boys coming over here, and the trainer, Sam Richwine, and Charlie Trippi and John Gregory coming over here and showing you what they thought of Wallace Butts."

[13] "Sam Richwine, old Sam, I had never seen him before; he is a trainer over there; he is still working there and in the face of Dr. Aderhold and Bolton. He came over here and stood up and was counted for Wallace Butts."

[14] The majority upheld the exclusion of Carmichael's prior convictions upon a "lapse of time" theory, which is directly contrary to Georgia law. Woodward v. State, 197 Ga. 60, 28 S.E.2d 480 (1943) ("the fact that the conviction of the crime took place twenty years previously, would not affect the admissability of the evidence"); Daggett v. Sims, 79 Ga. 253, 4 S.E. 909 (1888). See Appellant's principal brief pages 184-86.

The fact that Burnett took the time and trouble to call back the operator to ascertain that he was connected with the Athletic Department at the University of Alabama and to call Milton Flack to establish for himself that Wallace Butts was in Flack's office shows that Burnett was amazed by the telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant which he had just overheard and desired to check upon it. If Burnett had merely overheard a telephone conversation between these two individuals relating to "rules" or "tickets" he would have probably hung up in the middle of it, or at least not have been concerned enough to double [fol. 1726] check its authenticity. These extrajudicial statements by Burnett could not by any stretch of the law be hearsay, and his report of statements made by the operator and by Flack were not introduced for the truth of the matter asserted, but merely to show that the statements were made. Whether or not the operator and Flack told the truth is unimportant, but the fact that Burnett received such information from them is important to the jurors who had to evaluate his credibility and the Post officials' reasonableness and good faith in believing Burnett. Even though the majority recognized that the trial court should have admitted this evidence because it was "important from Curtis' standpoint that it show its good faith in publishing the article," it in the same breath dismissed the point with the comment of "nominal error."

Instructions given by the trial court to the jury not only protected the plaintiff and his witnesses again and again, but practically amounted to a directed verdict for Butts. Although the defendant specifically requested an instruction to the effect that if Butts' testimony was contradictory, vague or equivocal, it must be construed most strongly against him and subsequently objected to the court's failure to give such charge, the trial court cavalierly dismissed defendant's objection with the statement that it believed it had given the charge in different wording. (R. 1368). A review of the entire charge discloses no language bearing any similarity to the request. See Point VII of Ap-pellant's principal brief. In this same context, defendant requested the well-recognized and proper instruction that the jury must disregard the entire testimony of any witness whom it finds to have knowingly and wilfully testified falsely. Although the defendant entered proper objec-[fol. 1727] tion at the conclusion of the court's charge in this regard, the court refused to recharge the jury properly (R. 1367-68). See Point VIII of Appellant's principal brief. Even though the plaintiff's reputation was the basis for the recovery of the general damages he sought, and the defendant introduced the testimony of six members of the University's Athletic Board, including the President of the University, that plaintiff's reputation was bad and that they would not believe him under oath, the trial court, in spite of the fact that the plaintiff offered no evidence of his good reputation, instructed the jury that the plaintiff was presumed to have a good reputation and was "entitled to reply upon his presumption of good reputation." (R. 1355). See Point VI E of Appellant's principal brief. The authorities there cited clearly disclose the rule that in such a situation the presumption vanishes.

The trial court practically directed a verdict for Butts when it informed the jury, not only improperly, but needlessly, that the Post article was "libelous per se" (R. 1348, 1353). This, from a layman's standpoint, left in the jurors' minds only the question of "how much" the damages should be. See Point I B of Appellant's principal brief and Point VII of Appellant's reply brief. The authorities there cited clearly disclose that in a libel action it is never proper (except when a crime is charged, if then) to instruct the jury that a publication is libelous per se. The effect of such a charge in the present case was to instruct the jury that the plaintiff was in the coaching profession at the time of the publication, that he was injured therein, that the publication was false, and that there was malice. Certainly if the meaning of such a charge could be so construed by the jury (even though it could reasonably be construed [fol. 1728] otherwise), it was erroneous, and because it involved a crucial point in the case, it constituted reversible error. This was another part of the charge to which counsel for the defendant entered a proper objection (R. 1366).

Finally, the court allowed the case to go to the jurors with Butts' counsel's ringing improper arguments in their ears. Not only were counsel allowed to testify as to Butts' good character, truth and veracity, and state that others had similarly done so, but they were allowed to inject improper measures of damages into the case (the Post received a "hundred million dollars in advertising, would ten percent of that be fair to Wallace Butts for what they have done to him?" (R. 1321), and "You could return a verdict for Wally Butts in this case of ten million dollars, and it would be the greatest merchandising bargain the Saturday Evening Post ever got" (R. 1296), and if "you let them out of this case for five million dollars or less, and boy, it's been worth it to them" (R. 1319), as well as incorrect standards for the imposition of punitive damages ("We have got to stop them now, and you are the only twelve in the world that can stop them" (R. 1319), and "I may be next . . . You may be next; my wife; my children; yourself" (R. 1319), and "There are just thousands and thousands of people who are mad about it" (R. 1297).[15]

On the inflammatory side, as Judge Rives noted, counsel were allowed to introduce such prejudicial remarks as "they kill him, his wife, his three lovely daughters. What do they care? They have got money; getting money for it" (R. 1319); "I think it would teach them that we don't have that kind of journalism down here, and [fol. 1729] we don't want it down here, and we don't want it to spread from 666 Fifth Avenue any further than that building right now" (R. 1321); and "Somebody has got to stop them. There is no law against it, and the only way that type of . . . . yellow journalism can be stopped is to let the Saturday Evening Post know that it is not going to get away with it." (R. 1319). See Point III of Appellant's principal brief.

Thus, the above, as well as the other prejudicial errors which are discussed in detail in Appellant's principal brief, certainly could cause the jury to return a verdict against Curtis upon the question of liability as well as for punitive damages in an outrageous amount. The trial judge clearly recognized this to be the fact, as he held the verdict to be "grossly excessive." He sought to cure these errors then by granting a new trial unless the plaintiff remitted all punitive damages in excess of $400,000. The fatal error in the trial court's action in this regard is that the errors committed during the trial cannot be corrected by a mere remittitur. These errors, as is shown above and in Appellant's other briefs, went to the question of liability in this case and, more specifically, whether the jurors believed George Burnett or Wallace Butts and John Carmichael, and the halo which Butts erected to protect his case, as well as to stimulate and inflate punitive damages. These series of circumstances prevented defendant from effectively presenting its defense of truth and its good faith position to the jury.

Respectfully submitted,

AFFIDAVIT

Personally appeared before the undersigned officer duly authorized to administer oaths, Philip H. Strubing, who, having been duly sworn, deposes on oath and says as follows:

I am a member of the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania law firm of Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, general counsel for Curtis Publishing Company. I have read the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the case of Curtis Publishing Company v. Wallace Butts, No. 21491, dated July 16, 1965, and am making this affidavit because of the following erroneous factual statements and conclusions in the majority's opinion:

> "While it is true that the Supreme Court did not decide the Times case until March 9, 1964, it would be contrary to reason and common sense to assume that there had not been, at all times during the pendency of this case, full communication among Curtis' counsel, particularly concerning trial strategy. The facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times."

As general counsel for Curtis Publishing Company, I participated actively with Mr. Welborn B. Cody and other attorneys in the Atlanta law firm of Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein in the preparation of this case for trial. Later, I also worked actively with Mr. [fol. 1733] T. Eric Embry of the Birmingham law firm of Beddow, Embry & Beddow in the preparation of the case of Paul Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama. Mr. Embry and Mr. Roderick Beddow, Jr. attended the trial of the Butts v. Curtis case in Atlanta, but only as spectators. They were not consulted concerning the trial strategy of the Butts case. Since the Bryant v. Curtis case was to be tried some months after the Butts v. Curtis case, we had not at that time commenced active preparation of the Bryant case. There were no discussions between Messrs. Embry and Beddow and me in regard to the constitutional questions being alleged by the New York Times Company in the case of New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964), and there was no suggestion by these attorneys that any constitutional issues be raised in the Butts v. Curtis case. Furthermore, the constitutional questions "vigorously asserted in Times" were not those which Curtis now argues. I certainly did not intend to waive any constitutional defense of Curtis in the Butts v. Curtis case, and was not aware of the constitutional defense provided by New York Times Company v. Sullivan until that case was decided by the Supreme Court on March 9, 1964, some six months after the trial of the Butts case.

AFFIDAVIT

Personally appeared before the undersigned officer authorized to administer oaths, T. Eric Embry, who, having been duly sworn, deposes on oath and says as follows:

I am a partner in the Birmingham, Alabama law firm of Beddow, Embry & Beddow. I have read the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the case of Curtis Publishing Company v. Wallace Butts, No. 21491, dated July 16, 1965, and am making this affidavit because of the following erroneous factual statements and conclusions in the opinion of the majority:

> "While it is true that the Supreme Court did not decide the Times case until March 9, 1964, it would be contrary to reason and common sense to assume that there had not been, at all times during the pendency of this case, full communication among Curtis' counsel, particularly concerning trial strategy. The facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times."

My firm represented the New York Times Company in [fol. 1735] the case brought against it by L. B. Sullivan (New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964)) and Curtis Publishing Company in the libel cases brought by Paul Bryant in the United States District Court in Birmingham. I was the member of my firm who handled the representation of these clients in all of these cases. Although Roderick Beddow, Jr. performed some services in the Bryant v. Curtis case, primarily during my illness in 1963, neither Roderick Beddow, Jr. nor Roderick Beddow, Sr. had any part in the New York Times litigation, as Roderick M. MacLeod and I were the only attorneys in our firm who worked on this case. Roderick Beddow, Jr. and I did attend the trial of the Butts v. Curtis case in Atlanta. However, we did so only as spectators to prepare ourselves for the trial of the Bryant v. Curtis case which was to be held at a subsequent date. At no time prior to or during the trial did we consult with Curtis' general counsel, Mr. Philip H. Strubing, or with Curtis' trial counsel, Mr. Welborn

B. Cody, or any other attorney representing Curtis in regard to trial strategy or the constitutional questions which we were urging before the United States Supreme Court in the New York Times case. We were not asked for our opinion concerning constitutional questions in the Butts v. Curtis case, and did not volunteer any opinion or suggestion to Curtis' counsel that any constitutional questions be raised in the Butts case.

Our principal contentions in the petition for writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States in the New York Times case were (1) that the New York Times Company was not doing business in Alabama, and (2) that since the statements which Times printed referred [fol. 1736] to no individual by name, but simply criticized the Montgomery Police Department which was under the direction of Mr. Sullivan, an elected City Commissioner, such statements could not be considered libelous without violating freedom of the press guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The requirement of the New York Times case that general damages could not be awarded without the necessity of proof of actual malice on the part of the defendant was not specifically presented in the Alabama courts nor in the petition for certiorari to the United States Supreme Court.

AFFIDAVIT

Personally appeared before the undersigned officer authorized to administer oaths, Welborn B. Cody, who, having been duly sworn, deposes on oath and says as follows:

I am a partner in the Atlanta, Georgia law firm of Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein. I have represented Curtis Publishing Company in the case of Curtis Publishing Company v. Wallace Butts since that case was filed in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia. I have read the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this case (No. 21491) and am making this affidavit because of the following erroneous factual statements and conclusions in the majority's opinion:

> "While it is true that the Supreme Court did not decide the Times case until March 9, 1964, it would be contrary to reason and common sense to assume that there had not been, at all times during the pendency of this case, full communication among Curtis' counsel, particularly concerning trial strategy. [fol. 1738] At no time during the preparation or trial of this case did I consult with Mr. Roderick Beddow or Mr. T. Eric Embry, or any member of the law firm of Beddow, Embry & Beddow, in regard to the constitutional questions being raised in the case of New York Times Company v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 Sup. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964), nor was I informed of the constitutional issues raised in that case. My only conversations and communications with members of that law firm pertained to factual questions and the taking of depositions in Alabama. Although Mr. T. Eric Embry and Mr. Roderick Beddow, Jr. attended the trial of the Butts v. Curtis case in Atlanta, they did so merely as spectators, and not as a part of the trial team in that case, and were not consulted with respect to the trial strategy of the case.

I did not read the petition for writ of certiorari filed by the New York Times in the United States Supreme Court at any time prior to or during the trial of Butts v. Curtis and was not aware of the constitutional issues being urged in that case. I certainly did not intend to waive any constitutional rights Curtis Publishing Company may have had in its defense of Butts v. Curtis.

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 21,491

RESPONSE TO PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC—Filed August 23, 1965

[fol. 1740] Comes now Wallace Butts, Appellee, and submits this response to the Petition for Rehearing En Banc heretofore filed by Curtis Publishing Company, Appellant.

In Ground 1 of its petition Curtis contends that the majority of the panel of this Court erred in finding that Curtis waived its right to raise the constitutional defense that plaintiff's action was barred by the First Amendment.

Appellee specifically denies this contention and, in his supporting brief, will demonstrate beyond any doubt that Curtis was fully aware of the existence of and its right to plead the First Amendment as a defense to this libel action and of its obligation to plead it timely if it wished to [fol. 1741] preserve the point on appeal. This is conclusively demonstrated by the fact that Curtis affirmatively raised the First Amendment defense in pleadings filed by it in the trial court in the libel cases of Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company pending in the United States District Court, Birmingham, Alabama, in which cases it was represented by the same general counsel who participated so actively in the instant case and whose firm, Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, signed those pleadings in Bryant. (See sub-paragraphs 3(f) and 3(h) of Exhibit "A" and sub-paragraphs 2(f) and 2(h) of Exhibit "B" attached hereto, each of which is by reference incorporated herein and made a part hereof.) In view of Curtis' latest (and really quite sophomoric) argument that it had no earthly idea "libelous utterances are within the area of constitutionally protected speech" when the Butts case was tried, it should be of more than passing interest to note that Curtis, through its same general counsel, first asserted this constitutional defense in Bryant on February 26, 1963, which was one month before suit was even filed in the Butts case. Curtis asserted this First Amendment defense in the second Bryant libel suit less than three weeks after it filed its defenses in Butts and more than three months prior to trial.

Furthermore, as found by the majority, these same constitutional grounds were raised in the Times v. Sullivan case by Curtis' local counsel in Bryant long before the petition in Butts was even filed. (Dec. P. 12) As the majority stated:

> "The facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times." (Dec. P. 13)

[fol. 1742] For some reason known only by Curtis, it did not avail itself of the right to raise this issue in the instant case but, instead, and notwithstanding its knowledge that both the Bryant and the Butts cases were practically identical, intentionally and deliberately concluded to allow the Butts case to go to verdict and judgment without raising this constitutional question.

The truth of the matter is that Curtis was so determined to defend the Butts case on its plea of justification (thereby admitting a prima facie case) and thereby getting the right to open and conclude the arguments, that Curtis elected to and did waive all other defenses available to it including the constitutional grounds, the Georgia statutory privilege of commenting "upon the acts of public men in their public capacity and with reference thereto" (Ga. Code Ann., Section 105-709(6)), lack of jurisdiction, and numerous other affirmative defenses, all of which it raised in Bryant. If Curtis' determination to try this case on its plea of justification wasn't behind all this, then what explanation could there possibly be for what the majority found to be so significant when it said:

> "Curtis chose not to use as a witness either the author of the article or any of its editors who had made contributions to the article after it had been submitted. Nor did it use the Atlanta sports editor who had assisted in the preparation of the story. As one of its principal witnesses it called upon George Burnett, who was known by Curtis to have been convicted of writing bad checks, and to be on probation at the time he [fol. 1743] claimed to have listened in on the conversation." (Dec. P. 4-5)

Indeed, if Curtis wasn't so positive as to its theory as to how to try this case that it didn't want to clutter up the pleadings by raising the additional affirmative defenses, including the First Amendment, which it raised in Bryant (where it wasn't so determined—in fact, so leery of victory was Curtis in Alabama that it paid that plaintiff $300,000 (R. 1456) not to go to trial), how can one account for the following curious conduct by Curtis as described by the majority:

> "If, as Curtis' counsel now claim, the arguments were, among other things, 'grossly improper and inflammatory', 'intemperate and inexcusable', 'appeals to passion and prejudice', 'corruptions of the evidence', 'completely unsupported by the evidence', and 'unsworn testimony of counsel', it is inconceivable to us that they would have delayed so long without raising the slightest hint of an objection. Leeway must often be allowed counsel in objecting to argument lest the objection itself magnify the harm. But to say nothing during argument, the extended week end recess, and for nine days thereafter, leaves us with the conviction that they did not consider the argument objectionable at the time they were delivered, but made their claim as an afterthought." (Dec. P. 20) (Emphasis added)

[fol. 1744] Curtis also contends in Ground 1 of its petition that "the Times decision for the first time extended the protection of the First Amendment to libel." Appellee specifically denies this. In the body of its decision the Supreme Court points out that the rule prohibiting a public official from recovering damages in a libel action unless he proves actual malice "had been adopted by the highest courts of numerous states" and "is supported by the consensus of scholarly opinion." Times v. Sullivan, 11 L. Ed. 2d. 686 at 706-707. As a matter of fact, the decision quoted with approval by the Supreme Court was decided in 1908 (see 11 L. Ed. 2d. 707).

In this ground of its petition Curtis contends that Judge Spears, being a District Court Judge, a rehearing en banc should be granted in order that uniformity in the decisions of this Court may be insured. Appellee specifically denies this contention and shows that:

(1) In this contention Curtis is again back at its old habit in this case of waiting until after the verdict and judgment is rendered against it to make objections or allege constitutional errors. This case was argued before this Court on October 8, 1964, and Judge Spears was sitting as a member of the panel. Mr. Philip H. Strubing, General Counsel of Curtis and Welborn Cody and various other trial counsel of Curtis were present and participated in the argument before this Court on October 8th. They made no objection then to the case being argued before Judge Spears although surely they knew he was a District Court Judge. Apparently being willing to take their chances with [fol. 1745] Judge Spears they submitted their case to the panel. The case was under consideration by Judges Spears, Brown and Rives from October 8, 1964 to July 16, 1965, when a decision was rendered and during that time, over nine months, Curtis raised no objection to its appeal being ruled on by Judge Spears. Now that Judge Spears is one of the majority of the Court that decided the case against it, Curtis in effect claims error and wants a hearing by a court composed only of active Circuit Court of Appeals Judges and all of them at that. As said by the majority in its decision, page 32:

> "We think that Curtis has had its day in court. It apparently thought so too until the jury verdict was returned. This is attested by the fact that practically all of its present complaints were not even raised until after the trial."

(2) To contend now that the mere fact that the majority included a properly designated and impanelled district judge requires a rehearing en banc would mean that in every appeal considered by any panel of this Court consisting of a district judge would require a rehearing en

banc if a decision was a split decision with one of the circuit judges dissenting. It is shocking indeed for Curtis to be so intemperate as to suggest that Judge Spears' participation in the decision affords any basis whatsoever for a rehearing.

(3) Wisniewski v. United States, 353 U.S. 901 cited by Curtis for the proposition that uniformity in the decisions of this Court requires a rehearing en banc is inapplicable since the court in that case was dealing with two separate [fol. 1746] panels of the Court of Appeals as distinguished from this case where Curtis is complaining about two judges on one panel. The uniformity of decisions discussed in Wisniewski quite apparently is uniformity among the panels of the Court and not the judges of one panel of that Court.

Under this ground of its petition Curtis contends that the applicability of the "new" First Amendment principles of Times is a question "of major importance which has been expressly left by the Supreme Court to be decided by the lower federal courts in the first instance . . ." In response to this ground, Appellee asserts that (1) Times, as heretofore pointed out, did not for the first time extend the protection of the First Amendment to libel; and (2) the contention in this ground would presuppose Curtis had timely raised the defense of the First Amendment as it well knew it had the right and obligation to do in order to preserve same and not wait until after verdict and judgment.

In this ground Curtis contends that the "affirmance of the unprecedented and excessive award of punitive damages" is in violation of its constitutional rights and then sets forth two arguments in support thereof. Appellee specifically denies the contentions set forth in this ground and as will be more fully hereinafter developed in his supporting brief, Appellee points out that (1) the same points were raised in the application for writ of certiorari in [fol. 1747] Aware, Inc. v. Faulk, 202 N.E. 2d. 372, cert. den. 380 U.S. 916, 13 L. Ed. 2d. 801 (1965), recently filed and summarily denied by the United States Supreme Court wherein a jury award of three and one-half million dollars had been reduced by the state court on remittitur to $550,000; and (2) this same Curtis Publishing Company paid Paul Bryant $300,000 (R. 1456) to settle his companion libel suit in Alabama growing out of the same article, with no claim that it amounted "to a penal sanction."

In this ground Curtis contends that "the Court incorrectly allowed an excessive jury verdict, which was the product of erroneous trial rulings and instructions, as well as passion and prejudice; to stand." This contention is specifically denied and, as will be more fully developed in his supporting brief, Appellee shows that once again Curtis failed, as it did time and time again throughout the trial, to interpose objections to the matters now complained of as it was required to do under FRCP 51.

Wherefore, Appellee prays that the petition be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

William H. Schroder, Allen E. Lockerman, Robert L. Pennington, Milton A. Carlton, Jr., Gerald P. Thurmond, Attorneys for Wallace Butts, Appellee.

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 21,491

[Title omitted]

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEE'S RESPONSE TO PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC

[fol. 1757]

I.

Curtis' Defenses of the First and Fourteenth Constitutional Amendments as Made by It in the Companion Libel Cases of Paul Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company and Its Failure to Raise Those Defenses in This Case Shows a Clear Intent to Waive Them.

Under Point I of its brief, Curtis complains of the "refusal of the majority to consider the fundamental constitutional issues presented under the First and Fourteenth Amendments on the basis of the subsequent decision of the Supreme Court in the New York Times Co. v. Sullivan because of the alleged waiver of these basic rights by the [fol. 1758] defendant." Curtis then argues that Times "radically changed the substantive law previously applicable to libel cases."

In its brief (P. 5) Curtis asserts "the majority seeks to attribute knowledge of the unannounced constitutional principles of the Times case to Curtis based upon its interlocking battery of counsel, . . ." and then proceeds to state in the footnote on this page that " . . . the majority has concluded from unsupported statements in Butts' brief, which for the most part are not true, that there was 'full communication among Curtis' counsel' in regard to the possible applicable constitutional decision in the Times case, which led to Curtis' intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right."

Curtis, in an effort to circumvent this fatal situation, has seen fit to attach to its brief affidavits of its attorneys participating in the companion cases of Bryant and Butts which were filed because of the same Saturday Evening Post article. In his said affidavit, Mr. Philip H. Strubing, Curtis' general counsel, stated on oath that he was "a member of the Philadelphia, Pennsylvania law firm of Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, general counsel for Curtis Publishing Company. . . As general counsel for Curtis Publishing Company, I participated actively with Mr. Welborn B. Cody and other attorneys in the Atlanta law firm of Kilpatrick, Cody, Rogers, McClatchey & Regenstein in the preparation of this case for trial. Later, I also worked actively with Mr. T. Eric Embry of the Birmingham law firm of Beddow, Embry & Beddow in the preparation of the case of Paul Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama." Mr. Strubing further states in his affidavit that he "did not intend to waive any constitutional defense of Curtis in the Butts v. Curtis case."

[fol. 1759] With this affidavit before us, and comparing it with sub-paragraphs (f) and (h) of Exhibits "A" and "B" attached to Appellee's Response to Curtis' Motion For Rehearing, let us examine just what Curtis' general counsel did by way of timely raising the First Amendment defense in the Bryant cases and not raising this or any other constitutional defense in the Butts case which was filed after Curtis' general counsel had filed pleadings in the first Bryant case:

On February 26, 1963 (one month before suit was filed in the Butts case) Curtis' general counsel, Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, (Mr. Strubing) signed pleadings in the case of Paul Bryant v. The Curtis Publishing Company, et al, Civil Action No. 63-2-W, in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama (Exhibit "A" to Response), wherein Curtis moved (as a defense under Rule 12(b)6 FRCP) to dismiss a libel action instituted by Bryant because of another article appearing in its Saturday Evening Post on the grounds, among others, that:

> "3(f) To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would abridge the freedom of speech and of press in violation of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States . . .
> "(h) To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would be repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. . ."

[fol. 1760] Thereafter, the same plaintiff, Paul Bryant, filed another suit against Curtis because of the article published in the Saturday Evening Post, which formed the basis of this suit by Butts, being Civil Action No. 63-166 in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Alabama. (Exhibit "B" to Appellee's Response) Again, in that case, Curtis' general counsel, Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz (Mr. Strubing), signed pleadings in which it moved to dismiss the action for, among others, the reason that:

"2(f) To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would abridge the freedom of speech and of press in violation of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. . .

"(h) To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would be repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. . ."

This pleading was filed on April 30, 1963.

It might be added here that the above-quoted pleading filed for Curtis in Bryant's case No. 63-2-W was Exhibit "D" to the petition for mandamus filed in both Bryant cases by Curtis' general counsel (Mr. Strubing) in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and was part of the record in Case No. 21,152 in that court. It was also part of the printed petition for writ of certiorari [fol. 1761] filed in January, 1964, for Curtis in the United States Supreme Court.

Thus, we have Curtis' general counsel "actively participating" with local counsel (Beddow, Embry & Beddow—T. Eric Embry) in the Bryant cases in Birmingham, as well as with local counsel in the Butts case in Atlanta. In Bryant Curtis' general counsel demonstrated its awareness of its right to defend against libel suits under the First Amendment by raising this defense in a timely fashion. In spite of this awareness, Curtis remained absolutely silent as to any constitutional defenses in the Butts case. For Curtis to argue now in its petition for rehearing that it could not have been expected to raise the First Amendment defense in Butts because it could not have been expected to know how Times would be decided is fantastic. Curtis had not needed that information in order to raise the First Amendment defense in Bryant. Furthermore, as found by the majority, these same constitutional grounds were raised in the Times v. Sullivan case by Curtis' local counsel in Bryant long before the petition in Butts was even filed. (Dec. P. 12) As the majority stated:

> "The facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times." (Dec. P. 13)

We have always thought it was horn-book law that if one wanted an appellate court to rule upon a given defense and, particularly, one based upon the violation of a defendant's constitutional rights, it was necessary to raise the issue before verdict and judgment, thereby preserving the point for decision by the appellate court.

If the First and Fourteenth Constitutional Amendments were thought by Mr. Strubing to be valid issues and grounds [fol. 1762] for dismissal of the Bryant cases in the United States District Court in Alabama, then why, if they did not intend to waive those grounds, did they not assert them in the Butts libel case growing out of the same article which was pending in the United States District Court in Georgia. For Curtis and its general counsel, Philip H. Strubing, to now claim that he "did not intend to waive any constitutional defense of Curtis in the Butts v. Curtis case" when he was contemporaneously asserting the First and Fourteenth Amendments as grounds for dismissal in the companion libel case of Paul Bryant in the United States District Court of Alabama growing out of the same Saturday Evening Post article, is to say the least incredible.

For Mr. Philip H. Strubing to now represent to this Court that "there was no discussion between Messrs. Embry and Beddow and me in regard to the constitutional questions being alleged by the New York Times Company in the case of New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (1964), and there was no suggestion by these attorneys that any constitutional issues be raised in the Butts v. Curtis case" we say again is most incredible. Does it stand to reason that the firm of Beddow, Embry & Beddow and Mr. T. Eric Embry of that firm who actively handled the libel case of Sullivan v. Times and its pleadings therein in the Alabama Courts and raised constitutional issues of the First and Fourteenth Amendments in that case would have no discussions whatsoever with Mr. Strubing about having raised those issues in the Times case when they jointly with Mr. Strubing made those same defenses in the Bryant v. Curtis cases?

How in the name of common sense did the issues of the First and Fourteenth Amendments get in the pleadings brought jointly by counsel for Curtis in the Bryant v. Curtis cases as grounds for dismissal under Rule 12(b)6, if there was no discussion by such counsel as to whether such issues should be asserted in the case?

[fol. 1763] Mr. Strubing states in his affidavit that Mr. T. Eric Embry and Mr. Roderick Beddow, Jr. of the firm of Beddow, Embry and Beddow did in fact attend the trial of the Butts v. Curtis case in Atlanta, "but only as spectators," that they had not commenced active preparation of the Paul Bryant case. Again we ask the question, does it stand to reason that able trial counsel from Birmingham in the cases of Bryant v. Curtis Publishing Company would spend two weeks in idle attendance as mere curious spectators at the Butts v. Curtis trial in Atlanta growing out of the same libelous article? Appellee says that the obvious answer is that Messrs. Embry and Beddow were on the payroll of Curtis Publishing Company for the two weeks they spent at the Curtis counsel table at the Butts trial in Atlanta and that such attendance was a part of active preparation for the Bryant v. Curtis trial soon to come up in Alabama. For Curtis to now contend that there was no discussion between its mutually interested interlocking counsel in the Butts and Bryant cases concerning questions and issues in the Butts v. Curtis case is most incredible. If such matters were not discussed then what was the function, responsibility and duty of joint counsel in such important litigation? Can it be believed that Messrs. Embry, Beddow and Strubing played the role of ostrich and buried their heads in the sand throughout the two weeks that Messrs. Cody, et al. tried the Butts case in Atlanta?

In its brief, Curtis relies upon Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552 for the proposition that the majority refused to consider Hormel when passing upon the question of waiver. A review of Hormel clearly indicates the reliance is misplaced. In Hormel, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue [fol. 1764] had issued a tax deficiency against the taxpayer for his failure to include income from three trusts created by him in 1934, each of which was revocable at will. The Board of Tax Appeals decided the income was not taxable, however, this decision was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals which held the income was taxable under the subsequent decision of Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331. In Hormel the Supreme Court held that when the Commissioner makes an express waiver of Section 22(a), as he did in Helvering v. Wood, 309 U.S. 334, he could not present in that Court an entirely new issue concerning the applicability of Section 22(a). Hormel is clearly distinguishable from our situation in that there the trusts involved were substantially identical to the trust in Clifford. In fact, the Supreme Court held that was no controlling distinction at all between the two cases of Clifford and Hormel. Hormel went on to hold that as a general rule an appellate court should confine itself to the issues properly and timely raised below and that the only exception which would be recognized was where the obvious result would be a plain miscarriage of justice.

Curtis further states that the majority's decision is in direct conflict with Cobb v. Balkcom, 339 F. 2d 95. This Court is well aware that Balkcom involved the trial of a defendant for murder in the Superior Court of Jasper County, Georgia. The question involved was whether the defendant had waived his right to challenge the composition of the jury. This Court held that it was well settled that a Negro defendant in a criminal case is entitled to an indictment by grand jury and trial before a traverse jury from which Negroes have not been systematically excluded. A conviction cannot stand where such exclusion is established [fol. 1765] because it constitutes a denial of due process and the equal protection of the laws. The crux of the waiver rule as set out in Balkcom and in the majority of the other cases relied upon by Curtis is that the federal court in the administration of its habeas corpus jurisdiction may go beyond state court procedural confines. We fail to see any similarity between those cases and the decision in this case.

In summary, it is clear that Curtis elected to raise but a single defense to this action and that was a plea of justification. It is further clear that at the time this defense was filed Curtis well knew of the availability to it of the defense of the First Amendment and decided to ignore it. It thereby elected not to defend on constitutional grounds in Georgia but elected to do so in Alabama. The reasons are of no importance. What is important though is that Curtis should be held to this election. It made it with its eyes wide open and with full knowledge that it was at the same time defending on First Amendment grounds in the Bryant cases in Alabama.

Curtis attempts to persuade this Court that Times did, in fact, radically change the substantive law previously applicable to libel cases. This just isn't true and is recognized as such throughout the decision in Times. No attempt will be made here to quote those statements in the decision in detail since it is felt that the following excerpts illustrate our point:

> "Respondent relies heavily, as did the Alabama courts, on statements of this Court to the effect that the Constitution does not protect libelous publications. [fol. 1766] Those statements do not foreclose our inquiry here. None of the cases sustained the use of libel laws to impose sanctions upon expression critical of the official conduct of public officials." (Times, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 at 699)

• • • • • • •

"The general proposition that freedom of expression upon public questions is secured by the First Amendment has long been settled by our decisions." (11 L. Ed. 2d 700)

• • • • • • • •

"Thus, we consider this case against the background of a profound national commitment to the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, and that it may well include vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials." (11 L. Ed. 2d 701)

• • • • • • • •

"The fight of free public discussion of the stewardship of public officials was thus, in Madison's view, a fundamental principle of the American form of government." (11 L. Ed. 2d 703)

• • • • • • • •

"An oft-cited statement of a like rule (prohibiting a [fol. 1767] public official from recovering damages unless he proves actual malice), which has been adopted by a number of state courts, (the court here cites decisions from over a dozen state supreme courts and adds that 'the consensus of scholarly opinion apparently favors the rule that is here adopted.') is found in the Kansas case of Coleman v. MacLennan, 78 Kan. 711, 98 P. 281 (1908)." (11 L. Ed. 2d 706, 707) (Emphasis added)

We think these illustrative quotations should lay to rest the assertion by Curtis that Times "radically changed the substantive law previously applicable to libel cases."

We say, therefore, that contrary to the contention urged by Curtis in this section of its brief, the Supreme Court in Times did not enunciate a completely new rule of law that can be used by Curtis as an excuse for its deliberate and intentional refusal to raise as a defense to this action the point that its First Amendment guarantees were involved and would be violated if the action was permitted to proceed.

Curtis can get small consolation from those decisions cited by it in its brief in an attempt to excuse its waiver of fundamental constitutional rights. Each of these decisions dealt with the alleged failure by an ignorant and indigent Negro defendant in a criminal case who was denied his basic constitutional rights. The case Curtis cites most often, Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 82 L. Ed. 1461 [fol. 1768] (1938), is in this same category. There, the defendant was bound over to await action of the United States Grand Jury and was kept in jail due to his inability to give bail. Later he was indicted; taken to court and there first given notice of the indictment; immediately was arraigned, tried, convicted and sentenced that day to four and one-half years in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court found that:

> "Upon arraignment, both pleaded not guilty, said that they had no lawyer, and—in response to an inquiry of the court—stated that they were ready for trial. They were then tried, convicted and sentenced, without assistance of Counsel." (82 L. Ed. 1464)

Continuing, the Supreme Court stated:

> "(The Sixth Amendment) embodies a realistic recognition of the obvious truth that the average defendant does not have the professional legal skill to protect himself when brought before a tribunal with power to take his life or liberty, wherein the prosecution is presented by experienced and learned Counsel." (82 L. Ed. 1466)

Certainly, Curtis would not put itself in the category of this type of a defendant—not with the experienced and learned counsel employed by it.

Continuing, the Court stated:

> "The determination of whether there has been an in> [fol. 1769] telligent waiver of the right to Counsel must depend, in each case, upon the particular facts and circumstances surrounding that case, including the background, experience, and conduct of the accused. * * * The Patton case (281 U.S. 276) noted approvingly a state court decision pointing out that the humane policy of modern criminal law had altered conditions which had existed in the 'days when the accused could not testify in his own behalf, and was not furnished Counsel,' and which had made it possible to convict a man when he was 'without money, without counsel, without ability to summon witnesses and not permitted to tell his own story.'
> "The constitutional right of an accused to be represented by Counsel invokes, of itself, the protection of a trial court, in which the accused—whose life or liberty is at stake—is without Counsel. This protecting duty imposes the serious and weighty responsibility upon the trial judge of determining whether there is an intelligent and competent waiver by the accused. While an accused may waive the right to Counsel, whether there is a proper waiver should be clearly determined by the trial court, and it would be fitting and appropri-
> [fol. 1770] ate for that determination to appear upon the record." (82 L. Ed. 1466, 1467)

Certainly, Curtis would not have this Court believe that it was in a position similar to that of these indigent and ignorant defendants in those cases cited by it in its brief. On the contrary, it is abundantly clear from what has already been said that Curtis was represented by highly skilled, competent and able attorneys who were thoroughly cognizant of its right to plead the First Amendment and who went so far as to do this in one instance and refused to do it in the other. Could there be any clearer example of a waiver of a known right? As the majority panel stated,

"the facts more than justify our conclusion that Curtis was fully aware when this suit was instituted, and certainly no later than the beginning of trial, that the constitutional questions it now argues had been for some time, and were still being, vigorously asserted in Times." (Dec. P. 13) and, we might add, in the Bryant cases.

As the majority concluded:

> "For whatever tactical or other reason Curtis sat back and failed to carry the constitutional torch before verdict and judgment, the fact remains that it was charged with knowledge, through its interlocking battery of able and distinguished attorneys, of the issues involved in the Times case, and was afforded every reasonable opportunity to have those same issues heard and determined by the trial court in the case at bar. What the Supreme Court would, or might, hold in [fol. 1771] Times was not decisive. What was important was that Curtis had to invoke any constitutional claims in an appropriate way, and at an appropriate time. Considering the resources of Curtis, both practical and legal, and the contemporary awareness of constitutional rights pervading even problems of local jurisprudence, Curtis' complete and utter silence amounted to 'an intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege.'" (Dec. P. 15-16)

Even Judge Rives in his dissent recognizes that Curtis must not have intended to raise this issue before verdict and judgment when he commented upon Curtis' failure even to offer the defense under Georgia law (Ga. Code Ann., Section 105-709(6)) which provides that communication concerning the "acts of public men in their public capacity" are deemed privileged under certain conditions. He states:

> "Thus, although the Georgia statute which grants a privilege to 'comments upon the acts of public men in their public capacity and with reference thereto' appears as broad, if not broader, than the 'public official' as contemplated by New York Times Co., the plaintiff recognizes that the Georgia case law results in a narrow application of the privilege and the present plaintiff is not covered." (Dec. P. 44)

[fol. 1772] Of course, what Judge Rives had to say about what the plaintiff Butts and his attorneys recognize about this law is immaterial insofar as the point is concerned. Suffice it to say, had Curtis meant to rely upon the First Amendment and/or Georgia Code Section 105-709(6), which, as Judge Rives says, is even "broader than the 'public official' as contemplated by New York Times Co.", both were clearly available to it and, just as clearly, Curtis knew of their existence and availability. It raised both defenses in Bryant!

We might point out here that the reference by Judge Rives to Henry v. Collins, 380 U.S. 356, is of no help because the question of waiver was not raised in that case and, therefore, was not considered by the Supreme Court.

In its brief, Curtis has the temerity to state that "the majority declined to review the evidence which unquestionably demonstrates the lack of actual malice on the part of the Post." (P. 3) Curtis then proceeds to give its own summary of what it says was the evidence in the case. The fact remains, however, that in spite of what Curtis has said, the majority did review the evidence in detail and so stated more than once. For example, the majority held at Page 32:

> "The publication of the article by the Post, in the face of several specific appeals that it refrain from doing so, was part and parcel of a general policy of callousness, which recognized from the start that Butts' career would be ruined. The trial judge's appraisal of [fol. 1773] the evidence, with which we are in complete accord, was that it was sufficiently strong to justify the jury in concluding that what the Post did was done with reckless disregard of whether the article was false or not.

"The case was fully developed during extensive pretrials, and in a jury trial lasting two weeks. The record itself comprises 1613 pages. We have given full consideration to the entire record . . ."

Again, the majority stated at Page 6:

"As the trial judge saw it: 'The article was clearly defamatory and extremely so . . . The guilt of the defendant was so clearly established by the evidence in the case so as to have left the jury no choice but to find the defendant liable.' We wholeheartedly agree with that appraisal." (Emphasis added)

The above two quotations might well lead one to ask what possible benefit Curtis could hope to get if a rehearing was granted as requested. It is abundantly clear from its decision that, had it ruled precisely on that point, it would have concluded that "actual malice" had been proven beyond a doubt and, therefore, the limitations of Times would have no effect. We think the last two quoted portions of the majority's decision substantiates this beyond any doubt.

[fol. 1774] II.

The Points Urged by Curtis in This Section of Its Brief Are Merely a Repetition of Points Previously Rejected Both by the Trial Court and the Majority Decision in This Court.

Curtis, in Part II of its brief, complains that the punitive damage award, as reduced, violates its rights under the Constitution and could not be cured by remittitur.

Part II of Curtis' brief deals primarily with four points:

1. The punitive damage award, four hundred times the Georgia criminal libel fine, amounts to criminal punishment without the procedural safeguards of due process.

2. No definite standard or guide governed the award.

3. The award cannot stand because it was a result of the jury's passion and prejudice.

4. The remittitur invades Curtis' right to trial by jury under the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution.

This is nothing more than a repetition of Curtis' argument on this point in its previous briefs to this Court and the trial court.

Point one emphasized by Curtis can be disposed of by referring this Court to the decision of Reynolds v. Pegler, 123 F.Supp. 36 (D.C.N.Y. 1954), and the New York Criminal Libel Law, N.Y. Unconsol. Laws Art. 126 §1340, §1341, §1937 (McKinney, 1944).

The jury in Reynolds v. Pegler, supra, awarded $100,000 punitive and $1.00 compensatory damages against the author of the article. The Second Circuit, in Reynolds v. Pegler, 223 F.2d 429 (2d Cir. 1955) affirmed, holding, at page 434, the amount of punitive damages to be awarded [fol. 1775] is peculiarly within the province of the jury:

> "It is not our function to calculate what any or all of the defendants should be required to pay by way of punishment . . ."

At this point it is well to note that under §1341 of New York Law, supra, criminal libel is punishable as a misdemeanor, and §1937 of New York Law provides one convicted of a misdemeanor may be fined not more than $500.00.

The United States Supreme Court denied certiorari in the Reynolds case, supra, in 350 U.S. 846. The award of punitive damages in Reynolds v. Pegler was two hundred times the maximum fine which could have been imposed in a criminal prosecution in New York, and one hundred thousand times the amount of compensatory damages awarded by the jury.

The most obvious defect in Curtis' argument becomes apparent when the true purpose of punitive damages is considered. They were allowable at common law to deter the defendant from any such wrong in the future, and as a proof of the detestation of the jury for the act itself. Clearly, the amount awarded could be many times the maximum fine for a misdemeanor.

Curtis, in its second point, complains that no definite standard or controlling guide was given the jury to govern the award.

The court in George Knapp & Co., 21 Mo. 655, 112 S.W. 474 (1908), was of the opinion that so many considerations enter into the awarding of damages by a jury in a libel case that the courts approach to the question of excessiveness of a verdict with great reluctance. The court added [fol. 1776] that in such a case, the question of damages was peculiarly within the province of the jury and apart from prejudice or corruption the verdict would not be interfered with.

Defendant's contentions relative to due process would all but abolish punitive damages. Such contentions appear to have escaped the notice of counsel and the courts for one hundred years since the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The standard in Georgia, which rests upon the enlightened conscience of the jury, applies alike to an award for pain and suffering. Such rule rests on the fact that by the very nature of the tort it is impossible to set up any other standard to guide the jury.

The third point raised by defendant is that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice.

It is well settled that the trial court's determination, as to whether a verdict is the result of passion or prejudice, will not be disturbed unless the determination is clearly erroneous. 6 Moore's Federal Practice ¶59.05[3], p. 3746 (2d. Ed.).

In Bradley Mining Company v. Boice, 194 F. 2d 80 (9th Cir. 1957) cert. den. 343 U.S. 941, it was held that a federal appellate court could consider only whether a verdict was grossly excessive or monstrous, while the trial judge might set aside the verdict if he thought it was against the weight of evidence. The trial judge is so familiar with the atmosphere of the trial and sensible of imponderables, the appellate court should hesitate to interfere. The reason why a trial court's decision as to whether a verdict is the result [fol. 1777] of passion and prejudice will stand is obvious. The trial judge's familiarity with the atmosphere and personalities of the case allows the judge to give a well-considered determination of whether or not passion or prejudice prevailed.

The fourth point raised by Curtis was that the reduction by Judge Morgan of the punitive damage verdict to $400,000.00 constituted an invasion of defendant's right to trial by jury on the issue of damages guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment.

Professor Moore disagrees. Moore states that remittitur practice in the federal courts in jury cases has become widespread following Justice Story's decision, sitting on circuit, in Blunt v. Little, 3 Fed. Cas. 760 (C.C.D. Mass. 1822). Some have criticized the granting of remittitur in jury cases as violating the Seventh Amendment, however:

> "... its use has become so universal in the trial and even in the appellate courts and has had the apparent approval of so many Supreme Court cases, that it cannot be contended that its use is unconstitutional without uprooting of precedent akin to that effected by Erie v. Tompkins." 6 Moore, Federal Practice, ¶59.05[3], p. 3740 (2d. Ed.).

This Court approved the use of the remittitur in Greyhound Corporation v. Dewey, 240 F. 2d. 898 (5th Cir. 1957). Curtis further makes the point that there is no standard for the amount to be remitted.

In fact most courts have not articulated any definite standard by which to determine the amount of the remittitur. Moore, supra, p. 3743. The majority of the remittitur [fol. 1778] cases fix the amount at a figure the court believes a proper functioning jury should have found. This position gives the defendant the benefit of the full supervisory power of the court. Such a position effects a fair and practicable adjustment. Moore, supra, p. 3745.

In conclusion to Part II of Curtis' brief, it here has raised again points which have no merit and have previously been argued time and time again. Punitive damages cannot be equated to a penal fine for misdemeanors. Of necessity the jury has no algebraic formula for calculating the amount of punitive damages. Such a determination must be made by the enlightened consciences of impartial jurors. The trial judge's determination of whether the verdict is a result of passion and prejudice should be allowed to stand. It is settled beyond any serious argument that the remittitur practice does not violate rights guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment.

III.

In This Section Curtis Is Again Merely Relying Upon Points Previously Rejected in the Trial Court and by the Majority in This Court, None of Which Are the Basis for Granting a Rehearing Under Rule 25(a) of This Court.

In Section III of its brief in support of its motion for rehearing en banc, Curtis has lumped together some nine claimed procedural errors. All of these deal with various rulings during the trial as to the admissibility of evidence, the propriety of Appellee's argument and the correctness of the court's instructions.

In this shotgun attack, Curtis has completely overlooked [fol. 1779] the basis for a motion for a rehearing en banc. Rule 25(a) of this Circuit's Rules clearly provides that "ordinarily, a hearing or rehearing en banc is not ordered except: (1) when necessary to secure or maintain uniformity or conformity in the decisions of the Court, or (2) when unusually important or novel questions are to be decided."

"En banc courts are the exception, not the rule. They are convened only when extraordinary circumstances exist that call for authoritative consideration and decision by those charged with the administration and development of the law of the circuit." U. S. v. American-Foreign S.S. Co., 363 U.S. 685, 4 L. Ed. 2d. 1491, 80 S. Ct. 1336 (1960).

The mere fact that the decision here under review was by a divided court gives no justification for a rehearing. Shreveport v. Holmes, 125 U.S. 694. To suggest that a rehearing en banc should be granted because a District Judge participated in the decision does not speak favorably for counsel for Curtis.

There has been no intimation by Curtis with respect to the points here raised that the Court overlooked or misconstrued any controlling authority, that the decision is in anywise contrary to any prior decision of this Court, or that any of these points are unusually important or novel. Rather, Curtis has simply taken the position that the contentions it made initially were sound and should have been sustained. These points were considered very thoroughly and at length by the Court. The entire court should not be burdened with this task merely because of the disappointment of Curtis. Needless to say, Appellee should not [fol. 1780] be faced with any more delay than he has met thus far.

The first point raised deals with the refusal of the court to permit evidence of alleged specific acts of misconduct. This is nothing but a continuing attempt by Curtis to assassinate Appellee's character without any justification. They have reiterated their patently false assertions that Appellee's entire case revolved around his loyalty to the University. In our main brief (pp. 99-108), this point was dealt with extensively. Suffice it to say that Appellee never testified that he had done nothing to hurt the University. The fact that he had made such a statement prior to the trial was elicited by counsel for Curtis for the sole purpose of trying to lay the groundwork to introduce evidence relating to alleged specific acts of misconduct.

The authorities cited in our main brief show without question that the courts uniformly reject such evidence. The case of Cox v. Strickland, 101 Ga. 482 (5), 28 S.E. 655 (1897) clearly held that under Georgia law in a libel suit, the defendant has the right to show the plaintiff's bad character "but cannot in so doing, go into proof of special acts."

The article in question dealt only with the alleged fixing of the Georgia-Alabama football game and not with the private life of either Coach Butts or Coach Bryant. The complaint dealt solely with his reputation in the football coaching profession, which Curtis admitted was good before it published the article which it knew would kill that reputation. Under this state of the evidence and the law, there was clearly no error in rejecting this type of evidence.

Curtis goes on to say that the court erred in refusing to allow it to cross-examine Appellee with respect to certain testimony given by him in his deposition and with respect [fol. 1781] to his refusal to answer certain questions on his deposition. The alleged "false testimony" (relating to whether he knew anyone who went by the name of E. C. Lindsey) was not relevant to any issue in the case and was but another attempt by Curtis to evade the court's ruling that evidence of alleged specific acts was not admissible. (pp. 101-102, Brief of Appellee) The refusal of Appellee to answer certain questions was based on advice of counsel, and subsequently they were answered in detail. No possible harm was suffered by Curtis by this delay, and hence there was no prejudicial error (See pp. 109-112, Brief of Appellee).

Curtis next urges that it was improperly prevented from impeaching witness Carmichael by proof of a 30 year old conviction of a childhood misdemeanor and by proof that he had made mis-statements in applications for licenses to sell beer many years before the trial.

The rule is well settled that a federal trial judge has the discretion of admitting or rejecting proof of an ancient conviction. See cases cited at pp. 113-115 of Appellee's main brief and particularly Goddard v. U. S., 131 F. 2d. 220 (5th Cir., 1942), a case arising in Georgia. Although Curtis relies on Woodward v. State, 197 Ga. 60, 28 S.E. 2d. 480 (1943), this case merely held that it was not error for the trial judge to admit a 23 year old felony connection; the case is not authority for the proposition that a 30 year old misdemeanor conviction must be admitted. Whether such a conviction is admissible lies entirely within the discretion of the trial court.

With respect to Curtis' claim that Carmichael had a "propensity to give false statements," the authorities are decidedly against the admissibility of this type of evidence. As this Court very clearly held in Roberson v. U. S., 249 [fol. 1782] F. 2d. 737 (5th Cir., 1957) an attempt to impeach a witness cannot be made by showing wrongful conduct or even the commission of a crime for which there has been no conviction. The general rule is that "a witness cannot be impeached by evidence showing particular instances in which he has been untruthful." 98 C.J.S. Witnesses §512, p. 417. See pp. 115-119 Appellee's main brief.

The next claimed error relates to the refusal of the court to permit witness Burnett to testify as to conversations he had with the telephone operator and Milton Flack (who was not called by Curtis as a witness) to corroborate his asertion that there was in fact a telephone conversation between the two coaches. As the majority of this Court pointed out (and there was no dissent on this point), "the full import of most, if not all, of that evidence got before the jury." Indeed, there was never any contention that there was no telephone conversation. Butts didn't deny it. The only thing in dispute was whether the contents of that conversation were correctly reported by Burnett, and no amount of self-serving, extrajudicial assertions by Burnett would be admissible to corroborate his patently fictitious story.

Error, to be reversible, must be harmful. As held by this Court in State Farm Mutual Auto Insurance Co. v. Bourne, 220 F. 2d. 921, 923-924 (5th Cir., 1955):

> "Appellate courts do not sit to review claims of procedural errors where it is plain, as here, that no substantial prejudice could possibly have resulted and the questions, therefore, are mere abstractions."

The next three points concern the court's instructions regarding the construction to be placed upon Appellee's testimony, the credibility of witnesses and the presumption [fol. 1783] that Appellee had a good reputation. These points are of such little present consequence and have been covered so fully in Appellee's main brief (pp. 147-161), that further comment is unwarranted.

Contrary to Curtis' argument next urged, the trial court correctly charged the jury that the article was libelous per se, that is, as a matter of law. In its answer, Curtis admitted that Butts had a good reputation in his chosen profession. At the trial, Curtis successfully urged that it had filed a valid "plea of justification" which, under Georgia law, is the admission of a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff. Thus, the Post made a solemn admission in judicio that Butts was a member of the football coaching profession, that his previously good reputation had been injured, that the article was written with malice and that it was false. Under these admissions, as well as the undisputed evidence, the court, following the rule laid down in Walker v. Sheenan, 80 Ga. App. 606, 54 S.E. 2d. 628 (1949) to the effect that statements tending to injure one in his trade are libelous per se, correctly charged that the article was libelous as a matter of law.

Curtis concludes its many-faceted attack by claiming that counsel for Appellee were allowed to make improper arguments to the jury. If objection had been made, the trial court would have been in a position to stop any improper argument and to take such corrective measures as were necessary, including instructing the jury to disregard it and rebuking counsel. None of Curtis' numerous attorneys participating in the trial thought that this was needed, hence they sat silently by. Assuming purely for the purpose of this brief that the argument was improper (although we agree with the majority which held to the contrary), the matter is aptly put to rest by this Court's holding that "they did not consider the arguments objectionable at the time they were delivered, but made their claim as an after-thought." (P. 20)

[fol. 1784] Conclusion

It is clear that Curtis Publishing Company has shown no basis for this Court to grant its request for a rehearing en banc. The decision of the majority should be allowed to stand.

FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

No. 21491

CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, Appellant-Appellee, versus

WALLACE BUTTS, Appellee-Appellant.

(AND REVERSE TITLE)

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia.

ON PETITION FOR REHEARING

Before Rives and Brown, Circuit Judges, and Spears, District Judge.

OPINION—October 1, 1965

Per Curiam: As Curtis' petition for rehearing asserts that the waiver found by us is based on "alleged facts, most of which are outside the record", and upon "unsup-[fol. 1787] ported statements in Butts' brief, which for the most part are not true", we deem additional comment appropriate.

The burden of Curtis' brief, elaborated in the petition for rehearing, is that Times came like a bolt out of the blue, and no one either knew of, or could anticipate, that a state-created libel damage action was subject to or could be controlled by First Amendment freedom of speech constitutional limitations. Therefore, the argument runs, until Times there was no reason to assert the constitutional claim, and consequently it should not be held to the usual appellate consequence of failing properly to preserve the point.

Obviously this Court is not required to accept the mere assertions of Curtis. This Court has the duty of determining whether this contention of Curtis was well founded. While this partakes of factual evaluation in a sense, the question of waiver is a law problem—i.e., whether skilled counsel would reasonably think the contention to be plausible. Since Curtis did not seek to raise the constitutional issues before verdict and judgment, it was entirely proper to look to the sources discussed in our original opinion in order to ascertain the pertinent facts. Until the filing by Curtis of its petition for rehearing, the statements in Butts' brief, referred to by Curtis, had not really been disputed. And now, after having given full consideration to the affidavits and to all other matters presently submitted by Curtis, we are still of the firm opinion that when all of the acts and conduct of Curtis' [fol. 1788] attorneys are tested in the light of reason, Curtis cannot sustain the proposition that its counsel were ignorant of a constitutional claim so as to be totally excused for the complete absence of any timely assertion of it.

To its petition for rehearing, Curtis attaches affidavits made by Philip H. Strubing, whose Philadelphia, Pennsylvania law firm of Pepper, Hamilton & Scheetz, is general counsel for Curtis; by T. Eric Embry, whose Birmingham, Alabama law firm represented the New York Times Company in the case brought against it by Sullivan (Times case), and also represented Curtis in the related libel cases brought against it in the United States District Court by Coach Paul Bryant;[1] and by Welborn B. Cody, who was lead trial counsel for Curtis in the Butts case. In general, the affidavits assert that Mr. Embry and his partner, Roderick Beddow, Jr., attended the trial of this Butts case as spectators only, were not consulted concerning trial strategy, and did not advise Mr. Cody concerning the constitutional questions they had raised in Times. Mr. Cody stated that "he was not aware of the constitutional issues being urged in (the Times) case."

There is no dispute that the lawyers who sat together at the Curtis counsel table during the Butts trial were representing Curtis either in this case or in the related Bryant libel suits pending in Alabama, so presumably they were all on Curtis' payroll. Unusual as it would be for them not to consult with one another concerning strategy and tactics during the two-week trial, we accept the statement [fol. 1789] that neither Mr. Embry nor Mr. Beddow informed Mr. Cody of the constitutional questions being raised in the Times case.

But what about Mr. Strubing? In his affidavit he stated that he participated actively in the preparation of the Butts case for trial, and that he also worked actively with Mr. Embry in the preparation of the related Bryant cases. He is also on the brief in our case and participated in the arguments.

Butts' response to the petition for rehearing refers us to the records of this Court, of which, of course, we may also take judicial notice. In Cause No. 21,152, The Curtis Publishing Company v. Honorable H. H. Grooms, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Alabama, Curtis sought a writ of mandamus to compel Judge Grooms to vacate his orders denying Curtis' motion for change of venue. That record reflects that on February 26, 1963 (one month before the Butts suit was filed) Mr. Strubing's law firm, together with the firm of which Mr. Embry and Mr. Beddow are members, signed and filed in the Alabama District Court a motion to dismiss the related libel action instituted by Bryant, on the grounds, among others, that:

> "To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would abridge the freedom of speech and of press in violation of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. . . .
> [fol. 1790] "To subject this defendant to liability in the circumstances complained of would be repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States . . ."

In a later suit filed against Curtis by Bryant the same two law firms made identical contentions in a motion to dismiss signed and filed by each of them in the District Court on April 30, 1963, still more than three months before the trial of the Butts case.

If the First and Fourteenth Amendments were thought by Mr. Strubing and his law firm to be valid grounds for dismissal of the related Bryant cases in Alabama, why did they not assert them in the Butts case? By his own statement Mr. Strubing was an active participant in all three cases, so he certainly should have known what the rights of Curtis were. Although he now says that he was not aware of the constitutional defenses articulated by Times until that case was decided by the Supreme Court some six months after the trial of the Butts case, neither he nor his local counsel (Mr. Embry) considered a final decision in Times—or for that matter any other case—a necessary prelude to raising in the related Bryant cases, the constitutional claim previously asserted by Mr. Embry in Times.[2]

[2] That these constitutional claims were well preserved by these counsel in Times without the learning which was to come several years later through the words of the Times opinion is recognized

And for good reason, at least ever since June 1962 when [fol. 1791] those who wished could see the handwriting on the wall, certainly as the moving finger followed the voice of Mr. Justice Black's celebrated "First Amendment 'Absolutes'; A Public Interview".[3]

The Alabama Supreme Court also recognized the assertion of these constitutional claims for it "rejected petitioner's constitutional contentions with the brief statements that "the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution does not protect libelous publications • • • 14 So.2d at 40." 376 U.S. 254, 264.

The background of the interview was the Justice's lecture entitled "the Bill of Rights", delivered at the New York University School of Law, February 17, 1960, published at 35 NYU Law Review 865 (1960). See, e.g.:

"CAHN: Do you make an exception in freedom of speech and press for the law of defamation? That is, are you willing to allow people to sue for damages when they are subjected to libel or slander?

"JUSTICE BLACK: My view of the First Amendment • • • is that it said Congress should pass none of these kinds of laws. • • • I have no doubt myself that the provision • • • intended that there should be no libel or defamation law in the United States under the United States Government, just absolutely none so far as I am concerned. • • • " (557)

I do not hesitate, so far as my own view is concerned, as to what should be and what I hope will sometime be the constitutional doctrine that just as it was not intended to authorize damage suits for mere words as distinguished from conduct as far as the Federal Government is concerned, the same rule should apply to the states.

"I am for the First Amendment from the first word to the last. I believe it means what it says, and it says to me, '• • • Government shall not attempt to control the ideas a man has. • • • Government shall not abridge freedom of [fol. 1792] Granted that the extra-judicial statements of a single Justice do not an opinion make,[4] the Court itself in Times treats this newly announced rule as a natural development of the constitutional propositions long recognized by its extensive writings on First Amendment freedom of speech rights.[5] Thus, it emphasized that the "general proposition that freedom of expression upon public questions is secured by the First Amendment has long been settled by our decisions." 376 U.S. 254, 269. Announcing its rule, it referred to the "oft-cited statement of a like rule * * * adopted by a number of state courts * * * found in the Kansas case of Coleman v. MacLennan, 78 Kan. 711, 98 P. 281 (1908)"—a decision then nearly half a century old.

Whatever may have been the reasons for invoking the First Amendment claim in the Alabama suits while remaining silent in Georgia, Curtis cannot sustain the proposition that it was unaware that a defendant in a libel action might assert the constitutional claim as a defense. Counsel for Butts make a persuasive suggestion that Curtis elected to defend this case on its plea of justification, rather than raise the jurisdictional, constitutional and other affirmative defenses[6] it had raised in the Alabama Bryant cases, [fol. 1793] in order to get the right to open and close the arguments.

Nor, as suggested in Judge Rives' dissenting opinion on denial of rehearing, do we consider that our action is at all inconsistent with the principle of law expressed for the Court by Judge Wisdom in Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 5 Cir., 1958, 259 F.2d 231, 238, cert. denied, 359 U.S. 913.[7]

[7] Actually, in this tax case the theory later developed for the first time in this court had been raised in the bank's petition filed in the lower court and agreed upon by both parties at the trial. The Court, in deciding to consider the development of the theory, stated that the "tax liability as to the testamentary trust depends on whether Daniel's will put Marie to an election. The question is in the case. A just determination of the appeal requires us to decide it." (Emphasis supplied). This case involved the gift tax liability under three trusts created by the decedent, "Daniel", one of which was a testamentary trust of his residuary estate from which his wife, Marie, was to receive the income for life, the remainder to be divided among Daniel's descendants. In the Tax Court, the bank's petition stated that "the estate was still under administration and that 'no determination has yet been made as to whether or not the said Marie Elizabeth Moran has elected to take under the will' . . . that Marie's motive in not taking against the will was to benefit herself' ". At the trial the Commissioner and the bank agreed to assume that Daniel's will put Marie to an election and that Marie's receipt of income from the trust was sufficient to show that she had elected to take under the will. They differed only as to whether the effect of the election was that she had made a taxable gift. The Tax Court held that Daniel's will put Marie to an election and that Marie's "acquiescence" in the testamentary trust constituted a taxable gift. On appeal, for the first time in the case, the defendant made the assertion that Daniel's will did not purport to dispose of Marie's share and therefore she was not put to an election, thereby denying that Marie transferred her share of the community estate to the trust. In answer to the Commissioner's objection to the bank's new argument that Marie was not put to an election, and its contention that the taxpayer is not at liberty to urge as a ground for reversal a point not raised in the court below, the court states that "indeed, . . . the taxpayer invited error . . . worse, the invitation was accepted. But an appellant has no vested right in an opponent's error of law in the lower court—especially when the protesting appellant is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue

. . . (who) owes a duty to all taxpayers . . . to see that the tax law is applied justly. . . . Federal procedure is moving away from what Pound calls 'the sporting theory of justice', Wigmore the 'instinct of giving the game fair play', and Arthur Vanderbilt the theory of procedure as 'a contest between two legal gladiators'. We are a court 'to secure the just * * * determination of every action'. Rule 1, Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 28 U.S.C.A. Daniel's will is in the record and speaks for itself. '(W)here, as here, the case below was tried, not upon any misapprehension of the facts, but upon a misapprehension of the effects of those facts in law, appellant may not be prevented from pressing here for the application, to the proven facts, of the correct principles of law.' . . . 'We see no reason why we should make what we think would be an erroneous decision, because the applicable law was not insisted upon by one of the parties.'".

See also Jack Ammann Photogrammetric Engineers, Inc. v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue (5th Cir. 1965) 341 F. 2d 466, a tax case citing Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Chase Manhattan Bank, in determining that since legal theories were there being urged "that can be fairly disposed of on the record before us. We do not consider that we should refuse to consider them merely because they were not urged in the Tax Court."

[8] See Glavic v. Beechie (5th Cir. 1964), 340 F. 2d 91. The majority refused to consider a question not presented for determination in the District Court. Judge Wisdom in his concurring opinion stated, in opposing this decision, that he "would allow either party on appeal to advance a new theory or to change his theory of the case—if: (1) all the relevant evidence is before the court, (2) the opposing party has had adequate time to brief the point, and (3) the opposing party is not prejudic(ed) by not having introduced evidence below that would have militated against the validity or effect of the new theory."

As to all other contentions in the petition for rehearing and supporting brief, we adhere without further comment to the holdings in our original opinion. Finding no error, see Rule 25(a) of this Court, the petition for rehearing is denied.

Petition Denied.

Rives, Circuit Judge, Dissenting:

The majority undertakes to bolster its holding "that Curtis has clearly waived any right it might have had to challenge the verdict and judgment on any of the constitutional grounds asserted in Times."[1]

I.

As suggested in my earlier dissent,[2] that is not true as to the holding in Times that a state law of civil libel which sustains the imposition of extremely large awards of damages in libel actions may constitute a prior restraint on freedom of expression forbidden by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 1964, 376 U.S. 254, 277, 278.

The enormous amount of the verdict in the present case could not have been anticipated. Curtis raised the point [fol. 1796] seasonably as a ground for its first motion for new trial.[3]

[1] Slip Opinion, pp. 17 and 18.

[2] Slip Opinion, pp. 46, 47, 52 and 53.

[3] "That portion of the jury's verdict awarding the plaintiff $3,000,000 punitive damages, violates and abridges and cannot be sustained without violating and abridging the right of freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution because:

". . . . . .

"(e) The amount of punitive damages, in the circumstances of this case, was so excessive as to violate and abridge through excessiveness alone, the guarantees of free speech and press." (Record, pp. 46, 47.)

In ruling on that motion the district court recognized that: "As far as this Court can ascertain, the largest award ever sustained for punitive damages by the Appellate Courts was an award of $175,000.00 in the case of Reynolds v. Pegler, D.C., 123 F.Supp. 36; 2 Cir., 223 F.2d 429." 225 F.Supp. 916, at 919. Nonetheless, after the plaintiff filed his remittitur, the district court entered judgment against Curtis for $400,000 punitive damages plus $60,000 general damages, or a total of $460,000. Since that time, Curtis has lost no opportunity to insist that the $460,000 award, if sustained, is so large as to constitute a prior restraint upon freedom of the press within the rule announced in the Times decision. On that issue, there is, I submit, no debatable question of waiver. For reasons expressed in my prior dissent,[4] I would rule with Curtis on that issue.

As to the punitive damage award, the section of the Georgia Code quoted in my earlier dissent[5] and the oral [fol. 1797] charge to the jury,[6] make clear that the very purpose of punitive damages is to act as a deterrent to future conduct, which, in libel cases, means a prior restraint on freedom of expression. When that deterrent or restraint assumes proportions of the jury's verdict, $3,000,000, or even of the award made by the district court, $400,000, I submit that it is forbidden by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.[7]

The part of the Times opinion relating to prior restraints on freedom of expression was certainly not "new law."

[5] Section 105-2002, Georgia Code Annotated.

[6] "The purpose of punitive damages is to deter the defendant from a repetition of the offense and is a warning to others not to commit a like offense. It is intended to protect the community and has an expression of ethical indignation, although the plaintiff receives the award."

[7] See Bantam Books, Inc. v. Sullivan, 1963, 372 U.S. 58, 70, cited in Times (376 U.S. at 278).

Nor was that part of the opinion limited to public officials. Clearly, I submit, whether Butts was a public official or not, the enormous award of damages must be set aside.

II.

The specific holding in Times, which had not theretofore been generally recognized, was that a State cannot under the First and Fourteenth Amendments award damages to a public official for defamatory falsehood relating to his official conduct unless he proves "actual malice"—that the statement was made with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard of whether it was true or false. It was that principle to which I referred in my earlier dissent,[8] when I said "it was not even enunciated by the [fol. 1798] counsel who petitioned for certiorari in the New York Times Co. decision."[9] Now on petition for rehearing, counsel makes affidavit that: "The requirement of the New York Times case that general damages could not be awarded without the necessity of proof of actual malice on the part of the defendant was not specifically presented in the Alabama courts nor in the petition for certiorari to the United States Supreme Court."

In order properly to object[10] to the district court's instructions allowing recovery of general damages without proof of malice, and recovery of punitive damages on a definition of malice at variance with that prescribed in Times, counsel must have anticipated that specific holding of the Times decision.

Judge Morgan, the District Judge in the present case, recognized, at least impliedly, that Curtis had not waived that constitutional right by its failure to insist upon it at the trial, when, in denying the motion for new trial under Rule 60(b), Fed.R.Civ.P., he considered and ruled on the defense on its merits. Butts v. Curtis Publishing Co., N.D. Ga. 1964, 242 F.Supp. 390.

[9] An opinion which I had reached from an examination of the petition and briefs on certiorari.

[10] "No party may assign as error the giving or the failure to give an instruction unless he objects thereto before the jury retires to consider its verdict, stating distinctly the matter to which he objects and the grounds of his objection." Rule 51, Fed.R.Civ.P.

Based largely on facts dehors the present record, the majority held that Curtis' trial counsel had knowingly and intentionally waived the constitutional protections af- [fol. 1799] forded by the Times case, by failing to raise them at the trial. In response to that holding, three of Curtis' attorneys have filed with this Court their sworn affidavits.[11] Now the majority goes still further beyond the present record and considers another case shown by the records of this Court but of which Judge Morgan could not have taken judicial notice when he considered and ruled on Curtis' section 60(b) motion. With deference, I submit that it is the function of this Court simply to review the ruling of the district court on the record before that court.

If, however, we are to resort to evidence outside the record and to bolster our judicial notice from records in other cases, those extraneous matters do not impugn the integrity and veracity of Curtis' trial counsel. It seems clear to me that, at the time of trial, counsel had no notice of the specific holding thereafter made in Times. It is impossible for me to believe that, if counsel had any such notice, they would have knowingly and intentionally waived the specific constitutional protection afforded by the Times case "in order to get the right to open and close the arguments," as suggested in the majority opinion.

It is too much to hold counsel to the duty of anticipating the specific holding of Times, because of general assertions of First Amendment defenses in other cases, or even because of Mr. Justice Black's view that the First Amendment ". . . intended there should be no libel or defamation of law in the United States under the United States [fol. 1800] Government, just absolutely none so far as I am concerned . . . ."[12] The majority paints with such a broad brush as to require the assertion of a First Amendment defense in every libel or defamation case hereafter litigated.

With deference, I submit that it is the outworn sporting theory of justice[13] which leads the majority to convert this appeal into an unseemly trial of Curtis' lawyers. The function of this Court is not to decide a contest, but to administer justice. Curtis, not its lawyers, stands mulcted in damages to the extent of $460,000 as the result of a trial conducted on a fundamentally and constitutionally deficient theory of law.

The resulting damage extends far beyond the monetary loss to Curtis. This Court's refusal to consider and decide whether constitutional standards were observed in adjudging Curtis liable is a grave reflection upon the administration of justice itself. Permitting such a libel judgment to stand will cause " . . . the pall of fear and timidity [to be] imposed upon those who would give voice to public criticism in an atmosphere in which the First Amendment freedoms cannot survive."[14]

[fol. 1801] A just determination requires this Court to consider and decide this appeal on its merits.[15] The altered

v.

AMON G. CARTER, JR.; CARTER PUBLICATIONS, INC.; FORT WORTH STAR TELEGRAM; WBAP RADIO; WBAP TELEVISION; and ASSOCIATED PRESS

PLAINTIFF'S ORIGINAL PETITION—Filed September 27, 1963

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Now comes Edwin A. Walker, Plaintiff in the above styled and numbered cause and files this his Original Petition complaining of Amon G. Carter, Jr., as publisher of the Forth Worth Star Telegram, d/b/a Fort Worth Star Telegram; Carter Publications, Inc., and any other legal entity known as and using the trademarks or assumed name Fort Worth Star Telegram; WBAP Radio; WBAP Television; Fort Worth Star Telegram; WBAP Radio, WBAP Television, and all individually and as members and agents of the association known as Associated Press; the Associated Press, a foreign association organized under the laws of the State of New York and doing business within the State of Texas and as grounds therefor would respectfully show the Honorable Court as follows:

That Plaintiff, Edwin A. Walker, is a resident of the City of Dallas, Dallas County, Texas, and that the Defendants Amon G. Carter, Jr.; Carter Publications, Inc.; Fort Worth Star Telegram; WBAP Radio; WBAP Television; and Associated Press all have offices and principal places of business in the City of Fort Worth, Tarrant County, Texas, where service of citation may be had upon each of them.

[fol. 3] 2.

That on the 30th day of September, and the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd days of October, 1962, the following libelous and slanderous statements and statements with like import were uttered, published and communicated in writing and orally by Defendants on and from the premises of Defendants commonly known as Fort Worth Star Telegram, WBAP Radio and WBAP Television in the City of Fort Worth, Tarrant County, Texas, by and through their respective duly authorized agents, servants and employees, the names of whom are unknown to Plaintiff, but well known to Defendants:

October 2, 1962—"Walker, who Sunday night led a charge of students against federal marshals on the Ole Miss Campus, was arrested on four counts including insurrection against the United States."

October 3, 1962—"Rioter Asked Walker to Lead Crowd; He Did

"Editor's Note—Former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, a key figure in week-end battling over admission of a Negro to the University of Mississippi, was eating dinner Sunday night when he says he was told there was a 'scene of considerable disturbance' on the University of Mississippi campus. He went there. Here is the story of Van Savell, 21, Associated Press newsman, who was on the scene and saw what happened.

"By Van Savell.

"Oxford, Miss., Oct. 3 (AP)—Utilizing my youth to the fullest extent, I dressed as any college student would and easily milled among the several thousand rioters on the University of Mississippi campus Sunday night.

"This allowed me to follow the crowd—a few students and many outsiders—as they charged federal marshals surrounding the century-old Lyceum building. It also brought me into direct contact with former Army Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, who is now under arrest on charges of inciting insurrection and seditious conspiracy.

"Walker first appeared in the riot area at 8:45 p.m. Sunday near the University Ave. entrance about 300 yards from the Ole Miss administration building.

[fol. 4] "He was nattily dressed in a black suit, tie and shoes and wore a light tan hat.

"The crowd welcomed Walker, although this was the man who commanded the 101st Airborne Division during the 1957 school integration riots at Little Rock, Ark.

"One unidentified man queried Walker as he approached the group.

" 'General, will you lead us to the steps?'

"I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'Yes' without speaking. He then conferred with a group of about 15 persons who appeared to be the riot leaders.

"The crowd took full advantage of the near-by construction work. They broke new bricks into several pieces, took survey sticks and broken soft drink bottles.

"Walker assumed command of the crowd, which I estimated at 1,000, but was delayed for several minutes when a neatly dressed, portly man of about 45 approached the group. He conferred with Walker for several minutes and then joined a group near the front.

"Two men took Walker by the arms and they headed for the Lyceum and the federal marshals. Throughout this time, I was less than six feet from Walker.

"This march toward tear gas and some 200 marshals was more effective than the previous attempts. Although Walker was unarmed, the crowd said this was the moral support they needed.

"We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet further when we had to turn back.

"BEFORE DOING so, many of the rioters hurled their weapons—the bricks, the bottles, rocks and wooden stakes—toward the clustered marshals.

"We fled the tear gas and the charging marshals—the crowd racing back to a Confederate soldier's statute near the grove entrance below the Lyceum.

"I went to a telephone. A few minutes later I returned and found Walker talking with several students. Shortly thereafter, Walker climbed halfway up the Confederate monument and addressed the crowd.

"I heard Walker say that Gov. Barnett had betrayed the people of Mississippi.

[fol. 5] "'BUT DON'T let up now,' he said, 'You may lose this battle but you will have been heard.'

"He continued:

"'This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now.'

"There were cheers. It was apparent that Walker had complete command over the group.

"By this time, it was nearly 11 p.m. and I raced to the telephone again. Upon my return, Walker was calmly explaining the 'New Frontier' government to several bystanders. He remained away from the rioting throughout the next few hours, but advised on several tactics.

"One Ole Miss student queried the former general, 'What can we use to make the tear gas bombs ineffective? Do you know of any way that we can attack and do some damage to those damn marshals?'

"Walker suggested the use of sand to snuff out the tear gas.

"'This stuff works real well, but where can you get it?' he asked.

"At this time the rioters were using a university fire truck and five portable fire extinguishers in an attempt to make the tear gas bombs ineffective.

"I left Walker and walked about 100 yards away where Molotov cocktails—gasoline, in bottles with a fuse—were being made.

"Again I left the area for a telephone. As I walked toward a dormitory with George Bartsch of the Little Rock Associated Press bureau, we were attacked by marshals who mistook us for students. We were deluged by tear gas, manhandled, handcuffed and beaten with clubs during a 200-yard walk back to the Lyceum building.

"Thanks to recognition from Chief Marshal James P. McShane, we were quickly released and given freedom in the marshals' headquarters.

"Within minutes rifle and shotgun fire erupted from the rioting crowd and two men—one a French newsman—were killed. We considered ourselves lucky to have been arrested and glad to be behind closed, heavily guarded doors."

[fol. 6]

3.

That prior to the occasion of so publishing, uttering, and communicating, causing to be published, uttered and communicated, the statements in question, the Defendants and each of them by and through their duly authorized agents, servants and employees, were put on notice of the likelihood that the above described statements were untrue by receipt of the following communication:

"Lights on the campus were smashed, leaving it in almost total darkness. A number of non-rioting students left. Girls streamed out of dormitories, some half dressed, got in cars and fled the campus.

"During a lull in the rioting, General Edwin Walker mounted a confederate statue on the campus and begged the students to cease their violence. He said: 'This is not the proper route to Cuba.' His plea was greeted with one massive jeer.

"Walker, who commanded federal troops which were sent to Little Rock five years ago, was seen striding toward the demonstration wearing a big Texas hat. He had several aides surrounding him.

"As he concluded his speech, three adults were seen walking onto the campus with their arms loaded with whole bricks and triangular pieces of stone. One marshal was struck on the leg by a two-foot iron pipe welded by a student.

"A magazine reporter was slugged and kicked and knocked to the ground. He had an ugly gash over his left temple and was dragged to safety by two students.

"Jagged pieces of soft drink bottles and pieces of metal littered the ground.

"One youth set off a fire extinguisher and aimed it into the face of one of the drivers of trucks used to bring in the marshals.

"A state patrol officer was asked by a young man: 'Do you plan to move this crowd back out of here?' He replied, 'What crowd—you mean these bystanders?'

"Demonstrators carried confederate flags on staffs. Many appeared not to be students."

[fol. 7] 4.

That despite receipt of the notice described in the preceding paragraph, the statements in question were wilfully, and recklessly published, uttered and communicated to the general public in Tarrant County and surrounding areas by Defendants in heedless disregard of Plaintiff's rights and reputation. The above statements constitute and are reckless, false, wilful and malicious accusations that Edwin A. Walker wilfully committed infamous crimes all to the detriment of Edwin A. Walker's reputation and in violation of his rights.

That even though the Defendants and each of them have had ample and daily opportunity to retract such statements for almost a year, the Defendants have failed and refused to so do.

6.

That Edwin A. Walker is an upright and honorable citizen of the United States of America and the State of Texas. His service to his country throughout his life have been well beyond the call of duty and that prior to the publishing, uttering and communicating of the above malicious statements, he had an untarnished reputation as a patriotic, law abiding, peace loving and God fearing citizen with unbounding love and sense of duty to his country and fellow citizens. In this connection, it should be remembered that Edwin A. Walker gave his career to the honorable service of his country rising through the ranks of the United States Army from the status of a cadet at the United States Military Academy to the rank of Major General. That during this [fol. 8] time our country as well as our country's allies were so appreciative of his conduct, ability and reputation that he received the following awards and commendations, among others:

The Silver Star
The Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster
Combat Infantryman's Badge (Second award)
Senior Paratroopers Badge (47 jumps)
Legion of Merit with Cluster Commendation Ribbon
Korean Unit Citation
French Croix de Guerre (1943)
Norwegian Order of St. Olav (1946)
Order of the British Empire (1945)

Korean Ulchi Medals with Gold and Silver Star (1951-1953)

8.

That as a result of Edwin A. Walker's conduct, ability and reputation he was assigned the following sensitive, vital and responsible duties, among others, all of which duties were performed with distinction:

Commanding Officer, 1st Special Service Force (airborne, amphibious, mountain and ski troops) in Italy, France and Germany
Commanding Officer, Task Force "A", Oslo, Norway
Senior Advisor, First Republic of Korea Corps
Chief Army Section Military Assistance and Advisory Group, Taipai, Taiwan and Advisor to Commander in Chief, Chinese Nationalist Army
Commanding General, 25th Division Artillery
Chief, U. S. Army Military District, Little Rock, Arkansas, and Commander, IX U. S. Army Corps (Reserve)
[fol. 9] Commanding General, 24th Infantry Division
Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff Operations, Headquarters U. S. Army Europe
Chief of Staff for Training and Operations, Headquarters, U. S. Army Pacific

9.

Subsequently, the said Edwin A. Walker determined that the course and conduct of the political affairs of our nation were taking a turn detrimental to the best interests of his fellow Americans to the extent that he could not in good conscience remain silent. Having due recognition and respect of his position as a Major General in the United States Army, he then determined that the only proper, lawful and honorable way that he could speak out was after he resigned said commission, so that he could speak out as a private citizen. This he did.

10.

That as reflected above Edwin A. Walker has always conducted himself as a peaceful, law-abiding citizen who not only respects and obeys, but upholds, the laws of the United States. That Edwin A. Walker is not guilty of the criminal acts which Defendants maliciously and viciously accused him, but on the contrary, did attempt to restore peace and prevent violence on the occasion in question. That despite this, and as a direct result of the above described statements Edwin A. Walker no longer has the untarnished reputation to which he is entitled.

11.

That as a direct and proximate result of Defendants' wilfully and maliciously publishing, uttering and communicat- [fol. 10] ing the above described accusations, Edwin A. Walker has been exposed to the public hatred, contempt and ridicule, and his reputation as above described has been severely injured and damaged and the said Edwin A. Walker has been caused to suffer pain and anguish as a result therefrom, all to his actual damages in the amount of not less than One Million Dollars ($1,000,000.00) for which amount suit is brought.

12.

That the above described statements of Defendants were published, uttered and communicated both orally and in writing maliciously and wilfully with full realization of the damages Plaintiff would suffer for two apparent purposes:

1. To sell newspapers thereby increasing Defendants' profits at the expense of Edwin A. Walker.
2. To discredit and ruin Edwin A. Walker's reputation.

That therefore Plaintiff is entitled to recover punitive damages in an amount of not less than One Million Dollars ($1,000,000.00) for which amount this suit is brought.

Wherefore, Premises Considered, Edwin A. Walker prays that Defendants and each of them be cited in terms of law, that they appear in answer herein and upon final trial and hearing hereof, Defendants and each of them, jointly and severally, be ordered to pay Two Million Dollars ($2,000,000.00) and that Edwin A. Walker further prays for such other and further relief, both at law and in equity to which he may be justly entitled.

IN AND FOR TARRANT COUNTY, TEXAS

No. 31741-C

[Title omitted]

PLAINTIFF'S SECOND AMENDED PETITION—Filed June 2, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Comes now Edwin A. Walker, plaintiff in the above styled and numbered cause and filed this his Second Amended Petition complaining of The Associated Press, a foreign association organized under the laws of the State of New York and doing business within the State of Texas and as grounds therefor would respectfully show the Honorable Court as follows:

I

That plaintiff, Edwin A. Walker, is a resident of the City of Dallas, Dallas County, Texas and that the defendant, Associated Press has an office and principal place of business in the City of Fort Worth, Tarrant County, Texas, where service of citation may be had upon it.

II

That on the 2nd and 3rd days of October, 1962, defendant falsely, maliciously, knowingly and in reckless disregard of the truth uttered, published and communicated in writing on and from the premises of the Fort Worth Star Telegram, for monetary consideration, the following libelous and defamatory statements in the form of wire service reports, falsely accusing plaintiff of crimes in violation of the penal code of the United States of America which publications are as follows:

1) October 2, 1962 "Walker, who Sunday night led a charge of students against federal marshals on the Ole Miss Campus, was arrested on four counts including insurrection against the United States."

2) October 3, 1962 "RIOTER ASKED WALKER TO LEAD CROWD; HE DID"

[fol. 12]

3) (Editors Note: Former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, a key figure in the week-end battling over admission of a Negro to the University of Mississippi, was eating dinner Sunday night when he says he was told there was a 'scene of considerable disturbance' on the University of Mississippi Campus. He went there. Here is the story of Van Savell, 21, Associated Press newsman, who was on the scene and saw what happened.)

By Van Savell: Oxford, Miss., October 3, 1962 (AP) "Utilizing my youth to the fullest extent, I dressed as any college student would and easily milled among the several thousand rioters on the University of Mississippi Campus Sunday night.

4) "This allowed me to follow the crowd—a few students and many outsiders—as they charged federal mar- shals surrounding the century old Lyceum Building. It also brought me into direct contact with former Army Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, who is now under arrest on charges of inciting insurrection and seditious conspiracy.

"Walker first appeared in the riot area at 8:45 p.m., Sunday near the University Avenue entrance about 300 yds. from the Ole Miss Administration Building.

"He was nattily dressed in a black suit, tie and shoes and wore a light tan hat.

5) "The crowd welcomed Walker, although this was the man who commanded the 101st Airborne Division during the 1957 school integration riots at Little Rock, Arkansas.

6) "One unidentified man queried Walker as he approached the group. 'General, will you lead us to the steps?'

7) "I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'Yes' without speaking. He then conferred with a group of about 15 persons who appeared to be the riot leaders.

"The crowd took full advantage of the near-by construction work. They broke new bricks into several pieces, took survey sticks and broken soft drink bottles.

8) "Walker assumed command of the crowd, which I estimated at 1,000 but was delayed for several minutes when a neatly dressed, portly man of about 45 approached the group. He conferred with Walker for several minutes and then joined a group near the front.

9) "Two men took Walker by the arms and they headed for the Lyceum and the federal marshals. Throughout this time, I was less than six feet from Walker.

10) "This march toward tear gas and some 200 marshals was more effective than the previous attempts. Al-
[fol. 13] though Walker was unarmed, the crowd said this was the moral support they needed.

11) "We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet further when we had to turn back.

12) "Before doing so, many of the rioters hurled their weapons—the bricks, the bottles, rocks and wooden stakes—toward the clustered marshals.

13) "We fled the tear gas and the charging marshals—the crowd racing back to a Confederate soldier's statue near the grove entrance below the Lyceum.

14) "I went to a telephone. A few minutes later I returned and found Walker talking with several students. Shortly thereafter, Walker climbed halfway up the Confederate monument and addressed the crowd.

15)-

16) "I heard Walker say that Gov. Barnett had betrayed the People of Mississippi. 'But don't let up now,' he said, 'You may lose this battle, but you will have been heard.'

17) "He continued: 'This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now.'

18) "There were cheers. It was apparent that Walker had complete command over the group.

19) "By this time, it was nearly 11:00 p.m. and I raced to the telephone again. Upon my return, Walker was calmly explaining the 'New Frontier Government' to several bystanders. He remained away from the rioting throughout the next few hours, but advised on several tactics.

20) "One Ole Miss student queried the former General, 'What can we use to make the tear gas bombs ineffective? Do you know of any way that we can attack and do some damage to those damn Marshals?'

20) "Walker suggested the use of sand to snuff out the tear gas.

21) " 'This stuff works real well, but where can you get it?', he asked.

22) "At this time the rioters were using a University fire truck and fire extinguishers in an attempt to make the tear gas bombs ineffective.

23) "I left Walker and walked about 100 yards away where Molotov cocktails—gasoline, in bottles with a fuse—were being made.

24) "Again I left the area for a telephone. As I walked toward a Dormitory with George Bartsch of the Little Rock Associated Press Bureau, we were attacked by Marshals who mistook us for students. [fol. 14] We were deluged by tear gas, manhandled, handcuffed and beaten with clubs during a 200 yard walk back to the Lyceum Building.

24) "Thanks to recognition from Chief Marshal James P. McShane, we were quickly released and given freedom in the Marshals' Headquarters.

25) "Within minutes rifle and shotgun fire erupted from the rioting crowd and two men—one a French newsman—were killed. We considered ourselves lucky to have been arrested and glad to be behind closed, heavily guarded doors."

Plaintiff states that such part of defendant's news releases, as italicized above, are false, malicious, and in reckless disregard of the truth as to the respective numbered paragraphs as follows:

1) Plaintiff led no charge against Federal Marshals on the Ole Miss Campus; and this statement of fact in plaintiff's news release is a completely fabricated falsehood.

2) Although plaintiff was asked to lead a charge on several occasions, he refused to do so; and, at no time, participated in the rioting.

3) Plaintiff was not a "key figure in week-end battling", except for the false news reports issued by defendant.

4) Insofar as this paragraph infers that the author, Van H. Savell, was in "direct contact" with plaintiff, during a charge against Federal Marshals surrounding the Lyceum Building, it is false.

5) The statement that, "the crowd welcomed Walker" is false. Although separate individuals, at various times, greeted plaintiff, there was no concerted action by the crowd.

6) The statement that an unidentified man queried Walker, as he approached the group, "General, will you lead us in a charge?" is false. Although various individuals, from time to time requested plaintiff to lead a charge, which he always refused, there was no such request when plaintiff first entered the Campus; and plaintiff, at no time, "approached a group".

7) This paragraph is completely false.

8) The statement that, "Walker assumed command of the crowd" is completely false, and particularly so, when taken in context with the remainder of the report that, "Walker first appeared in the riot area at 8:45 * * * the crowd welcomed Walker * * * unidentified man queried Walker, 'General, will you lead us to the steps' * * * Walker assumed command of the crowd." The true facts are that, when plaintiff first arrived on the Campus, he had no contact with any crowd of [fol. 15] people, and only walked around in the area near the Confederate Monument and to the east of the flagpole in the center of the Circle; and had neither the inclination nor the capability of "assuming command of the crowd." The statement of an estimated 1,000 people, inferred to be in the immediate presence of plaintiff, is a gross exaggeration. Although there may have been 1,000 people upon the Campus, the entire crowd was never assembled in one group at one time. The statement that plaintiff was "delayed for several minutes when a neatly dressed, portly man of about 45 approached the group" is also false. Although a man fitting this description, one Talmage Witt, was near plaintiff from the time plaintiff first entered the Campus until approximately two hours thereafter, he never "approached a group" of which plaintiff was a part, nor did he confer with plaintiff for several minutes, as falsely stated by the above report.

9) The statement that "Two men took plaintiff by the arms, and they headed for the Lyceum and the Federal Marshals" is completely false. The remainder of this paragraph is also false, in the inference that the author, Van H. Savell, was with plaintiff in an alleged movement toward Federal Marshals, as stated in the first sentence of the paragraph.

10) This paragraph is false. Plaintiff participated in no march "toward tear gas and marshals." Plaintiff was unarmed, as stated; but he gave the crowd no "moral support", nor did "the crowd" make such statement.

11) This paragraph is false in the inference that plaintiff was "met with a barrage of tear gas", while participating in a march against U. S. Marshals.

12) This paragraph is also false in the inference that plaintiff was participating with "the rioters who hurled their weapons".

13) This paragraph is also false, in the inference that plaintiff was participating in the group that was "charging marshals".

14) Plaintiff has no knowledge of the author, Van H. Savell, going to a telephone; but alleges that at the Associated Press newsman, Ben Thomas, to whom Van H. Savell made his telephone report has testified under oath, that he received no report from Savell until after the incident when plaintiff addressed students from a Confederate Monument. Plaintiff has no knowledge of the truth or falsity of the statement that the author, Van H. Savell, "returned and found Walker talking with several students. Shortly thereafter, Walker climbed half-way up the Confederate Monument and addressed the crowd."; but alleges that Van H. Savell has testified, under oath, that, when he returned from making his alleged phone call, he found plaintiff "standing on a ledge of the Confederate Statue." Plaintiff does not know which of the statements by Savell, if either, are true. Plaintiff admits that he did address a group of people from the Confederate Statue.

15) This statement is false. Plaintiff, at no time, stated that Gov. Barnett had betrayed the People of Mississippi.

[fol. 16] 16) The statement attributed to plaintiff, "but don't let up now" is false. The remainder of the alleged statement, although taken out of context, is essentially true.

17) This alleged statement, attributed to plaintiff, is false.

18) Although there were some cheers during the course of plaintiff's talk from the monument, there were also boos, when plaintiff remonstrated with the students to avoid violence. The statement that plaintiff had complete command over the group is completely false.

19) The statement, that it was nearly 11:00 p.m. when plaintiff finished talking from the monument is false. Plaintiff has no knowledge as to whether the author, Van H. Savell, "raced to the telephone again", other than the sworn testimony of the Associated Press newsman, Ben Thomas, that Savell made but one report, and that was after plaintiff's talk on the monument. Plaintiff states that the report that plaintiff "advised on several tactics" is false.

20) These statements although taken out of context, are essentially true.

21) This statement is false.

22) This statement is essentially true, although plaintiff has no knowledge as to the use of fire extinguishers.

23) Plaintiff has no knowledge as to this statement.

24) Plaintiff has no knowledge as to these statements.

25) This statement is false as to the timing, "within minutes". Sporadic firing had occurred long prior to this time.

III

Prior to defendants publication of the false charge that plaintiff was violating the law of the United States of America, in commanding and leading a charge against United States Marshals, plaintiff bore a good reputation as an upright, honorable and law abiding citizen of the United States of America and the State of Texas; and, for over 30 years, served his country as a member of the United States Army, both in War and at Peace, with devotion and loyalty. Prior to the above false and malicious statements, plaintiff had never been charged with a crime, and bore a reputation, in accordance with his oath as an officer of the United States Army of being committed to defending and supporting the Constitution of the United States.

[fol. 17]

IV

Plaintiff states that the above false statements of fact are not within the privilege extended to newspapers or periodicals by Article 5432, Vernon's Texas Civil Statutes; and, being statements of fact, do not come within the classification of reasonable and fair comment or criticism protected by the privilege statute. The only statement that could be classed as "comment", "This march toward tear gas and some 200 marshals was more effective than the previous attempts" is not reasonable or fair comment or criticism, since it is based upon a false statement of fact.

V

As a direct and proximate result of the defendants' falsely, wilfully, maliciously and in reckless disregard of the truth, publishing, uttering and communicating the above described written statements, knowing that such statements would be printed, and widely circulated throughout the State of Texas by the Fort Worth Star Telegram, plaintiff has been exposed to the public hatred, contempt and ridicule; and his reputation, as above described, has been severely defamed, injured and damaged, causing mental anguish, humiliation and embarrassment, all to his general damage in the amount of $1,000,000.00, for which plaintiff is entitled to judgment herein.

VI

Plaintiff states that the above described statements, charging plaintiff with the commission of a crime against the law of the United States of America, were published, uttered and communicated by defendant, Associated Press, for monetary consideration, and for the purpose of having the same re-published and circulated throughout the State of Texas by the Fort Worth Star Telegram, maliciously, wilfully and in reckless disregard of the truth. Aside from, and in addition to the malice implicit and inherent in the defendant's falsely accusing plaintiff of a crime, defendant's entire handling of the news releases concerning plaintiff [fol. 18] between the dates of September 30, 1962 and January 22, 1963 reveal malice and ill will, as well as slanted and distorted reporting, including the following:

1) Between the dates of September 30, 1962 through October 7, 1962, defendant disseminated and published, through its wire service connections with the Fort Worth Star Telegram reports that plaintiff had led a charge against U. S. Marshals, had been arrested, charged with assaulting U. S. Marshals, conspiracy to intimidate and injure U. S. Marshals, insurrection and seditious conspiracy, and that plaintiff had been committed to the U. S. Medical Center, Springfield, Missouri, a place for confinement of criminal insane prisoners.

2) In reporting the incidents involving plaintiff's arrest and commitment, the defendant deliberately refrained from fairly and impartially reporting the true facts that he had been transported from the State of Mississippi, where he had been committed by a judicial officer, and into the State of Missouri, without a Court Order, and that, on the following day, a Court Order was entered by the U. S. District Court at Oxford, Mississippi ordering plaintiff to be transferred and committed to the U. S. Medical Center for Federal Prisoners at Springfield, Missouri, which order had been entered, without notice to plaintiff, without a hearing, at which plaintiff was represented, and without the benefit of counsel for plaintiff. Defendant further refrained from reporting that such Order by the U. S. District Court at Oxford, Mississippi had been entered upon an affidavit by Dr. Charles E. Smith, Medical Director and Chief Psychiatrist of the Federal Bureau of Prisons, who had never seen plaintiff, but had examined news reports.

3) Defendant failed to further report the true facts that, on October 16, 1962, plaintiff filed in the U. S. District Court at Oxford, Mississippi a Motion to Strike the entire proceeding by which plaintiff was committed to the Federal Mental Hospital, upon the ground that such commitment, in violation of the right to make bail, and without counsel, notice or hearing, violated the Constitutional Rights of plaintiff. Plaintiff alleges that the obvious disparity in emphasis placed by defendant's reporting of the alleged violation of the civil rights of the student, James Meredith, which was dramatically and extensively projected by defendant, and the alleged violation of plaintiff's Constitutional Rights which was completely ignored by defendant, reveals the existent malice of defendant toward plaintiff.

4) Plaintiff states that defendants malice toward plaintiff is further revealed by defendants reporting of two Court hearings before the U. S. District Court at Oxford, Mississippi, involving plaintiff, as follows:

a) On November 21, 1962, in covering a sanity hearing before the U. S. District Court at Oxford, Mississippi on November 21, 1962 defendant deliberately slanted its news report by emphasizing that a Government witness, Dr. Guttmacher testi- [fol. 19] fied that a study of plaintiff's records disclosed confusion and examples of defective judgment, with possibility that there had been a deterioration in the mental processes of plaintiff in the last year or two. Despite the fact that defendant had given extensive publicity upon its major wire trunk report to the Fort Worth Star Telegram of such testimony by Government witnesses questioning plaintiff's mental capacity, defendant failed to issue a wire service report to the same paper that a Court appointed Psychiatrist, Dr. Robert L. Stubblefield had reported that plaintiff was "currently functioning under the superior level of intelligence". Defendant's report of Judge Clayton's comments was also slanted, in reporting that the Court appointed Psychiatrist, Dr. Robert L. Stubblefield, had expressed no opinion on the sanity of Walker, when the Court, in reality, had stated that the Stubblefield report was "essentially negative; that is to say, there is no opinion expressed that Edwin A. Walker is presently insane or incompetent." Such reporting further reveals malice and bias on the part of defendant.

b) On January 22, 1963, after the Mississippi Federal Grand Jury had failed to indict plaintiff, and the charges against plaintiff had been dismissed by the Government, defendant reported that such charges had been dismissed by U. S. District Judge Clayton, "without prejudice", and added an interpretive statement, not made by the Court as follows: "This means that the Federal Government may reconsider them before the Statute of Limitation expires in Five Years", which reporting further reveals malice and bias on the part of defendant toward plaintiff.

5) Because of the malicious and defamatory report by defendant, as above set forth in Paragraph II, falsely accusing plaintiff of a crime, to the discredit and defamation of plaintiff's reputation, and in reckless disregard of the truth, plaintiff is entitled to recover punitive damages against the defendant in the sum of $1,000,000.00.

6) The malice, bias and prejudice of defendant toward plaintiff is further demonstrated by the failure of defendant to further investigate and correct the false report by their reporter, Van H. Savell, as above set forth, after defendant had noticed from news report of United Press International, on October 1, 1964, that the report of Savell was untrue, which United Press news report included the following:

"During a lull in the rioting, General Edwin A. Walker mounted a confederate statue on the campus and begged the students to cease their violence. He said: 'This is not the proper way to Cuba.' His plea was greeted with one massive jeer.

"Walker, who commanded federal troops which were sent to Little Rock five years ago, was seen striding toward the demonstration wearing a big Texas hat. He had several aides surrounding him."

[fol. 20] Wherefore, Premises Considered, plaintiff prays judgment against the defendant, Associated Press, in the sum of $1,000,000.00 general damages and $1,000,000.00 punitive or exemplary damages, and the costs of this action.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF TARRANT COUNTY, TEXAS

17TH JUDICIAL DISTRICT

No. 31741-C

SECOND AMENDED ORIGINAL ANSWER OF DEFENDANT, THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—Filed June 5, 1964

Now comes defendant, The Associated Press, and makes and files this its Second Amended Original Answer directed to Plaintiff's Second Amended Petition, and says:

1.

Defendant specially excepts to the allegations contained in Paragraph II for the following reasons:

(a) same are so vague, general, indefinite, immaterial and prejudicial that defendant is not apprised of the kind and character of proof it will be required to meet in that the way and manner of the alleged publication and communication in writing on and from the premises of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram is not set forth; in that the question of monetary consideration is immaterial, prejudicial and inflammatory, and such allegation does not apprise the defendant of the proof that will be offered in connection therewith; in that said allegations do not apprise the defendant of what crime in violation of the penal code of the United States of America the plaintiff is complaining of, nor do the allegations of said Paragraph II apprise the defendant of what part of the same plaintiff is contending constitutes an accusation of crime.

(b) said allegations are mere conclusions of the pleader without adequate facts to support.

(c) While there are some allegations of falsity, there are no sufficient allegations of what plaintiff is contending is libelous or libelous per se;

[fol. 22] (d) by such pleading the defendant is not apprised of which of said allegations plaintiff is contending is a headline or a caption and what is the body of an alleged wire service report;

(e) As directed to that portion of Paragraph II appearing on page 4 and immediately following the allegation "Plaintiff states that such part of defendant's news releases, as underlined above, are false, malicious, and in reckless disregard of the truth" is argumentative, redundant, prejudicial, inflammatory, evidentiary and do not allege any ultimate issue in the case; the allegations that the same were malicious and in reckless disregard of the truth is a conclusion on the part of the pleader without allegation of facts, is an attempt to advise the jury that malice can be inferred from the publication of the article itself, and all of the remaining portion of said Paragraph II after the above quotation should be stricken;

(f) the allegations in subparagraph 14 on page 5 and subparagraph 19 on page 6, a part of Paragraph II of plaintiff's second amended petition, should be stricken for the reason that the testimony of two of the witnesses is arrayed one against the other and then inaccurately and improperly so, which is highly prejudicial and inflammatory, is argumentative, and does not allege any ultimate fact issue, and, in the alternative and without waiving the foregoing exceptions, such allegations should be stricken.

Defendant specially excepts to the allegations in Paragraph III for the reason that the same are so vague, general and indefinite that this defendant is not apprised of the kind and character of proof that it will be required to meet, and in particular does not allege what law or laws plaintiff was claiming that defendant charged him with or what portions of the articles alleged to be false constituted a charge of such crime.

[fol. 23]

3.

Defendant specially excepts to the allegations contained in Paragraph IV for the following reasons:

(a) the same are mere legal conclusions of the pleader;

(b) do not allege any ultimate fact issue;

(c) invades the province of the court and jury as to what is reasonable or fair comment;

(d) is prejudicial and inflammatory and argumentative also as to the facts.

Defendant specially excepts to Paragraph V for the following reasons:

(a) in the allegations "wilfully, maliciously and in reckless disregard of the truth," the same are general and indefinite, and this defendant is not apprised of the kind and character of proof that it will be required to meet;

(b) the same are mere conclusions of the pleader without facts;

(c) does not differentiate between those parts of the written statements claimed to be false and those admitted to be true as to any claimed damages suffered therefrom, and the same are prejudicial and inflammatory.

Defendant specially excepts to the allegations in the opening paragraph of Paragraph VI for the following reasons:

(a) as to the statements made in the opening paragraph of said Paragraph VI, the same are so vague, general and indefinite that this defendant is not apprised of the kind and character of proof it will be required to meet, especially in connection with what crimes plaintiff is alleging that he was charged with;

(b) that the allegation "for monetary consideration" is immaterial, prejudicial and inflammatory;

[fol. 24] (c) that as to the allegation "for the purpose having the same republished and circulated throughout the State of Texas by the Forth Worth Star Telegram," it is highly prejudicial, inflammatory and immaterial and seeks to impose on this defendant a greater burden or duty than that imposed by law;

(d) with reference to the allegation "maliciously, wilfully and in reckless disregard of the truth" for the reason that such allegations are conclusions of the pleader, not based on any fact, and do not allege any ultimate fact issue;

(e) with reference to the allegation "in addition to the malice implicit and inherent in the defendant's falsely accusing plaintiff of a crime," same is highly prejudicial and inflammatory and is an attempt to inform or influence the jury that the publication of the article itself infers malice, all of which is contrary to law.

Defendant further specially excepts to the allegations in Paragraph VI beginning with the allegation "defendant's entire handling of the news releases concerning plaintiff between the dates of September 30, 1962 and January 22, 1963 reveal malice and ill will, as well as slanted and distorted reporting, including the following:" and continuing to the end of said paragraph VI, for each and all of the following reasons:

(a) the same are so vague, general and indefinite that this defendant is not apprised of the kind and character of proof it will be required to meet;

(b) the same constitutes an effort on the part of the plaintiff to inject into this case matters that are barred by limitation;

(c) same are immaterial and irrelevant to any issue in the case and are highly inflammatory and prejudicial;

(d) the allegations with respect to defendant's failure to report various matters are completely immaterial because defendant is under no duty to plaintiff to report any of [fol. 25] such matters, and, further, because there is no allegation that defendant had knowledge of the matters it is charged with having failed to report;

(e) such allegations are too remote in time and in their complete lack of relation to or connection with the events occurring on the campus of the University of Mississippi as set forth in the alleged article upon which plaintiff sues;

(f) the phrase "slanted and distorted reporting" is mere conclusion of the pleader, and is highly prejudicial and inflammatory and is irrelevant and immaterial.

(g) with particular reference to the allegations in subparagraph 5 of Paragraph VI, defendant says that the allegations "because of the malicious and defamatory report by defendant, as above set forth, falsely accusing plaintiff of a crime," the same are insufficient to apprise defendant of what report plaintiff is referring to, plaintiff having alleged two reports in Paragraph II and several other reports in Paragraph VI; and insofar as said allegations may refer to reports described in said Paragraph VI, same appear on their face to be barred by limitations, and constitute an attempt on the part of the plaintiff to inject into this suit alleged publications and reports published more than one year prior to the filing of plaintiff's second amended petition;

(h) with particular reference to the allegations in subparagraph 6 of Paragraph VI, defendant says that same are completely immaterial and should be stricken in that any alleged notice that defendant purportedly received from United Press International would be hearsay, and defendant was under no duty to believe the same or take any action based thereon, and such allegations are too vague and indefinite to apprise defendant of when, where and how it is alleged to have received such notice, and such allegations show on their face that the alleged notice is not set forth in full in said pleading.

[fol. 26] Wherefore, defendant, The Associated Press, prays that each and all of said special exceptions be sustained.

I.

This defendant, The Associated Press, denies each and every, all and singular, the allegations in plaintiff's said amended petition contained and demands strict proof thereof.

II.

By way of further answer herein, and without waiving any of the foregoing pleas, defendant, The Associated Press, would respectfully show to the court and the jury that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this cause for the reason that the statements made in the publications complained of as to statements of fact were and are true in fact and in substance.

III.

By way of further answer herein, and without waiving any of the foregoing pleas, defendant, The Associated Press, would respectfully show to the Court and the jury that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages in this cause of any nature for each and all of the following reasons considering all the material facts and circumstances surrounding the plaintiff's alleged claim of damage:

(1)

Plaintiff by his own statements in pleadings filed in this cause has alleged that he resigned his Army Commission in order to speak out and install himself as a leader and public figure. Plaintiff, Edwin A. Walker, voluntarily injected himself into a situation of turmoil, resentment and excitement in Mississippi and of great national publicity and interest everywhere at the time he uttered certain public statements, more fully hereinafter alleged, on television, radio and to newsmen and by his subsequent trip to Jackson, Mississippi, and Oxford, Mississippi, at the very height [fol. 27] of such tension and turmoil between September 10 and October 1, 1962.

The publications complained of in this action insofar as the same consist of comments were and are fair comments made in good faith upon facts which related to matters that were and are affairs of public interest, importance and concern and related to acts and utterances of plaintiff, a public figure, in public places and at public meetings.

(a) The background and events into which Walker injected himself are set forth in the following paragraphs.

(b) On or about May 31, 1961, one James H. Meredith, a colored person, filed a complaint in the United States District Court, Southern District of Mississippi, and on behalf of himself and all other colored students in the State of Mississippi similarly situated, against Charles D. Fair, President of the Board of Trustees of the State Institutions of Higher Learning in the State of Mississippi, and others connected with the University of Mississippi, seeking admission to said University. Thereafter, and on or about February 3, 1962, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi rendered a decision reported in 202 F. Supp. 224, denying Meredith rights of admission to the University of Mississippi.

Thereupon Meredith appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, at New Orleans, and on or about June 25, 1962, said Court rendered a decision (305 F.2d 343) in which said Court reversed the decision of the United States District Court, thereupon remanding said action, with directions to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to grant forthwith the relief prayed for by Meredith and to issue a permanent injunction against each and all of the defendants in said suit and all persons acting in concert with them, as well as all persons having knowledge of said decree, and directing and compelling admission of the said Meredith to the [fol. 28] University of Mississippi as a student.

(c) Thereafter, and on or about July 26, 1962, the United States Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, at New Orleans, vacated certain stay orders signed by Federal Judge Ben F. Cameron, and further directed the U. S. District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to enter the judgment and the injunction as theretofore ordered (306 F.2d 374). On July 28, 1962, the said United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, at New Orleans, also entered a certain interim order to the same effect.

(d) Subsequently Judge Ben F. Cameron issued three other successive stays of execution of the mandate of the United States Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, which ordered the admission of Meredith to the University of Mississippi, said stays to operate pending an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. On or about September 10, 1962, Mr. Justice Black of the U. S. Supreme Court entered an order (1) to vacate the orders of Judge Ben F. Cameron, and (2) that the judgment and mandate of the Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit at New Orleans should be obeyed and immediately carried out, and (3) that pending any appeal, the parties were enjoined from taking any steps to prevent enforcement of the Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, judgment and mandate.

(e) On or about September 13, 1962, the United States Court for the Southern District of Mississippi as directed by the U. S. Court of Appeals, 5th Circuit, at New Orleans, issued an injunction and ordered that the said Meredith be admitted to the University of Mississippi forthwith.

(f) On or about September 20, 1962, the said Meredith appeared on the campus of the University of Mississippi accompanied by U. S. Marshals for the purpose of registering as a student pursuant to the orders of the United States Courts above set forth, but the Governor of Mis-
[fol. 29] sissippi, the Honorable Ross Barnett, then and there rejected the application of the said Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

(g) Again, and on or about September 25, 1962, the said Meredith appeared at the offices of the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning, at Jackson, Mississippi, for the purpose of registering as a student pursuant to the prior orders of the United States Courts. When Meredith sought to enter the offices, as aforesaid, the Honorable Ross Barnett, Governor of the State of Mississippi, and certain officers acting under his direction, again barred the said Meredith and denied him admission to the University of Mississippi. On or about September 26, 1962, the said Meredith sought to enter the campus of the University of Mississippi where he was barred from so entering by the Honorable Paul B. Johnson, Jr., Lieutenant Governor of the State of Mississippi, and certain state police acting under his orders, thereby denying the aforesaid Meredith admission to the University of Mississippi. On September 25, 1962, the United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit, at New Orleans, entered another restraining order against the Honorable Ross Barnett, Governor of the State of Mississippi, and other named officials in said State, and all persons in active concert or in participation therewith, from interfering with or obstructing in any manner the admission of the said Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

(h) Thereafter, on the same day, the United States Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit issued its orders requiring the aforesaid Ross Barnett, Governor of the State of Mississippi, and the Honorable Paul B. Johnson, Jr., Lieutenant Governor of the State of Mississippi, to appear before said Court and show cause why they should not be held in civil contempt for willfully disobeying the orders of the United States Courts and barring the admission of Meredith to the University of Mississippi, and on or about [fol. 30] September 28 the said Court entered its judgment and order adjudging the said Ross Barnett and Paul B. Johnson, Jr. guilty of civil contempt and levied fines to continue on a daily basis unless on or before October 2, the said Governor and Lt. Governor should show to the Court that they had fully complied with all restraining orders of all the United States Courts, and that they had notified enforcement officers in the State of Mississippi to cease and desist from interfering with the orders of the aforesaid Courts and to cooperate with the officers and agents of the United States in the execution of all orders and injunctions to the end that Meredith would be permitted to register as a student at the University of Mississippi.

(i) That the attempts of the said James H. Meredith to enter the University of Mississippi and the actions of the authorities in Mississippi preventing his entry, and the actions of the various United States Courts in making and entering said injunctions and mandates, as above set forth in the preceding paragraphs, had all been given wide publicity throughout the United States by newspapers, radio and television, and were matters of general knowledge and affairs of great public interest and concern prior to September 30, 1962. The plaintiff in this cause knew, or reasonably should have know of the court orders, injunctions and mandates herein pleaded based on knowledge acquired from an ordinary reading of the newspapers and reports from other news media and he also knew of the defiance of Governor Ross Barnett, Governor of the State of Mississippi, and of the Lt. Governor towards the fulfillment of the court orders of the United States Courts above set forth.

The plaintiff, the former Major General of the Army of the United States, following his resignation therefrom for the stated purpose of speaking out in protest as a private citizen, had made frequent public statements and had made an unsuccessful venture into politics as a candidate for Governor of the State of Texas.

Plaintiff was a well known public figure because of his long military career, his commands and duties with the Army of the United States, his role as Commanding General of the troops in the Little Rock, Arkansas, integration crisis in 1957, his resignation from the Army of the United States with the rank of Major General with the avowed statement and purpose of being able to protest and take a stand and position in matters of public interest and affairs, and his candidacy for Governor of the State of Texas in 1962. With such background as a public figure, the plaintiff, during the critical times involved herein, between September 10, 1962 and October 1, 1962, injected himself into the Mississippi crisis with the request and/or notice for frequent press releases or conferences, from Dallas, Texas, Jackson and Oxford, Mississippi, and thereby invited comment as to his activities. His public utterances and statements were all in protest and opposition to duly constituted governmental and judicial authority and relating to the admission of Meredith to the University of Mississippi, and were in violation of the injunctive decrees issued by the United States Courts, as herein set forth, and in favor of the positions then being taken by Governor Ross Barnett and other officials in Mississippi who were seeking to obstruct Meredith's entry as a student at the University of Mississippi.

Notwithstanding such knowledge, the plaintiff by radio and other news media, beginning on or about September 27, 1962, and thereafter, called for Americans 10,000 strong from every State in the Union to go to Mississippi and [fol. 32] rally behind Governor Barnett in his stand against admitting Meredith, saying, among other things, "It is now or never. Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet."

The plaintiff, Edwin A. Walker, further injected himself into the crisis in Mississippi by proceeding to Jackson, Mississippi, on or about September 29, 1962, when he made further press releases and statements, and by then proceeding to Oxford, Miss., where he held a further press conference on September 30, 1962, at all of which he reiterated his previous position.

At about 4:30 P. M. on the afternoon of September 30, 1962, the U. S. Marshals under orders to enforce the judgments, injunctions and mandates of the United States Courts for the enrollment of Meredith as a student at the University of Mississippi, proceeded on to the campus at Oxford, setting up a ring substantially around or in front of the Lyceum Building on the campus. At about the same time, Meredith was escorted to another part of the campus. Immediately after the arrival of the Marshals, students and others began to congregate in the Circle and in the streets adjacent to the Lyceum Building, facing the Marshals, at first taunting them with jeers and remarks, subsequently throwing lighted cigarettes and missiles at the Marshals and at the vehicles in which they arrived. The temper of the crowd became worse and more unruly, and at about 8:00 o'clock P. M. tear gas was fired. Thereafter, the rioting increased by the hour as the night progressed, resulting in injuries to many persons and much property damage to personal property, automobiles and to the campus itself.

While the plaintiff was in Oxford, Mississippi, and on or about September 30, 1962, at about 8:00 P. M., a proclamation was made by the then President of the United States to the effect that the Governor of the State of [fol. 33] Mississippi and certain other officials and other persons had been and were willfully opposing and obstructing the enforcement of the injunctions, orders and judgments of the United States Courts and the President thereupon commanded all persons engaged in such obstruction of court orders to cease and desist and to disperse and retire peaceably forthwith. In addition, the President of the United States made a TV and radio appearance on the same date at about 8:00 o'clock P. M. in which he sought in substance the same compliance with court orders. Notwithstanding said proclamation of the President of the United States and the appeal of the President, the said plaintiff immediately thereafter proceeded to the campus of the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, arriving there at approximately 8:45 P. M. on the night of September 30 and stayed on said campus for a period of several hours thereafter. Following the widespread dissemination of plaintiff Walker's statements in the press, TV and radio, not only in Mississippi but elsewhere, the plaintiff's very presence on the campus tended to increase the emotional excitement, the explosive condition, the courage, fervor and rage of the mob, thereby increasing the dangers and damage from what at first had been a demonstration, to a riot, mob violence, and to more organized and determined attacks upon the U. S. Marshals. At the time of the arrival of the plaintiff on the campus, there had already been violence and injury to persons and property, all of which was known to the plaintiff or should have been known in the exercise of ordinary observation on the campus. On the occasion in question, the plaintiff was welcomed by the crowd as its leader and he then and there made a speech which further excited and enraged the mob and, at least on one occasion, the plaintiff did proceed as a part of a generalized movement towards the Marshals at the Lyceum Building accompanied or followed by a crowd of students [fol. 34] and others shouting and yelling defiance, some of whom when close enough to the Marshals hurled missiles toward them. On many occasions during the night in question, plaintiff would move back and forth through the Circle (an area in the vicinity of and near the front of the Lyceum Building where the Marshals were stationed). He also offered advice on how to make the tear gas bombs ineffective, and otherwise complimented, encouraged and urged on the crowd of rioters to further protest and to keep up what they were doing, all of which resulted in continual opposition to duly constituted governmental and judicial authority including violation of the injunctive decrees heretofore referred to.

Therefore, each and all of the statements complained of by plaintiff herein are fair comment and are privileged.

By way of further answer, defendant, The Associated Press, respectfully shows to the court and the jury that the dispatch to the effect that plaintiff was arrested on four counts insofar as it relates to his arrest was privileged, and the defendant therefore pleads as a defense that it was true and that said publication was a fair and honest report of judicial proceedings and as the act or acts of the arresting officers.

V.

By way of further answer herein and adopting all the allegations heretofore made herein, this defendant, The Associated Press, denies that any malice was involved or intended on the part of this defendant in the publication of any one or all of the articles or dispatches complained of, but was occasioned only by an effort in good faith—actuated solely by a sense of duty growing out of the occasion—to report to its members and to the public what this defendant believed to be an accurate report of the plaintiff's activities in the Mississippi crisis, and to make fair [fol. 35] comment thereon, all of which is privileged.

VI.

By way of further answer herein and adopting all of the allegations heretofore made herein, this defendant denies that it was or is guilty of any conduct which would authorize the allowance of any damages, punitive or otherwise, but would further say that the allowance of any damages herein would amount to a restraint and deterrent to the publication of news and the freedom of the press as required by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. The publications complained of were published and circulated by the defendant among the general public; the information contained therein is true; it concerns the plaintiff, a public figure, and was related to public affairs and matters of great public concern, and the publication was made so that the public should be informed, and the same was made in good faith and without malice, so that the same is privileged. Further, the allowance of any damages under and by virtue of any rule of law as applied by the courts of the State of Texas would be in violation of the foregoing Constitutional safeguards and would be constitutionally deficient for failure to permit freedom of speech and press which are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The allowance of any damages herein also would be violative of the Constitution of the State of Texas which prohibits the abridgment of the freedom of the press in Article I, Paragraph 8 thereof.

VII.

By way of further answer and without waiving any of the foregoing defenses this defendant would respectfully show to the Court that the publications complained of were made in good faith under the belief by the defendant they were true in substance and in fact, and in connection therewith this defendant acted in good faith and was actuated [fol. 36] solely to report to the public with respect to plaintiff's activities in the Mississippi crisis, and for these reasons the plaintiff should not recover any sums by way of damages based thereon.

VIII.

By way of further answer and without waiving any of the foregoing pleas and defenses, this defendant would respectfully show to the Court that the cause of action, if any, as to all matters complained of and Paragraph VI of the Plaintiff's Second Amended Petition arose more than one year prior to the filing thereof, and that each and all of said causes of action or complaints, if any, are barred by the one year statute of limitations, being Article 5524 of the Statutes of the State of Texas.

Wherefore, Premises Considered, this defendant, The Associated Press, prays that plaintiff take nothing by reason of this suit, and that it go hence without day and recover its costs.

PLAINTIFF'S TRIAL AMENDMENT TO PLAINTIFF'S SECOND AMENDED PETITION—Filed June 5, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Now comes Edwin A. Walker, plaintiff in the above styled and numbered cause, and with leave of Court, files this, his trial amendment to his Second Amended Petition herein.

At page 6, Paragraph II, after subparagraph 25, add the following:

Plaintiff states that, of the above language, when taken in proper context with the entire news releases by the defendant, the following specific words are false, defamatory and libelous per se:

From release of October 2, 1962:

"Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus."

From news release of October 2, 1962; subparagraph 4:

"• • • the crowd • • • charged federal marshals." • • •

From page 5:

"The crowd welcomed Walker." • • •

From page 6:

"One unidentified man queried Walker as he approached the group 'General, will you lead us to the steps'".

[File endorsement omitted]

From subparagraph 7:

"I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'Yes' without speaking."

From subparagraph 8:

"Walker assumed command of the crowd, which I estimated at one thousand." • • •

[fol. 38] From subparagraph 9:

"Two men took Walker by the arms and they headed for the Lyceum and the federal marshals." • • •

From subparagraph 10:

"This march toward tear gas and the some two hundred marshals was more effective than the previous attempts." • • •

From subparagraph 11:

"We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet farther when we had to turn back."

Plaintiff alleges that the above statements of fact in defendant's news releases falsely accused plaintiff of crimes under the criminal statutes of the United States of America, and thus constitute libel per se.

DEFENDANT'S MOTION AT CLOSE OF PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE FOR INSTRUCTED VERDICT AND RULING THEREON—June 15, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Comes now the defendant, Associated Press, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence and after the plaintiff has announced that he has rested, and moves the Court to instruct a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and for grounds therefor would show the Court as follows, to-wit:

I.

The alleged libel in this case as set forth under the rulings of the Court with specific certainty and plaintiff's trial amendment to plaintiff's second amended petition is based on excerpts from an article written by Van Savell of the Associated Press on or about October 3, 1962, it being plaintiff's proof that such article was published in the Star-Telegram in Fort Worth, Tarrant County, Texas, on or about such date.

The alleged libelous excerpts from such article are as follows:

> "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus".

With respect to this allegation the defendant would show to the Court that the proof thus far adduced by the plaintiff shows that such a statement is a statement of an occurrence [fol. 40] that occurred on the Ole Miss campus on the night of September 30, 1962. That by plaintiff's own testimony and from the majority of his witnesses there has been absolute testimony to the effect that the plaintiff Walker went towards the Federal Marshals at a stage or stages during the night of September 30, 1962, followed by a considerable number of people varying anywhere from five to one thousand; that therefore the use of the term "charge" as carried in such article and upon which relief is sought is no more than a comment and according to the evidence is a fair comment under the statutes of the state of Texas as to the actions of the plaintiff on that occasion. It is shown by the entire and substantial proof on the part of the plaintiff that an occurrence such as described in said article did occur, and since same is descriptive of the events which occurred on the campus, then same is a comment and not a statement of fact insofar as the word "charge" is concerned, and therefore privileged under the statutes of the state of Texas as a fair comment on the activities of a public figure.

That the evidence shows without any doubt and from all the witnesses who have testified with respect thereto that the plaintiff Walker was a public figure on the occasion in question and enjoyed that title and description on the date and day in question.

II.

That the evidence is without dispute that the subject matter of the riot on the campus of Ole Miss university on September 30, 1962, was in connection with the integration problem which is shown by the evidence to have been a [fol. 41] problem of National import and National interest or perhaps International interest, and therefore the publication as set forth in the Star-Telegram coming from the Associated Press is privileged and is a fair comment on the happenings or actions of a public figure and related to a national problem or a matter of National public interest.

III.

With respect to the allegation number two in plaintiff's trial amendment plaintiff says over United Press wires of October 2, 1962, said paragraph four " • • • • crowd • • • • charged Federal Marshals." With respect thereto the defendant would show to the Court that the evidence so far adduced by the plaintiff, and from plaintiff's witnesses only, show without doubt that a crowd of some character as to numbers did in fact charge the Marshals or charge in the direction of the Marshals on the night in question, reference being specifically made to plaintiff's witnesses: Talmage Witt, also to plaintiff's witness Richard Sweat, General Walker, David Channell, Cecil Holland, Robert Lee Watkins, Alvis McRhea, Harold Schneider, Henry Edwards, Donald Jackson, and Danny Lee Hunter, all of whom testified a crowd in which Walker was a participant, varying in size, made some character of movement toward the Marshals on the night in question after the entry on to the campus by General Walker and after he had conferred with a number of the students on the campus. As a matter of fact at least 15 of the witnesses have testified thus far that they were in the crowd that went with Walker toward the flag pole even though some of them have testified that only four or five or six were in the group.

[fol. 42] IV.

With respect to the next allegation on the part of the plaintiff as to a libelous article, he has alleged as follows from page 5: "The group welcomed Walker".

This is a comment, a fair comment, based on the testimony of all the witnesses in this case and constitutes an interpolation of the scrivener as to his interpretation of the actions of the crowd in connection with the welcoming of General Walker. It is further shown that on the occasion in question a group of considerable size, varying according to the testimony from 100 to 1,000 or more, crowded around General Walker at the time he entered the campus shouting such things as "Here's General Walker; here comes General Walker; here is our leader, Lead us, lead us; here is our leader", being excerpts from the testimony thus far adduced from plaintiff's witnesses as well as from the plaintiff himself.

V.

Plaintiff alleges as a part of the alleged libel; "One identified man queried Walker as he approached the crowd 'General, will you lead us up the steps'"?

The testimony is undisputed that this crowd—as a matter of fact the plaintiff himself testified that that was said to him at some time shortly after he arrived on the campus, and therefore has been conceded to be true on the part of the plaintiff.

VI.

The plaintiff has pled an excerpt from sub-paragraph 7 as follows: "I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'yes' without speaking".

[fol. 43] With respect thereto defendant would show that the evidence shows that such an incident did occur, perhaps not in that context in which it was used, but could be nothing more than an expression or an opinion or a comment or an interpretation wherein the scrivener said that he nodded "yes" without speaking, such being an interpretation of an event through the eyes of the person who was writing the article.

VII.

The next article claimed to be libelous per se on the part of the plaintiff is from sub-paragraph 8, which reads as follows: "Walker assumed command of the crowd which I estimated at 1,000".

The defendant would show to the Court that this is no more than an estimate or an opinion on the part of the scrivener and has been confirmed by at least four of plaintiff's witnesses with respect to the numbers, and so far as the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd", same is but a comment and an opinion on the part of the scrivener, privileged under the laws of the state of Texas as being a comment with respect to a public figure concerning a public matter.

VIII.

Plaintiff has alleged as a part of the libel: "Two men took Walker by the Arms and they headed for the Lyceum building and the Federal Marshals".

With respect thereto defendant would show the Court that under no circumstances could any matter such as that be the subject of a libel. It does not charge any act that would be unlawful nor any other matter which could have any effect other than be distasteful to one who does not [fol. 44] wish to be taken by the arms, and for that matter it is shown by at least one of plaintiff's witnesses that Walker at one time was taken by the arms when he was walking in the direction of the Lyceum building.

IX.

The next statement alleged by plaintiff to be libelous is as follows: "This march towards tear gas and the some 200 Marshals was more effective than the previous attempts".

With respect thereto defendant would show to the Court same could not be classed as anything other than a comment and is therefore privileged under the laws and statutes of the state of Texas in that same had to do with a public figure concerning a matter of public interest to the general public.

X.

Plaintiff alleges as a part of the alleged libel: "We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet farther when we had to turn back".

For the reason that such statement does not constitute any libel with respect to the plaintiff in this case, as being a comment from one who is alleged to have been present, and is a comment and a statement from the writer as to what his view of the situation was at the time in question.

XI.

For the further reason that since it has been shown by the testimony in this case that the article written by Van Savell and upon which this alleged libel is based is privileged under the laws of the state of Texas for the reasons set forth herein, and since no malice has either been shown or attempted to be shown and in fact no evidence whatsoever of malice having been introduced, the Court should [fol. 45] instruct a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff.

XIII.

In the alternative the defendant would further show to the Court that the matters complained of here, after the amendment of the Texas statutes, are absolutely privileged and certainly in the absence of actual malice constitute no grounds for a cause of action. Also malice under Texas law cannot be inferred from the articles themselves since they relate to fair comment according to all of the evidence.

Respectfully submitted,

DEFENDANT'S MOTION AT CLOSE OF ALL EVIDENCE FOR INSTRUCTED VERDICT AND RULING THEREON—June 18, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Comes now the defendant, Associated Press, after both the plaintiff and defendant had rested, and moves the Court to instruct a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff, and for grounds therefor would show the Court as follows, to-wit:

I.

The alleged libel in this case as set forth under the rulings of the Court with specific certainty and plaintiff's trial amendment to plaintiff's second amended petition is based on excerpts from an article written by Van Savell of the Associated Press on or about October 3, 1962, it being plaintiff's proof that such article was published in the Star-Telegram in Fort Worth, Tarrant County, Texas, on or about such date.

The alleged libelous excerpts from such article are as follows:

> "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal Marshals on the Ole Miss campus".

With respect to this allegation the defendant would show to the Court that the proof thus far adduced by the plaintiff shows that such a statement is a statement of an occurrence [fol. 48] that occurred on the Ole Miss campus on the night of September 30, 1962. That by plaintiff's own testimony and from the majority of his witnesses there has been absolute testimony to the effect that the plaintiff Walker went towards the Federal Marshals at a stage or stages during the night of September 30, 1962, followed by a considerable number of people varying anywhere from five to one thousand; that therefore the use of the term "charge" as carried in such article and upon which relief is sought is no more than a comment and according to the evidence is a fair comment under the statutes of the state of Texas as to the actions of the plaintiff on that occasion. It is shown by the entire and substantial proof on the part of the plaintiff that an occurrence such as described in said article did occur, and since same is descriptive of the events which occurred on the campus, then same is a comment and not a statement of fact insofar as the word "charge" is concerned, and therefore privileged under the statutes of the state of Texas as a fair comment on the activities of a public figure.

That the evidence shows without any doubt and from all the witnesses who have testified with respect thereto that the plaintiff Walker was a public figure on the occasion in question and enjoyed that title and description on the date and day in question.

II.

That the evidence is without dispute that the subject matter of the riot on the campus of Ole Miss university on September 30, 1962, was in connection with the integration problem which is shown by the evidence to have been a [fol. 49] problem of National import and National interest or perhaps International interest, and therefore the publication as set forth in the Star-Telegram coming from the Associated Press is privileged and is a fair comment on the happenings or actions of a public figure and related to a national problem or a matter of National public interest.

III.

With respect to the allegation number two in plaintiff's trial amendment plaintiff says over United Press wires of October 2, 1962, said paragraph four "• • • • • crowd • • • • charged Federal Marshals." With respect thereto the defendant would show to the Court that the evidence so far adduced by the plaintiff, and from plaintiff's witnesses only, show without doubt that a crowd of some character as to numbers did in fact charge the Marshals or charge in the direction of the Marshals on the night in question, reference being specifically made to plaintiff's witnesses: Talmage Witt, also to plaintiff's witness Richard Sweat, General Walker, David Channell, Cecil Holland, Robert Lee Watkins, Alvis McRhea, Harold Schneider, Henry Edwards, Donald Jackson, and Danny Lee Hunter, all of whom testified a crowd in which Walker was a participant, varying in size, made some character of movement toward the Marshals on the night in question after the entry on to the campus by General Walker and after he had conferred with a number of the students on the campus. As a matter of fact at least 15 of the witnesses have testified thus far that they were in the crowd that went with Walker toward the flag pole even though some of them have testified that only four or five or six were in the group.

[fol. 50] IV.

With respect to the next allegation on the part of the plaintiff as to a libelous article, he has alleged as follows from page 5: "The group welcomed Walker".

This is a comment, a fair comment, based on the testimony of all the witnesses in this case and constitutes an interpolation of the scrivener as to his interpretation of the actions of the crowd in connection with the welcoming of General Walker. It is further shown that on the occasion in question a group of considerable size, varying according to the testimony from 100 to 1,000 or more, crowded around General Walker at the time he entered the campus shouting such things as "Here's General Walker; here comes General Walker; here is our leader. Lead us, lead us; here is our leader", being excerpts from the testimony thus far adduced from plaintiff's witnesses as well as from the plaintiff himself.

V.

Plaintiff alleges as a part of the alleged libel: "One identified man queried Walker as he approached the crowd 'General, will you lead us up the steps'."

The testimony is undisputed that this crowd—as a matter of fact the plaintiff himself testified that that was said to him at some time shortly after he arrived on the campus, and therefore has been conceded to be true on the part of the plaintiff.

VI.

The plaintiff has pled an excerpt from sub-paragraph 7 as follows: "I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'yes' without speaking".

[fol. 51] With respect thereto defendant would show that the evidence shows that such an incident did occur, perhaps not in that context in which it was used, but could be nothing more than an expression or an opinion or a comment or an interpretation wherein the scrivener said that he nodded 'yes' without speaking, such being an interpretation of an event through the eyes of the person who was writing the article.

VII.

The next article claimed to be libelous per se on the part of the plaintiff is from sub-paragraph 8, which reads as follows: "Walker assumed command of the crowd which I estimated at 1,000".

The defendant would show to the Court that this is no more than an estimate or an opinion on the part of the scrivener and has been confirmed by at least four of plaintiff's witnesses with respect to the numbers, and so far as the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd", same is but a comment and an opinion on the part of the scrivener, privileged under the laws of the state of Texas as being a comment with respect to a public figure concerning a public matter.

VIII.

Plaintiff has alleged as a part of the libel: "Two men took Walker by the Arms and they headed for the Lyceum building and the Federal Marshals".

With respect thereto defendant would show the Court that under no circumstances could any matter such as that be the subject of a libel. It does not charge any act that would be unlawful nor any other matter which could have any effect other than be distasteful to one who does not wish to be [fol. 52] taken by the arms, and for that matter it is shown by at least one of plaintiff's witnesses that Walker at one time was taken by the arms when he was walking in the direction of the Lyceum building.

IX.

The next statement alleged by plaintiff to be libelous is as follows: "This march towards tear gas and the some 200 Marshals was more effective than the previous attempts".

With respect thereto defendant would show to the Court same could not be classed as anything other than a comment and is therefore privileged under the laws and statutes of the state of Texas in that same had to do with a public figure concerning a matter of public interest to the general public.

X.

Plaintiff alleges as a part of the alleged libel: "We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet farther when we had to turn back".

For the reason that such statement does not constitute any libel with respect to the plaintiff in this case, as being a comment from one who is alleged to have been present, and is a comment and a statement from the writer as to what his view of the situation was at the time in question.

XI.

For the further reason that since it has been shown by the testimony in this case that the article written by Van Savell and upon which this alleged libel is based is privileged under the laws of the state of Texas for the reasons set forth herein, and since no malice has either been shown or attempted to be shown and in fact no evidence whatsoever of malice having been introduced, the Court [fol. 53] should instruct a verdict in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff.

XII.

In the alternative the defendant would further show to the Court that the matters complained of here, after the amendment of the Texas statutes, are absolutely privileged and certainly in the absence of actual malice constitute no grounds for a cause of action. Also malice under Texas law cannot be inferred from the articles themselves since they relate to fair comment according to all of the evidence.

DEFENDANT'S OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS TO THE COURT'S MAIN CHARGE AND RULING THEREON—June 18, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Comes now the defendant, Associated Press, after the preparation of the Court's main charge to the jury, and within a reasonable time prior to the submission of the same to the jury, and makes and takes the following objections and exceptions thereto:

I.

Defendant objects and excepts to the Court's definition of "fair comment" for the reason that same should contain the statutory language "concern published for general information", which said language should be included after the words "General public interest".

II.

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 1 for the reason that the statement inquired about is a comment rather than a fact as a matter of law, and as submitted is a comment on the weight of the evidence and infers that said activity was libelous per se rather than submitting the same to the jury to so determine.

III.

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 4 and the definition thereof for each and all of the following [fol. 55] reasons:

(a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(c) Neither the issue nor the definition informs the jury that malice cannot be inferred from the publication itself, which is a necessary element of such definition or instruction;

(d) Such issue as submitted does not limit the jury to malice which may have existed at the time of the making of the publications sued upon.

IV.

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 5 for the reason that the statement inquired about is a comment rather than a fact as a matter of law, and as submitted is a comment on the weight of the evidence and infers that said activity was libelous per se rather than submitting the same to the jury to so determine.

V.

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 8 and the definition thereof for each and all of the following reasons:

(a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(c) Neither the issue nor the definition informs the jury that malice cannot be inferred from the publication itself, [fol. 56] which is a necessary element of such definition or instruction;

(d) Such issue as submitted does not limit the jury to malice which may have existed at the time of the making of the publications sued upon.

VI.

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 9 on damages for the following reasons:

(a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such an issue;

(b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of said issue;

(c) The issue as submitted and the instructions in connection therewith would permit the jury to award damages resulting from statements found by the jury to be fair comment and found by the jury to have been made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public, and said issue should be corrected so as to instruct the jury that no damages can be awarded for statements that are fair comment or made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant has a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

VII.

Defendant objects and excepts to the submission of special issue No. 10 on exemplary damages because there is no evidence or insufficient evidence to support a finding of exemplary damages.

[fol. 57]

VIII.

Defendant specially objects and excepts to the submission of special issue No. 11 on exemplary damages because there is no evidence or insufficient evidence that plaintiff is entitled to exemplary damages.

IX.

Defendant objects and excepts to the Court's charge as a whole because the same is tantamount to instructing the jury that the statements quoted in special issues Nos. 1 and 5 are libelous or are libelous per se, and said charge does not contain any issues with the burden of proof upon the plaintiff inquiring in substance whether either or both of said statements were in fact libelous or libelous per se or would have been understood by an average reader to be libelous, with appropriate definitions and instructions with respect to the meaning of the term libelous.

Respectfully submitted,

Cantey, Hanger, Gooch, Cravens & Scarborough, By Sloan B. Blair.

No. 31,741-C

CHARGE OF THE COURT—Filed June 18, 1964

Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury:

This case is submitted to you in the form of questions which are called special issues. You are to answer these questions by unanimous consent.

Do not let bias, prejudice, sympathy, resentment, or any other such emotion play any part in your deliberations.

[File endorsement omitted]

During your deliberations be careful not to mention or discuss any personal knowledge you may have about the facts in the case. Your duty is to answer these questions from the evidence you have heard in this trial and from that alone.

Do not speculate on matters not shown by the evidence, and about which you are not asked any questions. Remember that you cannot guess your way to a just and correct verdict.

Do not return a quotient verdict, by adding together figures, dividing by the number of jurors, and agreeing to be bound by the result.

Do not do any trading on your answers—that is, some of you agreeing to answer certain questions one way if others will agree to answer other questions another way.

Do not decide who you think should win and then try to answer the questions accordingly. If you do this your verdict will be worthless.

You are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, but in matters of law you must be governed by the instructions in this charge.

The following definitions are given you by the Court. Whenever any of the terms so defined are used in any of the special issues, you will refer to the appropriate definition and be guided thereby in considering your answer:

By the term Preponderance of the Evidence is meant the greater weight and degree of the credible evidence before you.

[fol. 59] Definitions

In answer to Special Issue No. 1 you are instructed that by the term "led" is meant activities by a person who directs, moves to action, or encourages in some action or movement, and that by the term "charge" is meant a movement toward the marshals, or a group or body of people moving toward an objective.

In answering the issues in this charge in which the term "substantially true" is used, you are instructed that in order for a statement to be "substantially true" it is not necessary that the exact facts or the most minute details of the plaintiff's activities be completely accurate. Mere inaccuracies not affecting the substance of the report of plaintiff's activities are immaterial. You are further instructed that in answering special issues in which the term "substantially true" is used that the publication must be considered as a whole, giving to all the words contained therein (except those hereinabove defined for you) their ordinary meaning as read and understood by the average reader.

In answering the issues in these instructions in which the term "fair comment" is used, you are instructed that the interest of the public requires that all acts and matters of a public nature, and of public concern published for general information may be freely published and discussed with reasonable comments thereon. You are further instructed that by said term is meant a statement which represents the honest opinion of the writer and constitutes reasonable inferences to be drawn from the attendant facts and circumstances whether literally true or not, or whether all reasonable persons would agree with the opinions or conclusions based thereon.

In connection with the above issue, you are instructed that by the term "malice" is meant ill will, bad or evil motive, or that entire want of care which would raise the belief that the act or omission complained of was the result of a conscious indifference to the right or welfare of the person to be affected by it.

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: Yes

Special Issue No. 5:

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: No

Special Issue No. 7:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement inquired about in special issue No. 5 was made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public?

In connection with this issue you are instructed that you may only award damages, if any, for statements inquired about herein which you have found to be false.

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISREGARD THE JURY'S VERDICT AND FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING SAID VERDICT—Filed June 29, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Now comes the defendant, Associated Press, and moves the Court to set aside and disregard the verdict of the jury and each and every finding therein, and to render judgment for the defendant and against the plaintiff notwithstanding such verdict, and as grounds therefor would respectfully show as follows:

1.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 1 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus" was substantially true.

2.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 2 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph, and in said Special Issue No. 2, constituted a fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information concerning the plaintiff's activities at the time and place involved.

[File endorsement omitted]

[fol. 64]

3.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 3 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement inquired about therein, as quoted in paragraph 1 of this motion, was made by the defendant in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

4.

The jury's affirmative answer to Special Issue No. 4 on malice should be set aside and disregarded because there is no evidence of any malice on the part of this defendant in publishing the statement referred to in said Special Issue No. 4.

5.

Since the statement "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus" constituted as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information, such statement was and is absolutely privileged under the provisions of Article 5432 of the Texas Statutes; or, in the alternative, said statement was qualifiedly privileged under the provisions of said Statute, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

Since the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph was as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, made in good faith by the defendant in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public, such statement was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

[fol. 65]

7.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 5 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" was substantially true.

8.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 6 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph, and in said Special Issue No. 6, constituted a fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information concerning the plaintiff's activities at the time and place involved.

9.

The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 7 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement inquired about therein, as quoted in paragraph 7 of this motion, was made by the defendant in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

10.

The jury's affirmative answer to Special Issue No. 8 on malice should be set aside and disregarded because there is no evidence of any malice on the part of this defendant in publishing the statement referred to in said Special Issue No. 8.

11.

Since the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" constituted as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information, such statement was and is absolutely privileged under the provisions of Article 5432 of the Texas Statutes; or, in the alternative, said statement was qualifiedly privileged under the provisions [fol. 66] of said Statute, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

12.

Since the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph was as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, made in good faith by the defendant in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public, such statement was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

13.

There is no evidence whatever of damages, and therefore the jury's answer to Special Issue No. 9 has no support in the evidence, and said answer should be set aside and disregarded.

14.

There is no evidence to support the jury's answer to Special Issue No. 10 on exemplary damages, and said answer should therefore be disregarded and set aside.

15.

There is no evidence to support the jury's answer to Special Issue No. 11 on exemplary damages, and said answer should therefore be disregarded.

16.

Notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the Court should render judgment for the defendant because any judgment awarding money damages to plaintiff against defendant would constitute a restraint and deterrent to the publication of news and a restraint, deterrent and denial of the freedom of the press as guaranteed to defendant by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America.

Notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the Court should render judgment for the defendant because any judgment awarding money damages to plaintiff against defendant would constitute a restraint and deterrent to the publication of news and a restraint, deterrent and denial of the freedom of the press as guaranteed to defendant by Article 1, Paragraph 8, of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

Wherefore, defendant Associated Press respectfully prays that the Court set aside and disregard the verdict of the jury and each and every finding therein, and that judgment be here rendered notwithstanding said verdict, that plaintiff take nothing by his suit, and that defendant go hence with its costs without day; and defendant prays for such further and additional relief, at law and in equity, to which it may be entitled.

Gentlemen:

I am entering judgment for the plaintiff on the jury verdict as to special issues one, two, three, five, six, seven and nine, and judgment for the defendant as to issues four, eight, ten and eleven.

At the time the charge to the jury was being prepared, you will recall I expressed the opinion that the alleged libelous statements contained in special issues one and five were statements of fact and not opinion, and, at least as to the statement set out in issue number one, was a charge of a commission of a crime. I submitted the defense of truth as to the statements, and the jury found that they were not substantially true. I believe there is evidence to support these findings. I now have some doubt as to whether I should have submitted the statement,

"Walker assumed command of the crowd," because it does not accuse Walker of the commission of a crime. However, in view of my decision as to special issue number one, this is immaterial.

I submitted issues as to fair comment and good faith (despite my then expressed opinion that they did not constitute defenses to a statement of fact charging the plaintiff with commission of a crime) so as to get jury findings and thus avoid a new trial in the event an appellate court disagreed with my conclusions. Since the jury answered issues two, three, six and seven as they did, I concur with these answers as a matter of law.

[fol. 67-B] Turning now to issues four, eight, ten and eleven, I find there is no evidence to support the jury's answers that there was actual malice by Associated Press in publishing the stories of October 2 and 3, 1962. As you will recall, I also expressed doubt when the charge was being prepared as to whether I should even submit malice and did so only to get a jury finding as I did on the defendant's claimed defenses of fair comment and good faith.

Under Texas Law, the news stories complained of are not of themselves evidence of malice without further proof. Plaintiff claims that malice is shown by the failure of the Associated Press to check the story written by its young reporter, Van Savell, because there was a conflict between the story as written, and as related by Savell to Thomas, an AP employee in its Atlanta office. This alleged conflict related only to whether General Walker led a charge against the federal marshals before rather than after his speech to the students on the Confederate Monument. I fail to ascertain how the failure to check such a minor discrepancy could be construed as that entire want of care which would amount to a conscious indifference to the rights of plaintiff. Negligence, it may have been; malice, it was not. Moreover, the mere fact that AP permitted a young reporter to cover the story of the riot is not evidence of malice. Wisdom and good judgment do not necessarily come with age, nor are they necessarily denied youth. In my opinion New York Times vs. Sullivan, 11 L. ed. 2nd 686; Wortham-Carter Publishing Company vs. Littlepage, 223 SW 1043 and Fitzgarrald vs. Panhandle Publishing Company, 228 SW 2nd 499, support these conclusions.

Plaintiff's urge that this case is comparable to United Press International, Inc. vs. Mohs (Eastland Court of Civil Appeals—unreported) decided on June 26, 1964. I do not agree. In the UPI case, Miller, the night editor of UPI, knew that another story had been written at and sent from his UPI office the same night as the second story found to be libelous. The first story contained no statement that Mohs had been ordered arrested and handcuffed; that Mohs had been caught lying or that he had been charged with any offense for landing his plane on White Rock Lake in Dallas. Between the time this first story was written and sent from UPI's office, someone in this office called the police headquarters and learned that as far as the police knew, Mohs had not been charged with any [fol. 67-C] offense. Miller himself, nor anyone in his office, made any attempt to verify the facts of the landing on the lake, other than the call to police headquarters, yet Miller then distributed the second story which said that Mohs had been arrested, handcuffed and charged with violation of a city ordinance for landing on the lake. None of this was true. This second story was based on information received from one DeHarrow. Miller knew the story (the first one) previously written in his office was materially different from the story related by DeHarrow (the second story). He had many reasons to question the truth of the story attributed to DeHarrow, but made no attempt to check it. The Eastland Court found that these facts raised jury issues "as to whether there was such a want of care as could raise the belief that his acts (and thus the acts of UPI) were the result of a conscious indifference to the rights of Mohs."

As I have stated above, in the Walker case the only discrepancy was whether Walker led a charge before or after his speech on the monument, and not whether he did or did not lead a charge at all. This evidence falls short of that set out in the UPI vs. Mohs opinion.

Since I have determined that there is no actual malice in this case, the question arises as to whether the rule of New York Times vs. Sullivan (which prohibits a public official recovering damages for libel when there is no actual malice) should apply to a public figure such as plaintiff. If it does, then the entire jury verdict must be set aside, and judgment entered for defendant.

The evidence is undisputed that General Walker was a public figure at the time of the riot on the Old Miss Campus.

Freedom of the press is perhaps the most important protection against tyranny that we find in a free society. Without it, the public could not know whether one's right to speak, to worship his creator as he chooses or to enjoy a fair trial had been abridged. Americans everywhere depend on news media of all types to provide accurate information on the daily affairs of men and nations. This imposes a great duty and responsibility on the news gathering and distributing agencies of this country, and they should be protected to the extent necessary for them to properly function.

[fol. 67-D] However, I see no compelling reasons of public policy requiring additional defenses to suits for libel. Truth alone should be an adequate defense. The Sullivan case is limited, and I feel it should be limited, in its application to public officials. It does not apply to this case.

Jury findings as to issues four, eight, ten and eleven are set aside, and judgment will be entered for the plaintiff in the amount of $500,000.00 and costs.

Very truly yours,

On 8 June 1964 came on regularly to be heard the above numbered and entitled cause, wherein Edwin A. Walker is plaintiff and The Associated Press is defendant, the defendants Amon G. Carter, Jr., and Carter Publications, Inc., having theretofore been dismissed by the plaintiff, and all parties appeared by counsel and announced ready for trial, and thereupon came a jury of twelve good and lawful jurors who, being duly empanelled and sworn, did on 19 June 1964 return the following answers to the issues submitted:

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Special Issue No. 2:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss Campus", complained of by plaintiff, constitutes fair comment describing the plaintiff's activities on or about September 30, 1962, at the places described in the evidence and under the then attendant circumstances?

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: No

[fol. 69] Special Issue No. 3:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement inquired about in special issue No. 1 was made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public?

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: No

Special Issue No. 4:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that in publishing the statement set forth in special issue No. 1 the defendant, Associated Press, was actuated by malice as that term is hereinafter defined.

In connection with the above issue, you are instructed that by the term "malice" is meant ill will, bad or evil motive, or that entire want of care which would raise the belief that the act or omission complained of was the result of a conscious indifference to the right or welfare of the person to be affected by it.

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: Yes

Special Issue No. 5:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" was substantially true?

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Special Issue No. 6:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" complained of by plaintiff, constitutes fair comment describing plaintiff's activities on or about September 30, 1962, at the places described in the evidence and under the then attendant circumstances?

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: No

Special Issue No. 7:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the statement inquired about in special issue No. 5 was made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public?

Answer "Yes" or "No".

[fol. 70] Special Issue No. 8:

Question: Do you find from a preponderance of the evidence that in publishing the statement set forth in special issue No. 5 the defendant, Associated Press, was actuated by malice as that term is hereinafter defined?

In connection with the above issue, you are instructed that by the term "malice" is meant ill will, bad or evil motive, or that entire want of care which would raise the belief that the act or omission complained of was the result of a conscious indifference to the right or welfare of the person to be affected by it.

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: Yes

Special Issue No. 9:

Question: If you have answered either special issue No. 1 or special issue No. 5 "No", then answer:

What sum of money, if paid now in cash, do you find from a preponderance of the evidence would fairly and reasonably compensate the plaintiff for the damages, if any, sustained by him as a direct and proximate result of the statements inquired about in special issues Nos. 1 and 5?

In connection with this issue you are instructed that you may only award damages, if any, for statements, if any, inquired about herein which you have found to be false.

In connection with the foregoing issue you are instructed that you may take into consideration such damages, if any, to the reputation of the plaintiff and such mental anguish, if any, and humiliation, if any, and embarrassment, if any, which plaintiff may have sustained directly and proximately solely as a result of the statements hereinabove set forth, if you have found the same to be false.

In connection with the above issue you are instructed that the term "Exemplary damages" as used herein means a sum of money awarded as a punishment for any malice, if any, you have found to exist in this case. "Exemplary damages", if any are allowed, are to be no part of the damages which may be allowed as compensation (if compensation has been allowed) but only in the nature of a penalty allowed by law at your discretion, and any amount which [fol. 71] you find hereunder, if you see fit to make such a finding, should be reasonably proportionate to the actual damages, if any, you may allow plaintiff herein.

Answer "Yes" or "No".

Answer: Yes

Special Issue No. 11:

If you have answered the above special issue No. 10 "Yes", and only in that event, then answer:

Question: From a preponderance of the evidence, what amount of money, if any, do you find should be awarded to plaintiff as exemplary damages?

Answer in dollars and cents, if any.

Answer: $300,000.00

which said verdict was duly received by the Court and ordered filed; and the plaintiff filed a motion for judgment upon said verdict, and the defendant filed a motion to disregard the jury's verdict on each issue and for judgment notwithstanding said verdict, and after a hearing upon said motions and after considering the oral and written argument of the parties, the Court is of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon the verdict of the jury in response to Special Issues Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 9, but that there is no evidence to support the jury's answers to Special Issues Nos. 4, 8, 10, and 11, and that the motions of each of the parties should be granted partially as above set forth;

It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff Edwin A. Walker do have and recover of and from the defendant The Associated Press the sum of $500,000.00, with interest at the rate of 6% per annum from this date until paid;

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the original defendants Amon G. Carter, Jr., and Carter Publications, Inc., owner, operator, and licensee of Radio Broad-
[fol. 72] casting Stations WBAP-AM and WBAP-FM, and Television Station WBAP-TV, and The Fort Worth Star Telegram, be and they are hereby dismissed from this cause upon the motion of the plaintiff; and

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that all of the costs hereof be taxed against the defendant The Associated Press, for all of which judgment let all proper process issue.

Both parties excepted to adverse rulings.

DEFENDANT'S ORIGINAL MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—Filed August 12, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Now comes the defendant Associated Press, after entry of judgment herein on August 3, 1964, and makes and files this its Original Motion for New Trial, and moves the Court to set aside the judgment heretofore rendered against it and to grant a new trial herein, upon the following grounds, to-wit:

1.

The Court erred in overruling the motion for instructed verdict made by defendant after plaintiff had rested.

2.

The Court erred in overruling the motion for instructed verdict made by defendant after both sides had rested.

[File endorsement omitted]

3.

4.

The Court erred in overruling defendant's exceptions and objections to the Court's main charge.

5.

The Court erred in rendering judgment for plaintiff and against defendant for each and all of the following reasons:

[fol. 74] (a) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 1 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(b) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 2 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(c) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 3 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(d) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 4 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(e) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 6 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(f) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 7 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(g) The jury's answer to Special Issue No. 9 on damages is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(h) The amount of damages found by the jury in answer to Special Issue No. 9, to-wit, the sum of $500,000.00, is so grossly excessive as to be manifestly wrong and unjust and to show that the jury disregarded the evidence, and was in-
[fol. 75] fluenced by passion, prejudice, or other improper motive.

Wherefore, defendant Associated Press prays that said judgment be set aside, and that defendant be granted a new trial herein.

DEFENDANT'S AMENDED MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—
Filed August 31, 1964

To the Honorable Judge of Said Court:

Now comes defendant, The Associated Press, and with leave of the Court first had and obtained makes and files this its Amended Motion for New Trial, and would respectfully show as follows:

I.

The Court erred in overruling Grounds 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16 and 17 of Defendant's Motion to Disregard the Jury's Verdict and for Judgment Notwithstanding such Verdict, for each and all of the reasons therein set forth, which said Grounds read as follows:

(1) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 1 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus" was substantially true.

(2) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 2 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph, and in said Special Issue No. 2, constituted a fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information concerning the plaintiff's activities at the time and place involved.

(3) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 3 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement inquired about therein, as quoted in paragraph 1 of this motion, was made by the defendant in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

[fol. 79] (5) Since the statement "Walker, who Sunday led a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus" constituted as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information, such statement was and is absolutely privileged under the provisions of Article 5432 of the Texas Statutes; or, in the alternative, said statement was qualifiedly privileged under the provisions of said Statute, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

(6) Since the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph was as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, made in good faith by the defendant in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public, such statement was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

(7) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 5 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" was substantially true.

(8) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 6 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph, and in said Special Issue No. 6, constituted a fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information concerning the plaintiff's activities at the time and place involved.

(9) The jury's negative finding in response to Special Issue No. 7 should be set aside and disregarded because the evidence conclusively established as a matter of law that the statement inquired about therein, as quoted in paragraph 7 of this motion, was made by the defendant in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

(11) Since the statement "Walker assumed command of the crowd" constituted as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, fair comment about a matter of public concern published for general information, such statement was and is absolutely privileged under the provisions of Article 5432 of the Texas Statutes; or, in the alternative, said statement was qualifiedly privileged under the provisions of said Statute, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

(12) Since the statement quoted in the preceding paragraph was as a matter of law, under all of the evidence, made in good faith by the defendant in reference to a matter in which the defendant had a duty to report to its members and thence to the public, such [fol. 80] statement was privileged, and, there being no evidence of malice, judgment should be rendered for defendant and against the plaintiff.

(13) There is no evidence whatever of damages, and therefore the jury's answer to Special Issue No. 9 has no support in the evidence, and said answer should be set aside and disregarded.

(16) Notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the Court should render judgment for the defendant because any judgment awarding money damages to plaintiff against defendant would constitute a restraint and deterrent to the publication of news and a restraint, deterrent and denial of the freedom of the press as guaranteed to defendant by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America.

(17) Notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the Court should render judgment for the defendant because any judgment awarding money damages to plaintiff against defendant would constitute a restraint and deterrent to the publication of news and a restraint, deterrent and denial of the freedom of the press as guaranteed to defendant by Article 1, Paragraph 8, of the Constitution of the State of Texas.

And defendant here renews and again urges each of the foregoing Grounds.

II.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Second Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 1 for the reason that the statement inquired about is a comment rather than a fact as a matter of law, and as submitted is a comment on the weight of the evidence and infers that said activity was libelous per se rather than submitting the same to the jury to so determine.

III.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Third Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

> Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 4 and the definition thereof for each and all of the following reasons:
> (a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such issue;
> [fol. 81] (b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of such issue;
> (c) Neither the issue nor the definition informs the jury that malice cannot be inferred from the publication itself, which is a necessary element of such definition or instruction;
> (d) Such issue as submitted does not limit the jury to malice which may have existed at the time of the making of the publications sued upon.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Fourth Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

> Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 5 for the reason that the statement inquired about is a comment rather than a fact as a matter of law, and as submitted is a comment on the weight of the evidence and infers that said activity was libelous per se rather than submitting the same to the jury to so determine.

V.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Fifth Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 8 and the definition thereof for each and all of the following reasons:

(a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of such issue;

(c) Neither the issue nor the definition informs the jury that malice cannot be inferred from the publication itself, which is a necessary element of such definition or instruction;

(d) Such issue as submitted does not limit the jury to malice which may have existed at the time of the making of the publications sued upon.

VI.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Sixth Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

[fol. 82] Defendant objects and excepts to special issue No. 9 on damages for the following reasons:

(a) There is no evidence to support the submission of such an issue;

(b) There is insufficient evidence to support the submission of said issue;

or made in good faith in reference to a matter in which the defendant has a duty to report to its members and thence to the public.

VII.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Seventh Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

> Defendant objects and excepts to the submission of special issue No. 10 on exemplary damages because there is no evidence or insufficient evidence to support a finding of exemplary damages.

VIII.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Eighth Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

> Defendant specially objects and excepts to the submission of special issue No. 11 on exemplary damages because there is no evidence or insufficient evidence that plaintiff is entitled to exemplary damages.

IX.

The Court erred in overruling Defendant's Ninth Objection to the Court's Charge and each and every ground thereof, which reads as follows:

> Defendant objects and excepts to the Court's charge as a whole because the same is tantamount to instructing the jury that the statements quoted in special is-[fol. 83] sues Nos. 1 and 5 are libelous or are libelous per se, and said charge does not contain any issues with the burden of proof upon the plaintiff inquiring in substance whether either or both of said statements were in fact libelous or libelous per se or would have been understood by an average reader to be libelous, with appropriate definitions and instructions with respect to the meaning of the term libelous.

X.

The Court erred in rendering judgment for the plaintiff and against defendant for each and all of the following reasons:

(a) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 1 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(b) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 2 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(c) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 3 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(d) The jury's affirmative answer to Special Issue No. 4 on malice is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(e) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 5 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(f) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 6 is so against the great weight and preponderance of [fol. 84] the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(g) The jury's negative answer to Special Issue No. 7 is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(h) The jury's affirmative answer to Special Issue No. 8 on malice is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(i) The jury's answer to Special Issue No. 9 on damages is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(j) The amount of damages found by the jury in answer to Special Issue No. 9, to-wit, the sum of $500,000.00, is so grossly excessive as to be manifestly wrong and unjust and to show that the jury disregarded the evidence, and was influenced by passion, prejudice, or other improper motive;

(k) The jury's affirmative answer to Special Issue No. 10 on exemplary damages is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer;

(l) The jury's answer to Special Issue No. 11 on exemplary damages is so against the great weight and preponderance of the evidence as to be manifestly [fol. 85] wrong and unjust, and there is insufficient evidence to support such answer.

(m) The amount of damages found by the jury in answer to Special Issue No. 11 on exemplary damages, to-wit, the sum of $300,000.00, is so grossly excessive as to be manifestly wrong and unjust and to show that the jury disregarded the evidence and was influenced by passion, prejudice or other improper motives.

XI.

The Court erred in permitting the plaintiff Edwin A. Walker, over defendant's objection, to testify that he did not lead a charge of students against Federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus, because such testimony was an incompetent and inadmissible conclusion on the part of such witness and invaded the province of the jury.

XII.

The Court erred in permitting the plaintiff Edwin A. Walker, over defendant's objection, to testify that he did not assume command of the crowd, because such testimony was an incompetent and inadmissible conclusion on the part of such witness and invaded the province of the jury.

XIII.

In permitting the plaintiff Edwin A. Walker, over defendant's objection, to testify that he did not lead a charge of students against federal marshals on the Ole Miss campus, and that he did not assume command of the crowd, the Court further erred by stating in the presence and hearing of the jury that the Court would permit plaintiff to so testify, after the Court had excluded such testimony by other witnesses, in that such statement by the Court amounted to a comment upon the weight of the evidence and inferred to the jury that the Court believed the plain[fol. 86] tiff's testimony upon such subjects to be more credible than the excluded testimony of other witnesses with respect thereto, and such statement by the Court further indicated to the jury that in determining whether the statements by defendant were substantially true, or were fair comment, the standard to be applied by the jury was the subjective intent of the plaintiff, whereas, the proper standard in determining such matters was how the plaintiff's conduct appeared to an ordinary viewer.

XIV.

The jury was guilty of misconduct during its deliberations, which was materially harmful and resulted in injury to defendant, such misconduct consisting of each of the following:

(a) During the deliberations of the jury, and prior to making any answers to the Special Issues, several jurors stated to the others that all news media in the past had been guilty of false, irresponsible and malicious reporting, and one juror stated in this connection that news services were always publishing false and malicious reports, all of which statements constituted misconduct in that:

(1) They constituted the receipt by the jury of original evidence with respect to the conduct of all news media in the past about which there was no evidence whatever at the trial, in direct violation of the Court's instructions to the jury, and with respect to which any evidence, if offered at the trial, would have been irrelevant, immaterial, inflammatory and prejudicial, and

(2) They clearly demonstrate preconceived bias and prejudice against this defendant on the part of at least some of the jurors which was concealed by said jurors during the voir dire examination in spite [fol. 87] of the fact that said jurors were asked on the voir dire examination if they had any preconceived bias or prejudice, to which they responded that they did not, and said bias and prejudice, if disclosed upon voir dire examination, would have likely resulted in said jurors being disqualified, or at least would have afforded defendant the opportunity to exercise its peremptory challenges against them;

(b) During the deliberations of the jury, and prior to making any answers to the Special Issues, one juror stated to the others that the jury should award plaintiff a million dollars because defendant had plenty of money and would never miss it, which said statement constituted the receipt by the jury of original evidence concerning the financial condition of this defendant in direct violation of the Court's instructions to the jury, in the complete absence of any admitted evidence with respect thereto, and with regard to a matter which was highly inflammatory and prejudicial, and with respect to which no evidence would have been permitted if offered at the trial;

(c) During the deliberations of the jury, and before answering any of the Special Issues, one of the jurors stated to the others that a plaintiff never receives damages in the amount he seeks, whereupon another juror stated that a football coach in Georgia had received a large damage award in a libel suit, which said statement constituted the receipt by the jury of original evidence concerning the results of litigation among other parties in direct violation of the Court's instructions to the jury, and with respect to which no evi- [fol. 88] dence would have been permitted at the trial, if offered, because the same is immaterial, irrelevant, prejudicial and inflammatory.

Each of the foregoing statements constituted overt acts on the part of the jurors occurring during the deliberations of the jury, and said statements, considered separately, and particularly considered together, clearly demonstrate the preconceived, unsupported and openly expressed conviction upon the part of at least some of the jurors that since all news media had in the past been guilty of false, irresponsible and malicious reporting, this defendant, as a part of the Nation's news media, must be similarly disposed and guilty of the same conduct with respect to the matters alleged by plaintiff in this case, and that defendant was possessed of such financial means that the sum of one million dollars was an insignificant amount to it; and such statements could have had no other effect than to result in harm and injury to this defendant, both with respect to the issues concerning liability and those concerning damages. In support of this ground of the Motion, the affidavits of jurors M. L. Meriweather and W. J. M. Tarter are attached hereto and, to the extent they relate facts, are incorporated herein by reference.

XV.

The jury's finding of exemplary damage in the sum of $300,000.00, despite the complete absence of any evidence of malice, and the jury's finding of general damages in the grossly excessive amount of $500,000.00, in support of which there was no evidence whatever, when considered in connection with the misconduct described in the preceding paragraph, further shows the preconceived and unwarranted bias and prejudice against this defendant which led the jury to disregard all the evidence, even though the finding on exemplary damages was properly disregarded by the Court in rendering judgment.

[fol. 89] Wherefore, premises considered, this defendant prays that the judgment heretofore rendered be set aside and that judgment be here rendered for defendant that plaintiff take nothing; and, alternatively, defendant prays that the judgment be set aside and that defendant be granted a new trial herein; and that it have such other and further relief to which it may show itself entitled.

Walker vs. Associated Press, Cause No. 31741-C in the District Court of Tarrant County, Texas, 17th Judicial District, and thereafter through June 19, 1964, served as a juror in said case; that at or about 2:00 p.m., on June 18, 1964, the Court charged the jury and thereafter counsel for the parties argued the case to the jury and the jury then retired to begin its deliberations. During the deliberations of the jury and prior to making any answers to the Special Issues two jurors stated that all news media had in the past been guilty of false and malicious news reports. One juror stated that news services were always publishing false and malicious reports. One juror stated that we should award Walker a million dollars because the Associated Press had plenty of money and would never miss it. At some time before or during the deliberations a juror remarked that a Georgia football coach had gotten a big libel damage award.

During the deliberations of the jury and before answering any of the Special Issues a few of the jurors orally stated that all news media had in the past been guilty of irresponsible and malicious reporting. Two of the jurors were more outspoken in expressing such opinion than others.

In my opinion this malicious reporting did not affect the verdict.

PLAINTIFF'S AMENDED MOTION TO REFORM AND CORRECT THE JUDGMENT—Filed September 1, 1964

To said Honorable Court:

Plaintiff Edwin A. Walker, with leave of Court, files this amended motion to reform and correct the judgment signed herein on 3 August 1964, to make the plaintiff's recovery against the defendant the sum of $800,000.00, in that there was some evidence more than a scintilla, and sufficient evidence, to sustain the jury's findings and answers to Special Issues Nos. 4, 8, 10, and 11, upon the following grounds:

1. Entrusting a story of the magnitude of the Ole Miss campus to an untrained and immature reporter without guidance from experienced personnel able to exercise discretion, and then relying unquestionably upon his lurid story charging a seasoned general with insurrection against his government, was such a showing of wilful disregard of his rights as to justify the jury's finding of legal malice.

2. When The Associated Press failed to exercise diligence to reconcile the internal conflicts and discrepancies in the excited and confused reports of an immature reporter, and sacrificed any attempt to correct and verify such statements in its own selfish interest in the speedy dissemination of a startling story, it displayed such a disregard for the rights of Walker that the jury was justified in finding legal malice.

3. The known failure of the Associated Press to verify the harmful implications of the story before its dissemina-

[fol. 93] tion to the world is some evidence from which the jury may draw the conclusion that the story was disseminated with a callous disregard to its impact on the reputation of a former general of the United States, which would constitute legal malice.

4. Upon knowledge of its conflict with the United Press story, the total failure of the Associated Press to reconcile the conflicts or investigate their cause, while continuing to disseminate the story, was evidence from which the jury could find the existence of legal malice.

5. By the failure of the Associated Press to produce its employee, Van Savell, as a witness to the intent with which the false story was written, there is a presumption which the jury may draw that his non-production was because his testimony would have been damaging, and this inference is some evidence of that ill will and evil motive which constitutes legal malice.

6. Since the jury could not see Van Savell and hear him cross-examined, to weigh whether his motives, as ratified by the Associated Press by its acceptance and transmission of his story, were vicious propaganda for the intentional destruction of Walker and his conservative views, and since the Associated Press could have produced its employee but did not do so, the jury was entitled to conclude that there was a deliberate scheme to blacken Walker's reputation, which would constitute legal malice.

7. If Van Savell had written the story in good faith and at his honest fair comment on the confused events at the Ole Miss campus, he would have appeared and told the jury so under oath, and his failure to do so is evidence of malice.

8. The deliberate persistence of the Associated Press in insisting upon the uncorroborated veracity of its immature [fol. 94] reporter from the time of the publication of his story until the jury retired, and its failure to retract or correct its story with its harmful results, was properly considered by the jury as evidence of legal malice.

9. The unbroken lack of contrition by the Associated Press for the injury done Walker's reputation from the time of publication to the conclusion of the trial was some evidence which would justify the jury in finding legal malice.

For all of the foregoing reasons, plaintiff moves the Court to increase the amount of the judgment to correspond with the answers of the jury.

In re. Cause No. 31,741-C
Edwin A. Walker vs Associated Press

Gentlemen:

I am overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, and make the following Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law on the issue of jury misconduct:

Findings of Fact:

Before the verdict of the jury was returned in open court,

(1) At least one juror made the statement that Associated Press was always hurting someone, and printing false and malicious reports, or words to this effect. This statement was not discussed or commented upon at length by the jury.

(2) At least one juror made the statement that Associated Press had plenty of money, and would never miss it. This statement was discussed by the jury until they were admonished that it was not a proper matter for their consideration. It was not then discussed again.

(3) At least one juror made the statement that the Georgia football coach had received a substantial award and damages for libel. There was no further comment or discussion about this statement.

[fol. 96] (4) The statement set forth in (1) above was made during a general discussion of the case.

(5) The statements referred to in (2), (3), above were made during deliberations of the jury on the issues of malice and exemplary damages.

(6) None of the aforesaid statements, either singly or collectively, made by one or more of the jurors induced any juror to change an answer, or vote differently than he would otherwise have done on one or more of the issues.

Conclusions of Law:

(1) The statement referred to in paragraph (1) above under Findings of Fact was not misconduct. The jury had before them numerous Associated Press and United Press reports, as well as news stories from several newspapers, and could have been discussing this evidence on the issue of malice when this statement was made.

(2) The statements referred to in paragraphs (2) and (3) under Findings of Fact constitute misconduct because there was no evidence in the record concerning A.P.'s financial condition or the jury award to the football coach, but they do not constitute material misconduct since I have determined that none of the statements induced any juror to change an answer, or vote differently than he would otherwise have done on one or more of the issues. Moreover, the Court has already set aside the jury findings as to malice and exemplary damages.

(3) There has been no showing, considering the pleadings, the testimony, the Court's charge, and argument of counsel, that probable injury resulted to the defendant because of any or all of these statements.

The Clerk is being directed to file a copy of this letter as part of the record in this case.

Very truly yours,

Chas. J. Murray

[fol. 87] OPENING STATEMENT BY MR. WATTS

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, and ladies and gentlemen of the Jury: As His Honor told you, I am C. J. Watts, and I am one of the lawyers for General Walker and he is a long-time friend. For thirty-five years we have been close personal friends. And, at this point if I seem to get too deep into the lawsuit it may be because I have too deep a personal association.

Now, I will read the Plaintiff's pleadings, and they just outline to the Jury and the Court the facts we intend to prove.

(Plaintiff's pleadings read by Mr. Watts.)

(Defendant's pleadings read by Mr. Gooch.)

[fol. 88] Mr. Watts: Thank you very much.

Mr. Gooch: May I have the Court file to read from?

I will read the Answer of the Defendant, Associated Press.

(Answer read to the Jury.)

The Court: Mr. Watts is going to make an opening statement.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, and ladies and gentlemen of the Jury, the Jury, having suffered through these long delineations of the legal issues as outlined by the lawyers in this case, we feel are entitled to a very brief and simple statement of what's involved.

We expect to prove a state of facts substantially as follows:

In order to brief you properly, I will draw a very crude diagram on the board of the University of Mississippi campus.

(Drawing.)

I am never able to tell where I am going or where I have been unless I can see it.

Now, to orient the Jury and Your Honor, the top of the little rough plat, of course, is north. This is the area of the Mississippi campus where the entire riot took place, [fol. 89] as we will outline. This area in here is the so-called "Oval".

The evidence will be from General Walker and many, many witnesses that General Walker came to Mississippi for a basic reason:

Number one, as the former commander at Little Rock, to protect against making a Military operation of a very critical civilian problem.

Number two, to protest, as best he could, against the diversion of the attention of the American people and of the Military power of the country away from Cuba where he thought it belonged sincerely and into the Mississippi campus.

Now, his evidence will be that he arrived on the campus at night about 8:45; that he walked with an associate, a friend of his, along this sidewalk on the south side of University Boulevard; that when he arrived about in this position, there was a group of people gathered around this installation here, which is a Confederate Statue.

He, in this area, talked to several people for a few minutes, maybe fifteen or twenty minutes. At that time there was activity going on up in this direction. This installation here is the so-called Lyceum Building which was surrounded by a ring of U.S. Marshals.

[fol. 90] Prior to that, to his arrival on the campus, and about 8:00 o'clock the Marshals had, between them and the assembled students, a ring of Highway Patrolmen. About eight, tear gas was fired and the Highway Patrolmen pulled away and so that when Walker and a young lad, Louis Leman, who will be here in Court, arrived on the campus, there was sporadic activity out in this area out here in terms of two, three, five, a few, students, throwing rocks and sticks and things such as kids will throw, and the Marshals shooting tear gas.

Walker and Leman stood in this area for a few minutes, observed what was going on, then walked out into this area in the so-called Circle or Grove. They stayed there for fifteen or twenty or perhaps thirty minutes, so that in a period of thirty to forty-five minutes they had proceeded from the entrance to the campus out about to in here, near, between the Confederate Monument and the flagpole, had talked with several people, observed what was going on and then started back to this area here.

About the time Walker started back, there was a convoy of vehicles going out here, leaving the campus. It became immediately obvious they were highway patrolmen leading [fol. 91] them. The evidence will be that students then raised the comment that, "The Governor has sold out."

The evidence will further be that General Walker, who had been downtown at the Court House and heard the Governor's representative speak and state his position, decided for the first time that he would get on the Confederate Statue and speak to the students.

He did get on the Statue and did make a presentation to the students, first, that violence was not the answer to nobody, that the real enemy was yonder way in Cuba. [fol. 92] At that point, the evidence will be that he was met by one massive jeer.

Later he went on to point out that the Governor had not sold them out; that the individual who had let the student onto the campus was the highway patrolman, one Col. Birdsong, and not the Governor.

After the speech, Walker got down from the monument, stood around here for a few more minutes and again, in company with several other people, one of whom is a deputy sheriff, who will be here to testify and was with Walker constantly from the time Walker arrived on the campus and he saw him coming until the time he left, this deputy sheriff will testify that at no time then did Walker lead or participate in anything that even remotely approximated a charge.

The evidence will be that after the speech on the monument, Walker then again proceeded out into the oval area where there was activity of a constant sporadic nature of groups of students throwing things, tear gas being fired, falling back, more groups coming in, Walker stood around in this area and observed those activities for several hours.

Now his evidence will be, and it will be supported by many, many witnesses, that at no time did he lead a charge; at no time did he commit the act that the Associated Press [fol. 93] circulated of him around the world, that he arrived striding down the middle of University Avenue, met the leaders of the mob in this vicinity, assumed command of the crowd, had a student or a leader of the mob on each side by each elbow, lined up in front of a thousand people, led a charge against the Marshals and raced back to the statue.

Our evidence will be, Ladies and Gentlemen, that that just did not occur and is an absolute deliberate fabrication by a 21-year-old boy who was a cub reporter and represented the Associated Press at that incident.

The evidence will further be that this lad, after he claims he saw this alleged charge, is supposed to have raced 600 yards over here and made a report and then raced back at which time he saw Walker speaking upon the monument. [fol. 94] Now, when we have presented to you ladies and gentlemen these facts, we feel that beyond any possible shadow of a doubt this Jury must conclude that Walker did not lead a charge. That proves the first issue in the lawsuit. The second issue is, assuming as we hope we do that we are able to prove that this is a deliberate fabrication, and that this is false, that Walker did lead a charge, that the Associated Press, by its conduct in its news releases, literally did it with malice, in which event if we are able to prove that, not only will Walker be entitled to actual damages but punitive damages.

Our evidence will be substantially as follows: The Associated Press will bring into Court a stack of news issues in which in issue after issue after issue and message after message it is reported Walker leading a charge; that he was arrested by the Federal authorities; that he was shipped to the insane hospital in Springfield, Missouri. The evidence will be a stack of news releases by the Associated Press this high (indicating) as to Walker being arrested, committed to the nut house. The evidence will be that when they came around to report in a sanity hearing that we held in Oxford on November 21, 1962, that they reported extensively and in several news releases on the [fol. 95] so-called A and B wire the testimony of the Government psychiatrist, who incidentally had never seen him, that he was a paranoid and psychosomatic. The evidence will be that along toward the end of the hearing the Judge of that Court opened a report by Dr. Stubblefield of Dallas, a Court-appointed psychiatrist, who stated in his report that Walker was of superior intelligence; that report, however, that Walker was of superior intelligence, never found its way into the A and B wire, and the evidence as to Walker's sanity got cut off right there.

Oh, it got in a few local papers, maybe in Fort Worth, probably in Fort Worth, but anyhow the evidence will be that the Associated Press deliberately smothered the evidence, as opposed to the testimony that Walker was crazy.

Finally, the final culmination and conclusion of this tragic incident occurred on the 22nd of January, 1962, when the United States Government, after having arrested him, after having committed him to the nut house, after his having finally got out, dismissed the charges against him, upon the grounds, it will be obvious from reading the news reports, the evidence will be, that the Associated Press, after building the thing up that he had been put in jail, [fol. 96] after building up that he was paranoid and psychosomatic had a little tiny release, a line or two, that Walker had been released by the Government and the Government dismissed the charge, which means it can be re-filed in five years.

So, when we get through with this evidence, ladies and gentlemen of the Jury, I feel sincerely that you ladies and gentlemen will find that this young lad, Van Savell, a twenty-one year old Cub Reporter, sat down and wrote himself a story that absolutely did not happen, and that General Walker, after having suffered six days and nights among the atmosphere of the insane, certainly did not get a fair break in the most powerful news media on the face of the earth, under the label of the truth.

Thank you.

Opening Statement by Mr. Gooch

Mr. Gooch: You will recall that at the outset the Court said that the pleadings and what the lawyers say is not evidence. I assume he is still of that opinion as he listens to Mr. Watts make this very dramatic appeal, and if he is in a position to back up his statement on that, there is not much for the Jury to listen to.

You told me on voir dire examination that you would listen to the witnesses in this case; that you would keep [fol. 97] an open mind until all of the evidence in this case is concluded.

The preparation for this case has not been in ten or fifteen minutes or ten or fifteen days. There have been some fifty-one depositions taken in this case. All of those people who could have had or possibly had, if they could be found, a possible knowledge of what occurred on the campus of the University of Mississippi on the night of September 30, 1962; part of the pleadings that were read to you in this case was to the effect that prior to the time General Walker made his advent on the campus of the University of Mississippi he called in—mind you, the Press didn't seek General Walker out, General Walker called for a Press conference at his Turtle Creek home in the City of Dallas, and he said to the reporters and to the world on television tape, "I am going to Mississippi," in effect

Barnett is right. "The orders of the United States Government should be disobeyed," by inference, and, "how should we do it?" "Bring your flags, your tents and your skillets, ten thousand strong from every state in the Union."

He gets over to Mississippi, this man who had called the Press conference, all the reporters in the news media, the TV camera to take down for posterity what he has to say. [fol. 98] He gets over to Mississippi and he says, "I stand shoulder to shoulder with Governor Ross Barnett. Rally to the cause of freedom. Now or never. Bring your flags, your tents and your skillets," by inference, "We will show the United States of America and the constituted authorities what should be done in this instance.

One more time he calls in the Press, after he had arrived at Oxford, Mississippi, if you please, on the scene of where he was to come. He says, "We are called to Oxford. We are here to carry out what Governor Ross Barnett said he wanted to carry out. We will not let the constitutional authority of this United States interfere with what we want to do as citizens. Mind you, he was not a citizen of the State of Mississippi, he lived in the State of Texas.

Mr. Watts dramatically portrayed General Walker slowly walking on the campus at the University of Mississippi along about 5:00 p. m. on the evening of September 30, 1962.

Well, I have read these depositions. I participated in these depositions. Maybe Mr. Watts and I don't read the same language, I don't know, but Walker says—that is, General Walker I am talking about, a great man when he [fol. 99] was in the Army until he started mixing with things he had no business meddling in. He says, "I came down University Avenue." That he got near the campus; he turned around and waved his arm, "Come on." He got within a few steps of the Confederate Statue. He saw a group of people standing on the corner. This is General Walker testifying. He says, "Come on."

Then we pick up and we have got Mr. Watts saying, "We have got witnesses." We sure have. Mr. Watts' witnesses, if they tell the truth as they did when their depositions were taken, will testify that General Walker came on this campus and got with this howling mob.

[fol. 100] The deputy sheriff having been sent there by Governor Ross Barnett to keep Meredith from entering the University of Mississippi.

We are not trying a segregation or integration case, Ladies and Gentlemen. We are trying the rights of an individual public figure to defy in any manner the law of this land; otherwise we would have anarchy, we would be guided by mob rule.

The witnesses who have testified that have been called by Mr. Watts, have testified that General Walker went with a group over near the flagpole which is about the center of this circle (indicating on blackboard). He called it an oval. The witnesses usually refer to it as a circle. There, while he was loitering there with this crowd, that Walker had nothing in his hand. Nobody ever said Walker had a missile or anything in his hand. But there this group surrounding Walker hurled their rocks and missiles at the United States Marshals who had been ordered in there by the President of the United States to see to it that the law of the Court in this country should be obeyed. That is what we are trying in this case, as to whether or not a man can defy the Court.

Mr. Andress: I believe that is completely beyond the scope of the pleadings. We are trying whether or not the [fol. 101] Associated Press can make a false statement about what a man did, not whether the man can defy the Courts.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, you have heard the pleadings. Questions will be submitted to you concerning matters of alleged libel. Now in answering those questions you can consider any evidence which is offered in evidence in this trial, and according to the pleadings evidence of the activities of the Plaintiff here and the activities of possibly Meredith, and certainly the Marshals, and what the Courts did, will be in evidence. You may consider all of that.

You may proceed.

Mr. Gooch: I reiterate we are not trying the question of integration or segregation; we are trying a story that was written by the Associated Press of the action of General Walker on the campus of the University of Mississippi from about 8:45 p.m., on the night of September 30, 1962, until the wee hours of the morning.

The Associated Press, as Mr. Watts has told you, as Mr. Andress has told you, is an organization that gathers news. The Associated Press does its best to cover every piece of news that it can get its hands on. It does not publish a newspaper of its own. It sends these stories to the newspapers who are members of the Associated Press, [fol. 102] for the newspapers to use or not as they see fit, such news as is sent to them on the wires.

The issue in this case—another issue in this case will be the truth or falsity and the fair comment that was given by the Associated Press to such newspapers as cared to print the story.

Now I will not go into the details of what the witnesses will testify. I said to you before that you will listen to these witnesses and you can draw your own conclusion as to whether or not this publication charged to be libelous by General Walker was, in fact, libelous, false or untrue. I think you will determine from the witnesses and from General Walker himself that the statements made about General Walker were in fact true.

Now I know this may be boring to you but we are full of our cases and I can't sit here and listen to Mr. Watts get up and tell you what the facts are, without giving you my version of them, because I have been there, too. As Charlie McCarthy used to say, I was there, Charlie. Not in Mississippi, but in these depositions.

He says the Associated Press slanted the news. He says the Associated Press did not send out a story from Dr. [fol. 103] Stubblefield to the effect that Walker, at the time of his mental examination along about October 2nd or 3rd of 1962, was acting under a superior intelligence—

Mr. Watts: —excuse me.

Mr. Gooch: —I challenge that statement—

Mr. Watts: —excuse me—

Mr. Gooch: The very statement—

The Court: Just a minute.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I must challenge this statement. I didn't say they didn't send it out. What I said, the statement of Walker's imprisonment and insanity was put on the A and B wire; the statement by Dr. Stubblefield was put on the subordinate wire.

Mr. Gooch: So we are tit-for-tat.

[fol. 104] As I understand the pleadings in the case, and the Court will correct me if I am wrong, Mr. Watts has traversed the state, the State of Texas. The story Mr. Watts claims is untrue and false was published in the Fort Worth Star Telegram and was an AP story. Now, he says he went all the way around the world getting his pleadings. He is limited, or should be limited in his cause of action, to something that happened in the State of Texas and particularly in the Fort Worth Star Telegram. Now, I say to you, Mr. Watts, and I say to you ladies and gentlemen without fear of successful contradiction, that this Associated Press story was sent to the Star Telegram, the same newspaper that published the libelous article, that Mr. Watts says is libelous, in which they said that the psychiatrist who examined General Walker, the psychiatrist said General Walker was operating under a superior level of intelligence at the time he was examined.

He further read to you and stated in his argument that they slanted the news because the Associated Press did not send to the Star Telegram as part of its news coverage the contention that General Walker had been denied his constitutional rights when he was arrested in Mississippi. [fol. 105] I challenge that statement and I tell you that we will show and Mr. Watts knows we will show, and yet he stood here and read to you that the news was slanted. [fol. 106] He knows that the Associated Press in a story from Oxford, Mississippi, on the very day that this motion he's complained of, complaining that we didn't print it, on the very day it was printed the Associated Press, on its wires, sent a verbatim copy of Mr. Watts' motion in favor of General Walker to the Forth Worth Star Telegram and it was run on the very day that it was filed in Oxford, Mississippi.

News slant? Ladies and Gentlemen, the Associated Press is not mad at anybody. They have one function in life to perform and that is to disseminate to the public news as it occurs and as quickly as possible. It is given to the newspapers to print as they see fit. The headlines are not those of Associated Press. The news stories come in the newspaper. The newspaper can do as it sees fit.

I have taken too much of your time. You get carried away with these things when it is attempted, as I see it, to deliberately mislead the jury before the evidence starts.

I apologize for my outburst.

Again, may I say, with all candor, listen with me on the evidence in this case and see if the innuendoes and statements that I have made to you are not sustained by the evidence that comes from that witness stand.

[fol. 107] The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, it's too late, I think, this afternoon to go ahead and start with the testimony. We will just get a little bit in, so I am going to recess until 9:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Now this jury room to your left will be your home while you are trying this case. Just be in the jury room tomorrow morning at 9:00 and we will call you out from there.

(Thereupon, at 4:45 p.m., an adjournment was taken until 9:00 o'clock, Tuesday, June 9, 1964.)

Colloquy Between Court and Counsel

Mr. Gooch: If Your Honor please, we ask the invocation of the Rule with respect to the witnesses.

The Court: The Rule has been invoked in this case and that means all the witnesses except the parties to the suit must remain outside until each is called by the respective attorneys. So, Mr. Andress and Mr. Watts, you keep an eye on your witnesses and if they walk in ask them to remain outside.

Mr. Watts: Do you wish to swear all witnesses who are available?

The Court: No, I will swear them one at a time.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, we have some news releases I think we can open up with.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, we have here by agreement the respective teletype releases of the Associated Press which we now will offer in evidence.

The Court: You want to have them marked?

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. It will probably save time if we just mark each of these groups as an exhibit, and then we will designate them as A, B, C and so forth later. Mark [fol. 111] this as Exhibit 1.

(Document marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, by the Court Reporter.)

Mr. Cravens: If you will, read which is which.

Mr. Watts: Yes, we will.

Mr. Gooch: I assume—

The Court: Just a minute, he is marking.

Mr. Watts: This is 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

(Documents marked Plaintiff's Exhibits 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 by the Court Reporter.)

Mr. Watts: Now, Mr. Gooch, do you have a comment to make?

Mr. Gooch: I don't know what you are introducing, or having marked, so I assume the objection, if any, will be raised at the time of the entry of the individual item.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: As I understand the ruling of the Court on pre-trial conference, that the matters introduced are confined to the AP reports as carried in the Forth Worth Star Telegram?

The Court: I don't recall that. As far as the allegations in paragraph 2 of the Petition are concerned.

[fol. 112] Mr. Gooch: That's right.

The Court: In those wire reports that appeared in the Star Telegram, are the only ones to be admitted.

Mr. Watts: That is correct. It is my understanding—

The Court: Is that what you have at this time?

Mr. Watts: No, sir, it was my understanding that the news releases alleged in paragraph 2 of the Petition would be offered without identification to establish the libel, and that everything connected with Walker issued by the AP would be tendered by the Plaintiff in support of its contention of malice. That is my understanding of the pre-trial.

The Court: Are you offering one of those news reports?

Mr. Watts: At this time we offer to the Jury the news report upon which paragraph 2 asserts libel.

The Court: That is all you are offering now?

Mr. Watts: That is all we are offering now. Then, when they are specifically identified we will introduce the entire news releases of the Associated Press, to establish malice.

The Court: To which exhibit are you now referring?

Mr. Watts: I must pick them out. Let's see. Now, we [fol. 113] will hold these (indicating) on the side. They are not identified as exhibits.

If Your Honor please, it would save considerable time if we later—if I offer them as alleged in the complaint, the specific news releases, and then we will get the same releases out of the file.

The Court: I will admit that at this time.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor will permit me to read it from the original Complaint then.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Watts: Now, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury, it has been agreed by counsel in this case that the specific teletype report as alleged in the Plaintiff's Original—rather, Amended Complaint, to be presented to the Jury as having been issued by the Defendant, Associated Press.

I will now read to the Jury the teletype report issued by the Associated Press that the Plaintiff, General Walker, asserts is false and libel. This will be identified in the record as the Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-A.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-A marked by the Court Reporter.)

Mr. Watts: And the release under date of October 3rd will be identified as the Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-B.

[fol. 114] (Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-B marked by the Court Reporter.)

Mr. Watts: I will now read to the Jury the Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-A, under date of October 2, 1962:

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT 1-A

"Walker, who led a charge of students against Federal Marshals on the Ole Miss campus was arrested on four counts, including insurrection against the United States."

That is the Plaintiff's Exhibit 1.

Mr. Gooch: 1-A.

Mr. Watts: I will now read—sir?

Mr. Gooch: 1-A.

Mr. Watts: 1-A, yes.

Mr. Gooch: All right.

Mr. Watts: I will now read Plaintiff's Exhibit 1-B, which is under date of October 3, 1962, was issued by the Associated Press upon its teletype wire services to the Fort Worth Star Telegram in Fort Worth, and as I understand, it is admitted by all parties that this news release was published by the Fort Worth Star Telegram?

Mr. Gooch: That is correct.

Mr. Watts: All right.

[fol. 115] PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT 1-B

Editor's Note: "Former Major General Edwin A. Walker, a key figure in the week-end battling—

Mr. Gooch: Just a minute. The Editor Note was by the Star Telegram?

Mr. Watts: No, that's part of the news release, Mr. Gooch. See, that is the AP Editor's note and is a part of the news release.

(Reading) "Former Major General Edwin A. Walker, a key figure in the week-end battling over admission of a Negro to the University of Mississippi, was eating dinner Sunday night when he says that he was told there was a scene of considerable disturbance on the University of Mississippi campus. He went there.

Here is the story of Van Savell, twenty-one, Associated Press newsman, who was on the scene and saw what happened:

By Van Savell. Oxford, Mississippi. October 3, 1962, AP. Utilizing my youth to the fullest extent, I dressed as any college student would and easily milled among the several thousand rioters on the University of Mississippi campus at night. This allowed me to follow the crowd, a few students and many outsiders, as they charged Federal [fol. 116] Marshals, surrounding the century-old Lyceum Building.

It also brought me into direct contact with former Major General Edwin A. Walker, who is now under arrest on charges of inciting, insurrection and seditious conspiracy.

Walker first appeared in the riot area at 8:45 p. m., Sunday, near the University Avenue entrance about 300 yards from the Ole Miss administration building. He was nattily dressed in a black suit, tie and shoes and wore a light tan hat.

The crowd welcomed Walker, although this was the man who commanded the 101st Airborne Division during the 1957 school integration riots at Little Rock, Arkansas.

One unidentified man queried Walker as he approached the group, "General, will you lead us to the steps?" I observed Walker as he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded yes without speaking.

He then conferred with a group of about fifteen persons who appeared to be the riot leaders. The crowd took full advantage of nearby construction work. They broke new bricks into several pieces, took survey sticks and broken soft drink bottles. Walker assumed command of the crowd, which I estimated at 1,000, but was delayed for several minutes when a neatly dressed, portly man of about forty-[fol. 117] five approached the group. He conferred with Walker for several minutes; then joined a group near the front.

Two men took Walker by the arms and they headed for the Lyceum and Federal Marshals.

Throughout this time I was less than six feet from Walker. This march toward tear gas and some 200 Marshals was more effective than the previous attempts. Although Walker was unarmed, the crowd said this was the moral support they needed.

We were met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps and went a few feet further when we had to turn back. Before doing so, many of the rioters hurled their weapons, the bricks, the bottles, rocks and wooden sticks toward the clustered Marshals. We fled the tear gas and the charging Marshals, the crowd racing back to a Confederate soldiers statue near the Grove entrance below the Lyceum.

I went to a telephone. A few minutes later I returned and found Walker talking with several students. Shortly thereafter, Walker climbed half way up the Confederate Monument and addressed the crowd.

I heard Walker say that Governor Barnett had betrayed the people of Mississippi, "But don't let up now," he said, [fol. 118] "You may lose this battle but you will have been heard."

He continued, "This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now."

There were cheers. It was apparent that Walker had complete command over the group.

By this time it was nearly 11:00 p. m. and I raced to the telephone again.

Upon my return, Walker was calmly explaining The New Frontier Government to several by-standers. He remained away from the rioting throughout the next few hours but advised on several tactics.

One Ole Miss student queried the former General, "What can we use to make the tear gas bombs ineffective? Do you know of any way that we can attack and do some damage to those damn Marshals?"

Walker suggested the use of sand to snuff out the tear gas. This stuff worked real well, "But where can you get it?" He asked.

At this time the rioters were using a University fire truck and fire extinguishers in an attempt to make the tear gas bombs ineffective.

I left Walker and walked a hundred yards away where Molotov Cocktails and gasoline bottles with a fuse were [fol. 119] made.

Again I left the area for a telephone. As I walked toward a dormitory with George Bartsch of the Little Rock Associated Press Bureau, we were attacked by Marshals who mistook us for students. We were deluged by tear gas, manhandled, handcuffed and beaten with clubs during a 200-yard walk to the Lyceum Building.

Thanks to recognition by Chief Marshal James B. McShane, we were quickly released and given freedom in the Marshal's headquarters. Within minutes shotgun and rifle fire erupted from the rioting crowd and two men, one a French newsman, were killed. We considered ourselves lucky to have been arrested and glad to be behind closed, heavily guarded doors.

Is Richard Sweatt out there?

The Court: Mr. Watts, has there been a stipulation that Exhibits 1-A and 1-B were written by an employee of the Associated Press who was in the course of his employment with the Associated Press at the time?

Mr. Watts: There has been such a stipulation and perhaps it would be in order to confirm it at this time.

[fol. 120] Mr. Gooch: That is correct.

Mr. Watts: At this time, then, I will read a deposition from another of the Associated Press employees.

Mr. Gooch: You called Sweatt. What are you doing now?

Mr. Watts: I thought while he was showing up, I would read that deposition.

Mr. Cravens: Which deposition are you reading, Mr. Watts?

Mr. Watts: Just a moment, I will get it here. Ben Thomas.

If the Court please, this is the deposition of B. R. Thomas, Associated Press newsman, taken in New Orleans on March the 31st, 1964.

[fol. 121] "Deposition of B. R. Thomas"

Mr. Watts: (Reading)

"Q. Your name, please, sir?

A. Ben Thomas.

Q. Your profession?

A. I am an Associated Press newsman.

Q. And what educational background do you have, Mr. Thomas?

A. I have three years of college, and almost thirteen years in the news profession.

Q. Have you done news work, in addition to working in the office for A.P.?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. What is the difference between a reporter and an office re-write man? Are you interchangeable?

A. I am interchangeable, that is why I say I am an A.P. Newsman. We do office work, re-writes, and also field reporting.

Q. Where did you go to school?

A. Henderson State Teachers College, Arkansas.

Q. When did you graduate?

A. I did not graduate. I lacked about twelve hours receiving a Bachelor's degree.

Q. Where were you raised, Mr. Thomas?

A. In Florida, and in Arkansas.

[fol. 122] Q. What place in Florida?

A. Sarasota, where I was born.

Q. How long did you live in that place in Arkansas? What was that place in Arkansas?

A. Hot Springs was my grandmother's house, and then I lived in Hot Springs for a short period, up until th time I was fifteen, and then I was there from then on out, until—except for the times I visited Florida.

Q. Where did you work when you got out of school?

A. I worked— After college?

Q. Yes?

A. Well, I was in college, and before I was in college while I was finishing high school, I worked on the Centennial Record in Hot Springs, Arkansas.

Q. And then where?

A. Then the Times Picayune, in New Orleans.

Q. How long were you with them?

A. I was with the Picayune for seven months.

Q. Where then?

A. Associated Press Bureau in New Orleans.

Q. What was the occasion for your transfer?

A. There was a vacancy in the A.P., and I had long wanted to work for the Associated Press, so I applied for it and was hired.

Q. When did you first go to work for them?

[fol. 123] A. The first of July, 1960.

Q. What is your age?

A. Thirty. (30)

Q. Do you know what personnel the Associated Press sent to cover the Oxford incident?

A. When you say, "Oxford incident," do you mean on September 30, or the entire story?

Q. Just September 30?

A. I believe I recall the principal people as they were. There were so many press people thrown in that night I might miss one.

Q. Give us the best you can recollect, the ones that came from the New Orleans office?

A. To the best of my knowledge, there was no one from the New Orleans office itself at Oxford that night except photographer James Bourdier. There were people from some of our correspondent points.

Q. What office was Van Savell from?

A. Jackson, Mississippi office.

Q. And no newsmen at all were sent from New Orleans?

A. To the best of my knowledge, there were none out of New Orleans, except our photographer newsman, James Bourdier.

Q. What time that day, on the 30th, did you come to work?

[fol. 124] A. Around three o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. What was your assignment?

A. I came to the Bureau to write some sport stories early, and be on hand for anything that happened at Oxford.

Q. What was your assignment in the office?

A. My specific assignment that night was to work the night re-write shifts from ten o'clock at night until six-thirty in the morning.

Q. Now, from eight o'clock—

A. That is my normal shift on Sundays, and I am sure the records will show that I was scheduled to work that shift that night. I usually came in about three in the afternoon to do my sports, take a little break, and then come back on at ten o'clock.

Q. What do you mean by the "re-write shift"?

A. It is just an A.P. term. That is what the shift is called. Actually, the early editor, or the overnight editor is responsible for filing the early reports for the afternoon newspapers.

Q. Why do you use the term 're-write'?

A. Because much of your duties consist of re-writing stories from the previous cycle.

Q. What are your guidelines for re-writing?

A. I am not so sure what you mean by that.

Q. Why don't you just disseminate on the wire services [fol. 125] the report that the news writers send in, that is the news men send in?

A. This is not necessarily re-writing of reports that newsmen send in. On this night re-write or early shift, you take stories that have occurred during the period which would be reported in the morning newspapers, and you re-write the stories simply by changing the structure of the words and possibly digging up fresh information. If there is not a reporter, getting on the phone yourself, and calling to the sheriff or wherever it might be, and pick up fresh information to have a different story for the afternoon newspapers than the morning ones had.

Q. Did you re-arrange then, the context of—

A. No, not the context. The contents are re-arranged but not the context. We never try to change the meaning of any story unless there is fresh new information that does change the situation of the story.

Q. Were you on the telephone on the night of September 30?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. With whom were you communicating in Oxford?

A. I communicated with Van Savell, I talked to Edmund Lebercon, and I talked to Gavin Scott.

Q. All right. Go on.

A. And I talked to two Ole Miss. students who were work-
[fol. 126] ing with the A.P.

Q. Were they so-called 'stringers'?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you know who they are?

A. Yes, John Perkins and John Hall. I also talked one time to Wilson Minor, who is the Times Picayune Jackson, Mississippi correspondent.

Q. Go ahead.

A. I talked to A. P. photographer, James Bourdier.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. B-o-u-r-d-i-e-r.

Q. All right. Go on.

A. And I talked to Jim Laxson, who is photo editor in the Atlanta Bureau. I may have talked to one or two or possibly three more people, but I can't recall. If I did, they were very brief conversations.

Q. Did any of these individuals, other than Savell, report to you that they had seen General Walker lead a charge against the United States Marshals?

A. No, sir, except for the students. May I clarify that answer? May I add something?

Q. Yes.

A. Except for the students who were in the dormitory room, where we had a telephone line, and they did not go out of the room, and could not see the area where the demon-
[fol. 127] strations, the main demonstrations, took place. The other A.P. people that I talked to, that night I talked with them much later, and none of them were in the vicinity of the Lyceum Building.

During the early part of the evening, from the start of the demonstration on to around seven o'clock, until after midnight.

Q. Now, you used the term, 'except for the students', did the students purport to see the charge?

A. No. I say none other than I talked to the students. The only ones that I talked to between approximately seven o'clock and midnight were the two students who were in their room, and were in their dormitory. We had maintained a telephone line, a long distance line, into their room that night for about nine to ten hours, and they did not leave their room, they stayed there and held their lines. Savell would come in from his various points where he had been on the campus.

Q. What was the nature of these reports that these students gave you?

A. The only reports that they gave me was that tear gas was seeping into their dormitory, and they told me of hearing what sounded like either rifle fire or possibly tear gas cannisters exploding, of seeing other students from their window, which looked in the opposite direction of the Ly- [fol. 128] ceum, of seeing students and others scurrying about.

Q. Now then, let's get down to Van Savell. Start with the earliest report that you received from him, and outline it by time and content.

A. It has been nearly a year and a half. The earliest report that I received from Savell that night was around five o'clock in the evening, on the Marshals being thrown into the airport at Oxford, and going onto the campus.

Q. Did you have at that time, two phones connected to Oxford?

A. I couldn't say. At various times, one. We had from six-thirty at night until around four o'clock a.m. in the morning, this one telephone line into the dormitory room occupied by John Hall and John Perkins. The connection was continuous on that one, and at various times when the other newsmen who were in the area could get an open line, they would talk to the Bureau, but for the period from seven o'clock until almost three o'clock, the only method of communication we had was this one telephone line, and over our wire photo net work net up in a motel some ten blocks from it.

Q. Did you then, alone, maintain and operate that one open telephone line at Perkins' room?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you have any assistance on the line, or any one [fol. 129] else that helped you?

A. Around two or three o'clock in the morning, I turned the phone, very briefly, to Carl Corben who is now the editor of the States Item, a former A.P. man, and I asked him to hold it while I went to the rest room. He said there was nothing. No one had anyhing to report on the telephone during that time.

Q. So then the A.P. Office in New Orleans received all the reports from Savell?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up until two o'clock?

A. Well, it was certainly up until around three o'clock, around three or four o'clock.

Q. Well, it was certainly after midnight?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was the next time that you heard from him?

A. I believe the next time that I heard from him was around six-fifteen to six-twenty, when he called from this room. That is when we kept the line open from there after.

(Conference was held off the record.)

I wasn't taking notes on the typewriter of what Savell had to say. I wasn't noting the time, except where it was really pertinent, as Meredith arrived on campus at such and such a time. I don't remember whether the story said that [fol. 130] Meredith arrived on campus at such and such a time, but it seems to me that it was around six-fifteen or six-twenty that he called and said that Meredith was there or that the Marshals had circled the Lyceum Building.

Q. Have you read Savell's deposition?

A. No.

Q. You haven't seen it at all?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Go ahead and give us the next report. You may refer to those exhibits in that deposition to refresh your recollection if you would like. Also there are other wire releases there before you, covering the same period of time. Now, then give us the next report that you received.

A. Well, we had a television set near the telephone, and I heard President Kennedy's speech which started at seven o'clock, and before it was over, or during the middle of it, Savell came back to the phone and said that the Marshals were firing tear gas at co-eds, and that the students had started throwing bricks and bottles, stones, and rocks at the Marshals.

Q. Now, let's recheck the timing on that. Wasn't the speech at eight o'clock instead of seven?

A. To the best of my knowledge, it was seven o'clock, Central Standard Time. It might have been eight o'clock [fol. 131] Eastern Standard Time. Because the A.P. usually operates and changes time to make everything eight o'clock Eastern Standard Time, or to make it into Eastern Standard Time, the stories may show this, particularly on radio wire copies.

Q. I wish you would recheck some of your communications there, because I was positive in my own mind that it was eight o'clock.

Mr. Gooch: I think it was. It was eight o'clock, Central Standard time, it is a fact.

The Witness: All right, then that was it.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right. Then you do remember, distinctly remember the incident of the President's speech on the television, right before, by your side?

A. Yes, sir. Not from the television on my side, but by hearing, because they had the telephone, I mean the television, in the room, in the dormitory room at Oxford, and the boys would hold the telephone there, and I was listening to what the President had to say.

Q. All right. Go ahead then. Before this speech was over, Savell reported that bricks were being thrown and tear gas fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Give us the next report.

A. I can't at this time, specifically say what his next report was. I know that I told him to be sure and check back [fol. 132] in or at least get word to me every fifteen or twenty minutes, even if he really had nothing to report. Just so we would know where he was and what the situation was, and if we had any word to pass on to him.

Q. All right. Go ahead?

A. He came in, as I said, every ten or fifteen minute intervals thereafter, reporting various facts that he had seen and observed. More students, or more people, not necessarily students, throwing bricks and bottles, and the Marshals firing tear gas, and the wind was blowing it back toward the Marshals.

Q. Did he tell you how far away he was from the scene of the rioting?

A. He told me he was in and out of the student groups, that he mingled in as close as he could. In fact, sometime he would be in the midst of a group of students who were yelling taunts and jeers at the Marshals.

Q. Did he give you a briefing as to the lay of the land?

A. Well,—

Q. How far the distances were, we will say from the Confederate Monument to the dormitory, when he was making the fifteen minutes reports?

A. I don't remember if he gave me a briefing on the distances or not. I know that it seems to me that he said [fol. 133] it was just a short distance.

Q. All right. Go ahead then.

A. Then, he came to the telephone, and said that General Walker had talked to the students, the rioters, and then had led them on a charge on the Marshals.

Q. That Walker had talked to the students, and then led them on a charge against the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir; walked to the front of the charge, and led it against the Marshals.

Q. All right. Go ahead. Tell to the best of your recollection, the rest of his report.

A. And he told me—

Q. Excuse me. Right there, see if you can convert this information that he gave you about Walker talking to the students, and then led them on a charge against the Marshals. Can you convert that into terms of a report that you passed on for use on the wire service?

A. Well, since I was not actually writing any of the material that he was reporting, I was taking notes, and passing them on to Tom Dagard, who I believe you talked to yesterday, and he was doing the main overall wrap up.

Q. All right. Go ahead, Mr. Thomas.

A. I remember, with the incidents involved about the troops being sent in and so forth, we were putting out almost a continuous news lead to the story, and I remember [fol. 134] calling to Tom, who was no more than ten feet away from me, that General Walker had just led the charge of the students against the Marshals.

Q. Is this Tom Dagard?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Go on.

A. And he rushed over and took my notes from the typewriter.

Q. Yes?

A. And I asked Savell to give me as much detail on the information as he could. I can refresh my memory by going in here and looking at this report.

Q. Well, we will get to that in a minute, but just to the best of your recollection now, give us the details that he gave you.

A. He said that Walker had climbed on the Confederate Monument and talked to the students, and said something to them about if they retreated and went home, they would be cowards, that they should stand up and fight.

Q. All right.

A. And then that he got down from the monument and started walking toward the Marshals and the students followed behind him, and he led the group of yelling, screaming, brick-throwing group with him as close to the Marshals as they could get, until they were turned back by tear gas.

[fol. 135] Q. Now, was that the first real or formal charge?

A. No, sir. There had been other charges earlier in the night. He had given a report that cars were being set fire to. I can't, at this time, recall whether this was—I don't want to say I am certain, but it seems to me that the French newsman—

Q. Guillard?

A. He had been found before, or it may have been after.

Q. Did Savell report to you the effect that the speech Walker made from the monument had on the students before this charge?

A. He just said that they seemed to be in agreement with what he said, and ready to follow him.

Q. And did he say whether or not, prior to the time Walker had spoken to them and got an agreement, that the students were able to organize and present a mass charge, or was it sporadic activity up until that time?

A. I believe that he said that it was more of a sporadic activity, more of a mob activity. When General Walker first walked into the group, it seemed more organized.

Q. Now, after Walker had appeared on the campus, and made his speech from the monument, the charge became more organized, did it?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 136] Q. Would you say it became more effective? You may refresh your recollection from your wire releases there if you like. You said it became more effective after this speech?

A. I don't recall him saying one way or the other as to where it was more effective, but I think from his reports that the charges were more in the nature of a protest. And you can say whether a protest is effective or not, well—At times the Marshals were forced to sort of re-group, and several of them, of course, were wounded and injured by flying objects, but the students—

Q. Have you ever been on the Ole Miss campus?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Had you been, as of that time?

A. No, I had not.

Q. But you are now familiar with the general layout of Ole Miss campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am going to hand you this, I believe there is a plat here in the deposition that you may use to refresh your recollection. Here is one right here."

Mr. Watts: Mr. Gooch, do you have that big plat available we agreed on?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir, it is outside.

Mr. Watts: Can we bring it in?

[fol. 137] Mr. Gooch: It will take the easel to put it on.

The Court: That is a magnetized board. I have some magnets. If it is not too heavy it will hold it on the blackboard. We can try it.

Mr. Watts: Yes, may I obliterate my rather miserable architectural effort here? It is not in evidence.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Watts: At this point in the deposition, after pointing to a plat similar to this the question was asked the witness:

"Q. Is that the general lay of the land as you understand it?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Did Savell report to you, or have you since learned, that the way Savell came was from the monument, around the Lyceum Building to Booth Hall, which is about six hundred yards?

A. No, I don't think that I know where Booth Hall is right there. Now you have him coming around to—

Q. Well, his testimony was when we took his deposition was that. . . ."

Mr. Gooch: Now, if the Court please—

Mr. Watts: —that's right. I think that is—

I am skipping from Line—Page 19 through the remainder [fol. 138] of that page.

Mr. Gooch: On Page 19?

Mr. Cravens: What line number?

Mr. Watts: I am skipping the remainder of that page.

Mr. Cravens: What line number?

Mr. Watts: 17. Now starting on Page 20, the question on Line 3, "Now, he then reported to you on this occasion when he first reported that Walker had led the charge, that Walker had made a speech from the monument, and that that speech seemed to give the boys more organization. Then after the speech, he led the charge?

A. Yes, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. He made this report to you about the speech and the charge in the same telephone conversation and not in two?

A. In the same conversation.

Q. Right. Now, in other words, he didn't come and tell you that Walker was making a speech, and then come back and say that he was leading a charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nor did he tell you that Walker was leading a charge on one telephone conversation, and come back and tell you in a subsequent conversation that he was making a speech? [fol. 139] A. To the best of my knowledge, no.

Q. All right. Now, what next report did Savell give you about Walker?

A. I don't recall Savell giving me any more reports about Walker that night. I asked him later on if he saw General Walker any more, and I truthfully can't recall whether he said yes or no."

Mr. Watts: The remainder we will reserve.

Mr. Gooch: Where did you stop?

Mr. Watts: I have terminated on Line 3, Page 21.

The Court: Do you have anything to offer at this time, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: No, sir.

Mr. Watts: Call Richard Sweat.

[fol. 140] RICHARD HARVEY SWEAT, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Will you state your name, please, sir?
A. Richard Harvey Sweat.
Q. How old are you?
A. Twenty, sir. Be twenty-one in September.
Q. Where do you live?
A. Karnes, Mississippi.
Q. Were you raised in Karnes?
A. No, sir, I was raised in Tennessee, in a place about twenty miles from Karnes.
Q. Are you at this time a student at the Mississippi University?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you such a student in September and October of 1962?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What courses, Mr. Sweat, were you pursuing in college?
A. Pre-law.
Q. How long have you been at the University of [fol. 141] Mississippi at this time?
A. At that time, sir?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. I had been there about a year and a half.
Q. And that was almost a year and a half ago?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So, you have now been at Ole Miss University approximately three years?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Are you familiar with the lay of the land at Ole Miss University?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please take the pointer in front of you, take it in your hand, and step over to this chart.

May we agree, if Your Honor please, that this chart will be offered in evidence as the—actually, it is a joint exhibit. I don't know what the Court's procedure is.

The Court: If there is an agreement you can offer it. If you agree to it, both of you can use it.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

Mr. Gooch: That is satisfactory.

Mr. Watts: What, Mr. Reporter, is the next exhibit?

Mr. Nuss: Number 11.

[fol. 142] (Chart marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 11.)

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Sweat, you have before you Exhibit 11 which is a scaled reproduction of the University of Mississippi campus. Do you see a railroad at the right side of the chart about even with your chin?

A. I do.

Q. As it goes on forward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The top of the chart, of course, is north. Do you see a street, University Boulevard, as it crosses the railroad right about your chin? Much lower. Right there (indicating).

A. Here at the avenue, sir.

Q. Yes, sir, University Avenue.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you see it proceeding westward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Put your pointer at the intersection of University Avenue and the railroad.

A. (Witness complies.)

Q. And as you proceed on westward with your pointer now about how wide is that street at this point?

A. This street?

Q. Yes, sir.

[fol. 143] A. Oh, it is wider than this room.

Q. A good big wide boulevard-type street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Proceeding on westward, and do you see an installation there called the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you see a dot which is to the left of your pointer right there?

A. Right there (indicating).

Q. What is that installation?

A. That is the Confederate Monument.

Q. Will you describe please that Confederate Monument for the benefit of the Jury who have never been there?

A. The Confederate Monuments are quite a thing in Mississippi. Every town or every small community has one, in dedication to the boys who marched away in the War between the States. And Ole Miss has this particular monument dedicated to the University Grays that marched away in the War between the States. And it is a tall monument on a granite base that has a Confederate soldier standing there holding his rifle like this (indicating) and looking out on University Avenue.

Q. Does it have a base about two feet above the level of the ground?

[fol. 144] A. Yes.

Q. And then as you proceed to the right of that Confederate Statue will you identify some of the buildings?

A. This is the old Geology Building, formerly the old Library Building also. This is the YMCA Building.

Q. Wait just a minute. This YMCA Building will figure very prominently in the evidence. I think it is well to orientate the Jury at this time and identify it. Is there a street between the Circle and the YMCA Building?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that?

A. That is the Grove Loop.

Q. What is the street to the southwest of the YMCA Building?

A. This is still University Avenue.

Q. University Avenue curves around and makes a loop?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the next building to the west of the YMCA Building?

A. The Fine Arts Center.

Q. And as you proceed on then to the southwest, around University Avenue, what is the next big building you encounter?

A. The Peabody Building and the Fullerton Chapel, [fol. 145] but it sets back.

Q. What is this building (indicating) directly west of the Circle?

A. The Lyceum Building.

Q. Did that building have any personnel around it the night of this incident?

A. Yes, sir, this building was ringed by 700 Marshals that night.

Q. Now, then, moving onto the southward, what is the next big building?

A. The next building is the Chemistry Building. Chemistry and Pharmacy Building, I might add.

Q. Then circling back toward the east, what is the next building?

A. This is Carrier Hall. This is the engineering building.

Q. All right, sir.

A. Right here (indicating).

Q. Then, returning then to the point of origin, what are the rest of the buildings?

A. Well, the Chemical Engineering Building sets right here, and the new Science Building, Hume Hall, sets right here.

Q. All right. Now, on this night in question, September 30, 1962, was the Science Building, Hume Hall, in the [fol. 146] process of construction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any installation, street lights or anything of the kind just north of Hume Hall?

A. Yes, sir, a street light sets right here (indicating chart).

Q. Where is that with reference to the Confederate Statue?

A. With the Confederate Statue, it sets a little southeast.

Q. It is southeast of the Confederate Statue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, take your seat on the witness stand.

Now, Mr. Sweat, were you present on the Ole Miss campus on the night of September 30, 1962?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. Where had you been?

A. I had been home. I was returning back from home.

Q. Had there been some school activity in Jackson that day?

A. There had been a football game the Saturday before, I believe.

Q. And about what time did you arrive back on the campus?

[fol. 147] A. I got back on the campus around 4:00 o'clock that evening.

Q. What day of the week was that?

A. This was on Sunday.

Q. And at the time you got back on the campus were the students there in force, or what was the condition?

A. No. Ordinarily the students at Ole Miss arrived back at the campus from the week-end, usually about that time, around 4:00 or 5:00 o'clock, and they were just beginning to come in.

Q. Mr. Sweat, when you arrived on the campus where did you go?

A. Well, when we arrived on the campus the first thing we heard, we were stopped by some boys and we heard the first thing we knew, we had been occupied, that we had been sold out, and that the Marshals were already here, and the Army was on the way, so we went on up to the Lyceum Building.

[fol. 148] Q. Now, who is "we"?

A. This boy that rode with me, Jimmy Coggan. He is, also, from Torrance, Mississippi.

Q. All right, sir. Continue then with what occurred.

A. We stopped at the Lyceum Building. The Marshals hadn't ringed the Lyceum Building at that time. We stood around and talked and then a few minutes later, trucks drove up with Marshals in the back of them. These were Army trucks. Marshals standing in the back of these trucks had on white helmets, a vest—some people say they were bullet-proof vests, I don't know.

The vests had tear gas canisters in them and many of the Marshals carried big tear gas guns.

The trucks pulled up around the University Loop in front of the Lyceum Building. The tailgates were dropped and the Marshals got out and immediately ringed the Lyceum Building.

Q. Were those typical six by six Military-type trucks?

A. Yes, sir, they were all Military trucks.

Q. Go ahead.

A. The Marshals got out. They formed a double line in the front of the Lyceum Building and single line running around the back.

The Marshals stood shoulder to shoulder. They didn't say anything. You could ask them something. A Marshal [fol. 149] wouldn't say anything to you.

This was a curiosity to the students. Many of the students immediately came down. People from the Student Union Building got word that the Marshals had ringed the Lyceum Building and the people came down.

I took my things on back up to the room and took the boy that had ridden with me over to the fraternity house and he put his things up and we returned.

By this time the word had gotten all over the campus. Boys who had seen it were running around to the fraternity houses and to the dormitories, passing the word.

This made a lot of people angry because the Lyceum Building holds a very special place on the Ole Miss campus. And to see it ringed by Marshals, naturally caused resentment and drew a crowd.

Q. Could you roughly estimate the size of that crowd at that time?

A. Well, the size of this crowd at this time, I would say, three or four thousand, because this included all the students that had returned and it was a tremendous crowd down there finally, toward late evening.

Q. Now, roughly, Mr. Sweat, where was that crowd distributed?

A. This crowd was distributed, running from the En- [fol. 150] gineering—I mean the Chemistry-Pharmacy Building in front of the Lyceum Building—

Q. Now, Mr. Sweat, until the Jury gets these places pretty well fixed in their mind, I wish at this point you would take your pointer and again show them just where these installations are.

A. The crowd stretched from this point of the Chemistry-Pharmacy Building on around. We were in the street then. On around on University Circle, down here in the front of Peabody, almost to the side of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Now, where is Labuve Hall

A. Labuve? Labuve is right here.

Q. All right, sir. And at that time were there any Highway Patrolmen in the area?

A. Yes, sir, there were Highway Patrolmen.

Q. I wish you would point out to the Court and Jury where the Highway Patrolmen were stationed.

A. At first, the Highway Patrolmen, of course, were at the exits. But then the Highway Patrol moved in and they were stationed out in front with the students.

Q. Now, coming eastward from the Lyceum Building, who were the first personnel that you would encounter?

A. Coming eastward?

Q. Yes.

[fol. 151] A. The first personnel you would encounter coming this way would be students.

Q. No, I mean walking out of the Lyceum Building.

A. Oh, walking out of the Lyceum?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. The first personnel you would encounter would be Marshals.

Q. Do I understand there was a double ring of Marshals?

A. Yes.

Q. Who would be the next personnel?

A. The next personnel would be the Highway Patrol.

Q. Now, what was the number of this Highway Patrol? Can you give us a rough estimate?

A. I'm not sure about that, sir. I would say 200 probably.

Q. Was there an interval or distance between the U. S. Marshals and the Highway Patrol?

A. Not at first. Now, when the Highway Patrol moved in, they formed a line between the students and the Marshals.

Q. All right. What was the distance between the line of Marshals and the line of Highway Patrolmen?

A. At first, the distance was about fifteen feet. Ten—ten, fifteen feet.

[fol. 152] Q. And what was the distance then between the Highway Patrolmen and the students?

A. The students were right up against the Highway Patrolmen. They were wanting to get up closer but the Highway Patrol wouldn't let them.

Q. All right, sir. You may return to your seat.

Now, continuing, please give this Jury as accurate a word picture and a description of what you saw and what occurred from that time on until the Highway Patrol personnel left the campus.

A. Well, the Highway Patrol moved in, got between the students and the Marshals. The students—a lot of students were mad by this time because the Marshals had ringed the Lyceum Building. They resented this. And there was opposition growing, discontent. People were thumping cigarette butts at the Marshals and throwing pebbles at them. I say "pebbles", now. No rocks like a lot of people say. There are no rocks on the University Loop. It's all paved. You won't find rocks. You will find pebbles. Students were throwing that.

[fol. 153] Well, the highway patrol moved in between and the men started to tell us just to calm down, no reason to get excited.

Chancellor Williams came out, pleaded with the students, said break up, said go back to your dormitories, you can't do any good down here.

Dean Love walked among the crowd, trying to persuade them to break up but the crowd wouldn't do it. They felt by this time that things had gone too far.

Q. Now was this daylight or dark?

A. This was still daylight.

Q. All right, sir. Now where were you roughly at that time?

A. Just out in the crowd, milling around in front of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Now is that in the area marked as the circle?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, sir, go ahead.

A. Toward late evening, almost at dusk, the highway patrol suddenly formed a straight line and started pushing the students back. The reason they were doing this is because the trucks—

Mr. Gooch: Now we object to the reason.

Mr. Watts: That's right, you possibly don't know the reason. You're just a pre-law student, Mr. Sweat, not into [fol. 154] the law yet. That is not proper evidence, so go ahead—

The Court: Just tell what you saw.

A. All right, I will. They were pushing us back. Well, I could tell you why they were pushing us back.

Q. But what went on in the Marshals' mind is not proper evidence so you just tell what you—

A. Well, they were pushing—anyway, they pushed us back.

Q. You were pushed back?

A. We were pushed back and while they were pushing us back, they had their backs to us and the students were, well, they were—well, they were allowing, you know, the highway to push them back on the grass. What they evidently were wanting to do was to form an empty zone there between the Marshals and the students.

Q. And after they pushed you back, about how wide was this empty zone?

A. Well, while they were pushing us back, that's when the riot broke.

Q. Tell us what happened?

A. Well, while they were pushing the students back, suddenly the Marshals leveled tear gas and opened fire.

Q. Did you hear a command?

A. No, I didn't hear a command. I was out in the crowd. [fol. 155] I wasn't paying any attention to the Marshals. I had turned around, you know, to see where I was stepping. And all of a sudden we had tear gas.

Q. At that time was there any violence of any kind existent?

A. No, sir.

Q. Describe to the jury to the very ultimate of your recollection exactly what you saw and what occurred.

A. Well, the Marshals opened fire with tear gas. It threw a thick cloud of smoke all over the students and the highway patrol was completely stunned. Some of the men even got hit in the back—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute.

The Court: You don't know whether they were or not. You testify to what you saw and not what you are guessing at.

The Witness: Well, that's just what I saw.

The Court: You don't know whether they were stunned or not.

The Witness: One was hit in the back, sir.

The Court: Well, you just testify to what you saw.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Tell us, Mr. Sweat, about that one that was hit in the back. What did he look like?

[fol. 156] A. He was a big, heavy-set fellow.

Q. After he was hit, was he horizontal or vertical?

A. He was still standing up but I wouldn't care to repeat what he said.

Q. Well, don't repeat what he said just tell what he did and what you saw.

A. Well, he ran down with the students. All the students ran when that went off. All the students ran down to the Confederate statue.

Q. Now is that eastward from the Lyceum?

A. That's towards the east, sir.

Q. About that time what—could you roughly estimate the size of this group of students?

A. It was still—it was still a pretty good sized crowd.

Q. Were all the students in the circle or were some of them elsewhere?

A. Well, no, not all the students were in the circle. Most of the students, like I say, were there in front of the Peabody Building and around near Carrier Hall.

Q. Would that be northwest of the so-called circle?

A. That would be north, northwest of the circle.

Q. All right, sir.

A. Some were over at the YMCA Building, too.

Q. Go ahead and describe the events.

[fol. 157] A. Well, the students ran back to the Confederate statue. We milled around. We didn't know what was happening. We got together again and we thought somebody had done something, you know, that—

Q. Now Mr. Sweat, was there any leadership at all of this group of students?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we believe that is a conclusion, that he can tell exactly what he saw.

The Court: Sustained. I instruct the jury not to consider it for any purpose.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Tell the jury what was the organization of this group of students, how they reacted and to whom they looked for instructions and orders.

A. Well, they didn't look to anyone. They were completely bewildered. They didn't know what to do. After that first volley went off, the students got together and they started walking back up towards the Lyceum Building. That's west.

They started walking back up towards the Lyceum Building and suddenly the Marshals charged again and this time drove all the students that were in the circle past the Confederate statue and back down University Avenue almost to the Journalism Building.

Q. And what happened to the highway patrolmen then?

[fol. 158] A. Well, some were with us but not all of them. I don't know what happened to the rest of them. There were a few down with us though.

Q. And what was the attitude and demeanor of the crowd at that time?

A. Well, after the second volley went off the crowd was ready to fight then. The boys started picking up bricks and bottles and started back toward the Marshals.

Q. Now as they went back describe to the jury how they went back and in terms of just how they looked to you.

A. Well, the way it looked to me, was that there were a few students that—after the second volley went off and we had been driven back down, they picked up some bricks and bottles and said, "We've had it, we've had it, we've had enough. Let's go back and fight."

And the people started picking up things then and the students went up almost as one body at that time, just together.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And the Marshals started a charge again and we charged back this time.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And pushed the Marshals back up to the Lyceum Building. This was tried getting all the students together for one, you might say, big student push.

[fol. 159] We tried that two or three times but it's too costly because each time we tried it, get up near the Lyceum Building, the Marshals would just level their tear gas guns and cut loose with a volley, so you couldn't bring a large group up near the Lyceum Building in what you might call a charge.

Q. And then what happened?

A. The students fell back to that Confederate statue. A lot of people—a lot of people really wanted to defend that statue. I don't know why. They said, "By God, this is ours. We're holding." And they did. Students milled around. They busted up concrete benches in the circle, boys went down to Hume Hall. That was the new Science Building under construction then.

They started hauling back bricks, anything you could get your hands on, coke bottles, or anything. You would pick it up, you would run back up to the circle, you would have to go through the tear gas to chunk.

Q. You said boys would do that. Now explain to the jury how that was organized or how it operated.

A. Well, everyone was on his own, really. If you wanted to throw something, you would have to get your own what you might call ammunition.

You might start out and there would be about four or five boys and they would be going your way, too, and you [fol. 160] would say, "Well, come on, let's go," and just whoever would fall in and go—that's what your charge would consist of. Now then—

Q. There was no organization?

A. There was no organization.

Q. How long did that condition continue?

A. This continued all night long.

Q. Was there ever any organization, as you say?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as a conclusion.

The Court: Sustained. The jury is instructed not to consider it for any purpose.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right. Explain to the jury what you observed then with respect to this subject you are talking about from there on out.

A. To the riot, sir?

Q. No, this matter of the group of students and the size of the group and their actions?

A. Well, groups of students would get together. Probably the largest group you would see charged would be a group of 20. Some boys—some boys hit upon the idea that if you charged in a small group, the Marshals would charge you back; you could draw them in between two buildings where some more boys would be and you could jump them.

[fol. 161] Well, this worked, this worked for a little while. But the Marshals caught on to this and they wouldn't do that any more.

So the boys—boys throwing rocks and bottles extending all the way down from the Chemistry Pharmacy Building all the way through the grove on up to the YMCA Building were throwing and not more than groups of 20—groups of five, six, seven, things like that.

Sometimes you would just go by yourself and throw.

Q. Do you have any idea roughly of the time when the Marshals first fired the gas?

A. No, sir, I don't. I left my watch back in the room and I wasn't too concerned with time at that time.

Q. All right, sir. Did you at any time during the course of that evening encounter an individual whom you recognized from pictures or anything else as General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, that night.

Q. Could you take your pointer and point out to the jury with respect to the Confederate monument where you first saw General Walker?

A. When I first saw General Walker, he was standing about—well, I would say two to four feet right off the sidewalk here.

Q. Now what direction is that from the Confederate [fol. 162] monument?

A. Well, from the Confederate monument, it's still south, southeast.

Q. All right, sir. Now about how far would you say it was to the monument, if you could estimate?

A. From where I saw General Walker to the monument?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Twenty feet.

Q. Now then as you have been doing and to the very best of your recollection, try to reconstruct in your mind exactly what you saw and what occurred after General Walker appeared at this point and you saw him, and tell the jury just what you saw and what occurred.

A. Well, my attention was drawn to General Walker. The cry went up, "General Walker is here, General Walker is here. We have got a leader."

And there was a crowd there at that time because we had just finished beating up a reporter—no, not a reporter. He was a chemistry professor. He was down there taking names and he was recognized. The boys didn't want reporters around because they feared if they got their picture in the paper or something, you know, it could get them in trouble—and especially professors taking names. That didn't go over too well either.

Q. You didn't like that?

[fol. 163] A. No, sir. So they had just finished beating him up and escorting him down University Avenue and there was a small crowd down there. And the cry went up, "General Walker is here."

I was standing just a little west of the statue. I looked around and saw General Walker.

Q. Now was this position where you were west of the statue in the so-called circle?

A. Where I was?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. I looked around and saw General Walker. Boys were running up to him, shaking his hand. They wanted to meet him. They just wanted to see what he was like. People had heard of General Walker but we hadn't met him. I was curious, too.

I went down where he was. There was still boys charging at this time. A lot of people didn't know Walker had arrived. Just the people down in there knew it.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Walker milled around in the crowd with the boys, shaking hands. The boys kept asking him, "Where are your volunteers?"

And he wouldn't answer that.

[fol. 164] And they said, "Well, General, what should we do? Give us some advice."

And he would just shake his head.

And the boys began to start wondering about him then. They said, "Well, what's he here for," you know. They thought that—

Mr. Gooch: We object.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. You can't say what they thought?

A. Well, anyway, I thought—

Q. You can say what you said.

Mr. Gooch: Whatever you say is fine.

A. I thought when I first—my first impression, when General Walker came up, I thought, "Well," I said, "Here we have got a leader." I said, "We have got a leader finally, somebody can lead this thing."

But I found out that General Walker wouldn't lead it. The boys found this out, too. And some of them drifted off, you know, and some of them were right resentful at it—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—

Mr. Watts: We withdraw it.

The Witness: I'm sorry. I'm saying the same thing again.

Mr. Gooch: We are going to protect this record regardless of the levity of this matter.

The Court: I understand.

[fol. 165] Mr. Gooch: And I object to the remarks of the witness. He's been cautioned about it and I respectfully request the Court to advise the witness to talk about things he knows.

The Court: That's what I'm getting ready to do, Mr. Gooch.

Mr. Watts: That's right.

The Court: Mr. Sweat, you will find, after you get through law school, there is such a thing as a conclusion. You can't look into somebody else's mind and determine what they think, see?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: So in describing your story, limit yourself to what you saw, what you actually observed and not what you think somebody else thought or observed.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. That's fine. Now then, son, go ahead with your description to the jury without me bothering you. You just tell this jury exactly what you saw and what occurred.

A. People were still milling around. Boys were still coming back from the charges they had made. They were coming right past Walker down to Hume Hall.

They didn't even recognize General Walker, a lot of them.

Mr. Gooch: Well, if the Court please—

[fol. 166] The Witness: I know they didn't because my roommate was one of them.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, son.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—

Mr. Watts: We withdraw that.

The Court: Mr. Sweat, you are going to be in trouble with me in a minute.

The Witness: Yes, sir, I'm sorry. I just can't—

The Court: And I advise you not to do that.

The Witness: I just keep messing up, huh?

The Court: Yes, you just keep messing up. Now you just testify to what you saw.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

The Court: And what you observed?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. That's fine. Just go ahead and tell the jury what you saw.

A. The rumor was going around in the crowd, verbal rumor—

The Court: Now did you hear or see the rumor?

The Witness: Yes, sir, I heard the rumor.

The Court: You saw the rumor?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: What does a rumor look like?

The Witness: The rumor was passed by word of mouth—

[fol. 167] The Court: Did you see it? You heard it.

The Witness: I heard it.

The Court: You testify to what you saw.

Mr. Watts: All right, go ahead.

A. What I saw?

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Yeah. Just tell what you saw. Don't tell the rumor.

A. Well, I saw students pleading with General Walker to get up and speak because they thought—well, I take that back. Anyway, we thought—I thought Governor Barnett had sold us out.

There were fights going on because of that. Finally General Walker did get up, stepped up on the base of the statue—

Q. Just a minute. Before he stepped on the statue, I wish you would go up there and take your pointer and point out to the jury where he went from the first place under the street light where you saw him. Just trace his course on the chart.

A. Well, when I saw General Walker, like I say, he was standing somewhere right in here.

Q. About how long did he stand there?

A. He stood there—I couldn't say, but he stood there a little while because there were a lot of boys that wanted to shake hands with him.

[fol. 168] He walked up towards the YMCA Building like he didn't know where he was—that's the impression I got.

He stopped and looked around and then he came back. Then he stepped up near the statue over here to the south of it, and he walked just a little north—I mean just a little west of it, stopped and he looked up towards the Lyceum Building.

And the boys were still around him, telling him, well, what was going on and everything.

Q. Was anyone specifically with Walker at that time?

A. Specifically with Walker?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I didn't notice anyone.

Q. Yes, sir. All right, go ahead and tell the jury, point out as nearly as you can roughly what the furthest west point he reached may have been.

A. I would say just about here.

Q. Now in terms—what is that installation in the middle of the circle?

A. That's the flagpole.

Q. And is that about, oh, a little over half-way between the Confederate monument and the west end of the circle?

A. Yes.

Q. Now in terms of fractions, roughly how far from the [fol. 169] monument to the flagpole did General Walker get on that occasion?

A. I wouldn't say quite half-way.

Q. All right, sir. And then how long did he stay in that position?

A. Just a few minutes.

Q. All right. What occurred then?

A. The thing was still going on.

Q. All right. You can go back then to your seat.

A. People were still rioting. Tear gas was still being fired.

About that time some boys over near the Chemistry Pharmacy Building had just made a charge and the Marshals had leveled some tear gas over there.

Q. And then where did General Walker go?

A. Then he came back to the, near the Confederate statue.

Q. Now up to that time, did General Walker lead the charge?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We object, if the Court please.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute now, I would—

Mr. Gooch: A conclusion on the part of this witness. He can testify what happened.

Mr. Watts: May counsel approach the bench?

[fol. 170] (Conference at the bench.)

Mr. Watts: That's what I wanted to get straight. Loan me your pointer there, son.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, son, as General Walker moved from this point here just northwest of the street light and southeast of the Confederate monument over to this point you have marked about not quite half-way to the flagpole, what gait did he travel?

A. He walked.

Q. He did. What type of a walk?

A. Just a slow, casual walk.

Q. Was anyone around him?

A. Yes, sir, students were still around him.

Q. Was anyone between him and the Marshals around the Lyceum at that time?

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Well, would you estimate for the benefit of the Court and jury what the size of the group was between Walker as he walked in this direction and the Marshals?

[fol. 171] A. That would be hard to do, sir, because a lot of the boys in the building—there were some up there breaking up benches, some had just come back from the charge, and there was tear gas smoke. I couldn't be too sure. But just as a guess—

Mr. Gooch: If Your Honor please, we will object to the guess.

Q. That is all right. Give us your best judgment.

A. This is just a guess.

Q. Don't call it a guess. Give us your best judgment.

A. My best judgment would be forty or forty-five people in that area.

Q. All right, now, what was Walker's actions with respect to anyone on beyond him toward the Marshals?

A. There was none.

Q. Did he have any contact with them?

A. Any what?

Q. Any contact with the people out in front that were throwing things at the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say anything to them?

A. No, sir.

Q. As nearly as you possibly can I wish you would report to the Jury everything Walker said to you boys [fol. 172] around him after he appeared at this point, until he started backward up from the position between the Monument and the flagpole?

A. Well, mainly what he said, people would introduce themselves, he would shake their hands, say, "Glad to meet you," or something. People would ask him, "General, what should we do, the Marshals have got the Lyceum Building ringed now, shouldn't we get some boys and go over here and do this or do that?" And General Walker wouldn't say anything. And one boy really got mad about it, he said—

Mr. Gooch: Well, now—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Don't get into what the other boys said.

A. Well.

Q. Did you at any time—strike that.

Did at any time during this interval between your first observing Walker as he came on the campus and the time when he came up there and walked back toward the monument, did anyone at this time have ahold of his arms, in this manner (indicating)? As he walked.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you notice a rather portly heavy-set individual that came up to the group about that time?

A. No, sir. I did notice one. He was from Columbus [fol. 173] though. I saw him earlier that evening.

Q. Now, then, did—did or did not General Walker—strike that.

Did you hear one identified man query Walker as he approached the group, "General, will you lead us to the steps?"

A. Yes, sir. I don't know that that is the man you are talking about, but I did hear that question asked.

Q. Did or did not you observe Walker as, ". . . he loosened his tie and shirt and nodded 'yes' without speaking?"

A. No, sir.

Q. Did that occur?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he confer with a group of about fifteen persons who appeared to be riot leaders?

A. Well, now, that was probably the group I was in.

Q. All right. Tell the Jury exactly what happened.

A. Well, if the President of the University thought I was a riot leader I wouldn't be in school very long. This was after the speech.

Q. That was what I was trying to get the timing on.

A. This is after the speech.

[fol. 174] Q. Well, now, to further fix the time on it, did Walker, after he came back from the position there approximately half way between the monument and the flagpole, did he make a speech from the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did anything unusual occur in University Avenue just south of the monument just before he made the speech?

A. Just before he made the speech?

Q. Yes.

A. There was a lot of confusion down there.

Q. Was there any vehicles?

A. Not that I remember. Down near the Journalism Building.

Q. At any time prior to this incident you are talking about when Walker made the speech did Walker assume command of the crowd estimated at a thousand?

Mr. Gooch: Leading and suggestive.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right, I was just going down the terms but, all right, we will not proceed that way then.

All right, you say Walker came back from that position and made a speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you outlined to us everything that you [fol. 175] remember that he did and that you saw him do between the time he arrived on the campus and the time he made the speech?

A. Well, I think—now, he didn't go directly from there to the Confederate Monument. He came back and was down around the Confederate Monument, and then later made the speech.

Q. Was tear gas fired at the group where he was just—strike that.

I see counsel is going to object and I don't want to ask anything remotely objectionable. All I want you to do is tell the Jury what you saw and what happened. Tell us about any tear gas being fired, if any, and where it was fired while he was up in the area west of the monument.

A. West of the monument?

Q. Yes.

A. There was still tear gas up from the flagpole, or up to the Lyceum Building, was a flat of tear gas. This was pretty thick. You could see through it every now and then. Now, there wasn't too much of a breeze that night, so it kind of hung over in the Grove. When this tear gas would clear up the Marshals would let go another salvo of it and build up a cloud.

Q. How close were you to Walker?

[fol. 176] A. Well, I was pretty close to him.

Q. How many feet?

A. Well, I was—I could reach out and touch him.

Q. Now, while you were in that position what was the nearest tear gas that came to you and to Walker?

A. The nearest tear gas?

Q. That is pellets that were fired.

A. There was one that landed over by the—facing the Lyceum Building, there was one that landed to the left of us over there near the street, almost. That was about the closest I remember. Of course, there were so many fired that night it would be hard to tell.

Q. Now, when Walker returned from that position to the area near the monument, what was his gait?

A. He was still walking.

Q. What kind of a walk?

A. It was just—my impression, just a casual stroll, just to look it over; things.

Q. And what were the students doing around him?

A. The students, by this time, had kind of, they were just—

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What were they doing?

A. They were just walking along with him.

Q. That is what we are trying to get.

[fol. 177] A. Standing around him. Some people had just heard he was there.

Q. Don't tell us that, what they heard. And what was the gait of the students?

A. Oh, they were in a slow gait too. They were keeping up with him.

Q. What were the actions of the students in his immediate vicinity?

A. Well, they were just standing around him.

Q. Were any of that group participating at that time in throwing things at the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, then, describe to the very best of your ability what happened from the time you started back from the position west of the monument until he made his speech on the monument?

A. I am not too sure about that. Walker did come down to the monument and he stood around in that area and there were a lot of things still going on over around the Lyceum Building. I returned and watched that for a little while, but I know Walker stayed down in that area.

Q. Then, what did he do?

A. He made a speech on the statue.

Q. Would you outline please for the Jury to the best of your recollection what General Walker told the boys from [fol. 178] the statue?

A. General Walker got on the statue and he said something to this effect, he said, "You have a right to protest. It is guaranteed to you in the Constitution. This is not the way, it is the long way around."

He said, "You do have a right to protest, . . ." but he said something about, ". . . Cuba being yonderway." That is the best I remember.

Q. What was the reaction? Was there any sound that come from the students?

A. There was some jeers.

Q. What?

A. Jeers, boos.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Walker stepped down and the crowd dwindled off. Walker stepped to the right of the Confederate Monument and this is when I talked to him. He stepped down to his immediate right and he came passed me. This is now when the group of around fifteen boys were around Walker. The other crowds had drifted off.

Q. Tell us about that.

A. Walker stepped down and walked past, just a few feet west of the Confederate Statue, and stopped, and looked around, and he lit a cigarette, and—

Q. Are you sure of that?

[fol. 179] A. Yes, sir, I know he did because at that time I borrowed a cigarette from him.

Q. Did you have any cigarettes of your own?

A. Yes, sir, they were back in the room though. I didn't bring anything down with me.

Q. Then what happened?

A. We stood and talked with General Walker, some of us did, just a general conversation. We discussed politics. I asked him about his training program he had over in Germany and we talked about things like that; just a general conversation.

Q. What was going on further toward the west at that time?

A. Oh, further toward the west, the same thing. Boys in small groups started throwing at the Marshals and they were charging and coming back, and the Marshals were still shooting tear gas.

Q. What were the group of boys immediately around Walker doing?

A. The boys immediately around Walker were just standing around.

Q. Were any of them at that time throwing things?

A. No, sir.

Q. At this point, could you take the pointer there and show the Jury where this conversation took place?

[fol. 180] A. Right about in here (indicating chart). That is about southwest of the Statue.

Q. And about how long did that session there take place?

A. I would say twenty minutes.

Q. Where did Walker go from there?

A. Walker started out over this way (indicating), and I still stood there and watched him. I was watching him because a boy had asked me to keep an eye on him.

Mr. Gooch: Now—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Don't say what the boy told you to do. Just tell us—

A. He walked up this way, (indicating), and stopped and stood around. He seemed to start back. At this point I lost him. I got interested in something else.

Q. Did you have any more contact with Walker from that time on?

A. No, sir, I didn't see him any more that night.

Mr. Watts: Take your seat. I believe that is all.

The Court: We will recess before cross examination. Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until a quarter until 11:00 by this clock in here.

[fol. 181] (Thereupon, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 11, was marked for identification.)

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. In September of 1962, you were approximately 18 years of age, is that correct?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nineteen?

A. Nineteen.

Q. All right. You had been a student at the University of Mississippi, I believe you testified, for about a year and a half?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you recall when the school year opened in the year 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?

A. In September.

Q. Do you remember what date?

A. No, sir, I am not sure about that.

Q. Do you remember what date, about what date, you got on the campus for the Fall Semester for 1962?

A. What day I got on the campus for the Fall Semester?

Q. That's right.

A. No, sir, not the exact date.

[fol. 182] Q. Well, prior to the time that the Fall Semester began at Ole Miss in 1962, it was general knowledge in the State of Mississippi and elsewhere as to the Meredith case, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were aware, when you entered school in September of 1962, that the United States Court of Appeals had ordered Meredith on the campus in the status of a student, were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that Governor Ross Barnett exercising his prerogatives as Governor of the State of Mississippi was using considerable force to prevent the entry of Meredith into Ole Miss, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that Meredith, on more than one occasion, had been turned away from registering in Ole Miss by both Governor Ross Barnett and Lt. Governor Johnson, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on the campus on September 25th, 1962, when the Governor, in connection with certain law enforcement agencies, refused to admit Meredith to Ole Miss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time, an angry resentment came up from the student body in support of Governor Ross Barnett, did it not?

[fol. 183] A. A resentment to Governor Ross Barnett?

Q. No, a resentment to the entry of Meredith?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the students—I will confine it to you. You felt that Governor Ross Barnett was right, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt that the United States District Court or the United States Court of Appeals was wrong, did you not?

A. Well, not necessarily, sir.

Q. All right.

A. I felt that they were wrong in this case.

Q. All right.

A. Because of James Meredith's Air Force record. The doctors had testified he was in a nervous state of condition. And I felt that Mississippi had a right, and—as a state, on behalf of the people, to take their case before the Supreme Court, before a full tribunal.

Q. You did know, however, that a final judgment had been entered by the Fifth Circuit ordering Meredith admitted, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did know that Governor Ross Barnett, Lt. Governor Johnson and all of those persons acting in concert had been enjoined from interfering in any way with the entry [fol. 184] of Meredith as a student at Ole Miss, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. You also knew those things on September the 30th, 1962, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I believe you have testified that you are a pre-law student?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you enter the University of Mississippi for the purpose of becoming a lawyer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew at that time that the Court's Decrees, edicts and injunctions had to be obeyed until overruled, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you still of that same opinion?

A. Yes, sir, I am.

Q. All right. Now the reason I alluded to your youth—I say this in all fairness. That's something that we have all had, some of us have passed on beyond past that but something we cherish deeply.

Eighteen, nineteen-year-old youth is capable of perception and remembering what things have happened, is he not?

A. Yes, sir, he could be.

[fol. 185] Q. You consider yourself one of those, do you not?

A. Well, I remember certain things—I mean—

Q. All right. I believe you testified that you arrived on the campus somewhere around 4:30 in the afternoon of Sunday, September 30th?

A. 4:00 o'clock.

Q. 4:00 o'clock. And at that time was there any activity on the campus at all?

A. By what. . . . "activity"?

Q. Were there any students around the Lyceum Building or down in the circle?

A. There were a few, yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything unusual occurring at that time in the nature of any rock throwing or things of that sort?

A. No, sir, not at that time.

Q. Now did you leave the area from the time you arrived on the campus around 4:00 o'clock until after the first burst of tear gas was fired?

A. No, sir, I was there before the first burst of tear gas was fired.

Q. All right. Then you remained constantly—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —on the campus until the tear gas was fired and for some time after that?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 186] Q. All right. Now do you know about what time the Marshals came on the campus?

A. I would say 5:00 or 5:30. Now I didn't have my watch at that time.

Q. I understand, and I am not holding you to times. I'm just giving you an approximation.

A. It was daylight.

Q. Still daylight. Now you knew why the Marshals were there, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You knew that the Marshals were there for the purpose of enforcing a court decree, did you not?

A. Yes, sir. But the court decree that I understood that they were enforcing was one that was handed down by Hugo Black over the telephone, mobilizing them.

Q. That makes a difference to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to whether or not it's written?

A. It did.

Q. And you didn't know that the Fifth Circuit Court had ordered Meredith into that University?

A. That the—the Circuit Court had—I can't think who it was—somebody had given the State of Mississippi a stay. Might have been Judge Sidney Miles, I'm not sure.

Q. Or Judge Cameron, to be exact?

[fol. 187] A. Or Cameron.

Q. And the stay had been revoked by Justice Black, is that correct?

A. Yes, it was a stalemate and Justice Black broke it.

Q. And Justice Black is on the Supreme Court of the United States, is he not?

A. Yes.

Q. And Justice Cameron is the District Court of Mississippi, I mean Justice Cameron is on the Circuit Court?

A. Circuit Court.

Q. You do realize, as a pre-law student, that the Supreme Court has a higher power than a Circuit Court, do you not?

A. Yes, sir, but one man—

Q. All right. One man or ten, it matters not.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, this is an awfully unequal struggle between a lawyer of the experience of Mr. Gooch and a pre-law student.

Now within limits, I have no objections but it becomes argumentative after so long a period of time.

The Court: Is that in the form of an objection, Counsel?

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, it's argumentative at this point.

[fol. 188] The Court: Then it's overruled.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now I take it that you did not attend the football game in Jackson?

A. No, sir.

Q. You had come from your home at Karnes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now when you saw the Marshals come on the campus, about where were you with respect to the Lyceum Building?

A. I was in front of the Lyceum Building, standing on the grass in the circle.

Q. Were the highway patrolmen there at that time?

A. There were a few there.

Q. More came later?

A. More came in just right after the Marshals started—

Q. Then without going into a great number of details, I believe you testified, and I would like for you to elaborate a little more, if you will, on whether or not things started being tossed at the Marshals, as you put it, or thrown, pebbles, cigarette butts, et cetera?

A. Yes, sir, pebbles and cigarette butts were tossed at the Marshals.

Q. Now there had been no gas fired prior to that time, had there?

A. No, sir.

Q. The tenor of the crowd, did you hear some cursing? [fol. 189] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And abuse—

A. As a matter of fact, our school yell has a few words in it and they were giving that.

Q. You hurled that at the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Marshals answer back? I believe you said they remained silent?

A. Yes, sir, they did. They remained silent. People would ask them something and they wouldn't say anything. They would just look at you.

Q. Then the students, or whoever was there, started throwing a few rocks and pebbles at them?

A. A few pebbles and cigarette butts.

Q. All right. How about, anything catch afire? Did anything catch afire?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't see a canvas top on one of the automobile—Army trucks catch afire from a match or cigarette that was tossed into it?

A. That—I read that in a report somewhere. There was no fire at that time.

Q. All right. At least, if there was, you didn't see it, is that correct?

A. I was standing there. I would have seen it had there [fol. 190] been—

Q. While you were standing there, were you doing some of the pebble tossing?

A. No, sir, I was with a bunch that was yelling.

Q. You were yelling?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say your school yell has a few words that amount to taunts, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Some of the language, though, was beyond the taunting stage, was it not?

A. Well, that depends upon the person, I guess.

Q. Very well. Now would you attempt to estimate the time—I know you didn't have a watch—attempt to estimate the time or about the time that the first tear gas was fired?

A. Oh, it was about—it was close to about 40 minutes after the Marshals had ringed the Lyceum Building.

Q. Was it still daylight or was it dark?

A. It was just—just a little daylight left.

Q. Just a little daylight left?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were you hit by the tear gas?

A. No, sir, I wasn't hit by it. I got some of it, though.

[fol. 191] Q. You hadn't thrown anything up to that time?

A. Not up to that time, no, sir.

Q. But after that time, you decided to really join in the riot, didn't you?

A. After the second volley.

Q. After the second volley?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That's when you made up your mind to do what you could do, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And you set about to direct whatever havoc you could towards the Marshals, didn't you, Mr. Sweat?

A. No, sir, I didn't direct any havoc.

Q. Did you throw anything at the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that wouldn't be havoc?

A. Well, it was havoc but I wasn't directing any.

Q. You weren't throwing at the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. A choice of words. Now do you know about how long things were thrown at the Marshals that night?

A. All night long, sir. Even up through dawn, even at the Army when they came in.

[fol. 192] Q. Was that throwing at the Marshals almost continuously and constant throughout the night from the time of the second salvo of tear gas was fired?

A. Well, looking at the night as a whole, it was continuous and constant, because there was always somebody running out there throwing something.

Q. Now, you did participate in some of this—would you call this a mob?

A. Well, not really.

Q. Would you call it a riot?

A. I would call it a riot.

Q. All right, was it obvious a riot was occurring there in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Sure, a riot was occurring.

Q. Now, let's go a step further in your dissertation, and come down to the question of your moving away from the Lyceum Building, and get down to the time you were in the party, or I believe you said you were in the party that beat up a chemistry professor.

A. I was down there at the time. I was still standing behind the Confederate statue because they beat him up east of the Confederate statue, on the east—East Avenue.

Q. I must have misunderstood you. I understood you to say, "We . . . "?

[fol. 193] A. Well, "We". I consider myself part of the student body. But I didn't beat him up.

Q. You didn't participate in that?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. But some of your group did?

A. Yes, sir. Not my group. I mean the students did.

Q. Was anybody else beaten up?

A. Yes, sir, there were reporters beat up that night, people with cameras.

Q. Did you witness the beating up of a reporter and see his camera smashed and his car kicked around a good deal?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was before General Walker arrived on the campus, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that was still in the evening. The reporter was from Texas, driving a station wagon?

Q. I believe from the Dallas News, if I am not mistaken.

A. Yes.

Q. You say that was in the evening?

A. Yes, sir, that was still—that was still in the evening, kind of. That was before the volley of tear gas was fired. The reason the students beat this reporter up—

[fol. 194] Q. Never mind about the reason. If you will stick to the facts, please, sir, I think we will get along a little bit better.

Now, you said on direct examination, and correct me if I am wrong, that when you first saw General Walker was just after this chemistry professor had been beat up, and escorted down the University Avenue?

A. Not just after. I explained there was a crowd. That is why there was a lot of people down there. They had witnessed the beating, and some of them were still hanging around.

Q. Now, give me again, if you will, please, the place on the campus, or near the campus, where you first saw General Walker?

A. It was right here (indicating).

Q. You are pointing to a place a little bit east and south of the Confederate monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe General Walker's movements from the time you saw him until I ask you another question.

A. Yes, sir. Well, like I said, I saw General Walker here, coming up, and people were introducing themselves. General Walker walked toward the YMCA Building and stopped and came back in here (indicating chart), walked [fol. 195] over here, not quite halfway. He came back again in this area, still moving around.

Q. Let's dwell on that a moment, if you will, please. You may resume your seat. When General Walker arrived on the campus, I believe you stated that quite a number of the students rushed up to him and started saying various things, "Here is General Walker, we have a leader, where are the volunteers," and things of that sort?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it obvious to you, with your perception, that you and the crowd was rather glad to see General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: Excuse me, if Your Honor please. If we want to throw this open, what this man thinks the crowd was thinking, that is fine with me, but I want it understood that if he goes into it I will.

The Court: Are you objecting to it?

Mr. Watts: I just want it understood that I will go into it.

The Court: No, we are not going to do that. Are you objecting to it?

Mr. Watts: I don't care. It is all right with me. I want to bring out the whole facts. We can bring out anything. [fol. 196] Mr. Gooch: If the Court has ruled, may I have the answer to the question?

A. Will you repeat that question?

Mr. Gooch: Read it back to him, Mr. Nuss.

(Question read.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I will reframe that question. Were you glad to see General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I was glad to see General Walker.

Q. Had you heard about General Walker before?

A. I had heard about General Walker before.

Q. Did you make any outcry to the General as he came on the campus?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. But you did hear it said, "Here is General Walker?"

A. "Here is General Walker."

Q. "Here is our leader?"

A. That's right—wait, take that back.

Q. Did you hear it said?

A. Yes, sir, they said, "We have got a leader now."

Q. Then was a question asked General Walker among that group as to where his volunteers were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say?

[fol. 197] A. He didn't say anything.

Q. Had you heard by news releases and otherwise that General Walker was coming with ten thousand strong?

A. Well, I heard that for weeks.

Q. You mean before?

A. Yes, sir, I heard the Alabama National Guard was on the way, the Louisiana Highway Patrol was coming up—we heard things.

Q. I will ask you to talk about General Walker rather than wandering off to Louisiana and other places. You had heard General Walker had said he was coming with a group of volunteers?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, and he was asked where they were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he made no statement?

A. He made no statement.

Q. Did you shake hands with him at that point when you first saw him a little bit south and east of the Confederate statue?

A. No, I didn't shake hands with him until he stepped off the statue after his speech.

Q. All right. Now, at the time you first saw him was there a group of students around?

A. At the time I first saw him? Yes, sir.

[fol. 198] Q. And that was part of the group that had gone down and escorted the chemistry professor who had been beaten up, off the campus?

A. Some.

Q. Some of them?

A. Some of them.

Q. How many people would you estimate were down there around the Confederate monument and there where University Avenue comes on the campus, at the time you first saw General Walker?

A. Just in that area I would say seventy-five.

Q. All right. Now, how many would you put on the campus in the circle at the time General Walker came on the campus?

A. On the campus in the Circle? People? I would say one thousand now. Now, that is including around the YMCA Building, and just a little behind it. Those were people standing around, now. Not all were participating in the riot.

Q. You said something on direct examination you thought there might have been three or four thousand?

A. I said that evening.

Q. That evening?

A. That evening when the people first arrived. We had people from Oxford that come in to see what was coming [fol. 199] off.

Q. At the time General Walker got there, how many people would you estimate were on the campus? One thousand, two thousand, five hundred, two hundred and seventy-five?

A. On the campus itself?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. On the campus itself, on the entire campus itself, not including people in the dormitories?

Q. I understand.

A. I would say two thousand. This is including everything from the Alumna House on down University Avenue, on up to the Lyceum Building.

Q. Let's confine ourselves to the area in the north bounded by Peabody and the Y, on the east by the Confederate monument, on the south by, I believe you said, the Engineering Building, and on the west by the Lyceum, including the roadways and the circle. How many people would you estimate was on the campus, or in that area at the time General Walker arrived?

A. Around six hundred.

Q. All right. Now, when this group, you among them, went by General Walker, and when he was south and a wee bit east of the Confederate monument, how many people gathered around General Walker there?

[fol. 200] A. There were about fifty people gathered around him there.

Q. As he started toward the YMCA what did those people do?

A. Well, they followed him.

Q. As he cut back from the YMCA? And westward toward the flagpole what did that group of people do?

A. He didn't cut back that way.

Q. All right, he came back?

A. Down University Avenue Street.

Q. He came back down University Avenue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then is when he walked west to the flagpole, or Lyceum Building?

A. There was a pause there.

Q. I will say after the pause.

A. People were still shaking his hand.

Q. Were they following him as he went west toward the flagpole?

A. A few did. A few went back to Hume Hall to get more bricks..

Q. Now, that brings up a very interesting subject. As a portion of these students followed General Walker west toward the Lyceum Building, the rest of them went over to Hume Hall to get more bricks, or some of them; is that [fol. 201] right?

A. Well, a few of them that had already returned from previous charges. Some of them didn't even know General Walker was on the campus.

Q. You say they went to Hume Hall to get more bricks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did they transfer those bricks from Hume Hall? Carry them in their hands, a wheelbarrow?

A. Just anyway you could. If you had a box to fill them up, that was all right.

Q. When you brought those bricks on into the Circle area, what did you do with them?

A. Into the Circle area?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Well, we would generally wait for the Marshals to charge.

Q. Then what?

A. Then we would charge back. The thing to do was catch them right after they had shot their tear gas guns so they couldn't let a salvo go in your face, you know, directly at you.

Q. Then what did you do with the bricks and stones you had gotten from the Hume Building?

A. Well, we would throw at them.

[fol. 202] Q. At the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were in that group?

A. I was. Not at that time. Now, earlier that night I had been. But by that time I had been nicked in the thumb and my arm was stiff.

Q. Were you nicked in the thumb before you saw General Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. After?

A. Yes.

Q. About how long before?

A. It wasn't too long before I saw General Walker, because a boy had just brought me back.

Q. From the Infirmary?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, before you went to the Infirmary had there been charges and hurling of brick and stone at Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, bigger charges at that time.

Q. When you came back from the Infirmary what did you find?

A. I found the things had changed, that the people were not charging in the old type Confederate line, like they used to, because it was too costly; that they had split up into [fol. 203] groups of five, seven, or twenty, and just coming out from anywhere they could.

Q. Toward the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir. But to attack the Marshals you had to get past the flagpole, you had to go through the tear gas smoke, and you had to hold your breath and run at the same time.

Q. Do you know about how far it is from the Confederate monument to the flagpole?

A. Oh, I guess it is about two hundred and fifty yards.

Q. Two hundred and fifty yards? Step down there and look at the scale on that map.

A. I am not sure. Being around the campus you never really pay any attention to distance.

Q. I realized that and that is why I asked you to check the scale on the map.

A. Two hundred and fifty feet.

Q. That is just one third of two hundred and fifty yards, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Now, how far is it from the flagpole up to the Marshals?

A. That is a little further.

Q. From the flagpole up to the Marshals?

[fol. 204] A. Oh, I thought you were talking about from the Confederate statue.

Q. No, no, no. Talking about from the flagpole up to the Marshals.

A. The Marshals were directly in front of the Lyceum Building on the steps. They still stayed back in the line.

The Court: The question, Mr. Sweat, is how far is it?

A. How far is it?

The Court: Yes, sir.

A. It is still two hundred and fifty feet.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Two hundred and fifty feet from the flagpole?

A. I am going by the scale on the map.

Q. That is what I am going by. Two hundred and fifty feet from the flagpole up to the Lyceum Building? Take this pencil, if you will, please, and project it. That is the back of the Lyceum Building where you are putting the pencil.

A. No, sir, this is the front.

Q. That's right. Put your pencil point here. You had it past what you were talking about. You did overguess considerably.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 205] Q. It is not much more than one hundred feet from the flagpole up to the Lyceum Building?

Mr. Watts: Now, if Your Honor please, I object to that as argumentative. If he overguessed Mr. Gooch is underguessing. This is argumentative.

The Court: Mr. Sweat, are you able to calculate the distance?

The Witness: No, sir.

The Court: You are not able to use that scale and calculate it?

The Witness: I could tell if you would give me a ruler.

The Court: Do the best you can with the pencil and tell the Jury what you find.

Mr. Watts: As I understand, the question is from the flagpole to the Lyceum Building?

The Court: That is right.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Hundred and twenty-five feet is what I come up with.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. And the Marshals were out in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, the Marshals would have been some closer?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 206] Q. To the flagpole than the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir, but you still had to go past that flagpole to get to the Marshals. You couldn't throw it.

Q. That depends on the throwing arm of the individual, doesn't it?

A. No, sir, the trees and limbs actually prevented you from tossing bricks or bottles. You couldn't see.

Q. All right. Now, at the time General Walker arrived on that campus and you saw him let's look at it through your eyes, Mr. Sweat. Were the Marshals being thrown at?

A. Prior to the time General Walker arrived?

Q. At the time.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time he arrived on that campus were the boys bringing up bricks and stones from Hume Hall?

A. They had been doing that all night long.

Q. Was that obvious to you as you stood near General Walker?

A. Well, I didn't pay any attention to that. That had been going on all night.

Q. It was continuous?

A. It was continuous.

Q. It was perfectly obvious to you that it was going on?

[fol. 207] A. Yes, sir, but after I saw it I didn't pay much attention to it, an—after that.

Q. Was it obvious to you there was tear gas in the air? Up somewhere around the flagpole and the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And further back into the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that easily discernible?

A. Sir?

Q. Was that easily discernible, just by looking?

A. Yes, sir, you could see it.

Q. Were there boys or groups going in and throwing missiles at the Marshals at the time General Walker walked on that campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that obvious to you from where you stood down near the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was obvious to anybody that looked around, that there were bricks being carried on the campus, on the circle, that they were being broken up into half bats, that the boys were gathering up those missiles and bricks and stones and coke bottles, whatever they could find, and going toward the Marshals and throwing those missiles at the [fol. 208] Marshals? That was obvious, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 209] Q. It was obvious at the time General Walker walked on that campus, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now the General, as he walked, after he had gone over towards the YMCA, and according to you had come back down to the Confederate monument, he walked some distance, which you estimate as half-way?

A. Yes, sir, not quite half-way.

Q. Not quite half-way?

A. No, sir.

Q. Trying to be accurate on your testimony. Walked about half-way from the Confederate monument up towards the flagpole?

A. Up towards the flagpole, yes, sir.

Q. And you say he was followed by a group of these students?

A. A group.

Q. Did those students have anything in their hands?

A. No, sir.

Q. They all had dropped them just before they started up there?

A. Yes, sir, most of them dropped them so they could shake hands with him.

Q. I see. Did he—did they pick them up?

A. If they didn't, someone else did. I couldn't speak for [fol. 210] the people that dropped the bricks.

Q. Some of them dropped them and some of the rest picked them up?

A. They were more interested in talking with General Walker.

Q. I understand. But they did walk towards the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, they walked up towards the Marshals—but not half-way.

Q. All right. Now this leadership you were talking about, you have mentioned in answer to a question by Mr. Watts that you were a part of a group of about 15 leaders that conferred with General Walker?

A. Well, we were—

Mr. Andress: Just a moment, we are going to object to the form of the question. He did not testify there were 15 "leaders". He testified there were about 15 people.

The Court: If he didn't, he can say so. Overruled.

The Witness: That's right, they weren't leaders. That's the account that Mr. Watts read to me and I said that might be what whoever wrote that was talking about.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Watts asked you, read you an excerpt from an article in which it said that General Walker conferred with about 15 people who appeared to be the riot leaders and [fol. 211] your answer was, "That was part of the group I was in."?

A. I think—I think that's the one he's talking about.

Q. All right. How long did that conference take place?

A. Not too long.

Q. And when did it take place?

A. It took place while they were standing there. They stopped—

Q. While who was standing there?

A. While General Walker and a few of the boys were standing there.

Q. Was that when he first came on the campus?

A. No, sir. Now I am talking about right after the speech he made.

Q. We haven't gotten down to the speech yet.

A. Well, no, this—then this isn't the thing we are talking about then, the 15 people.

Q. Well, the 15 people you say was after the speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you be mistaken on that?

A. No, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, didn't General Walker, the minute he finished his speech and without hesitancy come down [fol. 212] off the monument and walk towards the Marshals and toward the Lyceum Building with a group of people following him?

A. No, sir. When General Walker stepped off the statue, he stepped to the right and walked just a little past the statue and that's when we talked with him.

Q. And he didn't walk on up then towards the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. At no time?

A. Not then.

Q. Then did he later?

A. He did, now, before that. Like I told you, when he came back from the "Y", he started up that way, but he stopped half-way and he stood and looked and then he came back.

Q. Did General Walker after that first advent, when he walked toward the flagpole with this group you described, before the speech, did you ever see General Walker walk at the head of a group any more west toward the Marshals?

A. Walk at the head of a group?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. He could have now but I didn't see it.

Q. You didn't see it?

A. No, sir.

Q. And when General Walker stepped down off the [fol. 213] monument, you say that he stopped there and conferred at length?

A. Yes, sir, we talked with him.

Q. How long would you say he conferred?

A. Long enough for me to smoke a cigarette and have it put out and still stand there and talk with him.

Q. Now that was after the speech?

A. After the speech.

Q. Now you are positive about that?

A. I am positive about that.

Q. All right. Now let's get down to the speech that General Walker made on the monument. Would you detail again for the benefit of myself, as well as the Court and jury, what you heard General Walker say.

A. Well, I heard General Walker say something to the effect that, said, "You have a right to protest. It's guaranteed to you in the Constitution."

Said, "This is not the right way. It's the long way around but," said, "You have a right to protest."

And he said something about Cuba being that way (indicating).

Q. Do you remember him making a statement as follows: "This is wrong but you have a right to protest"?

A. He said that. Yeah, he said something like that.

Q. That was after he had come on the campus and had [fol. 214] seen all of these bricks and bottles and stones and sticks being hurled at the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't it?

A. Yes, I guess he was—he saw that.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I still object to him asking this witness what Walker saw.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Andress: We request that the jury be instructed not to consider it.

The Court: The jury is instructed not to consider the last question and answer.

Mr. Gooch: Well, now I don't want to transgress on the Court's ruling but I do want to ask him one more question and I'd better say it to the Court.

The Court: You asked him a while ago, Mr. Gooch, what he saw and what was taking place out there at the time that the General came up there.

Mr. Gooch: I can't ask him about what Walker said?

The Court: Oh, yes.

Mr. Watts: Oh, I have no objection to that.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Watts: I just don't want him to ask him what Walker saw.

The Court: That question related to what he saw and [fol. 215] not what Walker said.

Mr. Gooch: Let's go back to cure that objection, then.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I asked you and you answered as to what General Walker may have seen. I want that question stricken because I want just strictly what you know.

At the time that General Walker came on the campus, the very time he came on the campus, before he made a speech, tell us whether or not there were sticks and stones and bottles hurled at the Marshals?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that as repetition. The witness has testified that at least four times from Mr. Gooch's testimony (sic), that when Walker came on the campus, there were being sticks, stones and missiles—

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Did you hear General Walker say these words: "Keep up the protest."?

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, if Your Honor please. I object to that unless he fixes where and when.

Mr. Gooch: On the monument.

Mr. Watts: Now I have no objection to it.

A. No, sir, I honestly didn't hear that.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. We will get to that in just a minute. I will ask you if this happened: Walker, right after that—and I'm talking [fol. 216] about the speech—stepped down off the statue, a crowd of people still around, Walker walked up due west towards the flagpole?

A. He walked a few steps due west past the Confederate monument, going toward the flagpole but not far enough to really make any difference.

Q. All right. Just a moment. Let me ask you this question:—

Mr. Watts: Might I fix what place you are reading from the deposition, please? The pages are numbered.

Mr. Gooch: Well, I will just put that in now.

Look on Pages 16, of Mr. Sweat's deposition.

Mr. Watts: All right.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Sweat, do you recall your deposition having been taken over in Oxford, Mississippi, sometime in March of 1964?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. March 13th, to be exact. Now, if you will, please look on Page 16, the question was asked:

"Who came down here to a meeting?" And the answer?

A. Walker said—you want me to read it?

Q. Yes.

A. Walker said something about a meeting here in Oxford courthouse that Birdsong had withdrawn the highway patrol and I didn't get all of this speech because someone [fol. 217] near me started talking to me and I didn't hear that clearly.

Walker right after that stopped—stepped down off the statue, a crowd of people still around—these are the 15 boys I was talking about.

Mr. Gooch: Please read your testimony, please, sir.

A. Well, Walker walked up due west towards the flagpole. Well, he did, he walked a few steps up.

Q. All right. Could you give us the benefit of your very best estimate, not in the whole area but in the crowd that immediately surrounded Walker.

A. Right after the speech?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Right after the speech, Walker lost the crowd.

Q. Read your answer.

A. Fifty people. There were 50 people around the statue.

Q. Go ahead and read the rest.

A. Fifty people. General Walker was a curiosity. He was a well noted person. People were there to see what he looked like. Many had never seen him before.

Q. Next question: Did anyone say anything about leading them before he started up the grove?

Mr. Andress: Before he started west.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Did anyone say anything to him about leading them before he started west? Excuse me.

[fol. 218] Mr. Andress: All right.

A. Yes. While Walker was going up to the grove he stopped before he got to the flagpole. He looked it over. People said, "Walker, what could we do?"

Now this was before the speech.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, let's see if it was.

A. Now this is the way I understood the question—before the speech.

Q. Well, that doesn't say that, does it?

A. It doesn't say when it was, really.

Q. All right. Now let's don't quibble, please, sir, because here is what you have talked about.

A voice somewhere to the left said, "I'll tell you, you sold us out. It was Col. Birdsong."

Now was that on the monument or was that before he got on the monument?

A. That was while Walker was on the monument.

Q. All right.

A. People were screaming, Ross Barnett had sold them out.

Q. People said, "Was it Col. Birdsong, General Walker? Was it Col. Birdsong?"

Mr. Watts: May I inquire where you are reading?

Mr. Gooch: Page 16, the same page. I have been on it for the last five minutes.

[fol. 219] Mr. Watts: You are skipping around. I can't keep up with you.

Mr. Andress: Going backwards.

The Court: Just a minute. I don't want any of this business between counsel.

Mr. Watts: I'm sorry. I found it. It's at the top of the page.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker said the man was Col. Birdsong. Did that happen on the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He mentioned something about coming down here to Oxford to a meeting. I'm not sure about that because—Now was that on the monument?

A. That was interrupted. The meeting?

Q. No.

A. Oh, when he said this? He said the man was Col. Birdsong. Now this is what I said, said he mentioned something about coming . . . . meeting. Now this was in talking with him, there was something mentioned about a meeting in Oxford. Now I didn't get all of that.

Q. Well, Mr. Sweat, if you will take that deposition and look on Page 15, you will see that the question was asked concerning the speech on the monument and then what occurred afterwards.

Is that a fair interpretation of your deposition?

[fol. 220] A. (Reading) Your Governor did not sell you out—

Q. Just go ahead and read.

A. General Walker did not say anything. He looked out over the crowd, stared down University Avenue. A voice somewhere on his left said, "I'll tell you. . . . Col. Birdsong."

Q. Was that while he was on the monument?

A. Yes, sir, he was still standing on the monument.

Q. All right. Now go ahead.

A. (Reading) People said, "Was it Col. Birdsong. General Walker, was it Col. Birdsong. General Walker said the man was Col. Birdsong."

Q. All right.

A. He mentioned something about coming down here to Oxford to a meeting.

I'm not sure about that because—now this was right after the speech, in talking with him.

Q. All right, the next question follows.

A. Walker stepped off the statue, a crowd of people still around. Walker walked up due west towards the flagpole.

Well, he did. There were a few people around Walker and he did take a few steps due west towards the flagpole.

Q. All right. Then we are talking about after his speech, aren't we?

[fol. 221] A. Right now we are, yes, sir.

Q. All right. The next question: "Could you give us the benefit of your very best estimate of the crowd, not in the whole area, but in the crowd that immediately surrounded Walker?"

A. Now I interpreted this as the crowd around the Confederate statue. And I said fifty people.

But now when Walker stepped off, he lost those 50 people.

Q. They didn't go with him?

A. No, sir, they jeered him, as a matter of fact.

Q. Did anybody—did anybody walk with General Walker toward the flagpole after he made his speech?

A. Yes, sir, I was with him.

Q. Anybody else?

A. Yes, sir, there were a few other people.

Q. How many?

A. There were close to around 15, I would say.

Q. Did you have anything in your hands?

A. No, sir, I didn't have anything in my hands. I was wounded at that time. I couldn't carry anything.

Q. Well, the rest of them were not wounded, were they?

A. No, sir, but they didn't have anything.

Q. They didn't have anything. Now on the speech on the monument, I will give you the page on that in just a [fol. 222] moment.

Page 14, I have asked you the question if Walker, while he was on the monument, didn't say—

Mr. Watts: Page, please?

Mr. Gooch: Page 14, Mr. Watts.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "This is wrong but you have a right to protest." You said he made that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Reading) He also said, "It is a long way around."?

A. It's a long way around, yes, sir, what we were doing.

Q. Then he said—and I asked you and you say you don't remember. —"keep up the protest." Look at your answer on Page 14, of the deposition, at the top of the page, please, sir.

A. (Reading) You have a right to protest. . . . long way around, he said, keep up the protest.

Well, I might have forgotten that.

Q. Well, now at the time your deposition was taken, that's the statement you made, was it not?

A. Yes, if it's in my deposition—

Mr. Watts: Object to that question unless he reads the entire statement. He just read an excerpt.

The Court: He's asking him if he answered it that way. [fol. 223] The Witness: But here is what else I said. Now by what he implies—

The Court: Just a minute. He hasn't asked you what else you said. He said, "Did you make that statement and at the—at the time of the deposition."

The Witness: Yes, sir, but this is in support of my statement.

Mr. Watts: That's all right.

The Court: That's the answer he's asking you now.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I'm asking if Walker said—did you hear him say, "Keep up the protest"?

A. If it's on the deposition, then I said it.

Q. All right. Did you know or see a minister by the name of Duncan Gray that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear General Walker make any remark to

Duncan Gray to the effect that he, Walker, was ashamed he was an Episcopalian?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear the Reverend Duncan Gray ask or implore General Walker to stop the violence on the campus?

A. I didn't hear Duncan Gray ask that.

Q. Did you hear the conversation between Duncan Gray and General Walker?

A. No, sir. All I heard was Duncan Gray trying to get [fol. 224] up on the statue with General Walker.

Q. You didn't see Duncan Gray before that time?

A. Yes, sir, I saw him before that time now.

Q. Did you ever hear Duncan Gray ask General Walker to stop it?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear him say that.

Q. Did you ever hear General Walker say to Duncan Gray, "I wouldn't stop it if I could."?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear that.

[fol. 225] Q. Did you hear anything that Duncan Gray, any exchange between Duncan Gray and General Walker, except the statement made by General Walker that he was ashamed he was an Episcopalian?

A. I heard that now.

Q. After you heard General Walker say that he was ashamed he was an Episcopalian what happened to the minister?

A. The minister tried to get up on the statue and someone pulled him down. Now, if they hadn't pulled him down the crowd—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute.

The Court: He asked what he did.

The Witness: Well, he tried to get up on the statue and he was pulled down.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right. Just a moment here, Your Honor.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Do you know what happened to Rev. Duncan Gray when he tried to get up on the monument where General Walker was speaking?

A. Yes, sir, he was pulled down.

Q. By whom?

A. By students at first.

Q. Then by whom?

[fol. 226] A. I don't know. I heard—

Mr. Watts: Don't say what you heard.

The Court: If you don't know, you can't say.

A. I just know he was pulled down by someone in the crowd.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right, just a moment. If you will, here, please, at the time these missiles—I forgot to ask you this: I believe you alluded to it and I want to be sure. I believe you said they broke up the benches?

A. Yes, sir, most of the concrete benches in the Grove were broken up.

Q. When did this occur?

A. This occurred in the early part when it first started.

Q. You got rid of all that ammunition?

A. Yes, sir, people had been—I take that back.

Q. Have you been apprised of a statement made by General Walker before he got to Mississippi to the effect, "Bring your flags, your tents and your skillets"?

A. Yes, sir, I heard that statement, but I didn't put much faith in it.

Mr. Watts: Now, just a minute.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Some people did try to find out where these volunteers were coming from, didn't they?

[fol. 227] A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: Now—well.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. At the time you saw General Walker did any of the crowd that was around General Walker, and you testified there was a crowd around General Walker—have any missiles, sticks or stones?

A. Now, this is after the speech?

Q. No, before the speech, prior to the time he went toward the flagpole first.

A. I couldn't be sure about that. Probably some of them did, but it was a common thing.

Q. Please refer to page 38 of this witness' deposition, please, sir. It doesn't say what line it is, but it is the next to last question: "At the time this crowd was around him when you first saw him, east of the monument did some of the crowd, at least, have in their possession brickbats, stones and sticks?" And your answer?

A. The boys from Hume Hall—

Q. Well, I believe you prefaced that by "Yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir, but they were—

The Court: He asked you if you said that.

The Witness: I said that.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You said, "Yes, sir, the boys from Hume Hall did particularly," did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 228] Q. And to further accentuate, may I refer you to page 39 of the deposition, the third question up from the bottom of the page. The question: "At the time you first saw him in the crowd that was around him there was some of these surroundees, we will call them, in possession of bricks, stones, sticks and missiles, is that correct?" And your answer?

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. Now, that was when he first came on the campus the first time you saw him?

A. Yes, sir, but that was a common thing for the people to have those things then, because we were still fighting on.

Q. You fought all night, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you stated on direct examination that the first contact you had with Walker personally was after he finished his speech on the monument, I believe?

A. Yes, sir, that was my first personal contact.

Q. All right. Now, tell us again what Walker did when he got off the monument?

A. He stepped off to his immediate right. I was immediately below him. He brushed past me and I fell in right beside him.

Q. And went where?

[fol. 229] A. We walked just a few steps toward the flagpole and stopped, and we chatted around, started talking to him.

Q. And that few steps west would be toward the Lyceum Building and the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. May I ask you a question as to your deposition on page 45, the question at the top, "Then Walker, according to your testimony, did not leave the vicinity of the monument for thirty minutes after he finished his speech?" Your answer?

A. "Well, now, I am talking about the time I talked to him when he stepped down off the statue. He did go toward the Lyceum because the smoke had cleared out and this is when we pointed out to him, this is the Lyceum, and that is where I talked with him."

Q. Then prior to the time you had the talk with him in which you bummed a cigarette, as you testified to, Walker did walk with a group?

A. Yes, sir, I was—

Q. Wait just a minute. Toward the Lyceum Building and the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, but not far enough.

Q. I am not talking about far enough. Did he go toward the Marshals and the Lyceum Building after he finished his [fol. 230] speech?

A. Yes, sir, if he was traveling west he had to go toward the Lyceum Building.

Q. Well, now, will you answer the question?

A. Yes, sir, when he stepped off he automatically was facing the Lyceum Building anyway he stepped. He had to be going toward the Lyceum and the Marshals.

Q. How far did he walk?

A. I would say he didn't get no further than twenty steps.

Q. Twenty steps from the Confederate statue?

A. And those are short steps.

Q. Anybody following him?

A. We were around him. There were still people rioting that didn't even know General Walker was there.

Q. Did any of those boys that walked up with Walker and you, as he walked toward the Marshals or Lyceum Building, have anything in their hands? I believe you said no, did you not?

Mr. Watts: If the Court please—

The Court: Sustained. It is repetition.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Then may I ask him a question?

Mr. Watts: Sure.

The Court: Relating to the deposition?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

[fol. 231] The Court: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. On page 45, the bottom question, "Now, tell us, as the group walked there with Walker up near the flagpole did they have in their hands the brick and the stones and missiles that they had been throwing?" Your answer, please, in your deposition?

A. "Some of the boys did."

Q. Read the rest of it.

A. "Particularly that come from Hume Hall because they were the ones that were giving them out down there."

Q. Then, according to your testimony at the time your deposition was taken, the group that went with Walker toward the flagpole, some of them had missiles in their hands?

A. Everybody had something in their hand that night, or during the night.

Q. I am talking about at this particular time.

A. Yes, sir, but you can't be too sure about that, though, sir. Because you are so used to seeing that all night you really don't pay any attention to that. And I gave that on the assumption that most of the people did have something in their hands that night there, and I recall seeing one boy nearly—near Walker with a brick in his hand, but now he got mad and left.

Q. On page 47, the question number 1, 2, 3, from the [fol. 232] bottom, "But Walker did, though, immediately after he finished his speech, go with the group up toward or near the flagpole?" Your answer, please?

A. "Up near the flagpole, and he stopped."

Q. That was what you said when your deposition was taken?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that still the truth?

A. Yes, sir, but he didn't get up to the flagpole.

Q. You said a while ago—I am trying to get your definition of near.

A. Near?

Q. You said he went about twenty steps and that they were short steps.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Twenty steps from the monument towards the flagpole, if they were short steps, would not be more than about fifty feet, would it, or sixty at the outside?

A. I couldn't say that.

Q. But you know you stepped not quite a yard?

A. We didn't get far past that Confederate statue, because I remember leaning up against a tree down there near it.

Q. You said—a—because—

A. Because—

[fol. 233] Q. Just a minute. You said in your deposition you got near the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, but not that near to it, like you are pointing.

Q. I was pointing out the flagpole. I am trying to get your definition of near.

A. I consider the wall at the back of the room near.

Q. All right. The last question on page 47, "Question: How long did General Walker remain with the crowd that had gone up there to the flagpole with him at that time?"

A. "He stayed there approximately two minutes."

Q. Is that the answer?

A. Yes, sir. Then we took—

The Court: Wait just a minute. He didn't ask you that. He asked you if you made that answer?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: Don't volunteer information.

The Witness: I am sorry.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Did you ever see a man with a Deputy Sheriff's badge on that weighed around 250 or 275, height approximately 5 feet 11?

A. I saw a lot of Deputy Sheriffs that night but I can't be sure that is the particular one or not.

[fol. 234] Q. Did you see one in the vicinity of Walker most all evening?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall an incident of a fire truck coming on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, I recall that.

Q. Was that after General Walker's speech, or before?

A. I am thinking that that was after General Walker's speech.

Q. Did you—.

A. The question—

Q. —excuse me.

A. Go ahead, I am sorry.

Q. Did you go up and inspect the fire truck?

A. Not when the fire truck first got there, no, sir.

Q. Did you go up near where the fire truck was maneuvering?

A. Yes, sir, I was up near where the fire truck was maneuvering.

Q. Did you see General Walker there?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Where was the fire truck with relationship to the flagpole?

[fol. 235] A. At what time?

Q. At any time.

A. When the fire truck came in they brought it in here and stopped it and the firemen got out and gave it to the crowd, and the fire truck took off right here and stopped and the boys got on it, the West Virginia boys and a few others and they started around, and they brought it around and swept past the Marshals in the tear gas and smoke and let them have it, and then they cut back down through here (indicating) and stopped somewhere in here, out in here.

Q. By "out in here" you are pointing now—

A. It is about north to northeast.

Q. North to northeast of what?

A. Of the flagpole.

Q. And about—

A. I couldn't be sure on this map. If I was on the campus I could point it out exactly.

Q. I realize that, but about how far from the flagpole?

A. Well, I would say one hundred feet.

Q. Is that where the fire truck stalled?

A. No, sir. Now, the caterpillar stalled.

Q. Didn't the fire truck stall?

A. The fire truck might have stalled because they [fol. 236] stopped for a long time.

Q. That is what I am talking about. Where was it stopped?

A. Right up in here somewhere (indicating map).

Q. Was it north of this east and west line of the Circle?

A. North of the east and west line of the Circle? Yes, sir, it was right here (indicating).

Q. Over toward the YMCA?

A. The YMCA, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Did you at any time hear General Walker say anything to the effect that he complimented the crowd on what they were doing that night?

A. Woud you explain that a little further?

Q. Oh? In connection with—I believe we established in your opinion, at least, a riot was going on there in the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time hear General Walker compliment the crowd on what they were doing?

A. Compliment the crowd?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir. I am not quite sure about what you mean on that.

Q. Well, I can't make it much plainer than that. Did [fol. 237] he state to them, "Keep it up"?

A. Well, now, in my deposition—

Q. Or—

A. —in my deposition I stated he stated keep it up. Now, of course, I don't recall saying that, but if it is in my deposition I said it.

Mr. Gooch: That is all, thank you.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. A couple of very short questions. Son, I want you to step down here, please, and re-check these distances. You testified on direct examination it was 125 feet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From the flagpole to the Lyceum, and I want to call to your attention the fact that this scale here starts with 100, then goes to zero, then goes to another hundred. I wish you would start here, start with the zero and measure 125 feet.

A. Fifty, seventy.

Q. Now, measure two hundred feet.

A. Two hundred feet?

[fol. 239] Q. Now put this scale up here next to the flagpole and point out to the jury where 125 feet is?

A. 125 feet is right here.

Q. Does that reach to the street, to the west of the flagpole?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now point out to the jury exactly how far it is from the flagpole to the Lyceum Building.

A. Oh, it's—

Q. Measure it first on your paper.

A. It's 200—250 or 300—

Q. Well, let's get it accurate here because you have a scale on your map.

A. It's 250, almost.

Q. All right, sir.

A. Give or take a few feet.

Q. Now you say it's 250 from where to where?

A. From the flagpole to the Lyceum.

Q. All right, sir. Now then at the time you saw General Walker enter the campus, was it possible to walk along University Boulevard to the Confederate monument as you went west?

A. No, sir.

Q. Why?

A. Because we had set up a barricade down there. I [fol. 240] helped build it. We got the material from the construction at Hume Hall and built a light barricade out of planks and barrels and whatever else could be drug up.

Q. In traveling westward from the entrance to the campus, towards the monument, what route was it necessary to take to get past those barricades?

A. You would have to go by the sidewalk.

Q. Was there a sidewalk on either side of that University Avenue?

A. On one side there is a sidewalk.

Q. Which side of University Avenue was the sidewalk?

A. The sidewalk runs down near the new Science Building and the Journalism Building; going toward the Lyceum, it's on your left.

Q. Now you were asked on cross examination by counsel to read the answer to your question, did anyone say anything to him about leading them before we started west. You read a part of it.

I will ask you to read the remainder and the entire answer that you gave.

A. Yes—

Mr. Gooch: I don't believe I asked that question.

Mr. Watts: That's the question you asked, Counsel, on Page 16.

The Court: Are you objecting to the witness answering [fol. 241] it?

Mr. Watts: Perhaps we'd better check the record.

Mr. Gooch: I'm objecting to the preface Mr. Watts made about what I interrogated him about.

The Court: I don't remember that. It's not particularly material as to whether you asked him or not.

If you now want to ask him—

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I want to ask him to read his entire answer, to first read—I'll read the question. Did anyone say anything to him about leading them before he started west?

Now read your answer.

The Witness: Yes, while Walker was going up to the grove, he stopped before he got to the flagpole. He looked it over. People said, "Walker, what could we do?" He didn't say anything.

And the people said, "General Walker, will you lead us?" He still didn't say anything.

People by this time were becoming mad at General Walker. They said, "At least you could give us advice." Walker said, "I don't want to obligate myself."

By Mr. Watts:

Q. And read the next—let me read the next question.

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute. If the Court please, this is [fol. 242] his witness, not mine.

Mr. Watts: But this is his examination, if Your Honor please.

The Court: I will permit him to read it.

Mr. Watts: He asked a part of it and I think—thank you, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now the next question, is, question, was that language clear to anyone in six or eight or ten feet so they could hear him?

Mr. Gooch: That's objectionable.

The Court: I sustain the objection.

Mr. Watts: Yeah, but I do want him to read the answer.

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute.

The Court: Well, I won't permit him to read the answer because the question is objectionable.

Mr. Watts: Well, all right.

The Court: I will let him testify as to what he heard, not as to what anyone else could have heard.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir. Let's see, I think the next was on Page 14.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now on Page 14 of the deposition, you read a portion of your answer. I will read the question and ask you to read the entire answer.

Question: As best you can remember, outline to us what [fol. 243] you heard him say.

And, incidentally, to make sense out of that, I think we should read the previous sentence: I heard his speech. I was to Walker's immediate right. I was south.

Now read your entire answer, not just a part. Page 14.

A. We had trouble at first understanding what he said, even close up to him, because people were still screaming and yelling.

There was a charge going on about that time, too, and the boys were running back and a salvo of tear gas had been fired and some of it was drifting down.

Walker got up on the statue and started talking and he said something to this effect. I can't quote him exactly now word for word.

He said, we did have a right to protest. He said, "This is wrong but you have a right to protest. It is the long way around."

He said, "Keep up the protest."

Now by what he implied by that, the way I—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute. Just a minute. You can't—that's all right, you can't—that's right, I don't ask—I don't want him to say what he implied.

The Court: I don't want him to read that.

Mr. Watts: That's right.

[fol. 244] (Conference at the bench.)

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, son, you said you were knicked in the thumb?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With what?

A. I think it was a buckshot but I couldn't prove it. It—

Q. Now was that before Walker arrived on the campus?
A. Yes, sir, this was.

Mr. Watts: It's 12:00 o'clock. I believe that's all, sir.
The Court: Are you through with the witness?
Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.
Mr. Gooch: That's all.
The Court: I'm going to excuse him then. All right, we will excuse you.

Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 2:00 o'clock. At 2:00 o'clock, just wait in the jury room and I'll call you out.

(Thereupon, at 12:00 o'clock noon, a recess was taken until the same day at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.)

[fol. 245] Afternoon Session

Cecil V. Cox, Jr., called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Will you state your name, please?
A. Sonny Cox.
Q. Son, will you lean forward so the mike will fit you. Where do you live?
A. Marks, Mississippi.
Q. Spell that, will you?
A. The last or the first?
Q. The name of the town?
A. M-a-r-k-s.
Q. How old are you, son?
A. Twenty-one.
Q. Is Sonny your only name?
A. No, sir.
Q. What is your real name?

A. Cecil V. Cox, Jr.

Q. Which name do you go by?

A. Sonny.

Q. Are you a student at Ole Miss?

A. Yes.

[fol. 246] Q. Were you such a student on the 30th of September, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on campus that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where an area on the campus known as the Circle is?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you there that night?

A. Yes.

Q. What was going on?

A. Mass confusion, I'll say.

Q. While you were there did you have occasion to see General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would tell the Jury, please, in your own words from the time you saw General Walker, tell us what General Walker did, what you saw and what you heard. Now do not—I caution you at this time, do not endeavor to tell what anyone else saw, thought or heard, but tell what you saw and what you heard.

A. About nine o'clock I was rambling around about the end of University Avenue, and I saw a small crowd gathering under the Confederate statue. I walked over there and somebody was talking over there, I could see, and a group [fol. 247] of students was yelling, "Oh, go on back, you lost out in Texas, we don't need you here."

I didn't understand what it was, so I walked up closer and this General Walker was up there telling them, "We cannot accomplish anything like this, maybe if we could talk to them, or something to that effect."

Well, the crowd begin to kind of jeer him, and they were kind of drifting off in another direction. A few stayed with him, maybe 15 or 20.

This other guy with me and I went up there and shook hands with him and he stepped down off the pedestal and we were standing there by the pedestal talking about the general advance and so forth. We talked a few minutes and moved on up toward the flagpole, you might say. We were walking along there and a few students were out in front. They had—they were using a T-shirt, a white shirt for a truce flag, going to try to talk to the Marshals. We walked along there, and a few in front and a few in behind. We got about 20 yards maybe from the street across from the building and we kind of held back and a few students went on up front, and they did begin have a little conversation up there. The Marshals asked them what they wanted. A couple of them said, "Well we want that nigger."

And something happened, I don't know what the occasion was, but the Marshals started firing again and every-[fol. 248] body retreated, and some of them came back and retaliated by throwing bricks and bottles.

And that is the last I saw of General Walker that night.

Q. Had you seen General Walker before he made his speech on the monument?

A. No, sir.

Q. After he made his speech on the monument did he lead a charge against the Marshals?

Mr. Gooch: We object to that if the Court please. It calls for an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Watts: All right.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Watts: All right.

Mr. Andress: If we may approach the Bench.

The Court: No.

Mr. Andress: All right, note our exception. We would like to have a bill on it too.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. After this speech on the monument, have you told us everything that he did that you saw?

A. Well, that is a general question.

Q. Well, you have attempted, as I understand, to outline what you saw him to do?

A. Yes.

[fol. 249] Q. Is there anything further that he did that you haven't told us about?

A. Well, we walked up there. We were talking.

Q. Hold it right there. As you walked up what gait did he walk?

A. Just a slow rambling gait.

Q. Try to describe as nearly as you can the actions and conduct of the people immediately in his vicinity, I will say within an area of 15, 20 or 30 feet?

A. After he stepped down off the statue?

Q. That's right.

A. From—some drifted off because they were disappointed.

Q. Well now—

Mr. Gooch: —Wait—

Mr. Watts: —I will agree.

The Court: Don't tell why you think they drifted off. You may testify to the fact they drift off, if they did.

A. Well, they drifted off because—

Q. Well, no, don't say "because."

A. Well, they drifted off.

Q. You don't know what was going on in their mind.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We don't want you to testify to anything that you [fol. 250] don't know. Now then the ones that went on towards the flagpole, or in that direction with General Walker, describe to us how they appeared, how they walked, where Walker was within the group, what was the size of the group, and everything of interest, because these people need to learn what you saw?

A. I will 25 or 30 people were in the group, some in front of some in behind General Walker. He was in the middle of the group.

Some were waving the flag. All of them had their hands up. Most of them had their hands up. They had agreed to try to talk to the Marshals. That was kind of a mutual agreement between the students, I believe.

And they walked on up. A few, as I say, drifted behind and we were almost in the middle all this time.

I left General Walker. I walked five or six yards ahead of him to hear them talking to the Marshals about, "We want that nigger," and something sparked off the Marshals and they started firing again and a little battle began right there.

Q. While you were walking up there and until you left General Walker did any of these individuals around him throw missiles from a position near General Walker?

A. I didn't notice any.

Mr. Watts: That is all.

[fol. 251] Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Cox, I believe you did not hear General Walker's speech from the monument?

A. Not all of it. I heard the last of it.

Q. What did you hear him say?

A. I heard him say that "We can't . . ." something to this effect. Now not these exact words but, "We can't get anything accomplished by open warfare. And if we could talk to them maybe we could get this thing settled."

Q. Walker said that?

A. Yes, sir, that is what I gathered from it.

Q. I believe when your deposition was taken over in Marks you said you didn't hear any part of the speech, is that correct?

A. I heard the last part of it.

[fol. 252] Q. All right. Let's see.

A. Mr. Gooch, you will notice, I think—

The Court: Just a minute. He hasn't asked you a question yet.

The Witness: Excuse me.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. May be there. I just wanted to see.

Now I ask you again, did you hear any part of General Walker's speech?

A. I heard the last part of it.

Q. And what did he say?

A. He was saying something to the effect that we could—"If we could talk to them, maybe we could get more accomplished than by just running around, trying to battle them."

Q. I refer you to page 15, of the deposition of Mr. Cox, the last question on Page 15.

Mr. Cox, I ask you, did you hear any part of General Walker's speech? Your answer, yes, sir, I know I heard him say something but I don't remember what it was.

Mr. Watts: That should be, Mr. Gooch, please, sir, "I didn't remember what it was," as I read it. Maybe I misread it.

Mr. Gooch: All right. But I didn't remember what it was.

[fol. 253] By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now have you remembered, since your deposition was taken?

A. Well, sir, I didn't remember exactly what words he said but I heard the general idea of what he was saying, when he was getting off.

Q. Well, all I am getting you to do now, in March you didn't remember and now you seem to have remembered. I was just trying to find out why?

A. Well, I think there should be a clause or something in there to the effect that I did remember part of it.

Q. Well, it's not here. That's the reason I was asking you that.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did General Walker say anything at that time about a truce or did somebody else say something about a truce?

A. Well, he said that we should try to talk to them, I believe, and some other guy grabbed a T-shirt and said, "We will use this for a truce flag."

Q. And you and Walker and several others started towards the Lyceum Building?

A. Yeah.

Q. Was this immediately after the speech on the monument?

A. Yes, sir—well, after we had—we had a little conver-
[fol. 254] sation there while the crowd was kind of separating.

Q. Did you see General Walker get down from the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had a few words there. How long would you say, two minutes, three minutes?

A. Oh, five or seven.

Q. Five or seven minutes. Standing around the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you and General Walker, and you have said some 15 or 20 others, started—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —started towards the Lyceum Building?

A. (Witness nods "yes".)

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you walked—how did you walk from the monument toward the Lyceum Building?

A. Just in a normal gait. We were talking, as you would walk and talk to somebody.

Q. What route did you take?

A. Well, along the sidewalk, the best I can remember.

Q. On the south side of the circle or the north side of the circle?

[fol. 255] A. North, I believe.

Q. All right. Then after General Walker had stepped down from the monument—would you step down here, please, sir? Where is that pointer?

The Court: Take the pointer here with you, Mr. Cox.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. After General Walker had finished his speech at the monument, do you identify the monument to be at just about where University Avenue splits, University circle goes to the north and University circles around—do you identify that as a part of the campus of Ole Miss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then right here at the fork of University Avenue is where the Confederate statue is, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that's where General Walker made his talk?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as I understand you, you had not seen General Walker until just a short time prior to the time he stepped down off the monument, is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. Now after he stepped down off of the monument and you say he conversed with some group there for a few moments—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Minutes, maybe?

[fol. 256] A. Yes, sir.

Q. —then you say that something was said about a truce talk?

A. He was getting off the monument then.

Q. All right. He was getting off the monument when the truce talk was mentioned, when there was a mention of a truce talk?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he talked around with the boys or the crowd or whoever it was for a few moments?

A. Yes, with two or three of us.

Q. Two or three. Then you say he started towards the Lyceum Building, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who all was with him?

A. The names?

Q. No, no, how many?

A. Three was—three of us was right with him, walking with him and talking.

Q. How many were following him?

A. There were some in front and some in back. Maybe ten in front, ten in back. Most of them was to the left side, I'll say.

Q. All right. Then you went north of the east and west line through the circle, is that correct?

[fol. 257] A. Went right along in here, north of the monument.

Q. You went north of the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go all the way past the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said you got up at about 30 feet of the Marshals, is that right?

A. Well, that's 30 feet from this tree here. Now the Marshals were over here. And this is a street. I'll say that street is 25 feet.

Q. All right. That would have made you about, then, 55 feet, or 45 to 55 feet from the Marshals, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, General Walker and this group, which you estimate, according to you, some 10 or 15 behind him? And three of you right with him—did you all have ahold of the General?

A. No, sir. I shook hands with him right here at the monument.

Q. Was one of you on each side of the General as you proceeded up there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You walked up north of the sidewalk that runs east and west through the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 258] Q. Past the flagpole? And up within 30 feet of the street in front of the Marshals and Lyceum Building, is that correct?

A. I walked that far.

Q. Now where did General Walker stop?

A. Well, he stopped, I'll say, right here, I guess.

Q. Now you put him there about a fourth of the distance, to be safe, a fourth or a third of the distance between the flagpole and the edge of the street in front of the Lyceum Building, is that correct?

The Court: Answer out.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Then you went on forward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the truce talk turned out to be what, in—you heard somebody say?

A. "We want that nigger."

Q. You want that nigger. That was the truce talk? Thank you. Will you take the stand again, please?

Now did you have anything in your hands as you walked up there with the General?

A. No, sir.

Q. I guess none of the group that was around him had anything in their hands?

A. You mean the immediate group or the 15 or 20?

[fol. 259] Q. Well, any of them that was around him?

A. Some of them did. When they were going to call the truce, they threw them down at the—about when we got to the flagpole. And everybody raised their hands.

Q. As they walked from the flagpole up—from the statue, monument, up as far as the flagpole, they were, or some of them were, armed with missiles?

A. Well, they could have been. I didn't really notice.

Q. You don't know whether they were or not?

A. No.

Q. Now did you see any rock throwing that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what time did it start, Mr. Cox?

A. About 8:00, 8:15.

Q. And from 8:15, on, can you describe generally what occurred on the campus that night?

A. 8:15, I was in the YMCA Building. Kennedy was making a speech in there. And that's—about 8:00 is when the tear gas was started.

Q. Incidentally, did you hear President Kennedy's speech?

A. Part of it.

Q. Did you hear him admonish or ask the students of Ole Miss not to engage in any violence?

[fol. 260] A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't hear that?

A. (Witness nods "no".)

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And the tear gas was beginning to drift in the "Y" Building and I moved on out, just looking around.

And as the night moved on, of course, we just—I didn't—I wasn't stationary, in—I was moving around over the general area there.

And, let's see, the National Guard moved in, I don't know what—I can't relate that.

And the highway patrol moved out and the National Guard moved in after that, or something. I don't remember exactly how that was.

Q. Did you see any groups, small or large, rush forward or go towards the Marshals and throw rocks and sticks and bricks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you participate in any of those matters?

A. I don't want to answer that.

Q. You just have.

A. (Witness nods yes.)

Q. Did those rock-throwing episodes occur almost throughout the night?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 261] Q. Continuously?

A. Well, not in one continuous movement. It just was in and out, not very regular.

Q. Some group would go forward and toss their missiles and retreat and then somebody, some other group would go forward, is that right?

A. That's about it.

Q. Now do you know where the ammunition came from, the majority of the ammunition, where it came from?

A. Well, it came from this new building they had down there. Picked up Coca-Cola bottles over the campus and later they were busting these benches up and taking the concrete from them and throwing it.

Q. Did you go on the campus the next morning?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, can you describe what you found there the next morning in the way of rocks and missiles and bottles and glasses and canisters?

A. And empty tear gas shells.

Q. Was there a lot of that around?

A. Yes.

Q. It looked like a real battlefield, didn't it, Mr. Cox?

A. It was a battlefield.

Q. Did you see any cars being burned that night?

[fol. 262] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know about a chemistry professor that was beaten up?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know about a photographer that his car was beaten up and his camera smashed?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you—I won't ask you if you participated. Were you near enough to see the car being beaten up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Cox, in September of 1962, you were in what classification at the University?

A. Junior.

Q. You had been there two years already?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, had you been there any time or were you a new student?

A. New student.

Q. You had not been on the campus before?

A. No, sir—well, not—I had been on the campus to get an application.

Q. I mean had you matriculated?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. This was your first year?

A. Yes.

[fol. 263] Q. Do you remember about what day in September you went on that campus?

A. The 17th, maybe. I'm not sure. A couple of weeks before that, almost.

Q. Had you been present when Meredith had been barred from the University by Governor Barnett and Paul Johnson?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that create a resentment in you, one way or the other?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You favored, I assume, Governor Barnett's and the Lt. Governor's actions in barring him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew, did you not, that the Court of Appeals had directed the entry of Meredith in Ole Miss prior to the 30th of September, 1962, did you not?

A. Yes, I knew that.

Q. Did you know that the order had been entered by that Court to allow him to be admitted to Ole Miss?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, now what did you know about the legal procedures involving Meredith being admitted to Ole Miss?

A. Nothing much.

Q. You didn't even know that he was supposed to be admitted under court order?

[fol. 264] A. I heard—I had heard.

Q. You just didn't believe it, is that right?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. All right. You didn't much want to believe it, did you, Mr. Cox?

A. Well, I don't—has that got anything to do with this case? Could I keep from answering that? You are going back into my life, you know.

Q. Sir?

A. You are going back into my life.

Q. Well, now have you got anything to be ashamed of, in your life, Mr. Cox?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, why don't we hear about it?

A. It's—get you a string of bologna and I'll tell you about it.

Q. Do what?

The Court: This is argumentative. Do you want an answer?

Mr. Gooch: Yes.

The Court: All right, answer his question.

Mr. Watts: Just answer the question, Mr. Cox.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now you do recognize that the judgment of courts must be obeyed, do you not, Mr. Cox?

[fol. 265] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you feel that you were obeying the order of the court in what you were doing there on the campus there that night?

A. Well, I didn't feel—

Mr. Gooch: You may step down and stand aside. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, before you stand aside.

The Court: Do you have any more questions?

Mr. Gooch: I mean as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Watts: Thank you for the postscript.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Cox, how old were you when this incident took place?

A. Nineteen.

Q. And you were a Freshman in the University?

A. Yes.

Q. What school were you in?

A. Business.

Mr. Watts: That's all.

Mr. Gooch: I thought you said you were a Junior?

The Witness: Oh, I misunderstood that question. I was a Junior. I'm sorry.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Were you a Junior when this incident took place?

[fol. 266] A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Q. And how old do you say you were? Nineteen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what school?

A. Business.

Mr. Watts: I see. Thank you.

The Court: Do you want to make your Bill now, Mr. Andress?

Mr. Andress: Yes, sir.

The Court: All right, Ladies and Gentlemen, would you step in the jury room, please.

(Jury leaves the courtroom.)

[fol. 270] (Jury in; the following proceedings were had within the presence and hearing of the Jury.)

TALMAGE WITT, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. State your name, please?
A. Talmage Witt.
Q. Where do you live?
A. Pontotoc, Mississippi.
Q. Now, most of us folks are not too familiar with Mississippi. What part of Mississippi is that in?
A. That is the north part of Mississippi.
Q. Is that the county seat?
A. I beg your pardon?
Q. Is that a county seat?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What county?
A. Pontotoc County.
Q. Back in 1962, in the fall of 1962, did you hold any official position over there in Pontotoc County?
A. Yes, sir, I was Deputy Sheriff.
Q. Are you still?
[fol. 271] A. No, sir.
Q. Now, at that time, Sheriff, I direct your attention to September of 1962. Were you at any time in the latter part of September over in Oxford, Mississippi?

A. I was.

Q. Were you there on official business or not?

A. Well, I guess you would say official business.

Q. What was the occasion of your being over there?

A. I was called by the Sheriff of Union County.

Q. When did you first get over there?

A. About 4:30, I believe.

Q. On the 30th?

A. Of September.

Q. On the 30th of September.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there other Sheriffs and Deputy Sheriffs from various counties in Mississippi over there at that time?

A. Yes, sir, there were.

Q. Where did you go when you got over there?

A. I went directly to the campus.

Q. Had you been over there at any time earlier in the last week or so before that time?

A. I was there five days and nights.

Q. Then how long had you been back home before you [fol. 272] went back?

A. I left Friday afternoon, late Friday afternoon, and returned Sunday.

Q. What was the occasion of your being over there on that earlier occasion, Sheriff?

A. We had been asked to go there. The Lt. Governor had met with all peace officers and asked us to try to control students and try to keep down a riot, if we could.

Q. So they were just pulling in peace officers from all over the state to try to keep it down?

A. Four hundred and twenty-five of us were there on Thursday.

Q. At that time was the order being preserved entirely by the officers of the State of Mississippi?

A. Everything was under good hands at that time.

Q. When you got over there on the afternoon of Sunday, the 30th of September, 1962, was anybody else over there in an attempt to preserve the peace, besides Mississippi—

Mr. Gooch: I object to that, leading and suggesting. He can say what he did do. As to whether he was trying to preserve the peace or not—

Mr. Andress: I think probably preserving the peace might be a conclusion, Judge, and I will withdraw that.

[fol. 273] By Mr. Andress:

Q. Were there anybody else besides peace officers of Mississippi there on the campus there when you got there, in any official capacity?

A. I don't think so; no, sir.

Q. After you got there, shortly afterward, did anyone else come in, any other officers?

A. There was quite a few officers came in later.

Q. What kind of officers?

A. Constables, Deputy Sheriffs and Sheriffs.

Q. Was anybody else on the campus that afternoon of the 30th of September besides Mississippi officials?

A. Well, now, there were people there from all over. I couldn't say where they were from.

Q. Let me direct your attention and ask you whether or not there were any United States Marshals there?

A. Oh, yes, sir; yes, sir.

Q. What time of day did they arrive?

A. That—they were there when I got there.

Q. They were there about 4:30?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't see them come on, they were already there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you got there about 4:30 in the afternoon where were the United States Marshals?

[fol. 274] A. They were at the Lyceum Building.

Q. What were they doing around there? Were they in any kind of a formation?

A. Yes, sir, they were lined up completely around the place I would say four or five feet apart, three or four feet apart.

Q. Were they armed in any fashion?

A. Yes, sir, they had tear gas guns, and had their masks on.

Q. These officers, these Marshals all had masks on and tear gas guns with them?

A. I won't say that they had their mask on when I first got there, but before, just before they turned the gas loose sometime or other they put their masks on.

Q. Now, how long were you on the campus that evening?

A. I was there until 5:00 o'clock and then I left for two hours and came back.

Q. You were there just a little bit, you mean?

A. No, 5:00 o'clock in the morning.

Q. 5:00 o'clock in the morning. You were there constantly from 5:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon until—

A. 5:00 o'clock Monday.

Q. To 5:00 o'clock Monday morning. Now, were there other folks there besides the police officers and Marshals? [fol. 275] A. Yes, sir, quite a few.

Q. Well, were they men, women, or mixed?

A. Men or women, boys and girls.

Q. Were you—were they townspeople, students or both?

A. Both. They were from everywhere.

Q. And was there any general gathering or smaller gathering?

A. Oh, they were just in small groups all over the campus, the whole campus.

Q. They were not limited to just this area known as the Circle?

A. Oh, no, sir, they were all over the whole campus. Some were sitting in cars and some were sitting on the steps of the places and on the benches on the campus.

Q. What were they doing when you got there?

A. Well, they were just talking and everything seemed like to be building up.

Q. Later on was there any violence?

A. Not until after the gas was turned loose.

Q. Who turned the gas loose?

A. McShane ordered it.

Q. Who was McShane?

A. He was—I don't know how you would say it. He was [fol. 276] the head U. S. Marshal.

Q. How was the gas turned loose?

A. Well, all at once he just said, "Let them have the gas." And when he did, they done just that.

Q. Where were you when that happened?

A. Approximately twenty feet from them, facing them.

Q. Did you get any gas?

A. I did.

Q. Had you been engaged in any violence or anything of that sort toward the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. What were you doing at that particular time?

A. Well, Paul Johnson, our Lt. Governor, had asked us to try to control the students, but that was a man-sized job.

The Court: He asked you what you were doing?

The Witness: I was standing up there in front of the students and spectators was behind us, and we were facing the Marshals.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Who do you mean by "we"?

A. The Highway Patrol, Deputy Sheriffs, Sheriffs, Constables; any officer Mississippi had.

Q. In other words, the Mississippi peace officers were between the Marshals—[fol. 277] A. And the students.

Q. And the students and the other people on the campus?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you state whether they were trying to protect the Marshals from the people or the people from the Marshals?

Mr. Gooch: We will object to that if the Court please. He can testify what he was doing.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Now, Sheriff, prior to that evening had you ever known General Walker here?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you—when did you first see him that evening?

A. Well, now, it is hard to keep up with the exact time. I would say approximately between 8:30 and 9:00 o'clock.

Q. Do you recall when the Highway Patrol moved out?

A. I don't recall when they moved off the campus. Now, they were—within a matter of minutes after the gas was turned loose they left the Lyceum Building. Where they went from there, I don't know.

Q. Now, where was General Marshal—General Walker when you first saw him?

[fol. 278] A. Coming up University Avenue on the south side, fifteen or twenty steps east of the Confederate monument.

Q. And what direction was he heading at that time?

A. He was heading west.

Q. That would be then—can you see this map here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would be along about in here on University Avenue just before it gets to where it spreads into these two parts of University Circle, is that right?

A. Right.

Q. All right. Who was with him when you first saw him, now?

A. Some young—young fellow. I recognize him since I have got up here. Leman or something like was his name, but I recognized him since I got here; and one of our county drunks was walking along at the side with him. He wasn't with him, but he was the one trying to antagonize everything.

Q. Just General Walker then and this young man, one young man walking along?

A. That's right.

Q. How were they walking?

A. Oh, just walking in a normal walk.

Q. I mean, were they hurrying, moving along, or what?

[fol. 279] A. No, sir, just moving along.

Q. Where was the General as far as the street or sidewalk was concerned?

A. He was on the south side walking up the walk.

Q. And from the time you first saw him, did you know who he was?

A. I heard somebody say, "Here comes General Walker, we have got a leader now."

Q. Did you at that time talk to the General?

A. Just a few seconds after that I stepped out a couple of steps to, maybe, pick out which one it was. I asked somebody if that was him with the big hat on and they said it was. I stepped out to see.

Q. Did you introduce yourself to him?

A. No, sir, he walked up and introduced himself and talked to me a few minutes.

Q. At that time what did he have to say about you making him a Deputy Sheriff?

A. He said something about could I, or would I, deputize him. He said, "Not to help in this matter." He said, "I would just like to be safe to be here to observe what is going on."

I said, "I don't have the authority, General, to deputize you myself, even in my own county," and I said, "This is not [fol. 280] my county."

Q. From that time on how long were you in the immediate company of General Walker?

A. Some four to five hours.

Q. At the time you first saw him, was it like daylight or dark?

A. It was dark.

Q. What was the lighting set up there on the campus that night?

A. Well, it was pretty bad. It was—I won't say students, I will just say spectators and students, were breaking out all the lights they could, and it wasn't too light.

Q. Was there any moonlight that night?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Are there trees in the circle there between the monument and the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir, there are.

Q. A lot of trees, or few?

A. Oh, yes, sir, there is some large trees and small trees.

Q. In the daytime—will you state whether or not that is a shady area?

A. Oh, yes, sir, it is a shady area.

Q. Now, after these lights had been put out, was the visi-
[fol. 281] bility good or bad?

A. No, you would have to be close to anybody to recognize who they were.

Q. Now, during this four or five hours that you were with or close by General Walker, what did he do?

A. Not one thing more than I done, or anybody else done over there. He was just there looking.

Q. Will you state whether or not you ever saw him with any kind of missile or anything you could throw in his hand?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did—will you state whether or not you ever saw him moving around at anything faster than a walk?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. Well, what was he doing as far as his contact with people in the area was concerned?

A. Well, he talked to people. People shook hands with him and talked to him and he just milled around there, around the monument out there.

Q. How close would you say was the closest you ever saw him go toward the Lyceum?

A. Not past the flagpole.

Q. And you are familiar with that campus, aren't you, pretty familiar?

A. Well, pretty familiar, yes.

[fol. 282] Q. Have you got any idea how far it is from the flagpole to where the Marshals were?

A. Not over three hundred feet.

Q. Will you state whether or not the Marshals were over on the west side of the driveway or street there in front of the Lyceum?

A. That is where they stayed most of the time. They got chances to get one or two boys singled out by themselves, they would run out and try to capture them.

Q. But the scrimmage line was there at the Lyceum Building?

A. Right there in front of the Lyceum Building.

Q. From the furtherest advance point the General ever occupied, would it have been possible for anyone to have thrown anything from that point to the Marshals?

Mr. Gooch: I object to that, if Your Honor please, that's a conclusion.

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Mr. Sheriff, how long were you a Deputy Sheriff?

A. Approximately three years.

Q. During that time have you seen unruly crowds?

A. Repeat that.

Q. During that time have you had anything to do with unruly crowds, rioting and so on?

[fol. 283] A. No, sir. No, sir.

Q. You hadn't had any prior experience?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear the General talking to the crowd from the monument?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Now, prior to the time that he made this talk to the students from the monument, was that the time that he had gone forward about as far as the flagpole, before he made the speech?

A. One time he walked up just a little piece, just a little piece up there. I don't think he went hardly to the flagpole that time.

Q. Was anybody with him?

A. Not particularly. In other words, there was a large crowd of people there. Nobody particularly was with him. But this one young man, and, of course, myself. When you have a figure like that come to Mississippi, I wanted to watch what was going on, and I watched him.

Q. Was there any time you saw him head west from the monument when he was anywhere other than in the middle of a group of people?

A. No, sir, I didn't see it. In other words, any time he would be walking there would be people in front of him as well as behind him.

[fol. 284] Q. When he made this speech from the monument, what did you hear him say, as far as you remember?

A. I heard him say, "People, violence is not your answer. Cuba is yonderway. Protest all you want to but violence is not your answer."

Q. What kind of reaction did he get from the crowd?

A. Oh, he got boos from some. Some of them said, "What is he here for if he is not going to help us? Why don't he go back to Texas."

Q. Now, did he make any statement as to why he was there?

A. He just told me, he says, "I am just here to observe. I am not here to get in this either way."

Q. Do you remember a preacher coming up to see him?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Do you remember what he told the preacher about what he was there for?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he tell him?

A. Well, he told the preacher he was just there to see what was going on, that he wasn't there to stop or start anything, that he didn't have anything to do with that.

Q. Did you see him at any time you were with him, did [fol. 285] you see him do anything inconsistent with that statement?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you remember anything else he told them when he was making the speech from the monument?

A. He told them, "Protest all you want to." That they had a perfect right to do that, but violence wasn't the answer.

Q. Did you have anything to do with removing the preacher?

A. I moved him.

Q. What was going on that you moved him for?

A. He kept on jerking at the General's coat and everything and telling him to talk to them and break this thing up and that they would listen to him and go home. He said, "Preacher, I am not here to do that." He says, "I can't have anything to do with this."

And he just kept on at him and I heard three men start telling one of them, one of them says, "If we can get that preacher in the right place we will fix him."

Then when the General got up on the monument to make his speech I was on the right side facing east and the preacher came around on the other side and kept on pulling at him and when he did I walked around there and caught him by the arm and asked him to leave and he said he [fol. 286] wasn't leaving and, of course, according to my size and head, I felt like I could do it, and I just picked him up and carried him out of there.

Q. Did you see him any more, the preacher, after you carried him out?

A. No, I led him out of the crowd, out past the crowd and two men walked up and asked me what was I doing with the preacher and I said, "Well, I am afraid his life is in danger and I am going to get him away from here." And they said, "Well, we are friends of his, can we have him?" And I asked him if he knowed the people and he said he did and so I turned him over to them.

Q. Did you see anyone else touch or lay a hand on the General, as far as he was concerned?

A. Nothing only shaking hands with him.

Q. After the General had told this preacher he wasn't there to break it up or participate in it in any way, did he and the preacher have any kind of exchange about what their denomination was, or anything of that sort?

A. Well, General Walker turned around and asked him, says, "Preacher, what denomination are you?"

He said, "Episcopalian. I am an Episcopalian."

And he said, "You make me ashamed that I am an Episcopalian."

[fol. 287] Q. Did that faze the preacher?

A. I don't know. It didn't bother the preacher.

Mr. Gooch: We object to that conclusion, whether it fazed the preacher or not.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. After the General finished his speech from the monument, Sheriff, what did he do then?

A. He stepped down and just milled around there, around in front of the monument for a few minutes, and, of course, some of them kept on asking him to lead them and everything and he kept refusing to do that.

Q. Just milling around?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall any occasion after he had made his speech and gotten down from the monument when he did go back toward the flagpole?

A. I think maybe, oh, maybe three or four minutes after he got down; might have been five, he walked a little piece up that way, approximately to the flagpole, and they turned another charge of gas loose, and he walked back down.

Q. How did he go toward the flagpole? What was his gait?

A. Walking. Just a common walk.

Q. Were people with him?

A. Well, there were people in the crowd. What I mean, [fol. 288] there were some out front and they were scattered everywhere.

Q. And were any of the people in that group that were walking up there to the flagpole, did you see any of them at that point running?

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you say that they were walking fast or slow?

A. No, just a common walk.

Q. Now, when was the last time you saw the General that night?

A. Oh, somewhere between 1:00 and 2:00 o'clock.

[fol. 289] Q. And after he had made this speech from the monument and after he had made this other walk up towards the neighborhood of the flagpole with these folks, what did he do in between those times until he left the campus?

A. He just milled around there on the—back down next to the monument there.

Q. Was he doing anything differently from the other people?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything that would attract your attention to him other than the fact that you knew he was General Walker?

A. That's all.

Mr. Andress: Pass the witness.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Witt, at the time you went to the campus of Ole Miss—and you said you were over there five days and five nights before Sunday, September the 30th, if I understood you correctly?

A. The five days and five nights included September the 30th.

Q. All right. Now the reason you were over there was to keep Meredith from entering the University of Mississippi, wasn't it?

[fol. 290] A. That was what our orders was Thursday.

Q. Now when were those orders changed?

A. After Thursday, we was—well, Sunday night we knew he was there. We had the report he had done got there.

Q. Now you said you went over there Sunday night because Sheriff Faulkner, or somebody called Sheriff Faulkner, or called you?

A. Sheriff Faulkner called me, yes, sir.

Q. You didn't get any instructions that night, did you?

A. Nothing only just come to the campus.

Q. Come to the campus. Now when was it somebody told you that you was over there to keep violence down? Did anybody ever tell you that?

A. Our Governor told us to try to keep down violence if we could—

Q. When was that?

A. That was on a Thursday.

Q. On a Thursday?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But your avowed purpose for being over there was to try to keep Meredith from coming on the campus, wasn't it? That's what you had been there for?

A. That was Thursday.

Q. Did you get any further word from the Governor [fol. 291] after Thursday?

A. No, sir, I didn't directly, no, sir.

Q. Did you get any direct word from the Lt. Governor after Thursday?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were called Sunday to come over there, is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. And you had received no other orders than the orders that you had had, to keep Meredith from being registered in the University of Mississippi, isn't that correct?

A. Faulkner, I asked him what was I supposed to do when I got there and he said, "Try to take care of the students and keep them from starting anything."

Q. All right, now you got there about 4:30?

A. 4:30.

Q. And at that time were the Marshals already on the campus?

A. They were.

Q. And did you see any of the sheriffs and constables at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?

A. Well, now that would be hard to say.

[fol. 292] Q. Well, would you say 400?

A. No, sir, there wasn't—the 400 included the highway patrol. And the highway patrol—some of them was there when we got there but I don't think it would be 400 of them at that time.

Q. All right. Now did you take a position up pretty close to where the Marshals were around the Lyceum Building?

A. I was directly in front of the Lyceum Building, just across that little street.

Q. Did you stay there for a considerable period of time after you got there at 4:30?

A. I believe it was approximately 8:00 o'clock when the gas was turned loose and I left then.

Q. You were there then around the Lyceum Building until the gas was turned on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now prior to the time that the Marshals fired their gas, what was the crowd doing insofar as the Marshals were concerned?

A. You mean before the gas was turned loose?

Q. That's right.

A. Well, nothing. Just standing around. Some of them were thumping cigarette butts towards the Army truck.

Q. Were there any pebbles thrown?

A. No, sir, not as I could see.

[fol. 293] Q. Was there any fire caught on one of the vehicles from a match or cigarette—

A. I believe I recall at one time there was a little fire started and somebody jerked a fire extinguisher and put it out.

Q. Were there any abusive words being spoken?

A. Well, now I imagine there was some bad language when I went over there, yes, sir.

Q. Were the Marshals saying anything or were they standing mute?

A. Marshals wasn't saying—I couldn't hear them saying anything at that time.

Q. But there were being some instruments tossed along with pebbles, lighted cigarettes, matches, et cetera?

A. Repeat that question, Mr. Gooch, please, sir.

Q. There were some insults or strong words being tossed at the Marshals in addition to pebbles?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Cigarettes, and so forth?

A. There was some harsh words said, yes, sir.

Q. It was after these pebbles, as you described them, were tossed and the cigarettes that the first barrage of gas was fired, is that correct?

A. Now your pebbles, I don't know what you are calling pebbles. I only seen cigarettes, cigarette butts thumped.

[fol. 294] Q. You didn't see any pebbles?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any of the pebbles bouncing off their helmets?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or anything of that sort. Now you say the gas was fired along about 8:00 o'clock?

A. To the best of my recollection, I would say about 8:00 o'clock.

Q. Was it after dark?

A. Oh, yes, sir, just good dusky dark.

Q. And then after the gas was fired, did you go down towards the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On account of the gas?

A. Yes. And I did run at that time, too.

Q. All right. Now after you had run down to the monument, did you have an occasion to go back up towards the Lyceum Building?

A. We would ease back as far as we could but we couldn't —at that time, the gas was floating towards us and we couldn't get back up there.

Q. Was there a riot going on after that gas was fired?

A. That's when it started.

Q. Did that riot grow in intensity as the night wore [fol. 295] on?

A. It went until 5:00 o'clock.

Q. What all did the students throw at those Marshals?

A. Well, I seen them roll up wheelbarrows of brick and they would go to, somewhere in town and get the coca-cola bottles, sticks of wood; would break up the concrete benches —anything they could find.

Q. And what would they do with them when they picked them up?

A. If they could get up close enough, they would throw them at the Marshals.

Q. If they didn't get close enough, they would throw them anyway, isn't that the—

A. No, they didn't throw them until—they didn't want to waste their ammunition.

Q. All right. And they tried to get up close enough to be effective every time they threw them?

A. They would do their best.

Q. You didn't see any of them throwing unless the thrower had a reasonable opportunity of hitting his mark, is that right?

A. Well, now when the National Guard came through, or any other cars, as far as that's concerned, they tried to take care of them as it came through.

Q. You mean with bricks and stones?

[fol. 296] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so from—and so forth. Did they do a pretty good job of it?

A. Yeah, I thought they done a good job.

Q. Did they set any automobiles on fire?

A. They burned and destroyed 16 cars.

Q. Was that during the time you were there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between 4:30 in the afternoon and about 5:00 o'clock the next morning?

A. That's right.

Q. Prior to the time you saw General Walker come on the campus, were the students throwing rocks and stones and bricks and sticks at the Marshals?

A. They were throwing them before he got there and after he got there.

Q. Was it obvious to anybody that wanted to look that there was a riot going on at the time General Walker got on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, anybody could have told that.

Q. Were the students actually in the process—I don't mean continuously but in sporadic spurts, tossing their bricks and stones and missiles at the Marshals at the time General Walker got to the campus?

A. Before he got there?

[fol. 297] Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time he got there?

A. Yes, sir, they never did stop hardly.

Q. All right. Then you could plainly see from where you were down around the Confederate monument these charges or rocks and bricks and stones being thrown at the Marshals?

A. I could see them run up there with a brick in their hands.

Q. But could you see the arm movement of throwing?

A. Until they broke out a lot of the lights, I could.

Q. All right. Now there was considerable light in front of the Lyceum Building, was there not?

A. At one time there were. They eventually broke out every light.

Q. Well, I know, but there were some lights under the canopy of the Lyceum Building that stayed on all night, were there not?

A. Some of them stayed on all night but the Marshals had to turn their lights on their cars and jeeps.

Q. You could see the Lyceum Building, or the lights from the Lyceum Building, from the monument, could you not?

A. Well, you could see the lights but within that mist of tear gas, it was hard to see the building. And when it was too thick, you couldn't even see the lights.

[fol. 298] Q. But you could, if you walked up there around the flagpole, see pretty well what was going on around the Lyceum Building, couldn't you?

A. Not too good when the lights was—when that gas was there.

Q. I know, but did the gas lift and then come some more gas?

A. There was plenty of gas turned loose.

Q. That was quite obvious to everybody, both from a sight and a nostril standpoint, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You stated that you saw General Walker as he approached the campus and I believe you said on the south side of University Avenue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about how far was he from the monument when you first saw him?

A. I would say approximately 15 steps.

Q. Was there anybody at all with him or was he alone?

A. There was a young gentleman with him and this other fellow that I am referring to as Gene Connelly staggered up from somewhere. He wasn't with him but he staggered up from somewhere.

Q. Just the two of them, so far as you know?

[fol. 299] A. Yes, sir.

Q. As he got in closer to the monument, did anybody group themselves around him?

A. Well, there was a few walking up to him to shake hands with him and talk to him.

Q. Was anything said about, "Here is General Walker," or "Here is our leader"?

A. Yeah, I heard some of them say, "Here comes General Walker."

Q. Did they say, "Here is our leader"?

A. Said, "Yeah, we've got a leader now."

Q. Hear any of them ask him where his volunteers were?

A. I don't recall that now for sure, no, sir.

Q. All right. After he had been greeted there, did you go to him or did he come to you?

A. Well, I believe he walked up in the crowd where I was at. There was a, eight or ten of us standing up there, the crowd, and he seen my badge. We had orders to put our badge out on our coat and a white rag around our arm.

Q. All right. He walked over to you, did he?

A. Shook hands with me and introduced hisself and said, "I would like for you to deputize me, so I can help in this matter." He said, "I'm just here to observe."

Q. Now what did he exactly say? What did he exactly say?

[fol. 300] A. He said, "I would like for you to deputize me while I'm here so I won't, nothing will happen to me."

He said, "I'm not here to help in this matter in neither way but," he said, "I would just like to be on the safe side."

Q. Are you sure he said all that to you?

A. Well, Mr. Gooch, it's hard to remember everything that was said back that far.

Q. That's right, I know that, and I'm referring somewhat here to your deposition which was taken in March.

Now is your recollection better now than it was on March the 13th, 1964? I am asking you if it is?

A. Well, now I remember him walking up to me and shaking hands and say, "I would like for you—"

The Court: That wasn't his question, sir. His question was, is your recollection better now than it was on March the 13th of 1964.

A. Well, now I wouldn't say that it was.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right. I recall, and we will get to it in a moment, that you said that what transpired between you, that you shook hands and he asked you to deputize him. That's all he said. And that you told him that you did not have the authority to deputize him, let alone in that county, but you were from a different county and couldn't deputize him if you wanted to?

[fol. 301] A. That's right.

Q. Now that's what I understood you to say in substance in March. I don't believe you mentioned anything about so he would be on the safe side or any of that sort of thing. We will get to that in a moment, though.

Now what is your best recollection now?

A. He shook hands with me and asked, "I would like for you to deputize me."

Q. All right.

A. And I told him, I says, "General, I don't have the authority to deputize you in this county, much less than my own," and I said, "This is not my county."

Q. Now that is substantially what was said between the two of you there?

A. As best as I can recall, yes, sir.

Q. All right. That's the later version and is now what you say you think happened?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now after he asked you to deputize him and you declined, what did he do?

A. Are you asking me a question?

Q. Oh, yes. What did he do after he asked you to deputize him, what did he do then?

A. Well, he just milled around there by the monument a while there.

[fol. 302] Q. Then what did he do?

A. Then he walked up a little closer. I heard him say something about, "We'll walk up a little closer and see what's going on."

And he walked up somewhere in the neighborhood of the flagpole.

Q. Did anybody go with him?

A. Well, not particularly go with him. Now the young man that was with him, walked with him, and then of course there was some behind him that just watched him as he walked up there.

Q. And you say nobody particularly went with him?

A. I don't think they called themselves going with him.

Q. I'm not talking about what they called themselves. I'm asking you if a number of people followed General Walker up towards the flagpole?

A. Well, there was some went in front of him and some went behind him, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Would you attempt to fix the number that was behind him?

A. Well, I don't really—somewhere in the neighborhood of three or four hundred.

Q. Now that's when he went up towards the flagpole the first time?

[fol. 303] A. I believe—yes, sir.

Q. Some three or four hundred went along behind him?

A. Well, no, let me back up on that just a little bit, Mr. Gooch.

Q. Well, go ahead, back up, either way you want.

A. I don't see that three or four hundred followed him because that dark, it would be hard for me to tell how many people followed him.

Q. Yeah.

A. I would say there was that many people behind him at that time in that area right down there.

Q. Well, were they just standing there or were they moving towards the flagpole with him?

A. Some people didn't move at all. Some people sit around on the benches. Some sit on the steps and didn't move.

Q. And some of them moved along with him up towards the flagpole, is that correct?

A. Some moved in front of him and behind him, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now did you say how far he got on that occasion? Did he get up near the flagpole?

A. Somewhere close to the flagpole. I don't recall of him ever walking past the flagpole.

Q. Now did any incident occur with respect to Reverend Gray, this preacher that you referred to? I don't know [fol. 304] whether you mentioned his name as Gray or not. Was it Duncan Gray?

A. I don't know what his name was.

Q. Well, a preacher, anyway?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You referred to him as "a preacher"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did any conversation occur between General Walker and Reverend Duncan Gray or this preacher at the time he went up to the flagpole the first time with this crowd following him and on his way back?

A. Well, that was just before he went on the flag—up on the monument to make a speech.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. As he started back, the preacher kept nagging at him and pulling his coat, to try to stop the crowd.

Q. What did the preacher ask him to do?

A. He said, "General," he said, "This crowd will listen to you. Talk to them and have them go home. This is no good."

Q. Did he ask him to stop the rioting?

A. Yes, sir, he said, asked him to stop the rioting.

Q. What did the General reply?

A. He told him, he said, "I didn't come here—" He said, "I couldn't stop it if I wanted to." Said, "There's nothing [fol. 305] I can do."

Q. He said he wouldn't stop it if he could?

A. No, sir, he didn't say that.

Q. He didn't say that. All right. Then you say General Walker went back down around the vicinity of the monument. Now was there something said about him making a speech?

A. They kept on at him to make a speech.

Q. Now did the preacher attempt to get General Walker, while he was making his speech on the monument?

A. One time he came around on the left-hand side, which was the north, the way I was facing, to reach to him again. That was after I heard him be threatened and I walked around in front of General and caught him and drug him out in there.

Q. You are anticipating me. Did the preacher, as you refer to, did he ask General Walker while he was on the monument to try to stop the riot?

A. I don't recall of him getting to say nothing to him because when he reached up to catch his britches leg, that's when I reached and grabbed him.

[fol. 306] Q. So you got the preacher out of there, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. How many people would you say was on the campus there in the Circle—the Circle, now, and as distinguished from the campus, at the time General Walker was making his speech out there on the monument that night?

A. You mean in the Circle, or in the whole area around there?

Q. That whole area around the Circle, the flagpole, the Lyceum Building and the monument.

A. When I first got there I would say 400 people, in the whole area.

Q. How many was around the monument while he was making his speech?

A. Mr. Gooch, that is going to be hard to say. Somewhere in the neighborhood of one hundred people, maybe.

Q. All right. Now, tell me again what you heard General Walker say?

A. Well, I heard him say, "Violence is not the answer. Cuba is yonderway." And he pointed to the southerly direction. He told them, "Protest all you want to." They have that right. And I heard him say something about help is on its way.

[fol. 307] Q. "Help is on its way", you heard him say to the crowd, "Help is on its way"?

A. Something like that, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, what happened after he finished his talk on the monument?

A. He got off and talked around there to a few other people, milled around there a little bit, say four or five minutes, and he walked up toward the flagpole again.

Q. When he walked up toward the flagpole again now, that was the second time he had gone toward the flagpole, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When he walked up to the flagpole again did anybody follow him?

A. Well, there were people there walking. I don't know whether they called themselves following him or not.

Q. All right. And was he in front—a—

A. No, sir.

Q. —of anybody behind him?

A. Well, he had to be in front of somebody that was behind him.

Q. All right. They were not in a single bunch in one pile, were they?

A. No.

[fol. 308] Q. They were not walking completely abreast, were they?

A. No, sir. I would say there were as many in front of him as there were behind him.

Q. All right. We will get down to that in a little while. Now, did he make any remarks as he started up there, this second trip toward the flagpole?

A. I don't remember him making any remarks about anything. He talked to people, shook hands with people as he went along, you know. In other words, he didn't walk directly toward the flagpole. He was walking awhile criss-crossing around and shaking hands and talking.

Q. How many would you estimate were in the crowd that went up that time?

A. That is still hard to say, Mr. Gooch. Like I say, there were people in every direction.

Q. How many would you say?

A. In whole area?

Q. No, around General Walker at the monument, when he started and you went with him toward the flagpole?

A. Well, I don't know how far from him you would have to say was around him. In other words, naturally, there was people, some in front and behind him, but they were scattered out for a quarter of a mile from him all during the time he was there.

[fol. 309] Q. Now, you stated on direct examination that you never saw General Walker doing anything, that, I believe you said, nobody else did. Did you make a statement like that?

A. Yes, sir, but I thought that over a little bit.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I seen some of the rest of them lead some of the violence and I didn't see him doing that. I will say this, I didn't see him doing anything more than I done.

Q. Did you throw anything towards the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go towards the Marshals?

A. I went in the Marshals' building.

Q. I mean did you go up there with him up towards the Marshals?

A. No, sir, not particularly. I tried to watch the students, what they were doing, while they were in—while they were engaged in that kind of stuff, yes, sir.

Q. Did any of these crowd, or whoever it was that went with General Walker toward the flagpole, on either occasion you have testified about him going to the flagpole, have anything in their hands in the way of missiles, rocks or stones?

A. I seen some of them in the crowd with bricks in their hands.

[fol. 310] Q. Were they following along beside General Walker?

A. No, sir, the ones with the bricks would be more or less in front of him and out at each side.

Q. And out at each side?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As they got up to this flagpole, could you see any of them throw the rocks?

A. They couldn't throw from the flagpole on up there. They would try to work on up close.

Q. Did you see any of them throw a—

A. Not down at the flagpole.

Q. I mean in the group with General Walker. Did you see any of them throw?

A. Not at the flagpole.

Q. I mean in the group with General Walker?

A. No, sir, not that group.

Q. Any group?

A. I did later when they tried to work on up closer when the gas would go down.

Q. You said General Walker said, "Violence is not your answer." Or did he say, "No violence is intended?" Do you know which he said?

A. Yes, sir, I sure do.

Q. What did he say?

[fol. 311] A. He said, "Violence is not your answer, Cuba is yonderway."

Q. He did not say, "No violence was intended?"

A. No, sir, I didn't hear him say that.

Q. He said, "Cuba is yonderway."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said, "Protest all you want, you have got a right to do that"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then did he say this: "Protest all you want to, they might run out of gas, help is on its way, thousands are coming"?

A. I believe I remember hearing some statement like that, yes, sir.

Q. You testified before that is exactly what he said.

A. Well, yes, sir, I heard that.

Q. He said that while he was on the monument?

A. I believe that's right, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Did you hear him tell the students that Birdsong had sold them out?

A. No, sir. The main reason he got up there to make the speech, some of the students—

The Court: Wait just a minute. You tell what you saw and what you heard and don't give us what somebody else [fol. 312] may have done.

A. All right. He got up to make the speech. He didn't say Birdsong sold them out. He told them Gov. Barnett hadn't sold them out. He said, "I have heard Birdsong is the one that sold you out."

Q. Well, I quote again from page 24 of your deposition when you said, "Gov. Barnett did not—didn't sell you out, Birdsong did."

Do you remember making that statement?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Now, you say there was never a large crowd following Walker toward the flagpole?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you saying there wasn't, or you didn't say that?

A. I am saying they weren't following him after he made his speech and wouldn't lead them the crowd more or less got irritated at him.

Q. The first time he went up before he made the speech, did anybody follow him up then?

A. Some came along, yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: All right, could we have a recess before I finish with this witness?

The Court: Yes, sir. Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury, let's recess until 3:30.

[fol. 313] Mr. Andress: After the Jury is out, could I make my Bill?

The Court: Let's get it done now, yes, sir.

(Jury out; the following proceedings were had outside the presence and hearing of the Jury.)

Mr. Andress: Sheriff, each time you saw General Walker over there that evening, did you ever see him leading a charge?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Mr. Andress: That is all.

The Witness: I may get a little scared up here in front of all these people and the Judge and everything.

Mr. Andress: That is all.

The Court: All right, we will recess.

(Short recess was had.)

[fol. 314] The Court: Mr. Watts is getting the original depositions. He will be here in just a minute.

All right, Mr. Gooch.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Witt, I don't know whether you would agree with a description such as this or not, but on this particular night, were you nattily dressed?

A. Well, I had my dress pants and coat on.

Q. Well, would you consider yourself to be nattily dressed?

A. Well, I hadn't thought of it either way but I guess you would say yes.

Q. All right. Are you a portly man?

A. Well, now, that's a matter of opinion.

Q. Let's see if we can get it in the record, then. How tall are you, Mr. Witt?

A. About five, eleven.

Q. And how much did you weigh on September the 30th, 1962?

A. About 275.

Q. All right, sir. Now, Mr. Witt, do you remember when your deposition was taken over in Oxford, Mississippi, by Mr. Watt, on the 13th of March, 1964?

A. I don't remember the date but I remember giving the deposition, yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall, also, that there was some cross ex-
[fol. 315] amination at that time after Mr. Watt had finished—

A. I do.

Q. —examining you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now read along with me here. So we will get the continuity, I am reading from the deposition of Mr. Witt that was taken by Mr. Watt, Counsel for General Walker, on the 13th day of March, 1964, in Oxford, Mississippi.

Mr. Witt, if I—

Mr. Watts: Might I inquire what page, please, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: Page 29.

Mr. Watts: Is this my examination or your cross examination?

Mr. Gooch: Cross examination, Mr. Watts.

The Court: Cross.

Mr. Andress: Judge, at this point, I would like to interpose an objection for this reason: The way you impeach a witness is to ask him the same question and then if you get something different, then you can go ahead and read what he says before, and not the way that Counsel has been doing it.

I have let it go along but I do think we ought to do it right, and, therefore, I would like to make an objection to it until the proper predicate is laid.

[fol. 316] The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: May it go to the entire line here?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. To get the continuity, this question was asked: "Mr. Witt, I understood on the afternoon of September 30th, 1962, you got a call and did the call come to you or did it just come to the Sheriff's office?"

Your answer, "It came to me," is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. It came to you personally?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was Sheriff Faulkner from New Albany?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the answer was, "From Union County, yes, sir." Was that your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Did he tell you why he wanted you to come to Oxford?" And your answer, "He told me to come over there."

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, please, Mr. Gooch. You skipped.

Mr. Gooch: "He told us to come over there."

Mr. Watts: Right.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "I believe it was Friday afternoon, that if we didn't get called back, not to come back until Monday," is that correct?

[fol. 318] A. That's right. Or until we was called.

Q. "Question—"

A. Or until we was called.

The Court: Right now he is just asking you whether or not what you said in this deposition was said at the time you gave that deposition.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now at the time you gave this deposition, you were under oath as you are today; did you understand it at the time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: I see. You had been over here previously?" And your answer, "Yes, sir, I had been here five days and nights." Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "You had been over here five days and nights?"

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Were there a lot of officers over here at that time?"

"Answer: Yes, sir, I believe they estimated down here at the Army Building that there was sheriffs, highway patrol, constables, and so forth, 425 men."?

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. Did you make that answer?

[fol. 319] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: 425 officers had assembled here at Oxford and had come to the University for a number of days?"

Your answer, "I don't know if it would have been the same crowd every time. That was on Thursday. The day he was supposed to have come in here, they estimated 425."

A. Right.

Q. "Did that include the highway patrol?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir," is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "The highway patrol, peace officers, sheriffs and deputies?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir," is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Why were they here?"

And you answered, "That was the day he was supposed to come in here, on Thursday, Meredith.

"Question: And what was the purpose of the officers being here when Meredith came in?"

And you answered, "To stop him from getting in".?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: To stop him from getting in?"
You answered, "Yes, sir." Is that correct?
[fol. 320] A. Yes, sir.
Q. "To prevent him from getting on the campus?"
And you answered, "That is right"?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. "Question: That was what you understood was the purpose that you all were assembled here for?"
And you answered, "Yes, sir."?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is that correct?
A. That's right.
Q. "And that was the object that you had in mind, to prevent Meredith from getting on the campus and enrolling in the University?"
And you answered, "Yes, sir."?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you said—is that correct? "The court reporter can't get your nod."
And you answered, "Yes, sir." But they did disarm us," is that correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. "Question: They did what?"
"Answer, they had taken our guns on the Thursday now. They had taken our guns away from us.
"Question: Who did that?"
Your answer, "The Lt. Governor, Paul Johnson." Was [fol. 321] that answer correct?
A. That's right.
Q. "Question: But you still, after your guns were taken away from you, you were still here as I understood it, and as your orders and directions were, and the information given you from the officers in charge, you were still here for the purpose of preventing James Meredith getting on the campus and enrolling as a student at the University?"
And your answer, "Yes, sir."?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Well, is that correct?

"Question: After you got the call from Sheriff Faulkner on September 30th, you came on to Oxford, is that correct?"

Your answer, "Yes, sir."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that true?

A. That's right.

Q. "Did you go directly to the campus of the University?"

Your answer, "Yes, sir."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Correct? "Did you say who was with you at that time?" You answered, "Cecil Payne," is that correct?

A. Right.

[fol. 322] Q. "Now Cecil Payne is another Deputy Sheriff of Pontotoc County?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct? "Now when you got on the campus at the University, the first tear gas had not been fired, had it?"

And you answered, "No, sir." Was that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. "And when you went up to the Lyceum Building just what was the situation that you observed there at the Lyceum?"

You answered, "The Marshals were in front of the Lyceum Building and we had gathered up on both sides. Our orders was to try to control the students and to keep them from doing anything violent."

Did you make that answer to that question?

A. I did.

Q. Now the rest of it—well, we will go on with it.

"There is a street that runs in front of the Lyceum Building?"

You answered, "Yes, sir," correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And you officers were out in the street in front of the Lyceum Building?"

"Answer, just across the street, we were just on the [fol. 323] curb back from the street."

"Question: Now the students and the crowd, you said you didn't know whether they were all students or not, but the crowd was assembled over in this circular area that is called the circle right across the street from the Marshals?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: Now when you first got there, what would you estimate the number in that crowd was then?"

You answered, "When I first got there just around 400 or 500 people, when I first got there." Correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "500 people?" And you answered, "Yes, sir." Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Now did that crowd constantly grow?"

And you said, "Oh, yes, sir," is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "As the night went on and the whole crowd on campus grew, didn't it?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Between the time when you first got there, which you estimated at 4:30, and the time of the first tear gas [fol. 324] which you estimated at 6:00, I believe that is correct?"

And you said, "That is just a guess"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "I understand that is just a guess, approximately."

You answered, "Yes, sir."

"Were you there all the time?"

And you answered, "Oh, yes, sir, I was there until 5:00 o'clock the following morning." Was that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. "Sometime along there the highway patrol left, didn't they?

"Answer: Yes, sir, shortly after the gas was released, they left, I would say, within five minutes." Is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. "And most of the law officers left?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: In fact you were just about the only law officer that stayed on there, weren't you?"

And you answered, "Me and Jim Garrison was the only ones that I remember," is that correct?

A. That's correct.

[fol. 325] Q. "Question: Jim Garrison, that is the Deputy Sheriff from Lafayette County?"

"Answer: Yes, sir.

"Question: And you are the only two law officers that remained there on the campus to try to help that night?"

And you answered, "The only ones I could see, yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. "Now just prior to the time the first tear gas was fired, the crowd had gotten a little unruly, hadn't it?"

And you answered, "Oh, yes, sir." Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: There was a good deal of cursing going on, wasn't there?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir." Was that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "And you heard a lot of profanity?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And the crowd was getting to what you would call restive, they were unruly, weren't they?"

And your answer, "At that time before the gas was turned aloose, they had thumped cigarettes and cigar butts [fol. 326] and they had struck matches and thrown on top of the canvas of the Army trucks and some of them at the Marshals"?

A. Right.

Q. Was that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. "Question: Trying to set the things afire?"

And you said, "Well, I don't know." Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "Did any of this canvas, these canvas tops, catch afire?" You answered, "At one time I recall that the canvas did sort of blaze up just a little bit and somebody put it out with one of the extinguishers."

Did you make that answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct? "Do you remember the occasion when a photographer came in, he and his wife in a car, and they took their car and broke up the camera, that happened before the tear gas was fired, didn't it?"

And you answered, "No, sir. I didn't see any cars destroyed until after—" He—is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. "Question: I don't mean the car was destroyed, his camera, his Kodak was destroyed, do you remember seeing that before the tear gas was fired?"

[fol. 327] Answer, "No, sir, I don't remember that." Was that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "You say the crowd had grown unruly before it was fired, now after the tear gas was fired, then the crowd really got violent?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir"?

A. That's right.

Q. Is that correct? "In other words, there is no way of describing it except it was just a riot, just a mob, a violent mob, that is what it was, wasn't it?"

And you answered,—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: This violent mob was undertaking then to do anything they could and any harm they could do to the Marshals and to the property there on the campus, wasn't it?"

You answered, "Yes, sir."

Mr. Andress: This is all repetitious. He's been through this.

The Court: We have gone through this. What is the purpose?

Mr. Gooch: I am trying to get the continuity. I'm getting down to where I consider it impeachment.

[fol. 328] The Court: All right.

Mr. Andress: Pretty long as a preface, Judge.

Mr. Gooch: I was just trying to make the continuity but I will skip over.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now you have previously testified that they were getting bricks and stones and sticks from whatever source available, have you not?

A. Right.

Q. And were they getting a considerable number of them at the new Science Building down there at Hume Hall?

A. I presume that's where they were coming from. I couldn't say where they was coming from.

Q. All right. On Page 38, "Question: Now this whole crowd out there—" It's the third question on Page 38.

Mr. Andress: Line 9?

Mr. Gooch: Well, mine isn't lined, Mr. Andress, so I will have to call it the best way I can.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "Question: This whole crowd out there, you say it wasn't organized, but that whole crowd or group of people out there in that area which you have estimated at least one thousand, they were participating in this thing, weren't they?"

Answer, "I wouldn't say, Mr. Smith, that everybody was throwing, but the crowd would go together as long as they could."

[fol. 329] "Question: And that happened not just once or twice, that happened numerous times?"

Answer, "That happened all night long until 5:00 o'clock."

Is that correct?

A. That is wrong. I remember giving the statement but I misunderstood the question and answered it wrong.

Q. All right.

A. If you will go on and read, you will find that somebody in the crowd asked me then to mark a circle where this thousand people was at. And it's completely around, surrounding the whole area.

Q. All right. All right. And the last question on the page, "And the ones in front would throw at the Marshals, wouldn't they?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir," is that correct?

A. When they would get up close, they could, yes, sir.

Q. "Now that was taking place before and at the time General Walker got there, wasn't it?" That's Page 39.

You answered, "Yes, sir," is that right?

A. Right.

Q. "And in those crowds that you say they would all surge up that way, some of those crowds that would surge up that way in your judgment would amount to one thousand people?"

[fol. 330] And your answer, "Yes, sir."

A. I was wrong on that, Mr. Gooch.

Q. All right. Now, how many were there?

A. I don't know. The thousand people included the people sitting in their cars, on the concrete benches that the campus had there and on the doorsteps and everything, and I don't know. I would say 15 to 50 people sometimes maybe would go in a crowd.

Q. All right. You are wrong then, you say you were wrong when you said a thousand people, you were wrong to the extent of the numbers, is that correct?

A. To the extent of number following in any group. Some of them never got out of their cars.

Q. Going down to one, two, three, four, five, the sixth question, "Now when General Walker got there, I believe you say that you didn't know him?"

And you answered, "No, sir"?

A. Right.

[fol. 331] Q. You had heard of him? Answer: "I heard of him." Question: "You knew who he was?" And you answered, "Yes, sir," is that correct?

A. When they pointed him out to me, yes, sir.

Q. All right. The one, two, third question on page 40, "But you did know he was a national figure and recognized as a prominent man?" And your answer, "Oh, yes, sir." Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. The last question on page 40, "How far, when you first saw him there, how far would you say he was from the monument, approximately?" And you answered: "Not over forty feet."

Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. "Do you know how long he had been standing there before you saw him?"

Answer: "Well, no, sir, I heard the students say 'here comes General Walker' and they said, 'we've got a leader now.'"

Is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. "When General Walker came on campus and the word began to get around, the word just went over the crowd, didn't it?"

[fol. 332] And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Right?

A. Right.

Q. "It was just like a wave going out over that crowd, 'General Walker has gotten here', and is that right?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And that made an impression on that crowd, didn't it?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And you could tell the difference in their attitude and their demeanor when he got there and they figured that they had a leader? It made a difference, didn't it? There was more enthusiasm, wasn't there?"

And your answer, "It looked like it, yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir. I am wanting to back up on one thing right there.

Q. Yes, sir?

A. After he made his speech I believe the biggest majority of them turned against him, after they found out he was not going to lead them. They didn't think too much of him then.

Q. All right. The next question: "And this crowd be-[fol. 333] came enthusiastic and they began to say 'General Walker is here, our leader is here', and when you heard that you began to look for him, didn't you?"

Answer: "I moved to one side where I could see him, naturally. I was like the students, I wanted to see what he looked like."

Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. "You had on your Deputy Sheriff's badge, didn't you?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On top of page 42—before we get to that question I will ask you again, did you go to General Walker or did General Walker come to you?

A. I will say General Walker walked to where I was standing.

Q. All right, that is what you said in your deposition, "And when you walked down to General Walker, or walked down towards him, did he come to meet you when he saw that Sheriff's badge?"

Answer: "He came to me."

Right?

A. Right.

Q. Question: "He came to you?"

[fol. 334] Answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "How far did he walk to get to you, when he saw you?"

Answer: "Just a few feet west of the monument."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And so you and he did stand there for a little space of time and talked, didn't you, when he was asking you—"

Answer: "He introduced himself to me and shook hands with me and he said he would like for me to deputize him and I told him I didn't have the authority to deputize him, even in my own county, and this wasn't my county."

A. That is correct.

Q. That is what you testified to on your deposition?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. That is correct there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The other matters you threw in are not correct?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that. That is argumentative and an improper question.
[fol. 335] The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "So he was standing there talking to you at that time?" That is the next question, and you answered: "Yes, sir."

A. That's right.

Q. All right. The first question on page 43, "You never did talk to him personally any more that night?"

And your answer: "No, sir."

Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. "What happened then, when you and him stood there and talked a little bit and he asked you to deputize him and you told him you couldn't do it, you and he shook hands, just what happened then?"

Answer: "Students kept on begging him to lead them and he told them he wasn't over there to participate in none of the violence or anything and he said, 'I am just over here to observe', he said, 'let's walk up closer to the front, I'll walk up closer to the front and see if we can see what is going on' ".

Was that your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "Now, that was before he made the speech?"

Answer: "Yes, sir, he just walked a little piece up that [fol. 336] way and then when the gas turned aloose, he came back down and that is when he got on the stand and made his speech."

Did you make that answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "Now, when he walked up that way, you know where the flagpole is out in the middle of the Circle?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "When he walked up to the flagpole, that was when he had the first encounter with the preacher, Duncan Gray, didn't he?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir, when he was coming back from the flagpole down to the monument."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And question number two on that page 44, "And you heard that conversation in which the preacher was begging Walker to help them break this up and get the students to break it up and go back home?" And your answer: "Yes, sir, I heard that."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 337] Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "And the preacher was telling him, didn't the preacher say to him, 'General, these boys will listen to you, please help us break this up and ask them to quit this and go home.'"

And your answer: "He did."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "And Walker then said, 'I am not here to break it up, I didn't come here to break it up, I couldn't break it up if I wanted to?"

And your answer: "That is right."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Question: The last one on page 44, "In that speech, among other things, you heard him say, did you not, that 'you got a right to protest, protest all you want to, they may run out of gas, and help is on the way, thousands are coming,'".

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "When he said that, when he said, 'Protest all you [fol. 338] want to, you've got a right to protest, keep it up, they may run out of gas, help is coming, thousands are on their way,' that pleased the crowd, didn't it?"

And what did you say?

A. Well, yes, sir.

Q. Well, you answered: "I would say so."

And the next question: "And they cheered and clapped and cheered and hollered, didn't they?"

And your answer?

A. "Yes, sir."

Q. Now, the last question on page 45: "About the time he said that, when he said that, was that about the time the preacher came up to him again?"

And your answer: "The best I can remember, Mr. Smith, the preacher came up to him just as he got upon the stand and he never did quit following him, and when he got upon the stand, he reached up and caught him by the leg and begged him again."

Question: "He begged him to stop it, or asked him to stop it?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

That was your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that happen?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 339] Q. Did that happen at the monument?

A. Up at the monument was the last time he caught his britches leg.

Mr. Watts: Judge, this is all repetition.

Mr. Gooch: Wait just a minute, it is not repetition. He has denied some of these statements on cross examination.

The Court: I know it, counsel. I will not sustain it.

Mr. Watts: All right.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "The preacher was still begging him, General Walker, to intercede with the students and ask them to stop their rioting and quit what they were doing and go back to their dormitories?"

And your answer: "That is right."

A. I am going to back up on that a little bit. The preacher didn't have but one word to say to him and I don't think General heard him then. The three men, that is when I got him.

Q. You say what you testified to over there in Mississippi is in error?

A. That is an error on that part, yes, sir.

Q. The next question—you answered, "That is right." And the next question, "That is what he was doing, wasn't it?"

[fol. 340] And you answered: "Yes, sir."

Do you want to back up on that?

A. Now, repeat that question.

Q. That alludes to the same question, that the preacher was asking Walker to stop the rioting. You said that was right. Now, do you say that is wrong?

A. He didn't talk to him while he was on the monument.

Q. All right. Question: "And General Walker then said—is that when he asked him what denomination he was?"

And your answer: "Now, the best I can recall it was just before he got on the stand, or as he was going to the monument, he turned and asked him 'What denomination are you, preacher?' He said, 'Episcopalian'. He turned around and looked at him and said, 'Well, you make me ashamed that I am an Episcopalian.'"

Question: "In fact, when the preacher was begging him to help or to try to get them to stop it, then did he use this language, 'Here is an Episcopalian preacher that makes me ashamed I am an Episcopalian'?"

And your answer: "Well, in those words or something like 'You make me ashamed I am an Episcopalian', I don't remember just exactly the words."

Is that correct?

[fol. 341] A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Now, on the top of page 47, Question: "Didn't you say on direct examination that everywhere Walker went the crowd followed him?"

And you answered: "Oh, yes, the crowd as well as myself. I watched him every move he made to see what was going to happen."

Did you make that answer?

A. I made that but I want to back up from that.

Q. You want to back up from that?

A. A full crowd never did follow him.

Q. All right. Did some follow him?

A. There were some in front and some behind him.

Q. Well, did some of them follow him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Question: "People wanted to see what he was going to do and what he was going to say and when he went up toward the flagpole the first time, and before he made his speech, did the crowd go up along with him then?"

And you answered: "Oh, yes, sir." Did you make that statement?

A. I made that statement.

Q. Is it true?

A. It is not true that they all followed him.

[fol. 342] Q. Did some of them follow him?

A. Of course, some was behind him, yes, sir.

Q. All right. The next question: "It was quite a big crowd, wasn't it?"

And you answered: "Yes, sir."

Is that right?

A. It was a big crowd in area, yes, sir.

Q. Was a big crowd following him?

A. Not no big crowd was following him.

Q. All right. Was a little crowd following him?

A. Yes, sir, there was a small crowd come up.

Q. Question: "And then he got right up just about to the flagpole, didn't he?"

And your answer: "I don't recall just how far he got, he got up there until they charged the gas."

Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Question: "In other words, there was such a crowd following him when he went up toward the flagpole that first time that the Marshals turned aloose tear gas down there, didn't they?"

Answer: "Yes, sir, but there were students ahead of him, in other words, the students were all up in front of all of us when we went up there."

You made that answer?

[fol. 343] A. I did.

Q. Is it correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "But there was quite a crowd following him and they turned aloose the tear gas?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. That is a correct answer?

A. Repeat that question one more time.

Q. "But there was quite a crowd following him and they turned aloose the tear gas?"

And you answered: "Yes, sir."

A. No, sir, I still say that would have to be wrong there. There wasn't no large crowd ever followed him.

Q. "Now, we will get back to the speech. After the preacher had begged him to try to help stop it and he said 'You make me ashamed I am an Episcopalian', then you say some of the students were saying, 'Barnett has sold us out, Barnett has sold us out.' And do you remember that when that happened that General Walker said, 'You have been let down but not by Barnett,' and he leaned over and whispered to a young man standing there beside him and then raised up and said, 'The man who let you down or sold you [fol. 344] out is Birdsong'."

And your answer: "I do."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true?

A. That is true. I remember that. But I didn't put one statement there I should have put, and he raised back up and said, "I understand you have been sold out by Birdsong."

Q. Well, now, you were under oath when this deposition was taken in Mississippi.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was just a bunch of us there in the Courtroom, Mr. Watts, Fred Smith and myself? I believe that was all that was there on your deposition?

A. I think so, yes, sir.

Q. You were not excited, were you?

A. No, sir.

Q. "Do you remember he leaned over and whispered to this young fellow?"

And you answered: "I do."

A. I do.

Q. "Then he rose back up and said, 'The man who sold you out is Col. Birdsong,'?" And you answered: "Yes, sir."

Is that true?

[fol. 345] A. Yes, sir. No, sir, he said, "I have been told Birdsong is the one that sold you out."

Q. You didn't say that when your deposition was taken?

A. No, sir. I done some thinking since then.

Q. Did you do any thinking before?

A. I done some, but I didn't know I was going to get in Court on this thing.

Q. You did know when your deposition was taken it might be used in Court, didn't you? Or did you know that?

A. I didn't think about it either way.

Q. "After this statement of the preacher it looked to you like the crowd was going to hurt the preacher, didn't it?"

And your answer: "I heard three men threaten him, or three people, I don't remember what age, but they were above students age."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is not read from the deposition, but you did take the preacher away from there?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. As you testified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you got him away from there to protect him, [fol. 346] didn't you?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Now, the one, two, three, fourth question on page 49, "Now, at the time that Walker was making his speech there was quite a crowd around the monument listening to him?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

Do you want to change that?

A. No, sir. No, sir, there was a crowd around.

Q. Quite a crowd?

A. They were parked in cars and they could hear him from the buildings on both sides.

Q. How many would you say was around him, aside from the deposition, when he made the speech?

A. Three or four hundred, somewhere in there.

Q. From the deposition again, the one, two, three, four, fifth, "Would you have any idea how many were circled around that monument listening?"

Answer: "There was 400 or 500 anyhow."

A. Well, there could have been that many, yes, sir.

Q. Question: "And a lot of them still had their bricks and their sticks and their bottles in their hands?"

Your answer: "Yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 347] Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "And you could plainly see those things in their hands?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "After he got through with the speech there he stepped down off the monument and started up that walk towards the Lyceum Building in—and the Marshals?"

And your answer: "Well, yes, sir, he walked that way."

Is that correct?

A. No, sir, I would like to change that a little bit. He didn't get directly off the monument and walk directly up that way. There was three or four or five minutes he milled around before he started that way.

Q. But he did walk up toward the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, he did walk up toward the flagpole, yes, sir.

Q. All right. The next question: "And as he walked up that walk, just right after he finished his speech, wasn't it?"

And your answer: "Yes, sir."

[fol. 348] Do you want to change that?

A. Well, it was a few minutes after he made his speech.

Q. All right. Question: "When he stepped down, he did talk to two or three people for just a minute after he stepped down off of the monument, didn't he? And then they started up that way?"

Answer: "I don't recall him stopping and talking to no individuals, no, sir."

Did you make that statement?

A. I don't remember him talking to no particular one. People were still shaking hands with him, yes, sir.

Q. All right. "You just don't remember?"

Answer: "No, sir."

Question: "At numerous times that night people would come up and catch hold of Walker and say something to him?"

Answer: "They begged him to lead them several different times."

You made that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. "And several times you saw people who would get ahold of him and attract his attention?"

[fol. 349] Answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. I don't remember—no, sir, they didn't get ahold of him. They shook hands with him.

Q. I am referring now to your questions and answers asked you in Oxford, Mississippi.

A. I didn't recall them getting ahold of him. They were shaking hands with him. As far as getting ahold of him, I didn't see nobody do that.

Q. You did say, didn't you, "I don't recall them catching ahold of him that way. They just walked up and would tell him 'General Walker, lead us. You can lead us and we could get something done.'"

A. Yes, I heard some of the students say, "If you will lead us we can get something done."

Q. All right, the second question on—

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, at this point I must object to reading this thing out of context.

Mr. Gooch: I will just read it all.

Mr. Watts: He gets in the middle of it, gets down to where the witness is going to testify and then he stops.

Mr. Gooch: We will offer it all.

The Court: Mr. Watts, on redirect examination you may offer what you think may be admitted, but I can't tell Mr. [fol. 350] Gooch how to cross examine.

Mr. Gooch: I will go ahead and read it all. I will put it in. I have no objections to it: "At numerous times that night . . ." the fourth question on page 50: "At numerous times that night people would come up and catch hold of Walker and say something to him?"

Answer: "They begged him to lead them several times."

To be absolutely correct, "And several times you saw people who would get ahold of him and attract his attention?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

A. They would shake hands with him.

Q. Question: "Catch him by the arms and try to attract his attention and begging him to do this and to do that?"

Answer: "I don't recall them catching ahold of him that way, they just walked up and would tell him 'General Walker, lead us. You can lead us and we could get something done.'"

Is that what happened?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Question: "You wouldn't say that they didn't catch ahold of him?"

[fol. 351] Answer: "It would be hard for me to say either way, because like I say, I couldn't be right beside him all the time. I was curious to see what was going on, myself."

Did you make that answer?

A. I did.

Q. Is it true?

A. It is true.

Q. "You just wouldn't know one way or the other?"

Answer: "That is right."

Now, did you make that statement?

A. Now, that is no way of knowing on which question you asked me that.

Q. Whether they caught ahold of him or not?

A. While I was in sight of him I didn't see nobody catch ahold of him.

Q. I asked you if you made that statement under oath?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Question: "Just immediately then after he finished making his speech, he stepped down off the monument and did you hear him say anything as he stepped down?"

Answer: "No, all I heard him say, the main thing I heard him say that stuck with me, he said, 'Violence is not the answer,' he says, 'Cuba is yonderway.' He said, 'Protest [fol. 352] all you want to'."

Question: "That was his speech?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that true?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Question: "I am talking about after the speech was over."

Answer: "No, I don't recall hearing none of his conversation then."

Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Question: "After his speech was over, he stepped down and started right up that walk toward the flagpole and the Lyceum Building?"

Answer: "He walked in that direction, yes, sir."

A. No, not immediately after he got off the thing.

Q. I am talking about did you make that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you want to change it?

A. He didn't go immediately, no, sir.

Q. All right. The answer you gave, "He walked in that direction, yes, sir," and the next question: "And the Marshals?" And you said, "Yes, sir."

Now, did he walk toward the Marshals?

[fol. 353] A. After he got through milling around he walked toward the flagpole.

Q. Question: "And this huge crowd followed him, didn't it?"

Answer: "They followed him and, of course, some of them run ahead of him and throwed things."

You made that statement when your deposition was taken, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it true?

A. It is not true it was a large crowd following him. I mean there was a large crowd in the area.

Q. Is it true some of them followed him and run up there and throwed things?

A. Some followed him.

Q. And they throwed things?

A. The ones in front did. He never got close enough for them to throw over him to the Lyceum Building?

Q. Check me and see if I am right. "They followed him and, of course, some of them run ahead of him and throwed things."

A. That is correct. The ones that run ahead.

Q. All right.

A. That's right.

Mr. Watts: That's right.

[fol. 354] Q. Question: "As they went on up there, as he started out, this crowd come in behind and alongside, and as they got on up there some of them got ahead and ran on up and through?"

Your answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "And they went on up and they went past the flagpole a little ways before the tear gas drove them back?"

Answer: "Yes, sir, they would get as close as they could."

Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Question: "And Walker went on past the flagpole?"

Answer: "Yes, sir."

Is that correct?

A. I made a mistake on a little bit of it. I don't believe he ever crossed the line on the flagpole.

Q. All right. "How far past the flagpole would you say Walker went before the tear gas drove him back?"

And you answered: "Oh, just a very few feet."

Now, is that true or untrue?

A. I don't believe he ever walked past the flagpole.

Q. You did say that on the deposition when it was taken?

[fol. 355] A. I did, yes, sir.

Q. "But he did go on and now at that time, if I understand, it is your estimate that this crowd that was following him and out on each side of him, that stood out there, would be 1,000 or more people?"

And you answered, "I would say at least 1,000."

Did you make that statement?

A. I made that remark but I was still wrong about—in other words, I asked you all—You all asked me the question. I understood it wrong.

[fol. 356] Now I'm talking about the thousand people was in the whole area. In other words, I was—somebody asked to mark on the map where it was and I did.

Q. Well, now do you think that question is unfair?

A. I just answered it wrong. I misunderstood the exact meaning of it.

Q. Misunderstood it?

A. In other words, there was a thousand people in the area.

Q. "And when they got up there in the vicinity of the flagpole and Walker passed the flagpole and this crowd all spread out there, those that could threw at the Marshals, didn't they?"

And you said, "Oh, yes, sir."

Is that right?

A. The ones that could throw at them did.

Q. "They threw everything they could at the Marshals, and the tear gas got so heavy that they then fell back?"

And you answered, "Oh, yes, sir, but the wind had changed and blowed the gas back toward the Marshals. You could get a lot closer then than you could at one time."

Did you make that answer?

A. I made that statement.

Q. Is that true?

A. Well, now that's not involving Walker going past [fol. 357] the flagpole.

Q. Oh, yes, it is.

A. No, sir, he never got past the flagpole.

Q. All right. Now, you say that he didn't, but you did say that in Oxford, didn't you?

Mr. Andress: Now, Judge, he's arguing with the witness.

The Court: Just a minute.

Mr. Gooch: Look at this thing and you will see it.

The Court: It will be up to the jury to determine the effect of the answer.

Mr. Andress: That's right.

The Witness: I done a lot of thinking after I give that and studied that thing out.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right. "Question: And some of those that got up to where they could throw, when the tear gas was fired, some of them ran back and others walked back, is that right?"

Answer, "Some of the kids would run, yes, sir." Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true?

A. That's true.

Q. "Some of them were running?"

Answer, "Yes, sir." Is that true?

[fol. 358] A. Yes, sir.

Q. "After that happened and at that time, when that was going on, you could still see the blazes and smoke from some of these cars that were burning?"

Answer, "They were burning them all night." Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "They were burning them all time and that was going on, and at that time there was whooping and yelling and cursing and all that sort of thing going on?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir." Is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. "In other words, just as you described in a moment ago, it was a violent mob?"

You answered, "Yes, sir."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The next to the last question on Page 53: "And you would say that this one thousand people that surged up there at the time Walker walked up past the flagpole, that was a violent mob, wasn't it?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir." Is that correct?

A. No, sir, that's not correct. I give it but I—

Q. Wait a minute. Did you make that answer?

A. I made the statement, yes, sir.

Q. Now you say that isn't correct?

[fol. 359] A. That's right, I misunderstood the question.

Q. You misunderstood the question?

A. That's right.

Q. All right. "Question: When the tear gas was fired and got heavy, and you fell back, where did you go then?"

Answer, "I came back down next to the monument.

"Question: And what did you do then?"

Answer, "Just prowled around."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Question: After that, now, after that charge when Walker went up past the flagpole with this violent mob behind him and alongside him and they threw their missiles and you fell back, that wasn't the end of what happened there that night, they continued these waves of surging up there at the Marshals and throwing their missiles?"

Answer, "They throwed things all night, yes, sir, until 5:00 o'clock." Is that right?

A. All except him going past the flagpole.

Q. "Question: That continued to go on until 5:00 o'clock the next morning?"

You answered, "Yes, sir," is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. "And the crowd remained large out there, didn't it?"

And the answer, "It got larger, yes, sir."

A. Right.

[fol. 360] Q. "Question: Would there be any way that you could estimate after Walker went up past the flagpole with this violent mob alongside and behind him, would you have any way to estimate how many more charges or waves that mob made that night towards the Marshals?"

Answer, "No, sir, I would not."

Is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. "It was numerous though?"

Answer, "Yes, sir, it was several of them."

"And they didn't lessen in intensity, did they, they still stayed violent and aroused, that is right, isn't it?" And you answered, "Right."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you this question: Do you remember, in connection with the protest that General Walker spoke of, that in connection with it, that he hollered, "Good. Good. Keep it up." Do you remember him making a statement like that?

A. Yes, sir; yes, sir, I remember it.

Q. Well, tell us what General Walker said.

A. Well, in reference to the protest, he said, "Good. Good. Keep it up."

Q. All right. On Page 56: "Do you remember a young man coming up to him and asking, 'General, what can we [fol. 361] do to counteract this tear gas?'" Do you remember that question being asked the General?

A. I don't remember being asked directly, the General. I remember somebody coming up and asking—he didn't ask no individual, how—what can you do to counteract tear gas?

Q. All right. Look on Page 56, at the question: "Do you remember a young man coming up to him and asking, 'General, what can we do to counteract this tear gas?'" Your answer, "I remember some of them asking him something or what they could do to smother the tear gas out, yes, sir."

Do you remember that now? You made that statement, didn't you?

A. Well, I must have.

Q. "Question: And what did he say?

"I remember hearing him say that sand or water would do it." You testified to that in Oxford, didn't you?

A. I believe I did. But I remember hearing somebody say that.

Q. "Question: That sand or water would do it?"

Answer, "Yes, sir.

"Question: And do you remember him saying, 'But where can you get sand?', or 'Have you got any sand?'"

And you answered, "No, I don't remember that."

And you didn't remember him making that last one, is that right?

[fol. 362] A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. But you do remember him being asked what would counteract the gas, do you not?

A. I don't remember asking him the question. I remember somebody asking, "How can you put out tear gas."

Q. Well, you don't deny that you—

A. No.

Q. —that you say here that you heard them ask him, do you?

A. Well, I can't deny it, no, sir.

Q. All right, sir. Next question, "You do remember him, though, when they asked him how to counteract it, he said sand or water will do it?"

And you answered, "Yes, sir." Did you make that statement?

A. I made that statement.

Q. "Did you see them making their Molotov cocktails that night, putting gasoline in bottles and setting a wick afire?"

"Yes, sir, I seen that but I didn't know what it was at that time. That is the first time I had ever heard of that.

"Question: Do you remember seeing General Walker standing over in the vicinity where they were making those things and lighting them and blowing them up?"

[fol. 363] Answer, "I remember seeing General Walker when they were throwing them, yes, sir." Did you make that statement?

A. Yeah, I remember seeing him, yes, sir.

Q. "And he wasn't very far from where they were doing that, was he?"

Answer, "I don't recall just how far. I remember him standing in the crowd." Is that correct?

A. There was a crowd around there, yes, sir.

Q. All right, on Page 58, recross examination, by Mr. Smith, addressed to you, Mr. Witt:

"But he did go after his speech up past the flagpole with at least 1,000 members of a violent mob behind him or alongside him?" And you answered, "Yes, sir."

A. I answered, "Yes, sir," but I misunderstood the question. I don't mean there was a thousand people in front of him. There was a thousand people in the area and some of you all should have a map or something where I marked a circle on that after it was over.

Q. "Question: And that did happen?"

Answer, "Yes, sir"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make that statement?

A. I made that statement.

Q. You say now that's not right?

[fol. 364] A. There never was a thousand people following him.

Q. "Question: And they were armed with sticks and stones and bricks and they threw their bricks and missiles when they got up close enough to the Marshals?"

Answer, "The people did, I didn't see General Walker with nothing in his hands."

A. That's correct.

Q. Now you have said in answer to some of these questions here, Mr. Witt, that you didn't understand the questions when they were submitted to you, is that correct?

A. That's correct. Sometimes you would ask five questions in one thing for one answer and that's a little hard to give it like you want it.

Q. That's conceivable. Now in connection with your thinking about this matter, prior to the time you gave your deposition in Oxford, Mississippi, on March the 13th, 1964, had you done any thinking about the incidents on the campus of Ole Miss on September the 30th, 1962?

A. Repeat that one more time, Mr. Gooch, please, sir.

Q. Prior to the time you gave your deposition, had you tried to recollect in your own mind some of the things that went on or most of the things that went on, on the campus at Oxford on the night of September 30th, 1962?

A. I never did give it too much thought until I gave you all that statement there.

[fol. 365] Q. All right. Would you recognize your signature?

A. Yes, sir, I sure would.

Q. I hand you what purports to be a statement—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —which purports to bear your signature on each page?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your signature on each page?

A. That's my signature and that's my statement.

Q. And is this the statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make this statement?

A. I did.

Q. Did you, in making this statement, tell the truth as you knew it at that time?

A. The best I knew how.

Q. Do you think at the time you made this statement that the matters that you put in that statement were true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Well, I told it the best I could think it right then.

Mr. Gooch: We would like to offer in evidence, if the Court please, the statement of this witness, for impeachment purposes.

The Court: That's Defendant's Exhibit 1.

[fol. 366] Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 1, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Watts: Is there a copy anywhere?
Mr. Gooch: No, sir. It's the only one I have.
Mr. Andress: We would like to see it.
The Witness: I have a copy.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Do you have a copy?
A. I sure do.
Q. Would you furnish that to Mr. Watts?

The Court: Do you have it with you?
The Witness: No, sir, I don't have it with me.
The Court: Let him see that copy you are offering so he can read it now.
Mr. Gooch: What copy?
The Court: I mean the original so he can read it.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You were furnished with a copy of that statement?
A. Yes, sir. I asked for one.

Mr. Andress: Judge, this is all repetition, with the exception of one paragraph here which covers a matter which is not in issue, not relevant to anything in issue. Outside of that, everything is purely repetitious.
The Court: You are offering it for impeachment pur-
[fol. 367] poses only?
Mr. Gooch: That's correct.
Mr. Andress: Take that paragraph out and we have not got any objections to it.
Mr. Gooch: I can't take anything out of a man's statement. He made the statement or he didn't. He said he made the statement. I'm not going to take anything out of it.

(Conference at the bench.)

Mr. Andress: Other than that, Judge, it's purely duplicative of the deposition.

The Court: I will admit all of the statement except the second paragraph on Page 4. The paragraph actually consists of only one sentence.

Mr. Andress: I wonder, Judge, if you would take a pencil and mark that.

The Court: We just done it.

Mr. Andress: So there won't be any mistakes made about it, put a circle around it.

The Court: There won't be any mistakes made about it, Counsel, I will tell you that.

[fol. 368] Q. You did say you did receive a copy of this statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you at any time heretofore disavowed this statement to anybody?

A. No. I have let people read it. I have read it to people.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 1

Mr. Gooch: "Statement of Talmadge Witt of Pontotoc, Mississippi."

"I am Talmadge Witt, 42 years old, I live in Pontotoc County, Mississippi, and I am a deputy sheriff under Sheriff John H. Moore of that county, and have been serving as such deputy since March 1, 1960. I was acting as such deputy on September 30, 1962, and was called by Sheriff Faulkner of Union County to come to Oxford, Mississippi, getting that call about 3 p. m. on the 30th day of September, 1962. Shortly after receiving this call I went to Oxford with Cecil Payne, another deputy from Pontotoc County. We went directly to the campus of the University of Mississippi and arrived there sometime around 4:30 o'clock p. m.

When I got on the campus of the University, the United States Marshals were already around the Lyceum Building, that is, a building with big while columns in front, facing in an easterly direction. There was a paved roadway in [fol. 369] front of the building, and the marshals were lined up along the side of the roadway next to the building; on the other side of the roadway, and all out in front of the building, were some men and boys and girls, with the roadway between them and the marshals. The crowd out in front of the building was not as big then as it was later, but it gradually grew larger from then on. When I got to this place there was a number of highway patrolmen and other officers in the roadway, between the marshals and the crowd, keeping the crowd back from the marshals, and I joined them and helped to do this.

The crowd grew larger as time passed, and the lights were turned on, on the campus. At this time there was not as much disorder as there was later, there was some loud talk, and some of those in the crowd would throw or flip lighted cigarettes and matches towards the marshals and on the cloth top of some of the army trucks which were there. It is difficult to remember the exact time that events happened, but after I had been there about an hour and a half to two hours, and at a time when I was standing across the road in front of said building, the marshals fired the first blasts of tear gas and the crowd scattered and ran away, and I, of course, went some distance away, also, but still stayed in the area down in front of the Lyceum Building. For some time, after the first tear gas was fired, the [fol. 370] crowd simply milled around, many of them armed themselves with bricks or pieces of broken bricks, rocks, sticks, coca cola bottles and anything that they could get their hands on, and when they could get close enough, they would throw these things at and towards the marshals, and the tear gas would drive them back. The crowd did not seem to have any definite leadership at that time, and simply milled around, hollering, yelling, shouting and talking among themselves.

Somewhere along during this time it seemed that all of the State Highway Patrolmen left the campus, as did also some of the law officers, that is, sheriffs and deputy sheriffs, but I stayed on to render any assistance that I could. Sometime around 8 o'clock p. m., or a little later, I began to hear different ones say, "here comes General Walker." I did not know him prior to that time, and when I first saw him he was walking towards a Confederate monument which was several hundred yards in an easterly direction from the marshals at the Lyceum Building. People in the crowd around General Walker began to say different things. Several of them began to say, "we have got a leader now," or "here is our. leader." I had on my deputy sheriff's badge, and shortly after General Walker arrived in the territory of the Confederate monument, he came up to me, shook hands and said: "I would like for you to deputize [fol. 371] me to help in this matter." I told him that I did not have authority to do that, that I was a deputy sheriff and was not a deputy in that county.

I was close to General Walker all of the time, from the time when he first arrived, until a considerable time thereafter.

Some few minutes after this, various people were asking General Walker to lead them and to make them a speech and tell them what to do, and after awhile he got up and on the side of the Confederate monument and made a talk. I cannot recall all the things he said, but I do remember his saying these things: "Violence is not the answer, Cuba is that way," and pointed south. He said: "Protest, protest, all you want to, you have a right to protest, and they may run out of gas." He said: "Help is on the way, thousands are coming."

A preacher had been following General Walker around asking him not to lead the crowd, but to get them to stop what they were doing. This preacher said to Walker: "They will listen to you and do anything you say, please get them to stop and go home," and Walker said: "I am here to watch what happens, I am not interested in stopping it," and then Walker asked the preacher what denomination he was, and the preacher replied "Episcopalian," and Walker said: "You make me ashamed that I am an Episcopalian." About this time I heard some seri- [fol. 372] ous threats made against the preacher by people in the crowd, after Walker said what he did to him, and I was afraid the preacher was going to be hurt, so I took him by the arm and pulled him and carried him out of the crowd. Two men came up to the edge of the crowd and stated that they were friends of the preacher, and asked me what I was doing with him. I told them that someone was going to hurt him if he did not leave, and I suppose they left with him, as I never saw them any more.

After some of the crowd had asked Walker if he would lead them, he stepped down from the side of the monument and said: "Keep protesting and see if we can get closer." He then started towards the marshals and the crowd was armed with sticks, rocks, coca cola bottles and other things, as I have heretofore stated. They seemed to have anything that they could get their hands on, and when they got close enough, they would throw towards the marshals. When the front of this crowd, which General Walker was with, got in about 200 feet of the marshals, they fired another blast of tear gas, and the crowd ran back, with General Walker with them. At all times during this, I was near or in sight of General Walker and stayed in sight of him until about 5 a. m. the next morning.

On a number of occasions Walker would walk towards the marshals, or in that general direction, and whenever he [fol. 373] did, a large crowd would fall in behind and follow him. In fact, wherever Walker went, the crowd followed. During the time after the first march towards the marshals with Walker in or near the lead, I heard different statements, many of which I cannot remember, but at one time, in talking with a group about the protest they were making, he said, "good, good, keep it up." I heard people asking how to snuff out or counteract the tear gas, and Walker told them to use water, and right after that they got a fire truck and hose and began to try to use that to stop the gas. I saw a group making Molotov cocktails. They were taking coca cola bottles and putting gasoline in them and putting some kind of wick in them, setting the wicks afire, and they would then throw this towards the marshals. I did not hear Walker say anything about the Molotov cocktails, but I did see him in the vicinity of where they were being made. During all of this time, when Walker was there, and at the time when he was telling them to continue to protest, the men and boys in the crowd were armed as I stated before, they were throwing the Molotov cocktails, they were setting automobiles afire, and I personally counted sixteen automobiles that were burned. There was a new building going up near the scene of the rioting, and the students and others would get bricks over there, I saw them roll wheelbarrows up loaded with bricks, [fol. 374] and they would break them up and take them in their arms when they went towards the marshals. Many of the lights were broken out around the campus, especially around the flagpole that was between the Confederate monument and the Lyceum Building.

In reading over the foregoing, I notice it appears that what the preacher first said to Walker about stopping the rioting, was said after he got on the monument, and this is not correct. It was before Walker got upon the monument that the preacher was urging him to try to stop the rioting and get them to go home, and it was before he got up on the monument that Walker replied, "I am here to watch what happens—I am not interested in stopping it." It was after he got on the monument or about the time he got on the monument to make the speech that he asked the preacher what denomination he was, and the preacher replied "an Episcopalian." I simply wanted to add this to my statement in order to clear it up.

This the 25th day of November, 1963."

[fol. 375] That is Defendant's Exhibit 1. That is all with this witness.

Mr. Andress: Just a minute, Mr. Witt.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Mr. Witt, have you been a witness before in cases some time?

A. Not like this, no, sir.

Q. How many times have you been a witness?

A. Oh, in JP Court, six or eight times, something like that.

Q. How old a man are you, Mr. Witt?

A. Forty-three.

Mr. Gooch: How old?

A. Forty-three.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Mr. Witt, this Defendant's Exhibit 1, what lawyer prepared that for your signature?

A. Fred Smith.

Q. Fred Smith is what, one of the lawyers in Mississippi for the Associated Press?

A. He is a lawyer. When I gave it to him I didn't even know what it was all about.

Q. Is he one of the lawyers for the Associated Press over in Mississippi?

A. He is the man that cross-examined me at Oxford, too. [fol. 376] Q. Now did you ever write this out in longhand?

A. No, sir. I have a copy just like that.

Q. But you didn't write this out in longhand and then have him type it up?

A. No, sir.

Q. How long did you talk to Mr. Smith before he fixed this thing up for you?

A. He come out to the courthouse at Pontotoc one Sunday afternoon. We talked there two or three hours.

Q. Did he make any notes?

A. At that time he did, yes, sir.

Q. And then he is the one that fixed this up?

A. Oh, he typed that up in his office on Monday. He wrote it in shorthand Saturday afternoon.

Q. Is this his language or yours?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it his language or yours?

A. Well, he asked the questions.

Q. Uh-huh. Now, of course, this isn't sworn to, is it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever had your deposition taken before it was taken in this case?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is the first experience you had with a deposition? [fol. 377] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now when Mr. Smith came up there and talked to you about giving this statement did he tell you he intended to use that in evidence?

A. I don't recall nothing about him saying nothing about what he wanted it for. Maybe he did. In fact, I wasn't too interested in that thing at that time; didn't know anything about it.

Q. Let's see. Is Mr. Smith in the courtroom this afternoon?

Mr. Gooch: No.

Q. Was any other lawyer there with him?

A. Probably his nephew, I believe, was in one of the outer offices when he was there.

Q. Now did you have a lawyer when he was questioning you?

A. No, sir, I didn't need one.

Q. Did you have a lawyer when he presented this statement to you for your signature?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you submit it to your lawyer before you signed it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now did you know when this deposition of yours was being taken that it was being taken under an agreement [fol. 378] that nobody would make objections to any kind of questions that were being asked at that time, except as to form, that the objections were reserved until the time of trial?

A. Wait a minute. Start over one more time.

Q. Now at the time your deposition was being taken did you know that all of the objections that either side had to the questions were going to be reserved to the time of trial and therefore, there wouldn't be any objections to any questions being asked you?

A. The idea of that—that was all my part.

Q. Let's see. They waived the signature on these depositions, didn't they? You didn't actually sign the depositions?

A. I didn't sign none of those, no, sir.

Q. How long after—did you ever see this deposition after it was taken?

A. Seems like I looked at it when the boys was with me the other night. I looked at it for a few minutes.

Q. You didn't check it over to refresh your mind to see if it was exactly what you had in mind?

A. You—no, sir.

Q. Now at the time your deposition was taken, you were asked, were you not, what area would encircle that group of 1,000 people and at that time you did draw a circle, a perimeter there, after saying it was, oh, on back in the [fol. 379] surrounding area?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I object to this part of the examination. He either made the statement or he didn't. He testified before when I asked him about it that it was true.

The Court: I believe he is asking him now whether he drew on the exhibit.

Mr. Andress: Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir, I drawed one. Somebody gave me a map and I drawed a circle where I estimated the thousand people to be.

Q. We don't want to mark this map up, but how about you coming over here with the ruler and standing here where we can all see it, and kind of circle the area where you say that one thousand people were.

A. This (indicating) is University?

Q. This is University Avenue.

A. It was over—

Q. —wait a minute. Here is University Avenue, University circle, here is the monument, here is the flagpole, here is the Lyceum and here is the YMCA, here is this new Science Hall (indicating).

What is the area you had in mind, as best you can remember, that you drew a circle on that smaller map that [fol. 380] you had at that time, that had the 1,000 people?

A. It was completely around this whole thing. There were people in cars all up and down this street here.

Q. Now when you said, "completely around this whole thing," you made a circle with the pointer that went all the way around the Lyceum Building on the far west, and covered the complete circle and came back kind of out onto University Avenue, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that what you meant?

A. That is what I mean. Of course behind were people and a lot of times you wouldn't see what was going on, but up here, way around in here (indicating).

[fol. 381] Q. When you say, "up here," you are talking about—

A. Behind the building.

Q. —Peabody Hall and the Fine Arts Center and the approach to the Fulton Chapel?

A. You could see out these streets but behind the Lyceum Building, you couldn't see.

Q. All right. Were some of these thousand people that you are talking about that were surging around the campus, were they up there by Peabody, by Peabody and by the Fine Arts Center and—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —and were some of them down here as you mark here, down by Carrier Hall?

A. They was all around there.

Q. Would you say all around the open spaces, around the University circle?

A. Everywhere they could get, they was there.

Q. And down how far on University Avenue?

A. Oh, down here—see, the street angles off right here.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. They was down right to here (indicating).

Q. They were down here at what's marked the Old Post Office Building, right?

A. Yes.

[fol. 382] Q. That's that first street off of University Avenue?

A. That's right.

Q. East of the circle?

A. That's right.

Q. So that—let's see, from the library place back here on the far west behind the Lyceum, down to this street off of University Boulevard, on this scale it shows to be about 1200 feet, doesn't it?

A. I would guess that's about right.

Q. And across—have I got this pointer now in the area that covers the across?

A. Yes, these buildings, and these streets, see, goes out like this. You could see people back in this area here (indicating).

Q. So that if we draw a line north and south through the flagpole, in that circular area, have I got the distance marked right here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, sir. And that shows over here as being 800 feet, doesn't it?

A. That's right.

Q. So you are talking about a sort of an oval area that's 1200 feet long and 800 feet wide?

A. That's right.

[fol. 383] Q. That is where the thousand people that we are talking about were located in?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Sheriff, were you leading this crowd in any of the—

A. No, sir.
Q. —activities there?
A. No, sir, I was not.
Q. During these activities, was General Walker doing anything different than you were doing?
A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We object to that as a conclusion on the part of this witness and draws a comparison between two people.
The Court: Yes, sustained.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. So far as these acts of violence that you were talking about, Molotov cocktails, throwing things at the Marshals, and so on, will you state whether or not General Walker did any of those things?
A. No, sir, he did not.

Mr. Andress: That's all.
Mr. Gooch: Stand aside.
The Court: We will excuse this witness if you don't need him any more.
Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.
[fol. 384] Mr. Andress: That will be all right.
The Court: You are excused.
Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 9:00 o'clock the next morning. At that time, be in the jury room and we will call you out from there.

(Thereupon, at 5:00 o'clock, p.m., the hearing was adjourned until Wednesday, June 10, 1964, at 9:00 o'clock, a.m.)

[fol. 387] PROCEEDINGS

(The following proceedings were had outside of the presence and hearing of the Jury.)

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, since we have a rather large audience I am going to adopt the practice of having counsel and the audience remain in their seats at each recess until the Jury has left the Courtroom. I am going to further instruct the audience not to discuss the case either in the halls or the restrooms or anywhere else when a Juror may be present. You, of course, have a right to discuss the case among yourselves, but make very certain you do not discuss it in the presence of any Juror. That would be misconduct on your part.

All right, bring in the Jury.

(Jury in; the following proceedings were had within the presence and hearing of the Jury.)

The Court: Good morning, Ladies and Gentlemen. All right, Mr. Watts.

ZEB JONES, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

[fol. 388] Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Your name, please?
A. Zeb Jones.
Q. How do you spell that?
A. Z-e-b (spelling).
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Jones?
A. Jackson, Mississippi.
Q. What is your business?
A. I practice law there.
Q. For how long?
A. Well, about three months; just getting started.
Q. Are you a graduate of the Ole Miss Law School?
A. No, sir, the Jackson School of Law, Jackson.
Q. Did you go to Ole Miss at one time?
A. Yes, sir, I did.
Q. And when did you graduate from Ole Miss?
A. 1957.

Q. Were you on the campus the night of September 30, 1962?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What was the occasion for your being on campus?

A. Two of my neighbors, they have students up at Ole Miss, and I drove them up there that night. I knew there would be some excitement also. I had two purposes in mind.

[fol. 389] Q. And whose car did you go up there in?

A. In mine.

Q. Who was with you?

A. Two students, Taylor Robertson and Ben Wells, and two older men friends and myself.

Q. Who were the older men friends?

A. Al Busby and Jack Robertson.

Q. What time did you leave Jackson?

A. About a quarter to five that afternoon, Sunday afternoon.

Q. What kind of a car were you driving?

A. '61 Ford.

Q. Yours?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you arrive on campus at Oxford?

A. About 9:30 that night.

Q. Will you tell the Jury, please, sir, in your own words from the time you arrived in the outskirts of Oxford what you saw and heard?

A. Well, we arrived there on the campus about 9:30. I parked my automobile—could I use the diagram to show where I parked my car?

Q. Sure, take the pointer there where you can identify places.

A. We came on the highway about here, along here, came [fol. 390] in along the campus. This is University Avenue right here, over toward the middle of the campus here, right along here, and I parked my automobile right along here, I believe, the first road in here. We got out of my car and walked up toward this area here known as the Grove in here (indicating map).

Q. Now, have another look at that so-called Grove and see if it is the Grove or the Circle?

A. Well, the Circle.

Q. Now, do you see another item up there, another area that is designated Grove, back a little; back a little and above, toward you and up?

A. That's right. I am mistaken. I am mistaken.

Q. All right.

A. This was the Circle we went into and the silos (phonetic) more or less broke up as we got along here, a large crowd, and I just kind of drifted off in this area along in here sort of south.

Q. Identify further that installation at the east end of the Circle.

A. This is the monument right here, the Confederate monument. A lot of students were standing around this area, and they were throwing rocks and so forth, a lot of hollering and yelling.

Q. Were the students in that area throwing the rocks? [fol. 391] A. No, sir, they were a little bit closer up to this area. The Marshals—well, the Marshal—

Q. Get on over where you can see it.

A. This (indicating) is the Lyceum Building which is the Administration Building, and the Marshals were more or less lined up in this vicinity in front of the Lyceum Building, and the students would run up from this area here and throw rocks. Everybody was pretty well scattered out all over this whole area in here (indicating chart).

Q. Okay, you may take your seat. How long did you stay there?

A. Until around 1:30 or 2:00 the next morning.

Q. All right, go on and continue with your outline of events. Tell the Jury what you saw and what occurred?

A. The Marshals were shooting tear gas and, well, as we first arrived on the campus we heard a lot of shooting.

I thought it was firearms being shot. Later we learned it was tear gas. And there was a lot of tear gas in the area, just kind of hanging in the air, and it would burn your eyes and so forth, and students were just running around more or less in just disorganized confusion, and that was about it.

Q. Did you encounter General Walker while you were there?

A. I had been there, I guess, fifteen or twenty minutes [fol. 392] when I saw General Walker.

Q. Tell the Jury about it.

A. I was on more or less the south side of the Circle. I had been there fifteen or twenty minutes, possibly around a quarter to 10:00 that night, and somebody said, "There is General Walker over there," more or less by the statue. I walked over to General Walker and shook hands with him and he was just more or less standing there watching and observing the crowd and doing nothing, just standing there.

Q. How long did you observe him there—did you talk to him?

A. Yes, sir, I did, I introduced myself to him and he said he was very glad to meet me, and that was about the extent of it.

Q. How long did you stay in the immediate vicinity of General Walker?

A. I guess ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. I believe I probably walked up toward the—north of the sidewalk, just walking back and forth in the Circle, back and forth from one side to the other.

Q. Did you see anything further from that time on of any significance?

A. Well, there was just a lot of kids. I saw several different college jackets of four or five junior colleges in [fol. 393] the area; a lot of boys running around throwing rocks, hollering, yelling, and just more or less a lot of confusion going on.

Mr. Watts: That is all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Jones, had you heard of General Walker before you got up there that night?

A. Yes, sir, I had.

Q. Did you consider him to be a public figure?

A. Yes, sir, he was more or less pretty well known.

Q. Had you heard some of his talks or speeches, or had you—

A. Yes, sir, I had. I heard him speak in Jackson about the—oh, about a year prior to that, I guess.

Q. You did consider him a public figure, did you not?

A. Yes, sir. I don't know what you mean by public figure. He was a well-known celebrity. More or less—

Mr. Gooch: Thank you, that is all.

Mr. Watts: That is all, Mr. Jones, thank you. Bring Mr. Leman in, please.

The Court: I will excuse this witness.

Mr. Watts: May this witness be excused?

The Court: Yes, sir.

[fol. 394] Louis Leman, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

A. Went to Houston, Texas.
Q. And did you go to high school in Houston, Texas?
A. Yes, sir, St. Thomas High School.
Q. St. Thomas High School?
A. That's correct, yes, sir.
Q. Now where is St. Thomas High School in Houston?
A. It's on the Memorial Drive or the west side of Houston.
Q. Did you graduate from St. Thomas High School in Houston?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When?
A. In 1956.
Q. Where did you go from high school? Did you go off to school?
A. Went to the University of Texas.
[fol. 397] Q. At Austin?
A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what year?
A. In 1956, I started.
Q. Did they play Oklahoma that year?
A. Yes.
Q. Strike that. Mr. Leman, did you—what course did you take?
A. Mechanical Engineering.
Q. Mechanical Engineering?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you graduate?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. After how many years?
A. Four and a half years.
Q. With what course?
A. Bachelor of Science Degree in Mechanical Engineering.
Q. And did you then practice that profession?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. For whom did you work?
A. Southwest Oil Field Products.
Q. Where is the Southwest Oil Field Products located?
A. The plant is in Houston, Texas.
Q. How did you happen to go to work for Southwest Oil [fol. 398] Field Products?
A. Well, I planned on it and my father was—it was his company and I had planned on going to work.
Q. What was their general business?
A. Manufacturing oil field equipment.
Q. Where did they put you to work?
A. Mississippi.
Q. Did you live for a while in Mississippi?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What place?
A. Brookhaven, Mississippi.
Q. Now where is Brookhaven?
A. South of Jackson about 50 miles, I would say.
Q. What size town is it?

A. Oh, 10, fifteen thousand. Maybe a little more, a little less.

Q. Did you make friends and acquaintances in Texas—as you were in Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir, sure did.

Q. Mr. Leman, do you know General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. What is the occasion of your becoming acquainted with General Walker? He's much older than you are.

A. Well, sir, when he was running for Governor, I found out that, from my father, that his mother, that lady right [fol. 399] there (indicating), and my grandmother were raised together in San Antonio. They went to school together and stayed in the—well, in the same classroom together.

And I was interested in meeting him and so on my vacation, I met him in Baytown, and met him, introduced myself.

Q. Is Baytown close to Houston?

A. It's close to Crosby, sir, about 15 miles, I would say.

Q. You say that was during the political campaign?

A. Yes, sir, that's when he was running for Governor, that's correct.

Q. And tell us about your meeting General Walker.

A. Well, sir, I met him and found out basically that he felt the same way politically that I did, that something was wrong with the country, that—

Q. Just in general, you had a common interest?

A. That's correct.

Q. And did you then become fairly well acquainted with him during the course of that political campaign?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And did you help him and work for him in the campaign?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Did you see General Walker any more from the end of that campaign—well, strike that question. Glad I didn't ask [fol. 400] it.

Did you see him any more from the end of that campaign until the Mississippi incident?

A. Yes, sir, as I remember, right after the campaign, he was down in Houston; he came out to dinner, I remember that, yes, sir.

Q. How soon after the campaign?

A. Within a week, I would say, sir.

Q. He came out to dinner with your folks, was it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him any more from that time on, until the Mississippi incident?

A. I don't recall, sir, having seen him.

Q. And where were you working in the latter part of September, 1962?

A. In Mississippi and Louisiana, both. My job—I worked in both places.

Q. What kind of work were you doing?

A. Field engineer, Southwest Oil Field Products.

Q. Were you in the vicinity of Oxford or Jackson or any of those places in the latter part of September, 1962?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. Where were you?

A. At what—well, I was in Oxford.

Q. You were in Oxford?

[fol. 401] A. Yes.

Q. Was your work in Oxford?

A. No, sir, it was not.

Q. What was the occasion, Mr. Leman, of your going to Oxford?

A. Well, sir, it was just like General Walker said, that—

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute.

Mr. Watts: Well, that's right, skip what General Walker said.

The Court: Why did you go?

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just tell us what your concept was.

A. Well, sir, I didn't think that the Federal Government had a right to send troops into Mississippi, should send troops into Mississippi. And I didn't think you could believe what you read in the newspapers and I wanted to see what was going on for myself, and that's why I was there.

Q. And did you go to Oxford?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And what did you do when you got there?

A. I didn't do anything.

Q. Did you see anybody that you had previously known?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. And from that time on—this was on what day of the week, would you remember?

[fol. 402] A. Yes, sir, I got there, I believe, a Thursday night.

Q. That was a Thursday night. From Thursday night, on, until, we'll say, Sunday, the following Sunday noon, just tell the jury, in your own words, what you did and what you saw and what you heard and what happened.

A. From Thursday night and—until Sunday noon, is that the question?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, Thursday night I got in Oxford and I stopped at a filling station several blocks from the campus and talked to some students at the filling station about where would a place be to stay and they said the town, the reporters, the motels were full and it would be rather difficult to find a place in Oxford and suggested I go to Water Valley.

And so I went to Water Valley and spent the night in Water Valley, which is about 19 miles from Oxford.

The next morning I came back to Oxford and had breakfast, and so forth, and I had talked to several students. This would be Friday. Let me see, Friday noon I talked to General Walker.

Q. Talked to General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. What was the occasion of your talking to General Walker?

A. Well, sir, he had been—I knew he was interested in [fol. 403] the Mississippi situation. I read in the papers where he was interested in what was going on in Mississippi. And I called him up and I told him that the students were behind Barnett, they supported him; that the student newspaper did not; more or less the student leadership was more or less opposed to Barnett; whereas, the students were, did support Barnett and they felt he was doing what was right for Mississippi.

And then I may have—I probably talked to one or two more students.

And then I left and went back to Water Valley and spent the night.

Q. Now, let's see, this was Friday night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And then the next morning—well, that night I called back, General Walker had told me that he might come to Jackson, that he had an invitation to come to Jackson, and I was interested in hearing Barnett speak and, also, in seeing General Walker and finding out about what was happening in Mississippi.

And when I had first talked to him during the day, he said he might come to Jackson but he was going to come over there and go back. So I called him that night to see if he actually was coming and he said yes, he was, he was [fol. 404] going to Dr. Ney Williams' home in Jackson.

And so I drove down to Jackson and met him there.

Q. Now let's see, when did you get to Jackson?

A. About 2:00 o'clock Saturday afternoon, about 2:00 o'clock.

Q. Let's see, Saturday would have been the 29th, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you meet him in Jackson?

A. At the home of Dr. Ney Williams.

Q. I don't guess you know roughly where that is in Jackson, do you?

A. Yes, sir, it's not too far from the football stadium, I believe going north, or like you were going through town, I believe.

Q. Go ahead and tell the jury what happened, what you did.

The Witness: Sir, Your Honor, could I get a glass of water?

The Court: Yes. Mr. Addington, look in the conference room and get a glass, please.

The Witness: Thank you. Well, from Dr. Ney—from Dr. Ney Williams' house—I met General Walker there, of course. And we went to a press conference, I accompanied him, went with him. We went in my car to a press conference.

[fol. 405] And there was a discussion whether or not we were going to go to the, hear Barnett speak at the football stadium and we decided not to but we went on to a press conference and—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Where was that press conference?

A. I believe it was the Sun & Sand Motel in Jackson, Mississippi, second floor. It was on the second—press conference on the second floor, some room, particular—

Q. Would you have any recollection what press personnel were there?

A. I remember one name, Peter Kyss, K-y-s-s, I believe, but I'm not—

Q. Did you know what outfit he was with?

A. As I recall, it's the New York Times. There were a lot of others. There was about 20 or 30 reporters there.

Thank you, sir, very much.

(Handed water.)

Q. And without bothering the jury with too many details, just tell them generally what occurred at the press conference?

A. Well, they—he, General Walker, read a statement before the news, before the news or TV camera and then—well, a lot of reporters had questions and they would ask him, did he—one reporter, this Mr. Kyss, is the reason I remember his name is, he kept asking him, was there going [fol. 406] to be any violence in Mississippi, did he—and I distinctly remember what General Walker said—

Mr. Gooch: Just a moment.

Mr. Watts: Don't say what General Walker said. That would be hearsay.

The Court: That would be hearsay.

The Witness: Yes, sir. Excuse me.

They asked him about—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Don't tell what the reporters said or anything but just—well, I guess that pretty much shuts you off from the news conference.

There was a news conference held?

A. Yes, and we left.

Q. All right, sir, where did you go?

A. We went back to Dr. Ney Williams' home.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. I would say about 30 minutes, sir.

Q. Where did you go?

A. Then we decided to drive up to Oxford.

Q. Where did you go at Oxford?

A. Went to the Mansell Motel.

Q. Now was this Saturday evening or night?

A. This was Saturday night. Arrived at about midnight, as I recall, sir. It was about midnight.

Q. Did you get in the Mansell Motel?

[fol. 407] A. Yes, sir, we did.

Q. Tell us about what you did when you got there.

A. I registered both of us and we went in and went to bed.

Q. You say you registered you both?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now there has been some question that has arisen about how you registered. How did you register?

A. I registered my name and I registered the name of John Waters for General Walker.

Q. Why did you register General Walker under the name of John Waters?

Mr. Gooch: Object to what he had in mind when he registered him under an assumed name. It's immaterial.

The Court: Overruled. Go ahead and tell him why.

A. Because, due to the reporters, sir. There was reporters trying to get ahold of him all the time and he could not sleep at night. We just thinking it would be a lot better if the reporters were not calling and bothering him all night long.

Q. And were you able to get a night's sleep?

A. Yes, sir, we sure were.

Q. And what happened the next day?

A. Well, we got up and ate breakfast and went downtown to the courthouse, talked to the Sheriff, Sheriff Joe Ford.

[fol. 408] Q. Joe Ford. Now could you kind of describe Oxford? Is it laid out on a square kind of like Texas towns?

A. Well, there is a courthouse and streets circled around the courthouse and then there is north and south and east and west streets leading off there basically, and the campus is generally east of town and maybe slightly south of the courthouse, but it's—

Q. About what time did you get to the courthouse?

A. Got to the courthouse about, I would—about 11:00 o'clock, sir, I think—10:00 or 11:00.

Q. What happened then?

A. Well, General Walker talked to Sheriff Joe Ford.

Q. Without saying and going into hearsay and things somebody else said, just tell the jury generally what was the nature of this conference.

A. Well, the nature of the conversation was that the troops had moved in north of Lake Sardis the night before and that—I can't say what Walker said or anything like that

Q. No, they would object to you saying what Walker said.

A. Well, where we resided, were staying, and—

Q. That is, you told the Sheriff where you were staying?

A. The Sheriff, right, and offered to be of any help. [fol. 409] That was the nature of the conversation.

Q. And where did you and General Walker go from there?

A. We went, let me see, I believe we drove through the campus to look at it, we sure did, drove—

Q. About what time of day was this?

A. About 11:00.

Q. Now to get to the campus, and I'll lead you a little here to shorten the thing, you go south from the courthouse square and then turn west to the campus, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And after you turned west, you get on that University Boulevard that you can see on the map?

A. Yes, sir. I don't see University Boulevard. Yes, sir, I see it now.

Q. Have you had a chance to look at that map?

A. No, sir.

Q. Walk over there and look at it. Take that pointer with you and let's get you oriented. See the pointer behind you?

Now always—have you ever had any military training?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Always the top of a map is north?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 410] Q. Now start there on the east side, which would be your right, and move along Military—or University Avenue or Boulevard, whatever it is.

What is that installation you just ran on to there?

A. University of Mississippi.

Q. All right. What's the circular pattern there?
A. You mean the Circle?
Q. Yes, sir. That is the Circle?
A. That's correct.
Q. What's on the east end of it?
A. The east end of it, there is a monument there. This is the east, yes, sir. And there are buildings around it, of course.
Q. All right. Take your seat again. Now on this occasion, about noon, how far westward toward the University did you get?
A. About noon? We drove through the campus and on out of it.
Q. Did you make the circle?
A. Yes, we did.
Q. What did you observe?
A. Very quiet, peaceful campus, very nice.
Q. Did you see anyone at all out roaming around?
A. There were very few students on the campus at that [fol. 411] time.
Q. All right. Then where did you go?
A. Then we went—I believe we went and filled up with gas and then we went back to the motel, back to the Mansell Motel.
Q. How long did you stay there?
A. Around an hour, half an hour, something like that.
[fol. 412] Q. How long did you stay there?
A. Around an hour, half an hour or something.
Q. Then where did you go?
A. We went to lunch.
Q. How long did all that—where did you go from lunch?
A. From lunch we went—well, from lunch we went back to the motel again.
Q. And then where did you go from the motel?
A. To a news conference at the—at another motel.
Q. Now, when had that news conference been set up?
A. For about 4:45, and we arrived a little late.

Q. With whom and when were the arrangements first made for that news conference?

A. They were made at lunch with Reporters in the restaurant.

Q. Now, from the time you and General Walker got to Oxford, Mississippi, on Saturday night until the time of this news conference, did either of you see anyone that you knew?

A. I didn't. Let me see. I don't believe General Walker saw anybody he knew.

Q. All right, sir. Tell the Jury, without being able to say what was said, tell them what happened at the news conference.

[fol. 413] A. The rumor was going around that the Marshals were on the campus. That was one thing that happened there.

Q. All right.

A. And, well, a statement was given and questions asked and answers given and that concluded the news conference.

Q. Where did you and General Walker go from there?

A. We went—we went to the campus.

Q. Who was driving?

A. I was driving.

Q. Did General Walker ever do any of the driving?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Where did you go on the campus?

A. We didn't go on the campus.

Q. Was this daylight or dark?

A. Daylight.

Q. How far toward the campus did you go?

A. We went to the edge—could I?

Q. Sure, go ahead and point it out.

A. Is this the railroad track (indicating chart)?

Q. That is the railroad track.

A. We went to right here, we went to this parking lot and turned around and left (indicating chart).

Q. Now, you mentioned that news conference. Who asked for it?

A. The reporters asked for it.

[fol. 414] Q. General Walker didn't volunteer it?

A. No, sir, he was—he was rather reluctant to have a press conference at all, but there were about six or seven reporters that insisted very strongly that he at least give them some kind of a conference, so finally he agreed to have a news conference.

Q. How close did you say you got to the University entrance?

A. To the railroad track.

Q. Why did you stop there?

A. Because the State Police were admitting students only; rather, the Highway Patrol, the Mississippi Highway Patrol.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. From there we went back to the motel. Well, we went by the Courthouse. It was closed and we went back to the motel.

Q. All right, now, take it on from there and tell us what you did and what occurred.

A. Well, we called sometime or another—I called my brother and told him where I was and we called Jackson and we called back down to the Courthouse and this time the Sheriff was there and we went to—we went back to the Courthouse. And I remember we talked to Clyde Watts. We—you called, in fact, Clyde.

[fol. 415] Q. From Oklahoma City?

A. I believe that is correct. I answered the 'phone.

Q. All right. And—

A. And I went—then we went back down to the Courthouse. We reached the Sheriff on the 'phone and then we went down to the Courthouse.

Q. What did you see at the Courthouse?

A. Sir?

Q. What did you see at the Courthouse, or what happened at the Courthouse?

A. Well, at this time a lot of Sheriffs and Deputies were there and the word had gone around that Meredith was on the campus and the Marshals were on the campus. Everybody—nobody knew what happened, why it happened, or anything and the Sheriff was pretty sad and—anyway, a representative of the Governor arrived and said—

Mr. Gooch: We object—

Mr. Watts: Don't say what the Governor's representative said. You did find out there was a Governor's representative at the Courthouse?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct. He arrived and left. He wasn't there when we got there but he was there about the time we left, but he was leaving too.

Q. Go ahead and tell the Jury what happened.

A. Well, we left the Courthouse and went to dinner at [fol. 416] the restaurant in downtown Oxford.

Q. About what time did you get there?

A. We got there a little before 8:00. A little before 8:00 p. m.

Q. Okay, go ahead.

A. And, well, we listened—can we say that—we listened to the President's speech.

Q. Don't say what he said.

A. We listened to the President's speech then had dinner. That is what happened.

Q. All right. Go ahead and tell us what else happened.

A. And then we left—we left the cafe and went to the campus, the Ole Miss campus.

Q. How did you happen to go to the campus?

A. Well, after the—after the speech, well, whenever we were leaving, in fact, we were told—can I say what we were told.

Q. You can say what occurred like that.

A. We were told that there had been a disturbance on the campus. The disturbance had broken out on the campus and—

Q. Well, prior to the time you were told that, where were you going?

A. Prior to the time?

[fol. 417] Q. Prior to the time you heard there was a disturbance on the campus.

A. Well, I don't know that we had made up our mind. Probably back to the motel. Every time we got a chance we went back to the motel, but I don't know of any definite plans. We didn't have any plans to go anywhere at all. We were just there.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And we went to the campus and parked the car and went into the campus.

Q. I think you can step down and show—take the ruler and show the Jury where you parked.

A. We parked down in this parking lot right here (indicating).

Q. Is that what direction from the railroad overpass?

A. That would be south. South of the railroad overpass. South and to the east.

Q. Now, what did you do after you parked your car?

A. We walked right up here, walked right across this side of the overpass, and right up the sidewalk, right up the sidewalk all the way to the lights, the area of the lightpole.

Q. Did you notice some barricade out in the street?

A. Barricades?

Q. Or did you pay any attention?

[fol. 418] A. No, sir, but it was dark. I could have missed them.

Q. All right. Go ahead then and tell the Jury what occurred?

A. Well, we were—we stayed in this area, I would say, for around ten or fifteen minutes. It was a short period of time.

Q. Now, what did you see when you got up to that area?

A. Well, there was, I would say, one hundred to a hundred and fifty—maybe one hundred to two hundred people in this area right here (indicating), about a couple of hundred people standing there and talking. Everybody was just talking. I believe I can say this. One of the things they wanted to know—

Mr. Watts: Now, at this point, come up here, Mr. Gooch.

(Conference at the Bench not taken.)

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, from this point on, Mr. Leman, the Court will allow you to tell not only what you saw but what people said, so everything you can think of that you heard somebody say, and at this point I want to suggest to you that you just turn back your memory to this evening and endeavor to relive it and tell the Jury just exactly what happened.

[fol. 419] A. Just tell them—

Q. Tell them everything that happened.

A. The entire—

Q. Tell them what you heard, what you saw.

A. The—all the time we were on the campus?

Q. Right. I may stop you and ask a question as we go along.

A. Okay.

Q. But just go ahead.

A. Well, one of the main questions, of course, we had in our mind was "How did the riot start, what happened that started it?" And a lot of students answered that question, and there wasn't any doubt in my mind at all how the riot started, after talking to the people. They said that the—is that all right?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. They said that they were lined up, the State Police were inbetween the students and the Marshals, I mean—yeah, between the students and the Marshals, and at the time they were pushing the students back further away from the Marshals and the Marshals opened fire with tear gas, and this is how they said the riot started.

Then, there was a lot of students that said, "Walker, we want a speech, we want a speech," and, you know, wanted him to make a speech, you know, and I told Walker the [fol. 420] students wanted him to make a speech and he told me, "Louis, I don't have anything to say to them. I don't have anything to say to these students," is what he said.

And, as I remember, there was a Deputy Sheriff and he was a heavy-set fellow with a badge on. He met us, rather he introduced himself to us at that time when we arrived there, and stood around with us, and we talked to a few people and then we walked—after fifteen or twenty minutes we walked further away.

When we first arrived there there was a lot of tear gas that had been fired, a lot of Marshals, what looked to me was somebody was coming out, shooting tear gas. I would say coming out in this area and shooting it way back in this area (indicating chart), and the crowd—it was sort of the feeling to me, it seemed like, anyway, you know, that they were trying to get after us or something.

But anyway, we walked on—it died down peaceful for a while and we walked on up in here to look, and right around in here, and I would say probably we spent about fifteen minutes in this area in here (indicating chart).

During this time I remember seeing the State Police cars —excuse me, the Highway Patrol, Mississippi Highway Patrol cars start coming out from this area, and they stopped, the students would stop them.

By the way, the students were scattered all over the [fol. 421] campus. There were no large groups. The only large groups I saw of any size would be a hundred and fifty or two hundred right in this area here (indicating), and there was a group somewhere back in here, I guess, and I guess there were people standing around in area here (indicating), and a smaller group, maybe one hundred or something. But there was no—the rest of the students were just scattered out.

You would just see people everywhere, generally speaking, and, oh yeah, the Highway Patrol was leaving and they would stop and the students would ask them why they were leaving. I guess they asked them that, I didn't hear them ask them that. But anyway, they stopped them, and then they would go on. A whole line of them just left, and about the time they left we walked back to here.

And a lot of words was going around that Barnett had betrayed, betrayed the students and that the Highway Patrol was leaving, "They are leaving us to the Marshals," and everything, and I remember Walker—of course, people were still asking Walker for a speech, and it looked to me like—I guess they—it looked to me like they thought he was about the only one left there with them, but General Walker told me that—he said, "These students think Barnett sold them out," and at that time he walked up and stepped up on the monument and addressed the students. [fol. 422] And he told them, as—I distinctly remember what he said. He said—the first thing he said, he said, "There is no need for violence. Violence is not the answer." He said, "You do have a right to protest." He said, "The troops—the troops—there is no need for the Military in Mississippi," that they should have been watching Cuba. He mentioned the Mississippi Air Force and said, "Cuba is that way." And, oh, yes, he said, "According to the Governor's representative Barnett, Barnett hadn't . . .", he said, "Stand by your Governor, he has not sold you out." That was one of the main things he was making.

He said, "According to the Governor's representative . . .", not according to him, but according to the representative of the Governor, ". . . if anyone sold them out it would be the head of the Highway Patrol in Mississippi." But he said Barnett had not sold them out.

And then he stepped down from there and walked away from the students. I don't remember which direction, but not very far away from that monument and stood around talking for several—for a period, and finally we walked on up to the front, I would say in the area of the flagpole, and maybe we walked right around—well, right around the flagpole and back in this area. We stayed right around in here (indicating) for a while, and the tear gas was getting pretty hard in your eyes, and everything, so we walked on [fol. 423] back into here, and we spent the whole entire rest of the evening back in this area right in here, right in here and right in here (indicating), and the only other time we went up toward the front that I recall at all was when they had a peace conference. One of the students was arranging for a truce, and one was showing a white flag and we walked, we did at that time, walk back up to the front and got probably the closest to the Marshals we ever got. We were behind some students, and we just watched the peace conference. They stood and talked a while and argued and harangued, and tried to make a deal, I guess. I couldn't hear what they were saying. There was only about four or five Marshals stepped out from the Marshals, and a lot of vehicles were parked around here facing the students. I guess trucks and jeeps and so forth.

And then after—we walked on back and finally there was no more peace conference either.

And, let me see, we just spent the night talking to people back there, discussing the situation, and people would ask General Walker his views on what happened there, and the situation.

And then about—I remember the fire truck and the bulldozer incident. This was all after the peace conference, by the way. There was no more—and then we finally left the campus. Got tired and left about 1:30, I would say, [fol. 424] 1:30 a. m., and walked back down here and got in the car and drove to the motel.

We stopped here and talked to the State Police, or State Highway Patrol, and then we went on back to the hotel. Does that cover it?

Q. That covers it, I believe, Mr. Leman. Have you done your best to cover everything you can think of?

A. I can't recall anything. I mean, there has certainly, I know, been a lot of talk about charges, absolutely—

Mr. Gooch: Well—

Mr. Watts: That is all right. Just—you didn't study any pre-law, did you?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Mr. Watts: I believe that is all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Leman, without belaboring the matter as to the details, I take it that you were quite a supporter of General Walker during the time he campaigned for Governor of Texas in 1962?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. I believe you said that you thought that his views paralleled—or your views paralleled his, I believe you [fol. 425] said?

A. Well, I certainly agreed with him, that the national situation was poor.

Q. Now, you went down to Oxford, or up to Oxford from Brookhaven on Thursday before the Sunday incident at Oxford?

A. That is correct, yes, sir.

Q. And you went down, I assume, to find out the situation on the campus, the temper of the students and whether or not the students were reacting either toward Governor Barnett, or to the will of the Court, is that right?

A. To find out—first of all, to see what the situation was, and to find out whether the students were for Barnett or against Barnett.

The papers were saying they were against him.

Q. Now, Barnett—now, we are talking about Governor Barnett, the Governor at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Governor Barnett at that time was still defying the orders of the Federal Court on the admission of Meredith, was he not?

A. Sir, I am not in a position to say whether or not he was defying the Court's orders.

Q. Well, let's see if you know anything about the Court [fol. 426] orders. Did you follow the Meredith case to any degree while you lived there in Mississippi?

A. I did read the papers, yes, sir.

Q. Did you know that Meredith had been ordered by the Federal Court to be admitted as a student at the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir, I believe by the New Orleans Court.

Q. I believe you stated on direct examination you didn't believe in the Court having that right?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, I object to that. No such statement was made. I challenged the record.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Watts: That is not fair cross examination. Excuse me.

Mr. Gooch: Just a minute.

Mr. Watts: All right, I will withdraw that last statement.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Well, you did say something to the effect that you didn't believe in the use of Federal troops?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct. That is correct.

Q. Then, did you know at that time how a Court order could be enforced?

[fol. 427] A. Well, sir, do you want my views?

Q. Yes, be glad to have your views.

[fol. 428] Q. Yes, sir, I would be glad to have your view.

A. Well, I'm sure with Federal Marshals. A court order should be enforced according to the Constitution with Federal Marshals, according to my understanding of the Constitution.

Q. Just to skip ahead a bit, at the time you got there, the Federal Marshals were the only ones there attempting to enforce the court order, weren't they?

A. No, sir, that's not true.

Q. Who was there when you first got on the campus?

A. Fifteen miles from Oxford, there were 160 something soldiers, Mr. Gooch.

Q. I'm talking about on the campus.

A. Well, that's correct, there were only Marshals.

Q. The only persons on the campus at the time you got there to enforce the court order were the Marshals, were they not?

A. As far as I knew. I couldn't answer that definitely.

Q. All right. All right. You didn't see any troops there then?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. All right. Now, did you know that Governor Barnett had blocked the way personally, at least one time, and Governor, Lt. Governor Paul Johnson had blocked the path of Meredith's entrance to the University prior to September the 30th, 1962?

[fol. 429] A. I did not know this firsthand. I knew it from the newspapers, reading the newspapers.

Q. At least you had heard that that happened?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew Governor Barnett was opposing the entrance of Meredith into the University of Mississippi, did you not?

A. Well, sir, I knew that he was opposing action by the Government, Federal Government. I did not know whether he was opposing the actual entry—yes, sir, I would say that, he was opposing the entry of Meredith. I don't know what reason he was opposing it for.

Q. It's immaterial. I'm trying to find out if you knew that Governor Barnett was opposing the entry of Meredith into Ole Miss?

A. Yes, sir, I sure did.

Q. All right.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have previously testified, I believe, that you knew that the Federal Courts at that time had ordered Meredith entered into the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now you got into Oxford on Thursday. Counting back, that would be, Sunday the 30th; the 29th, the 28th—I guess about the 26th or 27th?

A. No, sir, I think Thursday would be—let's see. Sunday [fol. 430] was the 30th. Saturday would be the 30th—29th.

Q. 29th?

A. I mean 29th. Friday, the 28th. I got in there Thursday night of the 27th.

Q. 27th?

A. Right.

Q. Now at that time had you heard from General Walker as to his position relative to the Mississippi matter?

A. No, sir, I had not except the newspaper account. That would be all I heard.

Q. Had you heard a newspaper account or a TV or radio account to the effect that General Walker had made a speech in Dallas to the effect that, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillets"?

A. I read that in the newspaper.

Q. "Ten thousand strong from every state in the Union," or words to that effect?

A. I read that in the newspaper, yes, sir.

Q. "Now or never"?

A. That may have been included in one of the statements.

Q. Did you hear that he said, "We have talked and listened. It's now time to move," or words of that import?

A. Well, sir, the main thing I understood about what General Walker said, that he was supporting the position of [fol. 431] Ross Barnett.

Q. Supporting the position of Governor Ross Barnett?

A. Right, and against the use of troops. Against the use of troops. He was objecting to the use of troops.

Q. All right. At that time you knew that Governor Ross Barnett was opposing the entry of Meredith into Ole Miss; you have testified to that, haven't you?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. All right. Now the first communication that you had with General Walker after you got to Oxford was when?

A. Was Thursday around—no, I got there Thursday night. It would be Friday, Friday around noon. Friday after—around noon I called him.

Q. Do you know from what place you called General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I do. It was from a phone in the Mansion House Cafe, I believe it was, a small cafe in downtown Oxford.

Q. The Mansion House Cafe? That's on the—that would be south from the courthouse?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on, I guess, the west side of the street, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Q. It was called the Mansion House Cafe?

A. I don't—I couldn't say definitely, sir.

[fol. 432] Q. Do you remember making the call on a credit card?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you remember the conversation you had with General Walker?

A. Yes, I do. I sure do.

Q. In that conversation did you tell General Walker that what he needed down there was leadership?

A. I told him—no, sir, I did not. I told General Walker that the student leaders were opposed to Barnett; the newspaper editor was against him.

I told him that the students themselves were actually for Ross Barnett's position. This was very evident. This was very evident on the cam—

Q. Let me ask you this specific question: Did you say to General Walker in that conversation, "General, all we need is leadership"?

A. Absolutely not. I did not say that, Mr. Gooch.

Q. Did you say to General Walker, "How soon can you get here?"

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you ask General Walker whether he was coming or not?

A. Yes, I may have asked him if he was coming to Mississippi. He didn't—he told me—well, you don't want to know that.

[fol. 433] Q. Sir?

A. Well, he told me that he didn't even know whether he was coming to Ox—I asked him—no, I didn't ask. No, I didn't ask him anything about whether he was coming. He said that he might be coming.

Q. Did you repeat during that conversation a statement to this effect, while you were talking to General Walker: "You say you have a plane standing by." Was that mentioned?

A. Yes, sir, because I—the conversation was that he brought it up that he was invited to Jackson, Mississippi, but he did not know definitely whether he was coming and that to call him later and find out if I was going to meet him in Jackson.

Q. Now this would be on the 28th?

A. This would be on—was Friday. Friday, around noon.

Q. I believe that would be the 28th?

A. That's right.

Q. I am not trying to mix this up because I have confusion running backwards myself.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or maybe it's the twenty—

A. It's the 28th.

Mr. Watts: 28th.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. The 28th. Did you hear him say something to the [fol. 434] effect that, "You say you have a plane standing by"?

Did he say anything in the conversation about having a plane standing by?

A. I don't remember that he did but he could have because he did come over there to Jackson by airplane, so he may have said that.

Q. Do you remember mentioning in the conversation of General Walker a man by the name of Lamar Wilkerson of Walnut Grove, Mississippi, telephone numbers 8881 and 8483?

A. I don't remember who he is or I don't remember mentioning his name. I could have but I don't—don't recall it at all. In fact, the conversation was about, as I have said in the previous testimony.

Q. All right, now, we will skip over and not go into repetition as to other matters but you say you called him again that night, I believe?

A. Yes, sir, around midnight from Water Valley.

Q. And I believe at that time—or did he tell you at that time whether or not he was coming?

A. At midnight, he said he was coming, yes, sir, he did.

Q. Did he tell you how he was coming?

A. Well, I think he did but, sir, I couldn't say definitely.

[fol. 435] Q. All right. Did he tell you he was coming in a private plane?

A. I would say he probably did tell me that, yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you what time to meet him?

A. No, sir, he just—I'm sure we mentioned a general time that he would be in there around noon or afternoon or something.

Q. And you drove, I assume, then, down from Water Valley to Jackson?

A. That's correct. Sure did, Saturday morning.

Q. Did you check out of the motel there?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you met him I believe you stated at Dr. Ney Williams' home?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't meet him at the airport then?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. All right. Now the news conference that was held at the Ole—no, at the, I believe, at the Sun & Sand, you said?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. That was held sometime on, was that Saturday afternoon?

A. 6:15 p.m., is about when it started.

Q. That would have been the 29th, I believe?

[fol. 436] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you tell us just generally what General Walker said at that press conference?

A. Yes, sir, I'll be glad to.

Q. Fine.

A. He repeated his stand in support of Mississippi. He was asked by a reporter whether he had any plans for violence. He said that, very clearly and distinctly—and he said it slowly; that's why I actually never have forgotten when he said, he said, "As far as I am in any way concerned and from what I see here in Mississippi, any violence and blood shed will be initiated by and on the hands of the Federal Government"; that's exactly what he said.

And Mr. Kyss, the New York Times reporter, was standing right in front of him when he said—a bunch of reporters were all around him.

Q. Incidentally, was that press conference televised?

A. The first portion—a prepared statement of the press conference was taken on TV camera. I don't know whether they actually televised it or not.

Q. Let's find out now what he said during the time he was being televised. Is that when he said something about violence?

A. No, sir, I don't—no, he just read a prepared statement.

[fol. 437] Q. What did he say in the prepared statement?

A. I don't remember very well. It was just a general statement about supporting Barnett, as far as I—he might have said he was here in Mississippi—

Q. Did he say he was standing shoulder to shoulder with Governor Barnett?

A. It's possible he did. I don't remember the statement.

Q. Now this was held at the Sun & Sand Motel, I believe you said, on the second floor?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Was General Walker standing before some microphones and a TV camera at the time he made that talk?

A. Yes, sir, let me see—I don't know—yes, sir, he sure was.

Q. Do you know whether or not the entire conference was televised?

A. I know that it wasn't.

Q. You know that it was not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say you remember a question being asked General Walker about violence?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. And what was General Walker's answer?

A. "As far as I am in any way concerned and from what [fol. 438] I see here in Mississippi, any violence and blood shed will be initiated by, and on the hands of, the Federal Government."

Q. All right. Now you are positive that that statement was made at the Sun & Sands Motel?

A. I'm positive, absolutely positive.

Q. All right. Did General Walker answer all of the questions that were put to him at the Sun & Sands Motel there in Jackson on the night of the 29th?

A. No, I don't—I don't—I don't know if he answered all of them. Lots of reporters talked at the same time sometimes. But I think he answered most of the questions.

Q. Now after he had finished his interview, what did he do?

A. We went back to Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. Now I am talking about there in front of the microphones, did he walk off of a platform or walk away from—

A. No, we—this TV camera and everything was in one—was in one room. And we talked—after reading the prepared statement on TV, he walked over into the hallway and that's where the questions, all the questions and answers were held, off the TV, in the hallway.

Q. Were there any questions asked him prior to the time he walked away from the TV camera?

A. The reporters obviously, to be right frank, Mr. [fol. 439] Gooch, the reporters all wanted to ask him some questions while they had the TV camera on him and everything and they all asked him at the same time. This was actually a bunch of people asking questions and with camera on him, see, and he did not answer any questions before the TV camera.

Q. All right. It was after he left the camera, before he answered any questions?

A. That's correct, Mr. Gooch. That's correct.

Q. All right. Now immediately after the interview there at the Sun & Sand Motel, I believe you stated that you started to Oxford, is that correct?

A. No, we went back to Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. And I guess repacked your clothes or—.

A. Well, we just—

Q. Or were the clothes already packed?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Then when you left Dr. Williams' house to go to the interview, you were ready then to go on to Oxford as soon as the interview was over?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. Well, we decided to go when we got back to Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. Then you took off for Oxford about what time?

A. About 7:00 p.m.—let's see, maybe a little later than [fol. 440] that.

Q. Well, I believe it's about 150 or '60 miles from Jackson to Oxford, it is not?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Q. Had you made previous reservations at the motel, Mansell Motel?

A. We made reservations, or somebody made them for us; I don't know who made them.

[fol. 441] Q. Where?

A. Be at Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. Is that after the press interview or before?

A. I think it was after.

Q. All right.

A. But I don't remember exactly.

Q. Then you got down to Oxford and you detailed pretty well what you did there. You did visit the campus a couple of times, or maybe three before the night of the riot, is that correct?

A. Once. Well, we went to the campus one time, and did not enter the campus, and another time on the morning, the Sunday morning, we just drove through it, and on through it. Never had seen it before.

Q. Had you seen it before?

A. Yes, sir, I had seen it before.

Q. Had General Walker seen it before?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Now, I believe you stated—going on down a little bit further, without repeating—that you went to dinner at the—somewhere. I don't believe you said. Was it the Mansion House Cafe?

A. What time was this?

Q. For dinner on September 30th?

A. Yes, sir, that was at the Mansion House Cafe.

[fol. 442] Q. And do you know how many people were there?

A. I would say twenty or twenty-five, probably, were in there.

Q. Was there anybody eating dinner with you and General Walker?

A. I don't think so, sir. No, sir, I don't remember anybody at the table.

Q. Just the two of you at the table?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I hope I quote you correctly, that you said you got there about a quarter to 8:00?

A. Yes, sir, about.

Q. And I believe I quote you right when you say you both listened to President Kennedy's speech?

A. Yes, sir, General Walker listened to it and I listened to it too.

Q. There in the Mansion House Cafe when you were having dinner?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall any remark General Walker may have made after having listened to President Kennedy's speech that night?

A. No, sir, I don't remember any.

Q. Do you remember generally what President Kennedy's speech was about?

[fol. 443] A. Well, his speech generally was not no violence, peace and law, as I recall. That was the general text of his statement.

Q. He talked about constitutional authority?

A. Yes, sir, and defiance. Yes, sir, let's see.

Q. And defiance of Court orders, didn't he?

A. Yes, sir. I don't distinctly recall what he said about defiance of Court orders.

Q. Well, I will ask you this specific question.

Do you remember that when the President's speech was over General Walker made the remark relative to the President's speech, "nauseating, nauseating"?

A. No, sir, I don't remember that remark.

Q. Would you say it didn't happen?

A. Well, it possibly did, I—it was in the cafe, I was with General Walker and I do not remember the remark at all.

Q. Then after the President's speech you and General Walker went to the campus, or tried to get to the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you detailed how you parked at some distance away from the entrance to the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did General Walker remain there with you in the [fol. 444] car, or did he get out and leave you to park, and start on toward the campus?

A. I think we parked the car and we both got out at the same time, but I might have parked it. But I don't—I don't know. Well, sir, the way I remember it, we parked the car and both got out. He might have got out a little before me and I parked the car, but he wasn't ever—he stayed right there.

Q. He stayed right there?

A. Yes, sir, right.

Q. You are positive that he didn't walk on ahead?

A. Well, he was ahead of me.

Q. For a considerable number of yards, prior to the time you got the car parked?

A. Well, sir, I know that he was ahead of me when he crossed the railroad track, so he must have been ahead of me before we crossed the railroad track.

Q. Did he at any time, as you approached the campus, or that evening, turn and wave to you?

A. Yes, sir, he told me to come on across.

Q. Did he call you by name, or did he just wave at you to come on?

A. He didn't call me by name; I was right behind him. I was in line right behind him on the trestle.

Q. Did he wave come on?

[fol. 445] A. He said (demonstrating) like that, that's right.

Q. As he got near the entrance to the campus, did you notice any groups or clusters of people over on the north side of University Avenue that might have hailed General Walker, or said something to him?

A. I don't—I didn't notice any people on the north side, no, sir.

Q. Did you notice him there at about the time he got to the campus, that he again gave the sign, "Come on," (demonstrating)?

A. The only time I saw him give that sign was along at the bridge.

Q. Was a lot of people on University Avenue that night?

A. Yes, sir, it was pretty thin—the lights—they were scattered out, but it was a pretty long walk. There was more on the sidewalk, I guess, walking with us. There would be three or four people right in there immediately walking with us.

Q. Was the people—excuse me.

A. And there might have been people on the other side, I don't recall.

Q. Were people strung out pretty well all up and down?

A. I would say that would be a good description.

[fol. 446] Q. Would you estimate the time you and General Walker got to the campus that night?

A. I would say it was around 8:45. 8:45 p. m.

Q. You have detailed that as you approached the area of the monument, you estimate, I believe, and correct me if I am mistaken, that there were a hunded and fifty to two hundred people in that area.

A. Yes, sir, that is—now, that is the area surrounding the light and the monument and that area.

Q. I am talking about as distinguished from up near the Lyceum Building or the YMCA. Now, I understood you to say that in the area of the monument?

A. That is correct. That—

Q. You figure there were about a hundred and fifty to two hundred people?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did the crowd hail General Walker as he came up on the campus that night?

A. Several individuals recognized General Walker and met him and he would introduce himself, and some people were saying, "There's General Walker," but as far as any massive hail, there was none at all.

Q. Several individuals would say, "Here's General Walker!"

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 447] Q. Did they say anything about, "Here is our leader."

A. Some people might have said that. I don't remember that.

Q. My question—

A. Maybe they did. A lot of them wanted him to lead them, that is for sure.

Q. They did try to get him to lead them?

A. Oh, yeah.

Q. Now, was any question asked him about where his volunteers were, or anything of that sort?

A. That question might have been asked.

Q. Do you know what his answer was, or if he made any answer?

A. No, I don't remember. I couldn't answer that because I don't remember the question or the answer.

Q. All right. Now, as he got there to this hundred and fifty or two hundred people in the area of the monument, you have stated that a number, or some of the crowd, or whoever it was, spoke to him and said, "Here is General Walker, here is our leader," or something to that effect.

Am I quoting you fairly accurately?

A. Well, yes, sir, and several of them walked up to him and introduced him. And some of them asked him how to drive the Marshals out, stuff like that, and he said—well, any way he said, "You don't."

[fol. 448] Q. All right. Now, you have also said that you stood around there ten or fifteen minutes and they were trying to get him to speak?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. Then I believe you said, and I believe you took the pointer and traced a route from a point near the monument north to the sidewalk, up to about even with the flagpole, that you say you and General Walker walked?

A. I would say it was about along the—

Q. All I am recollecting now—go ahead. All I am recollecting now is about.

A. About in this area here (indicating).

Q. Tried to get your picture. I don't want to misquote you at all, just trying to bring it out here.

A. All right.

Q. Traced the route you and General Walker took after you had been greeted by these persons down at the monument?

A. Well, sir, it would be hard—I couldn't—it would be hard to exactly trace the route.

Q. I understand.

A. We didn't go very far up, and we just—we might have come back down this way some.

Q. Well, now, how far did you go?

Mr. Watts: Wait just a minute, let him finish.

[fol. 449] Mr. Gooch: Just a minute, Mr. Watts, this is cross examination.

Mr. Watts: The witness can finish his answer.

The Court: I know that, Mr. Watts. You may finish your answer, Mr. Leman.

A. This (indicating) is the area of the route we took, generally speaking. It might be wrong a few feet, but not very far.

Q. All right. You have indicated a route from the monument to a point near the flagpole, have you not?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct. That is true.

Q. I am saying you got to the flagpole, but the way you marked it with the marker, you got nearly up to the flagpole?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you know whether you went past the flagpole?

A. No, I don't. We didn't at this time. We sure didn't.

Q. All right. Now, at that time was there just you and the General walking along there, or were there others there too?

A. A Deputy Sheriff was with us and there might have been one or two others, or three. There was no—just three or four of us, and—just three or four in other words.

[fol. 450] Q. Incidentally, you mentioned this Deputy Sheriff. Do you recall General Walker asking the Deputy Sheriff to deputize him?

A. No, sir, I don't recall him asking him that.

Q. You were there right with General Walker at the time you met the Deputy Sheriff?

A. Well, sir, the way it was, I would usually be a few feet away, and I heard some of the things he said and a lot of things I didn't hear, because I might have been talking to somebody myself.

I was with General Walker, but I didn't try to stand right by him and hear everything that was said.

Q. Now, at the time you walked on the campus, you and the Deputy Sheriff and General Walker and perhaps one or two others were walking westward down toward the Marshals. You were walking westward towards the Marshals weren't you?

A. We walked westward, that is correct, yes, sir, toward the Marshals.

Q. All right. Now, at that time what was going on around the Lyceum Building?

A. Well, you couldn't actually see. It really is hard to say. It was very hard to see. There was a lot of commotion going on up there, and I am assuming, like—well, there was, in fact, there would be a few students around, [fol. 451] or figures. You would see figures scattered all over. There were figures scattered all over the campus, but only the groups were right here and right here (indicating) and I guess right here (indicating).

Q. Did you see anything—

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, the witness can't answer if he gets almost through and then Mr. Gooch interrupts.

The Court: Mr. Watts, sometimes it is hard to determine whether he has finished the answer.

Mr. Watts: If he would just wait half a second, or even a second.

The Court: Had you finished Mr. Leman?

Mr. Gooch: I shall not interrupt you again. I would like for you to tell me all of it.

A. That is all right.

Q. At the time you and General Walker and the Deputy Sheriff and one or two others got up near the vicinity of the flagpole did you see any evidence of stones and sticks and bottles and missiles being hurled at the Marshals?

A. I am sure I saw people. Well, from where? I wouldn't say I saw them. What I have to do, sir, is try to remember whether I saw it then or later on. I did during the night see people throwing stuff, but you could not —you couldn't—not around us, there wasn't anybody [fol. 452] throwing. I know that for a fact.

Q. Could you see the Lyceum Building?

A. No, sir, you could see tear gas and all, coming out, and you could see lights and you knew it was there, but I don't guess you could see it.

Q. Could you see the lights from the Lyceum Building?

A. Not on the building.

Q. Did you ever see the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Were they visible from where you were standing?

A. No, sir, they were not, unless they ran out. Now, I seen them during the night, I saw Marshals come out from there, and—at least I couldn't swear they were Marshals, but they were chasing students, and they would come out.

Q. Did you see any students hauling any brickbats from the new construction down there around Hume Hall?

A. Yes, sir, sometime during the night I saw students carrying bricks; I did.

Q. You don't know at what time?

A. No, sir, I don't. I couldn't say.

Q. Was it about—

A. I couldn't say the time. Excuse me.

Q. Was it about the time you and General Walker got [fol. 453] on the campus?

A. I don't remember seeing any students hauling bricks then. I just remember people there.

Q. Go ahead and take your seat. Now, after you and the General and the Deputy and these several others, as you have named, went up near the flagpole, on the way back did you see an encounter between General Walker and a minister?

A. Yes, sir, I sure did.

Q. I am sure you didn't mean to leave that out?

A. No.

Q. I just bring that to you. Now, did the minister implore General Walker in words, tones or sentences to help stop the rioting?

A. Yes, sir, he told General Walker, "You can stop the rioting." And General Walker said, "I have nothing to do with the students, I have no control over the students," was the words. "I have no control over the students."

Q. Did he say something to this effect, or perhaps verbatim, "I didn't come here to stop it. I wouldn't stop it if I could," or, "I couldn't stop it if I could."

A. He said—he may—well, I gave you what he said. I don't remember him saying he could or would or wouldn't. I remember distinctly he told the minister, "I have no control over the students." He told the minister that. He [fol. 454] was very polite.

Q. The minister had told him words to the effect, "General, they will listen to you, you can stop them"?

A. That is correct.

Q. And General Walker, according to you, said, "I have no control over them"?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, after you had taken the stroll up toward the flagpole and returned again to the monument you say the students again urged him to make a speech, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many students would you say were down there around the monument at the time this urging for the speech occurred?

A. I would say there were two hundred and fifty people in the crowd at the time he was speaking. I—sir, there was no way I could say for sure.

Q. Mr. Leman, I realize fully everything you say is an estimate. Nobody was counting them, nobody was trying to count them.

A. Right.

Q. I assume there was a considerable state of turmoil?

A. That's right.

[fol. 455] Q. I assume further it was impossible to remember everything that was said or done that night. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But be that as it may, it was a group consisting of some two hundred or two hundred and fifty or less or more, and General Walker did agree to make a speech?

A. Yes, sir, he turned and told me that the students ". . . think Barnett sold them out." And he got up there and talked with the students.

Q. Well, now, give us the best you can—I realize it is repetition—what General Walker said in his speech to the students that night?

A. He said—he said, "There is no need for violence. Violence is not the answer."

Q. All right.

A. He said, "The troops—what you are doing here, in effect, we should be worried about Cuba." He said, "Barnett didn't sell them out." He said Barnett was a good Governor and . . . that—he urged support for Barnett.

Q. He urged support for Barnett?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did he say who did sell them out?

A. He said that if anyone sold them out, according to the Governor's representative, which he had heard at the [fol. 456] Courthouse, that it was the head of the Highway Patrol.

Q. Did he mention the word Birdsong?

A. Yes, sir, he did.

Q. Did he lean over and ask somebody who the head of the Highway Patrol was?

A. Yes, sir, he asked me.

Q. Was that after he had said "Barnett sold you out," and—

A. No—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute. I object to that. He did not say "Barnett sold you out." That is what the news report said. I object to that statement purporting to have been this witness' testimony. The witness testified he said, "Barnett did not sell you out." Mr. Gooch is asking the question "Barnett sold you out".

Mr. Gooch: Could I ask the question?

Mr. Watts: No, sir. I have no objection to you asking the question, but I object to you not staying in the record.

Mr. Gooch: Now, Mr. Watts—

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

The Court: Just ask the question.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Isn't it a fact General Walker first said, "Your Governor has sold you out," to which the crowd hollered, "No, no, no." And that he leaned over to you and you said it [fol. 457] was not Barnett, it was Birdsong, and he straightened back up and he said, "Your Governor did not sell you out. . ."

A. No, Mr. Gooch, that isn't the way it happened.

Q. Wait until I finish.

A. Excuse me.

Q. "Your Governor did not sell you out, it was Birdsong."

A. That is not the way it happened, again.

[fol. 458] Q. All right. All right. I again say to you that I have the right to ask these questions.

A. Yes, sir, I realize that.

Q. Well, now I hope you will show me the same courtesy I am trying to show you. Wait until I finish my question.

A. Excuse me, yes, sir.

Q. Did he say words to this effect: "Keep up the protest"?

A. No, sir, I don't remember him saying anything about keeping up anything.

Q. Did he say, "You have every right to protest"?

A. He said, "You have a right to protest," he did say that, I remember it.

Q. But you say he did not say, "Keep up the protest"?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that as repetition.

The Court: Overruled.

A. No, sir, he did not say "Keep up the protest."

By the Gooch:

Q. Did you hear him make a statement to the effect: "They," referring to the Marshals, "may run out of tear gas"?

A. Are you talking about in this speech?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir, I don't—don't at all.

Q. Did you hear him say—

[fol. 459] A. He didn't say that, sir, no, he did not.

Q. All right, did you hear him say during this speech, "Thousands are on their way"?

A. No, sir. No, sir, I—

Q. Did he say it?

A. No, sir, he didn't, Mr. Gooch. If he did, I definitely do not remember him, anything about that. I was pretty close to his speech.

Q. Did he say to those students who were around listening to his speech, "I want to compliment you on what you are doing here tonight"?

A. No, sir, I don't remember that either.

Q. Now you mentioned Reverend Duncan Gray on cross examination as an incident that occurred when he was walking back from the monument, or from the flag—the vicinity of the flagpole.

Did any other incident occur involving the Reverend Duncan Gray during General Walker's speech?

A. Yes, sir, it did.

Q. Tell us about that.

A. He, Walker, was talking to the students. I think he had just started, hadn't been talking very long. And Reverend Gray started walking up to—well, just pushing his way up to Walker, speaking. I don't remember what he was saying but he was speaking.

[fol. 460] And Walker said, General Walker said, "Your minister wants to speak," or something like that.

And then somebody pulled the minister away from the, away from the group and then I saw the minister and this fellow just move on back, away from the crowd. And Walker continued his speech.

Q. Is that all that occurred?

A. Regarding the minister, is that—

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir, that's all I remember.

Q. Did you ever hear General Walker say, "Here is an Episcopal minister that makes me ashamed I am an Episcopalian"?

A. Yes, sir, I heard something about him—I did hear him say—the minister had just said something. I don't remember what he said. And it was something about bringing in the church.

And I don't recall whether this was the earlier point or during the speech. It may have been both—no, it couldn't have been both.

But I do remember the minister using the, bringing religion into it, into this Oxford thing.

He somehow said that religion or—well, he brought up the subject of religion and Walker did say that, "I am ashamed of being an Episcopalian," or "you make me ashamed—" or something like that, I don't know.

[fol. 461] The question was said, it surely was.

Q. Now after General Walker had finished his speech, what did General Walker do?

A. Moved away from the group that was standing around there and talked to some people for a period, for a while.

Q. How long a period?

A. Oh, I would estimate 10 or 15 minutes.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. Then we decided to get, go up and look and see what was going on up front and we walked up towards the west, walked west.

Q. How far west did you walk?

A. I would say up to right up in here about (indicating).

Q. Now you have indicated on this second westward trek a point, I believe, about half-way between the flagpole and the edge of the street in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. I indicate a point about right in here, sir, about right in here (indicating).

Q. All right.

A. I would say about 30 feet or so the other side of the flagpole.

Q. About 30 feet past the flagpole and west of the flagpole?

A. That's correct.

Q. Sir? Had you finished?

[fol. 462] A. That's correct, yes, sir.

Q. Now at that time who was with you and General Walker?

A. There was two or three other individuals who I do not know who they were or remember them, and myself.

Q. Was the Deputy Sheriff there?

A. No, sir, not this time, he was not there.

Q. Were any of the—

A. At least I don't remember him at all.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. Excuse me.

Q. Now at the time you went up there past the flagpole, just you and the General and one or two or three individuals, did anybody have any sticks or stones in their hands?

A. Nobody with us did at all, sir.

Q. Was there anybody following along behind you and General Walker and the two or three that you didn't know?

A. There were people all over the campus. We were not in any large group at all. There was nobody behind us—maybe you could walk back 50 feet and there might be some people but we just walked, three or four of us walked up to the front and walked on back.

Q. And nobody of a large crowd of 15 or 20 or 500 or what-not weren't following you?

A. No, sir, Mr. Gooch, they surely weren't.

[fol. 463] Q. Now I believe you said that the General made one other trek up to the—

A. Yes, sir, we walked up the front during the peace conference.

Q. Well, now who led the peace conference or was there a leader?

A. Well, there was one student I saw, saw him standing with some kind of, waving something, I don't remember what it was, some kind of flag, and so if you want to call him the leader, maybe he was the leader.

Q. I don't know whether he was or not. I was just asking if somebody led them.

A. Well, sir, I don't know that there was any leader at all but a bunch of the students were hollering, "Peace, peace," or something, or "peace conference," and they advanced up after, as the Marshals quit firing and everything and everybody quit, anybody—everybody stopped throwing and there was a group of students up front. I would say a hundred or something like that, gathered around during the peace conference.

Q. Where was General Walker at the time of the peace conference?

A. Standing behind the students.

Q. Just with his arms folded, I assume—

A. Just standing there.

[fol. 464] Q. —was the pose. And was the Deputy Sheriff with him at that time?

A. No, sir, I don't think he was.

Q. Was anybody with him but you?

A. There was two or three other people. We were talking to—all through the evening, sir, we would talk to different people, so I'm sure there was somebody with him.

Q. Did you hear any of the peace conference talk?

A. No, sir, I couldn't hear it.

Q. You couldn't hear a thing that went on?

A. No, sir, you could tell they were talking. I could hear the voices but I couldn't tell what they were saying at all.

Q. And after you had participated, or after you had gone up there—I won't say "participated,"—had—after you had gone up there, you came back down near the monument and remained there the rest of the evening?

A. That's correct, we—after that, sir, we came back and we remained the rest of the evening in this area and in here (indicating), this area in here the rest of the evening—four hours, in fact.

Q. So you stayed there on that campus that night, you and General Walker, from around 8:45 until about 1:30 or 2:00, I believe you said—

A. That is correct. That's correct.

[fol. 465] Q. —and just stood there milling around on the campus?

A. That's correct. That is absolutely correct.

Q. Now you do recall that at the interview in Jackson before you proceeded to Oxford, that General Walker at that time was urging those who were listening to him to stand behind Governor Barnett?

Mr. Watts: Excuse me. Object to it as purely repetition.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. Go ahead.

A. Well, sir, the points that stand out in my mind that Walker was urging were, one, they opposed the use of troops in this situation and that this—and, also, support for the position taken by Barnett, of legal and Constitutional resistance to the situation, to the forced integration at Ole Miss.

Q. All right. Again I ask—it is repetition, but I want an answer—

A. Yes, sir?

Q. —that he did make his position clear at Jackson before he went to Oxford, that he wanted his hearers as well as himself to support Governor Barnett, is that correct?

A. He said he supported and urged people to support Ross Barnett.

[fol. 466] Mr. Gooch: That's all. Thank you.

The Witness: Support the position of Barnett.

Mr. Gooch: That's all.

The Court: Any redirect?

Mr. Watts: Very short.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Leman, during the course of that entire evening, what was the longest period that General Walker was ever out of your sight?

A. About a minute, and I knew where he was then.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Recross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. At any time—wait just a moment. One more question: At any time that you were going in a westerly direction from the monument toward the Lyceum Building, was there any, ever any tear gas fired at the group, however small, of which you were in?

A. Sir, there was tear gas anywhere in that area, firing everywhere. I saw them rolling down on the ground, I saw them—in fact is, they were firing all the way back to the crowd. At times they were firing all the way back to the crowd back by the monument, coming down there. People would have to move to get out of the way.

[fol. 467] Q. Was that happening at the time you and General Walker got on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, sure was.

Mr. Gooch: That's all. Thank you.

The Court: I'm going to excuse this witness.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute. Let me ask just one more question. It's always bad luck to....

Further redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Leman, did you during the course of that evening and the entire evening, was General Walker ever out in front of a crowd with no one between him and the Marshals?

A. No, he never was. He never was.

Q. Did he ever, or, so I won't be in a position of leading you, tell us what his gait was as he walked around that area?

A. A very slow walk.

Q. Did he ever get out of that slow walk?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Mr. Watts: That's all.

The Court: I'm going to excuse this witness.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I would like to have him excused.

The Court: You are excused. We will recess until a quarter of 11:00. Keep your seats, please, in the audience until [fol. 468] after the jury has left the courtroom, and be back in your seats at a quarter of 11:00.

(15-minute recess.)

Mr. Watts: Call Mr. Holland, please.

If Your Honor please, at this time we would like to present a deposition. This is the deposition of a witness, Joe Ford, taken in Oxford, Mississippi, March 12, 1964, by agreement of the parties, and the deposition was attended by Mr. Gooch and myself.

With the Court's permission, Mr. Andress will read the answers and I shall read the questions.

I assume it is understood that the witness was sworn?

I notice I didn't ask him.

The Court: Yes.

JOE FORD, testified by deposition as follows:

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name?

A. Joe Ford.

Q. What is your business?

A. At the present time I am an automobile and tractor dealer.

Q. Mr. Ford, have you been Sheriff of Lafayette County?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 469] Q. Were you the County Sheriff on September 29th through October 2nd, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the disturbance incident to one James Meredith at the University of Mississippi occur while you were Sheriff?

A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. Now Mr. Ford you were Sheriff between that period of time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did an incident occur at the University of Mississippi between that period?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have occasion between these dates to become acquainted with former Major General Edwin A. Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you first see him?

A. In the Sheriff's Office.

Q. Would you outline into the record, please, sir, the nature and extent of that conversation and acquaintance?

A. It was on a Sunday morning, I am not positive, but it was somewhere between 7:00 and 8:00 o'clock, General Walker came into the Sheriff's Office. He introduced himself. I don't recall the young man who accompanied him, but I asked him his business in Oxford with reference to [fol. 470] several phone calls that had come into the Sheriff's Office in connection with General Walker—

Mr. Gooch: Now if the Court please, we object to the rest of the testimony, as to what General Walker may have said.

The Court: The rest of that sentence?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Court: Sustained as hearsay.

A. —I referred him to the telephone calls that had come to me, some of them made statements to the effect that they had been asked to come to Oxford. I questioned General Walker with reference to whether—his plans in Oxford—

Mr. Gooch: To which we object.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute.

Mr. Gooch: Which we object to the rest of the answer.

The Court: Sustained.

A. —I informed him since he was here as an observer—

Mr. Gooch: I object to that, if the Court please, as to what he may have told General Walker. It's hearsay so far as this defendant is concerned.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Andress: This is the witness himself, Your Honor, testifying as to what he said.

The Court: Let me read the rest of the answer. Let's [fol. 471] see. I will overrule it and permit that.

Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

A. I informed him since he was here as an observer that I had no excuse to ask him to leave but that we wanted no one here that would cause any disturbance or any feeling of emotion that would call disturbance. He assured me that his activities here were of his own personal interest and simply as an observer.

Q. Did you see him again after that incident on Sunday morning of September 30th?

A. I did.

Q. Would you outline that meeting for us, please, sir?

A. That was approximately 8:00 o'clock on the same date, Sunday night, in the courtroom in the Lafayette County Courthouse.

All county officers who were here in connection with the University situation were asked to meet in the courtroom. General Walker was present at that meeting. He did not address the members of that meeting. He was present, however, and was on the courtyard lawn after the meeting. I didn't make any personal contact with him.

Q. Did someone address the meeting of the county officers in the courthouse?

A. Yes, Judge Moore from Jackson.

Q. Would you remember in substance what he told the [fol. 472] group?

Mr. Gooch: To which we object. It would be hearsay.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Had there been a substantial group of local sheriffs and law enforcement officers assembled in Oxford?

A. I don't know the exact number but at one time or another during the course of those few days I was informed that practically every sheriff in Mississippi was here.

Q. Were there a substantial number of these peace officers assembled within the courthouse that night?

A. They were, I don't know the exact number, there was a good many of them.

Q. Was that the last you saw of Walker then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him again at any time while he was in or around Oxford?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Mr. Gooch: No cross.

Mr. Watts: All right.

Turn now over to the next deposition here, David Channell.

DAVID CHANNELL, testified by deposition as follows:

[fol. 473] Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name, please?

A. David Channell.

Q. Your residence both on campus and at home?

A. Odom B. Dorm on campus, and 740 McDowell Road, Jackson, Mississippi, at home.

[fol. 474] Q. Who are your parents?

A. Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Channell.

Q. Your age?

A. I am twenty.

Q. Are you a student in Mississippi University?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What school and what class?

A. I am in the School of Commerce and I am a junior.

Q. Were you at school in September of 1962?

A. I was.

Q. Did any unusual incidents happen on the campus that night?

A. Yes, sir, there was a very unusual incident, one which we were not accustomed to. We had what you might say was a riot.

Q. In what area did that take place?

A. It took place in front of the Lyceum Building, the place commonly referred to as the Grove.

Q. Were you present during the course of that incident?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. When did you first come on the campus that night and realize there was something unusual taking place?

A. We were coming back from the football game in [fol. 475] Jackson that week-end and on the way back we had a little car trouble and I didn't get back until about 8:00 o'clock. We knew that there was something wrong because we were listening to reports on the radio.

Q. What was the general nature of those reports?

A. They said there was a Negro admitted to the University of Mississippi, that he was on the school grounds. They said that tear gas had been fired and there was a riot going on.

Q. When you arrived on the campus where did you go?

A. I walked straight up to the Grove here just to see what was going on.

• • •

Mr. Watts: We marked there Exhibit 1, if Your Honor please, a plat almost identical to the one on the Board, except much smaller. Will it be permissible if I step over by the plat and point out, Mr. Gooch, the same locations on this plat?

The Court: Yes, sir, if they are the same.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. Mr. Gooch has a copy of it, I am sure.

(Continuing to read from deposition.)

Q. Now, David, directing your attention to Exhibit No. 1, which is a scaled plat of the University of Mississippi [fol. 476] area, is this the Grove in the center of the area?

A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. Now, orienting it, the top is to the north, and the left is to the west. From which direction did you approach?

A. We came down University Avenue and we had to hitchhike since the car wouldn't run, so this boy let us off right here at the bridge. He had to get his car across the campus and he lived in the Phi Delta Theta House, and he let us off right here at the corner of University Avenue right across the bridge.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. We proceeded to go on up into the Grove.

Q. Was there a substantial crowd in the Grove?

A. Yes, sir, there was. There was a crowd all the way along University Avenue and the Grove.

Q. Could you give us anything like a rough estimate of the size of that crowd?

A. I couldn't tell you exactly. I imagine it would be around 3,000 people at least.

Q. Had tear gas been fired?

A. Yes, sir, it had.

Q. Did you mix on with the crowd?

A. Yes, sir, I walked on in and started to talking to some of the boys and asked them what had really happened, [fol. 477] and the story about it. All we could get was radio reports and some of the announcements were not too positive, but we did know that tear gas had been fired.

Q. How close did you get to the ring of Marshals that surrounded the Lyceum Building?

A. I couldn't get very close. I guess we just walked right up into here.

Q. By "here" you are pointing into this circle that is called the Grove?

A. Yes, sir, next to the flagpole.

Q. And in the center of the circle as appears on this Exhibit No. 1, there is a cross between two sidewalks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is a circle within that, and is that what you identify as the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, that is the flagpole.

Q. I wish you would tell us what you saw when you got up in that area?

A. When I got up in that area there were small groups of students and they were charging the Marshals, throwing rocks, but they were all spread out. There was a group over here—

Q. By "here" you are pointing to the southwest?

A. Yes, sir. It was very sporadic. They would run up there and throw rocks and run back.

[fol. 478] Q. Did you stay there all during that time, the intervening time that followed that?

A. Yes, sir, I did. I just milled around and went over to the Y and talked to some people over there.

Q. I wish you would give us a narrative running account of everything you saw, or everything you heard, and what occurred?

A. As I said, I arrived at about 6:00 o'clock and I walked up into the Grove and started talking to some boys to see what had really happened. I guess I went over to the Y and talked to some boys over there. I met a boy from South Carolina that was up here and I talked to him. He told me a girl had been killed, so I walked on back down towards University Avenue.

Q. Was that eastward?

A. It was going this way. The Y is here.

Q. You are pointing—I will have to orient you here, David. The Confederate monument is on the east side of the Grove and the Lyceum Building is on the west end of the Grove. It will help us when we read this in Court if you can use points of the compass and directions.

A. All right. We walked eastward. I was standing around by the Confederate monument and I saw General Walker walking up. He was with a short man, it was a Deputy Sheriff or a Sheriff, I don't know which, and I as-[fol. 479] sumed he was from Texas. He came up and he was standing around and there was a whole bunch of people gathered around General Walker. He started talking.

Mr. Gooch: Wait just a minute. We object to that next answer, if the Court please. A conclusion.

The Court: I will admit it.

Mr. Gooch: Not res gesta.

A. Everybody got mad at him because he wanted to put the riot down. He said violence was no way to do this thing and so everybody got mad at him. Then these Episcopal ministers, I assume it was Duncan Gray and Wofford Smith, they climbed up on the monument, the Confederate statue, and they started implying that the people out here were very low class people. That upset a few people so they started to pull them down. They got them away right quick and it was the Deputy Sheriff who helped get them out of there that was with General Walker. Then General Walker told us, he said we ought to be concentrating our efforts in Cuba instead of against our own people. He continued to say there was no sense in having any violence, that constitutionally you could protest but not with violence.

Some students asked him to lead us and he said, "No." [fol. 480] He said, "I can't take part in a violent demonstration." He said that wouldn't be right. Later he walked on up into the Grove and I walked with him, I guess there was about five or six students that went with him. He walked up into the Grove and looked around, he and the Deputy Sheriff and the students. He then turned around and went back out. He walked out of the Grove and went back down to the Confederate monument, I think not exactly to the Confederate monument, he came down and stood across the street over here in front of the Biology Building and Hume Hall. It is on the east part of the campus. He stood there and this boy, I can remember this real well, this boy from Natchez, Mississippi, his name is James Dykes, he had been shot in the leg. At the present time, or then, he was attending Co-Lin Junior College in Wesson, Mississippi, and the only reason I know who the boy was was this boy who was with me was from Natchez and he pointed him out to me and told me who he was. He came up and two boys had to carry him, one under each arm. He was carried up to ask General Walker if he could put him on a white stallion and lead us and General Walker at that time shook his head like that (indicating) and said, "No". He said that it wouldn't be right.

Q. Go ahead with your narrative of what occurred after you had this talk with this boy. Was this statement of [fol. 481] putting him on a white stallion, was that stated in jest?

A. At the present time emotion was running rather high and the boy couldn't walk, his leg had been shot and there was blood all over his pants leg. I imagine he was shot by birdshot, or maybe some form of shotgun. They took him on off and General Walker stood there and people kept talking to him and asking his views, his political views and so forth.

Q. Now, up to that time had he made any move at all toward the Lyceum Building, or toward the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, he walked on into the Grove at the time that I walked with him and some more students did, he walked on into the Grove about halfway or three fourths in there and he just stood around looking and then he turned and we walked out. The only reason I went with him was just to talk to him because I had heard a lot about General Walker.

Q. Did he at any time get out of a normal ordinary walk?

A. No, sir, he never did. In fact, he was walking pretty slow, if you ask me, for his size.

Q. To identify him, did he have on a rather large white hat?

A. Yes, sir, he had on a large Stetson hat and I believe he had on a beige suit. I believe he had on a beige suit, [fol. 482] but I remember that white hat better than anything. He was with this short Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff who was accompanying him.

Q. Back at the time you first arrived on the campus, do you think sometime shortly after 8:00 o'clock, and between that time and the time you saw General Walker, were you out in the area of the Grove back and forth all the time?

A. Before I saw General Walker?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. Were you in a position where if there had been a mass charge of as many as 1,000 people or even 500 against these Marshals that were led by three individuals out in front of them, were you in position to where you would have had to have seen it?

• • •

Mr. Gooch: To which I object as a conclusion on the part of this witness.

The Court: Overruled.

• • •

A. Yes, sir, I would have seen it.

Q. Did anything of that kind occur at all?

A. No, sir, it did not.

Q. First, did anything like that occur prior to Walker's [fol. 483] speech on the monument?

A. No, sir.

Q. And did it occur then after Walker's speech on the monument?

A. No, sir.

• • •

Mr. Watts: I believe the rest of it is repetition. We will waive it. Cross examination?

Mr. Gooch: On page 13 of the deposition, question.

Q. And you saw General Walker almost immediately after you got on the campus?

A. No, sir, I didn't. I would imagine it was about forty-five minutes to an hour later. I can't place time after that because I had no radio and no way of knowing the time. I didn't have a watch.

Mr. Gooch: On page 14, the first question on the page.

Q. And you did see groups from that big crowd of people charge the Marshals or go up toward the Marshals and throw bricks and stones, or did you?

A. Well, there were not 3,000 people taking part in what was going on there. As I said, there was a large group of students lining University Avenue, students and towns-[fol. 484] people. In the Grove, itself, and around University Circle, I could not estimate that because it was dark but it wouldn't be anywhere near 3,000 people there.

Q. Well, give me your best estimate on that?

A. Well, I would say 1500 or 2,000.

Q. In the Grove itself, to be specific now?

A. To be specific exactly in the Grove there wouldn't be more than 500 or 600 people. You see, the streets were lined in front of the Y and all around the Engineering Building and the Chemistry Building.

Q. Did you see the Marshals fire any tear gas?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. You say that some had been fired before you got there?

A. Yes, sir, it had.

Mr. Gooch: Now, on page 18, at the one, two, third question.

Q. After General Walker had something—had said something about a peaceful protest, according to you, where did he go then?

A. He stayed around and he carried on a conversation with some of the students and the townspeople who were there at the time.

[fol. 485] Q. Then where did he go?

A. He walked on up into the Grove. He and the Deputy Sheriff walked west toward the Lyceum.

Q. The Deputy Sheriff?

A. And some more students.

Q. Did anybody go with him?

A. Yes, sir, I for one went with him.

Q. About how many followed him?

A. I guess there were maybe five at the most, four or five.

Q. How far did you go?

A. He walked about half way or three quarters of the way up into the Grove.

Q. What did he do?

A. He just looked around and then he walked back out.

Q. Did he say anything else there?

A. No, sir, not a thing.

Mr. Gooch: On page 23.

Q. Did you ever hear anybody ask General Walker to attempt to stop the violence?

A. No, sir, no one asked him to stop the violence.

Q. Nobody asked him at all?

[fol. 486] A. Not a soul. The people there, I assume, were for what was going on and General Walker was the only one against it. He tried to tell the students that they would accomplish nothing.

Mr. Gooch: Down at the bottom of the page.

• • •

Q. Did you consider General Walker to be a public figure?

A. Yes, sir, I would.

Q. Would you say he was a national public figure?

A. Yes, sir, I would.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: On page 26, one, two, three, four, the fifth question.

Q. Then, General Walker, according to you, never at any time did he climb part of the way up on the Confederate statue to address the group?

A. If he did, I didn't notice it. I am sure he didn't.

Q. You are positive he did not?

A. No, sir.

Q. In connection with the talk that you heard Walker make?

[fol. 487] A. I am not positive that he didn't climb upon that statue, he could have and I didn't notice it.

Q. Well, you were there within seven feet of him?

A. Yes, sir, but at the time I couldn't notice if he climbed up there or not. He might have stepped up on the first step, but if he had mounted it real high, I would have noticed it.

Mr. Gooch: On page 27.

Q. Did you ever hear General Walker mention the name of Birdsong?

A. Birdsong?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you say he did not say anything about Birdsong?

A. Who is Birdsong?

Mr. Gooch: On page 28, the fourth question.

Q. I believe you said earlier in your testimony that there was a riot situation on the campus?

A. That is the impression I got. They said that tear gas had been fired and the students were running around.

[fol. 488] Q. Did you observe a riot condition when you got there?

A. There was a lot of fighting going on.

Q. Were there any charges towards the Marshals by anybody?

A. Yes, sir, there were sporadic charges by little groups of people all over the campus, from behind the Lyceum and the sides.

Mr. Gooch: The third question on page 29.

• • •

Q. Did General Walker go up to where the fire truck was?

A. No, sir.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: The last question on page 30.

Q. Do you know what time General Walker left the campus?

A. No, sir, he was gone about 11:00 o'clock, I am sure, but I didn't know what time it was. As I said, I lost track of time.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: On page 36, the third question from the [fol. 489] bottom.

Q. Then after he made that talk where did he go?

A. After he made that talk?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, he went on up into the Grove about halfway to three quarters.

Q. To the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, to the flagpole.

Mr. Gooch: That is all I have to offer.

Mr. Watts: Turning to page 27 of Mr. Gooch's cross examination where the question was asked, "Would you say he did not say anything about Birdsong?" And the answer: "Who is Birdsong?" And continuing to read;

Q. My information is he was the head of the Mississippi State Patrol?

A. I think he mentioned the Highway Patrol but I forgot the guy's name.

Q. What did he say about the Highway Patrol?

A. People at that time were saying that Governor Barnett had sold us out and General Walker said, "No, it wasn't, to the best of his knowledge, it was Birdsong or the [fol. 490] Chief of the Highway Patrol." I assume it was Birdsong.

Q. He said Birdsong sold them out, is that what he said?

A. I don't know how he put it, that the Governor of Mississippi is a good man and he would not turn against his people, and he said the Chief of the Highway Patrol was the one that let the Marshals on the campus. That is the way it went.

Mr. Watts: Now, on page 36 he read the question: "To the flagpole?" And the Answer: "Yes, sir, to the flagpole," and continuing:

• • •

Q. Then he came back?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did he say?

A. Then what did he say?

Q. Yes.

A. He just stood around and people were asking him questions and that is when Gray and them got up there.

• • •

Mr. Watts: That is all.
Mr. Gooch: Nothing further.

[fol. 491] CECIL HOLLAND, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Your name, please, sir?
A. My name is Cecil Holland.
Q. Your residence?
A. Bathesda—Chevy, Chase, Maryland.
Q. Your Business or profession?
A. Newspaper reporter.
Q. Tell the jury what paper you work for, Mr. Holland.
A. The Star, Washington, D.C.
Q. How long have you been in the newspaper business?
A. All my life.
Q. Would it be a personal question to ask you how long that's been?
A. It's been about 30 years. In business itself.
Q. What school, journalism school, were you a graduate from?
A. None.
Q. How did you get into the profession?
A. Well, I attended the University of Chattanooga and took a part-time job as a Sophomore there and—
Q. Stayed on in it?
[fol. 492] A. Stayed on in it ever since, except for Army service.
Q. What branch of the service were you in?
A. Army Air Force.
Q. And how long have you worked for the Washington Star?

A. Off and on since '38, 1938. I left twice and went back.

Q. Were you directed by your paper to proceed to Oxford, Mississippi, any time during the latter part of September, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would just tell the jury, Mr. Holland, please, sir, in your own words, from the time you arrived at Oxford, what you saw, what you heard, what you did and what occurred?

A. Well, I arrived there late on a Friday evening. I had come, I had left Washington Friday afternoon and had an assignment before I got there and I rented a car in Memphis and drove down there.

And I got there late and could not get a place to stay in Oxford, so I drove down to Waterford and had a motel room there.

[fol. 493] Saturday I went back to Oxford. I worked there and finished my story and then went back to Waterford, where I spent the night.

And Sunday morning I got up fairly early and came up, had breakfast, and visited the campus, heard about some troops being brought in at a place I forget now somewhere about 15 miles out of town. We visited that place.

Later went back to the campus and couldn't get on and—because the State Patrol had thrown up barricades.

Later we went out to the airport and were there when the Marshals landed.

Eventually back to the motel and then back to the campus where we waited from 5:30 or 6:00 until we were admitted to the campus grounds at about 7:00.

We stayed there—we walked up toward the Lyceum Building, trying to find someone to talk with particularly from the Justice Department.

We stood out in front for quite a while. Mr. Guthman came out, he said he had one telephone call—

Mr. Gooch: We object to what Mr. Guthman said.
Mr. Watts: Don't say that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Who was Mr. Guthman?

A. He was a public relations man for the Justice Department.

Q. Where did he come out of?

[fol. 494] A. He came out of Lyceum Building and we asked him for a chance to talk with him.

Q. Well, now was this daylight or dark?

A. It was dark by that time.

Q. All right, go ahead and tell us what happened, what you saw.

A. Well, while waiting for Mr. Guthman to return, the Marshals had us move—there were a dozen or more reporters gathered out in front. The Marshals had us move around to the side.

Q. Excuse me. Were there any AP reporters among them, or did you know—

A. I don't know. Could possibly have been. I just don't know.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. I knew some that I had worked with at other places and I know we were together part of the time but there was a milling back and forth and the crowd was—the group of reporters were changing all the time.

Q. You say there were eight or ten of those reporters?

A. Oh, at least that. I made no number of, count of them. We were—

Q. Now, Mr. Holland, so we will orient yourself and the jury, would you step down here just a minute?

North, east, west (pointing) the Confederate monument, [fol. 495] the Lyceum Building?

A. Yeah.

Q. This area is known as "the circle". Could you take this ruler and point out the position where you and this group of reporters were?

A. We were directly in front of the Lyceum Building right there (indicating).

Q. That would be east?

A. Yes, east.

Q. Yes, sir. All right, sir. Take your seat.

A. The Marshals would not let us go through and we were waiting for someone to talk to there because we didn't know what was going on.

Q. If it will help you, stay there at the chart.

A. Well, while we were standing there, the Marshals asked us to move over to the side.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And we were moved over to this side of the building, which I believe would be the south, I believe so.

And I stayed right in that—some of the reporters went over there (indicating). Who they were, how many, I don't know, because we more or less dispersed then and it was dark and people were milling around and we moved over here and stayed there (indicating), at least for quite a while.

Q. Now for the benefit of the record, "here," would be [fol. 496] just south of the Lyceum?

A. Yes, it was right in this area here (indicating).

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I believe it led down to a gym or some building down this way, I don't know (indicating).

Q. All right, sir. Continue then with your account.

A. Well, we stayed there and I was—I was there when the—I had moved up to this corner as near in front of it as I could get on the outside of the Marshals and I was standing there when the—simply because I wanted to—didn't want to miss Mr. Guthman—when the first tear gas started.

Q. Describe that incident to us in as much reality as you can remember.

A. Well, I was standing back here at one point and when the order came for the Marshals to don their tear gas masks, and I moved back somewhat—

Q. Do you remember that order?

A. Just the call, "gas," is all I could distinguish. And it came from—it sort of seemed to me to be picked up and carried around the building, I don't know.

And I was there when that call came. And they took out the gas cannisters and then the call came, was for them to—I forget the, what the technical name was, but anyhow, they returned the cannisters to their pocket and [fol. 497] took off their masks.

And I moved back up here for the same reason that I said: I was trying to see when Mr. Guthman would come out. I stood there and was standing there (indicating), when the gas was actually fired.

Q. Tell us about it.

A. Well, there was just a sudden order and gas flew and I turned immediately and retreated down this way (indicating).

Q. Now where were the Highway Patrolmen when that order came?

A. Well, there was a large group at the scene—I had walked straight up and down this way (indicating) and there was some groups, some parts of them came this way and some had moved, as best I could tell, into this direction.

Q. Where were the students?

A. Well, into the trees where students had been. I couldn't see at that particular time and I moved up behind them simply to keep an eye on the entrance of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Now when gas was fired, was there only one round or was it a salvo-type of operation?

A. Oh, there was quite a bit of gas fired there. I don't know how many rounds or what it was.

The wind seemed to be blowing from this direction [fol. 498] (indicating), and it seemed to carry it right back towards us where we were.

Q. Yes, sir. What occurred then?

A. Well, there was sporadic firing from time to time. Sometimes heavy, sometimes not so heavy; sometimes we would be driven away back down this way (indicating) to get out of the way of the gas.

Q. What happened to the highway patrolmen when the gas was fired?

A. Well, some of them, they withdrew, too, and some of those that had come down in front here came out with tears streaming from their eyes, just as—well, as anyone in the area that caught any of this gas. They did not have gas masks on when I saw them.

Q. And from that time on, Mr. Holland, what was the activity of the students or the Marshals, whoever they were, out in front of the Marshals?

A. Well, I couldn't say who all was out in front because it was somewhat dark and this tear gas, the clouds were—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Going back and forth. More of the activity seemed to be on this side than over here (indicating), though at times there was some activity down this direction (indicating).

Q. What do you call "activity"?

[fol. 499] A. Well, there would be cries and shouts and then the Marshals would move out and throw some tear gas and then they would come back and there might be a little lull and then it would be resumed.

Q. Did you ever see a generalized movement or mass charge of a large number of students?

A. From where I was and with the tear gas that was there, I could not distinguish anything because I quickly got a lot of tear gas in my eyes.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And I just—I had to go way back down here (indicating) and then I would come back and you would catch some more and then you would move back again because—and it was fairly dark on there and the lights, there was no general lights and I could not tell what was happening down in this area. I couldn't see any movements of people except small groups maybe that come up in this direction this way (indicating).

Q. And what would those small groups do?

A. Well, I could see people there and then I might see the Marshals move out. I couldn't see what they did because I kept back on this side (indicating).

Q. Did you see any rocks, bricks, bottles, missiles or anything of the kind in the air, flying around?

A. Well, I didn't only see them, you could hear things [fol. 500] hitting places and I don't know exactly what they were or what else because—

Q. Were there other newsmen around you?

A. At that time, no, because I had lost track of all of them. I had moved up and down and I don't know what happened to them, only by hearsay later as to what—

Q. Well, don't tell the hearsay. Go ahead and tell us what happened, just draw us a picture.

A. I stayed in this area back down in here for quite a while, must have been an hour or more (indicating).

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Just how long, I am unable to say because—and I consulted my notes the next day, I could not find just what the timing was in this because—

Q. As a reporter, did you keep notes of your activities?

A. I didn't attempt to at that time.

Q. I see. Go ahead.

A. I finally decided that I wanted to come around and get on this side (indicating) and I didn't think it was quite wise to move down this way, come from this area, I didn't, and being a civilian I didn't know what—I just couldn't tell what was going on, so I—

Q. Could you estimate the time from the period the first gas was fired until you decided to move and did move?

A. It was an hour or more. Could have been an hour [fol. 501] and a half but I'm inclined to think it was something a little less than an hour and a half, I—

Q. Yes, sir, but—what would you fix as the time when gas was fired?

A. Well, I know that pretty well because it was right—I kept that time because we were also interested in checking it later because it was about the time the President was speaking. It might have been a minute—I don't believe there was more than a minute or two's difference in the time, and I think he was supposed to be speaking at 10:00 o'clock, Washington time. I mention that only because I kept my watch on Washington time.

Q. What would that have been local time?

A. 8:00 o'clock, I believe, at that time.

Q. And you think it was within a minute or so—

A. I think it was very close. I couldn't say definitely.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. Well, eventually I decided that I wasn't, not accomplishing anything here. I wasn't—I was unable to get into the building.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And I came back down this way and I think somewhere down here (indicating) is the gate, I'm not quite sure where it is. But I asked the highway patrolman there which was, how could I get out to the, I think it was, high-[fol. 502] way 6, I believe, that ran out to the airport.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. It went on that side of University (indicating). And he said, "It's down there," and about that time some man alone in a car came by and I asked him if he would give me a ride and he was kind enough to do so.

Q. Could you identify that individual?

A. I can't by name. He told me his name. He was an English instructor or some instructor. I won't even be sure it was an English instructor now.

Q. With the college?

A. With the college.

Q. Yes, sir. Go ahead.

A. Well, at any rate, he said he would like to see what was going on, on this side, so somehow he brought me in something around like this (indicating) and we came out somewhere in an area—I don't believe we were down this far. We could have been because we made a left turn and turned back up the, this driveway that goes—no, wait a minute. I have got it wrong.

Came back around in this way somewhere (indicating). I don't know where, quite how we came in because I was not familiar with the campus at that time.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Then we drove to turn back up this way (indicating), [fol. 503] and just about the time we did that, there was a, quite a mass of students. I can't estimate the number but—

Q. Yes, sir.

A. —the car was surrounded and there must have been some activity up here that I don't know what it was.

[fol. 504] Q. Could you see that far from where you were?

A. You could see some activity going on but I couldn't tell what it was. Of course, the Marshals would move out that way with a very heavy barrage of tear gas.

Q. From the time you drove up there in that car could you see well enough toward the Lyceum to make out the form of specific Marshals?

A. I could see individuals and I assumed they were Marshals because of their helmets and jackets.

Q. That is you could see shapes and forms?

A. Shapes or forms, yes, sir, but there was quite a barrage of tear gas that came at that time, and this man who picked me up said, "I want to get out," and I said, "I do too," so he took me out and somehow, I think we came back down here (indicating). He brought me down University Avenue and let me out at the corner. I am not sure whether it is Main Street or not. I believe it is about one block further from the Ole Miss Hotel. I had left my car at the Ole Miss Hotel and I wanted to pick it up.

Q. All right. Very briefly, after you left the campus, just go ahead and tell us what else you saw?

A. Well, since I had no room in the motel myself, I—a friend of mine with the Baltimore paper had told me that I could use his room as my headquarters. He had a special 'phone set up in there and I went in there and talked [fol. 505] briefly with him for some time and then I started back to the campus. I believe at that time he told me what news—what developments he had.

Q. Well, don't tell me that, you are not supposed to say what he told you.

A. Well, I am just saying he told me that, and then I told him I would go back to the campus. His was a morning paper so he had to keep much closer to the 'phone than I did. Mine was an afternoon paper. So, I had a lot more time.

So, I got my car, which had been parked down there, and started back and decided then I would stop at the Mansion Restaurant and get a cup of coffee.

Q. Where was this—was it the Mansion Restaurant or the Mansion House?

A. Mansion House, I—one or the other. I am not sure. It was about, I suppose, not more than a block from the intersection of University and Main Street, heading toward the square.

Q. To identify it, about how—about halfway between University and the Courthouse on the square?

A. Roughly that I would say.

Q. And on the west side of the street?

A. You have got me now on that. It was on the left as you head toward the Courthouse. I suppose that would [fol. 506] be the west side.

Q. Typical of an airman, but go ahead. How long did you stay there?

A. Well, I went in with the intention of getting a cup of coffee and it suddenly occurred to me I hadn't had anything to eat since breakfast. I asked the proprietor if I could get something and he said well he didn't know.

Q. Well, did you eat there?

A. He said, "I think all my help is gone." But he said, "If my help is not gone I will fix it for you myself."

Q. Where did you go after you ate?

A. I immediately went back to the campus.

Q. Tell the Jury what you saw?

A. Well, I got back there and just moved around in the Circle on the east front of the Lyceum building where most of the activity was taking place.

Q. What was that activity at that time?

A Well, it varied. It was throwing of rocks, bricks, sorties toward the building.

Q. Was it any organized operation you could see?

A. There seemed to be some measure of organization; to what extent it was I can't say.

Q. Well, just describe to the Jury what groups would participate, and how many there would be, and what they [fol. 507] would do.

A. I can't give any estimate in numbers. It would just be a big crowd there. The main trouble with estimating number of how many were participating was the fact that there were so many onlookers there including some women.

Q. What were the onlookers doing?

A. They were just watching.

Q. How were they—what was their activity?

A. Well, a lot of them were standing on steps of building, just watching the activities going on. There were some bricks that were being thrown, there was some source of bricks that would be brought up there, and they would take them and break them on the curbstone. They seemed to have something of a supply system.

Q. Go ahead and tell us what else you saw?

A. Well, I moved around from time to time there, from one part of the campus to another. First, from the right side facing the Lyceum Building to the left side, as the activity would change and I talked to some—some of the students very briefly and very casually. I kept an eye out. I was trying also to find General Walker.

Q. Did you ever find him?

A. I did.

Q. Could you point to the Jury with the pointer where [fol. 508] you found him?

A. To orient myself.

Q. Get oriented. There is the Circle right in the middle.

A. I found him—

Q. First, put your finger, your pointer on the monument.

A. Here is the monument here, and I found him roughly in that area there.

Q. I see. All right.

A. He was standing under—in the shadow of a tree, as I recall.

Q. Was that generally as you pointed, generally south of the monument?

A. South, southeast.

Q. All right, go ahead. What was he doing?

A. He was standing with a young man that I met later and recognized as having been with him down at the Ole Miss Hotel.

Q. Had you attended a news conference or something at the Ole Miss Motel?

A. No, I was late getting there for that. I came in while it was going on, but by this time the Marshals had moved on to the campus and I did not stay for that.

Q. But you did see this lad with Walker at the motel?

[fol. 509] A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Were you able to identify him later on?

A. When I met him, yes, sir.

Q. Did you actually meet him and shake hands with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what was Walker and this boy doing?

A. They were standing there.

Q. Tell the Jury what was going on, who was around them, what was being done and what was said.

A. Well, I had wanted to see General Walker. I had heard he was on the campus and I had, while watching trying to observe what else was going on, I had kept my eye open for him.

Q. Just go ahead and tell us without getting into hearsay.

A. I finally saw someone that I thought I recognized by the poor lighting that we had, which was General Walker. I had met him before so—

Q. Where had you met him before?

A. I had met him in Washington, D. C.

Q. Under what circumstances?

A. He was a witness in a Senate hearing there and I met him one night when I had arranged to try get an ad-[fol. 510] vance copy of his testimony.

Q. Was that along in April, 1962?

A. I can't remember the month. Must have been about that time.

Q. Could you recognize him from that previous brief acquaintance?

A. I thought I recognized him.

Q. All right, sir. Go ahead and tell us what happened.

A. I went up to him and asked him if he was General Walker, and then I introduced myself. He introduced me to this young man whose name I never—if I got it, I didn't recall it, and we talked at some length there.

Q. Did you stay right in that place, or did you move around?

A. We stayed there a little while. While we were there I think the General—some activity had occurred up on our left, which I think would be the south side of the Circle there.

Q. Would that be up toward the Lyceum?

A. Up toward the Lyceum. The General asked the young man to go up and see what it was, and I think while he was gone—I am not positive about this—that I suggested that we move. I wanted to move up closer to see if I could see what was happening.

[fol. 511] Q. What was the visibility from that point, Mr. Holland?

A. It was pretty difficult to see. It was pretty difficult to see because not only was the lighting very poor, but also there was often tear gas or something that was in the air, and it was hard to see.

Q. What was the weather conditions that night? Was it wet or dry?

A. I recall it was a pretty pleasant evening other than—

Q. Do you know whether it was overcast or moonlight?

A. I don't recall that.

Q. All right, sir, go ahead.

A. Well, we moved at my—I suggested we move, because I wanted to get up closer. We moved from about right there (indicating) to maybe right in here somewhere where this crosses here, coming down.

Q. What did you observe from that position?

A. You couldn't see too much more.

Q. What was your gait as you moved up there?

A. Pardon?

Q. What was your gait as you moved up there? Did you walk or did you run?

A. We just walked across the street.

Q. How long did you and General Walker stay there?

[fol. 512] A. Well, I talked to him there and while I was talking to him there there was quite a bit of activity that occurred over on this side of the Lyceum.

Q. What was that activity?

A. Well, it seemed to me, as I recall now, that they began throwing Molotov cocktails and things, and so I left General Walker and walked over to see what it was. I went by myself there.

Q. Was that the first activity of that kind you had seen?

A. I believe it was.

Q. What did it look like, a bright flash?

A. Oh, yes, sir, a bright flash when a bottle would burst.

Q. Who went with you over there?

A. I went alone.

Q. All right, sir. What did you observe?

A. I saw some of the activity going on, saw some of the bottles being hurled.

Q. Did you see them making the missiles?

A. Not at that time, but later.

Q. Where was that activity?

A. In the same area.

Q. How were they making them?

A. Pouring gasoline into bottles, or some kind of con-
[fol. 513] tainer, and throwing it.

Q. Then what happened?

A. I walked back to talk some more to General Walker, and I believe I talked with him then. I am—to be frank to say, I can't remember whether I left him once or twice.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I think it was twice.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And then I came back and we talked some more.

Q. Have you tried your very best to recollect in detail that incident?

A. I have, and I just can't recall whether it was one or two times I personally left.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And always alone.

[fol. 514] Q. All right, go ahead.

A. I left and came back. And assuming I did leave again, I came back a second time, and a group, there was a group around him of three or four, as best I could tell. So I did not go up to him that time but went off to watch something else, and that was the last time I saw him.

Q. You have been a newsman, you say, some 30 years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him any more that evening at all?

A. Not any more, on the campus. Not until the next day.

Mr. Watts: I believe that is all, Mr. Holland.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Holland, did you say anything to General Walker about having led a charge?

A. I did.

Q. Did he affirm or deny it?

A. He didn't answer.

Q. Now as I get the testimony you got on the campus there before the gas was fired and you stayed there for a considerable length of time. I guess you were trying to observe everything that a newsman tried to observe?

A. Correct, sir.

Q. Then you started walking away from the tear gas, [fol. 515] came back over on the east side of the campus, I suppose you milled around with the crowd there some?

A. Very much so.

Q. Did you fix, attempt to fix the time? You fixed the gas being discharged about 8:00. What time would you say you got back around to the—

A. I think it must have been about 11:00 or later when I got back because I know, having left there, I went down—I stopped and had dinner before I came back.

Q. Then you didn't get on the east side of the campus, you did come back on the north side?

A. I come back on the east side, but I didn't get out of the car. I drove by—he let me out at the corner. I walked down to get my car, spent some time talking with my newspaper associate friend, started back to the campus, stopped and got dinner. So it must have been 11:00 or later when I got back on the campus.

Q. Now the only conversation you had with General Walker, I believe you asked him—did you say to him, "I hear you led a charge?"

A. Or "I understand you led a charge." I understand you led a charge.

Q. What was his reply?

A. There was no reply.

Q. You say you have known General Walker for some time?

[fol. 516] A. I had met General Walker a few months previously when he came to Washington to testify.

Q. Did you consider General Walker a public figure?

A. Yes, sir, I considered him a public figure.

Q. Did you consider him a national figure?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I assume at the time that you were down there you went down there to write a story, did you not?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you did write a story?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you carry that story under a byline?

A. Yes, sir, I did, or my office did. I have nothing to do with that.

Q. I mean—what does it mean when you have got your "by somebody," does that mean they wrote the story?

A. It means they generally wrote the story. There might be some changes or additions but—

Q. In other words the story, if they say it is "By Cecil Holland," the story is principally by Cecil Holland, but they might add a few things?

A. They might add something, yes.

Q. They don't change the context, or do they?

A. Well, I don't quite understand.

Q. I am trying to find out what it means when you have [fol. 517] got a byline in a newspaper.

A. Well, the context on a matter of this kind is mostly descriptive and things of that kind.

Q. Well, who would have given the description to the newspaper, if it was carried under your byline, before the story was written?

A. Basically what I gave them would be it.

Q. I hand you here, sir, what purports to be a photostatic copy of Evening Star, and over on the right-hand side under the headline, "Troops Fire Over Oxford Mob After Quelling Campus Riot, Meredith Registered, Two Die, Scores Hurt, Bulletin," and then, "By Cecil Holland".

Now did you write the story as appears in this paper?

A. I wrote a large—most of the story. Some inserts I did not write.

Q. Would you say for the most part the story that appears under your byline in the Evening Star on the date October 1st, 1962, was matters that you reported to your newspaper?

A. Yes.

Q. Now you were in no way connected with the Associated Press, were you?

A. I was working alone.

Q. You were an employee of the Evening Star?

[fol. 518] A. Yes.

Q. You had no connection whatsoever with the Associated Press? Personal?

A. You mean personal connection?

Q. Personal.

A. Personal, that's right.

Q. And this story that you have written here, was that written based on the Associated Press report, or what you saw and observed?

A. I saw no Associated Press report.

Q. Did you see any Associated Press report before you wrote this story?

A. No. You mean actual copy or something?

Q. Well, any newspaper reports or anything?

A. No, I was told about some.

Q. Did you use any Associated Press report in writing the story you wrote under your byline on October 1st?

A. Not personally, no.

Mr. Andress: Judge, I can hardly see the witness with Mr. Gooch standing there. Perhaps it would be easier if he took his seat.

The Court: Well, Counsel, I permit Counsel to stand up here when they are asking witnesses about an exhibit. Go ahead, Mr. Gooch.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Do you identify this paper as being a photostatic [fol. 519] copy of the edition of the Evening Star of October 1, 1962?

A. I do.

Q. You identify the byline of Cecil Holland?

A. I do.

Q. Would you say that that story was written in the main by yourself on information you furnished the Star?

A. Information I furnished the Star, yes.

Q. And—

A. It was sent by telegraph. Let me—may I state—pardon me. I was thinking of an earlier edition. A lot of this was telephoned.

Q. Telephoned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, but at the time you wrote the story you had neither seen nor talked to the Associated Press reporter?

A. The only qualification I would say I might have spoken, said hello to one that, if I had seen him, that came from Washington. But not any discussion.

Q. Did you get any information on which you wrote this story from any Associated Press reporter?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any news releases by Associated Press reporters before you wrote this story?

[fol. 520] A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We would like to offer in evidence, if the Court please, this Defendant's Exhibit 2, I believe it would be and I would like permission to read it to the jury.

The Court: Have you seen it?

Mr. Watts: No, sir, I haven't seen it. Mind if I ask the witness a qualifying question?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: I notice something in here about an incident that occurred on the Oxford square the next day. Did you see General Walker on that square?

A. I saw him off the square one time.

(Conference at the bench.)

Mr. Watts: Do I understand, Mr. Holland, you did not see Walker on the square?

A. If I may answer.

Mr. Watts: Sure.

A. I saw him when he came down to the Mansion House restaurant and tried to get in.

Mr. Watts: That was the following day?

A. Yes, sir, this is the following day. This new lead is based on what happened in the square that day.

Mr. Watts: The next day?

A. The next day.

[fol. 521] Mr. Watts: And how long did you see Walker at the Mansion House restaurant?

A. Well, he came up and tried to get in. The door was locked. He turned and left and that was the last I saw of him.

Mr. Watts: That is the extent of your contact with him the following day?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, I object to any— Well do you have any comment in here about Walker being on this square that was not acquired from your seeing him on the square?

A. No, other than what I saw there.

Mr. Watts: And what you saw was at the Mansion House restaurant at least a block and a half from the square?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor, please, except where it has the comment about Walker being on the square, it obviously came from somewhere else.

[fol. 522] The Court: That may be a matter of cross examination. I will permit Mr. Gooch to go ahead and ask additional qualifying questions.

Mr. Watts: Excuse me. Might I finish looking at the article, please?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. What I am specifically asking you now, Mr. Holland, and the things that are interesting to me in connection with this question, is not what happened on Monday morning, October the 1st. I am confining the matter now to the matters reported in this article as happening on the campus of Ole Miss between 8:00 o'clock, p.m., on September the 30th, 1962, and, say, 12:00 o'clock, midnight.

Now in connection with that, does this article that you have written for the Evening Star represent accurately your portrayal of the things that you saw and observed there on the campus of Ole Miss that night?

A. Well, sir, I haven't read the article. I don't know whether I have read it since I dictated it and if you would be specific and ask me points, because I—my office might well have inserted some material in the story.

Q. Might have. I just was wondering because it was under your byline.

A. Well, that is not unusual.

Mr. Andress: Your Honor, the story under his byline is about what happened the following day. The story that's [fol. 523] in here about what happened on the campus is on the byline of one Tom Joyce and we ask that the Court look at that.

The Court: I'm going to wait until Mr. Gooch finishes attempting to qualify the witness.

Mr. Andress: All right, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Where is Tom Joyce?

Mr. Watts: Down at the bottom where it's underlined in red.

Mr. Andress: The story about what happened on the campus is the Tom Joyce story. This is the Oxford mob in the City of Oxford the following day.

Mr. Gooch: You haven't read this then, Brother?

Mr. Andress: I read it pretty good.

Mr. Watts: I move to strike the family relationship.

Mr. Gooch: I want to offer in evidence the story that this gentleman wrote who says he wrote concerning the matters that happened on the campus at Oxford, Mississippi, between 8:00 p.m., and 12:00 midnight, on September 30th, 1962.

Mr. Watts: To which we have no objection to anything in there that occurred the night of September the 30th.

The Court: All right, I will admit that part of it.

[fol. 524] That's Defendant's Exhibit 2, Mr. Nuss.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, on second thought, I will object to the article because that's not—something this man has written is proper for cross examination.

Now a newspaper article per se is hearsay and I think it is grossly improper to just—we all know how newspaper articles, the problems we have—and I think in cross examination of a witness, you can ask a man if he said certain things but laying a newspaper article before a jury with all the other things that are in there is grossly improper and I must object to it.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Let me get down to now where we—I am reading now from the Defendant's Exhibit 2.

Mr. Andress: Judge, we are going to object to his reading from it until it has actually been proven up and introduced.

The Court: It's been admitted, Counsel. I just got through admitting it.

Mr. Andress: Oh, you did admit it?

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Gooch: I would like to finish this in one time.

[fol. 525] The Court: You don't think you will have time?

Mr. Gooch: No, sir, it's quite lengthy.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 2:00 o'clock. Keep your seats in the courtroom, please, until after the jury retires.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 2, was marked for identification.)

(Thereupon, at 11:53, a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock, p.m., of the same day.)

(2:00 o'clock, p.m.)

The Court: All right, Mr. Gooch.

Mr. Gooch: I am waiting for the witness.

CECIL HOLLAND, resumed his testimony on cross examination as follows:

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Holland, for continuity, I believe that just before the noon recess, I had asked you if you reported to your newspaper on October 1st, 1962, your version of the events that had occurred on the campus of Ole Miss between, we'll say, 8:00 o'clock, p.m., and 12:00 midnight of September the 30th, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you understand that to be my question?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: And Your Honor had admitted into evidence this article.

The Court: Relating to that period of time.

Mr. Gooch: I will not read what happened on October the 1st. This is just, as I view it, on this witness' story relating to the events on the campus: "The campus rioting—" I am beginning here on Page 6, Mr. Watts.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

[fol. 527] (Sotto voce conference between Counsel.)

EXCERPTS FROM DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 2

Mr. Gooch: "The campus rioting punctuated with gunfire from the rioters' ranks broke out last night as students and many outsiders vented their anger over the entrance of Mr. Meredith to the 114-year-old institution.

"The riot raged throughout the night as students and outsiders repeatedly attacked several hundred Marshals who had brought the Negro student to the campus late in the afternoon.

"Regular Army troops were ordered here from their staging area in Memphis, Tennessee, when the situation rapidly got out of hand under the cover of darkness.

"Mississippi's Lt. Governor, Paul B. Johnson, Jr., visited the campus at the height of the rioting and warned Justice Department Officials, who are here, to expect more violence and possibly bloodshed during the day.

"The Lt. Governor was said to have expressed fears that many from outside Oxford, outside of Oxford, were on the way here to join in battle against integrating the University.

"One of those killed in the campus rioting was a French newspaperman Paul Guihard, representing the London Daily Sketch and a French news agency. After one of the early student forays, he was found dead with a wound in [fol. 528] the back.

"A 23-year-old jukebox repairman, Ray Gunter, of Oxford, also, was fatally shot. He was taken from the University campus to Oxford Hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival.

"A United States Marshal, Graham Same, was critically wounded by a gunshot in the neck and was flown to the hospital at the Memphis Naval Air Station for emergency treatment.

"Another Marshal was wounded in the thigh by rifle fire.

"Newsman Bill Crider of the Memphis staff of the Associated Press was wounded in the back by a burst of birdshot. Several members of the Mississippi State Patrol also were wounded. Mr. Crider's wounds were not serious. He was treated and soon returned to the campus."

I'm omitting a reference to the Friday incident.

Mr. Watts: Right.

Mr. Gooch: "United States Marshals attired in riot jackets and helmet liners earlier had turned back the attackers time after time in a battle they fought with tear gas and smoke bombs.

"The attackers used bricks, iron pipes and, as the night wore on, turned to Molotov cocktail bombs made from soda bottles filled with gasoline.

[fol. 529] "Cars and television trucks were smashed and one was burned as rioters turned on a newspaperman and television cameraman with a widely separated number of attacks.

"Mr. Walker, the man who led the troops ordered by President Eisenhower into Little Rock in 1957, in another desegregation crisis, led a thousand college youths in one charge that fell back a hundred yards from the Marshals. Mr. Walker jumped on the campus Confederate memorial and yelled, "If you can't win, go home, don't stay at the University. But let's not quit. We can win."

"The Marshals, while armed, used only their tear gas bombs and never fired on their attackers.

"A Justice Department spokesman inside the beleagued building said one time they fired warning shots in the air and another time punctured a fire hose being used by the students. They were harassed and under danger from intermittent gunfire which came from a hidden sniper who potted away at the buildings.

"The plight of the Marshals was becoming increasingly serious, as the first military unit arrived on the campus. This was the Oxford contingent of the Mississippi National Guard which had been federalized by the President. Its commander, Capt. Murray Faulkner, a nephew of William [fol. 530] Faulkner, the author, who lived in Oxford, was among those injured. He was struck on the arm with a hurled brick.

"The students and the outsiders borrowed, as one said, a bulldozer and a fire engine and used these in an effort to run down the Marshals and get close enough to hurl bricks. The bricks and timber used to set barricades on the drives leading to the Administration Building were taken from a Science Building under construction close at hand.

"The Marshals, for the most part, stayed close around the building, except for forays to drive the attackers back. They captured 31 prisoners during the night's rioting. Two of these were operating the bull dozer and the fire truck. The truck made two successful runs close to the Marshals before it was stopped amid a cloud of tear gas. The operator, a Justice spokesman said, was not a student.

"Most of the actions and the bitterest fighting took place in front of a tree-spotted park-like area called University Circle. It is adorned with a monument as a memorial to the Confederate dead of the Civil War.

"The whole area is strewn today with debris of the fighting. Empty tear gas cannisters, smashed and burned auto-[fol. 531] mobiles and television trucks, broken bricks, logs and slashed fire hoses.

"The rioters went wild when they learned that Mr. Meredith, who had been denied admission three previous times to the University, had been brought without incident on the campus.

"Obscenity filled the air. The rioters' wrath was directed more at the Marshals than at the Negro student who had been housed under heavy guard in an apartment on the campus to await enrollment today.

"It came after Deputy Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach and other high Department of Justice Officials, who arrived here in an air force plane, conferred with the University Officials, including Chancellor J. D. Williams in the Main Administration Building. With a wild assortment of yells, screams and curses, the rioters moved on the Marshals surrounding the building. 'You blank Negro lover,' and, 'Why don't you bring Kennedy down here,' were some of the cries that filled the air thick with flying brick bats.

"When word filtered into the ranks of the rioters that a Marshal had been shot and seriously wounded, a cheer went up. The rioting broke out in frightening fashion as darkness came.

"In a short while Mississippi State police, several hun- [fol. 532] dred strong were withdrawn from the immediate fighting area and then moved off the campus.

"This left the Marshals and a small contingent of Army Engineers, sent here as a house-keeping unit for the Marshals, to hold off the repeated attacks.

"With State Police gone, the entrances to the University campus were left wide open and anyone who wished could walk down the darkened streets toward the Administration Building. The building was often bathed in drifting smoke from the bombs that had been set off.

"As unexpectedly as the State police roadblocks were called off, they were restored four hours and 45 minutes later just as the Regular Army forces began appearing on the campus.

"This blocked off the University grounds from groups of men who seemed to be heading there in increasing numbers.

"The night's wild disorders came after an ominously quiet weekend here marked only by a few hijinks over Ole Miss's football victory over Kentucky Saturday night at Jackson, the state capital.

"Tensions began building up when reports filtered through the town that some move could be expected soon to bring the Negro student here for registrations.

"Rumors flew thick and fast and the tension grew as [fol. 533] word came that President Kennedy had taken control of the Mississippi National Guard. Angry mutterings were heard then and later about this action.

"The State police, which had disappeared from Oxford late Friday, returned in force early Sunday. They sealed off the campus and would permit no one except students and those living on the campus. Newspapermen who had been given press quarters in the Administration Building were denied admittance.

"Early in the morning the engineers had arrived at Graham Lake, 15 miles from Oxford, and set up a housekeeping camp for the Marshals.

"At 2:00 p.m., amidst all sorts of rumors, the Marshals arrived at the Oxford University Airport. First, a DC-6 and then four two-engined planes had landed and all were filled with Marshals.

"Chief United States Marshal James McShane and his Assistant, Jack Cameron, descended from the four-motored plane and went to a telephone with Mr. McShane clutching a fistful of dimes.

"Soon seven Army trucks drove up. The Marshals, numbering about 70, lined up near the tracks in straggly military fashion. They stood and waited.

"A little later an Air Force jet swooped down and disgorged Mr. Katzenbach and other Justice Department [fol. 534] Officials.

"After more telephoning and conferring the officials and Marshals climbed into troop carriers and three sedans and took off from the airport.

"Midway to the highway they met a Mississippi Highway Patrol car carrying Col. T. B. Birdsong, State Safety Commissioner, and University Chancellor J. D. Williams. Another conference followed and then the caravan moved off. [fol. 535] By this time hundreds had gathered at the airport and lined the road leading into town. Much to everyone's surprise the caravan turned abruptly into one of the University gates without opposition from the State Police guard. Within a few minutes the empty troop carriers came out another gate and went back to the airport. The Marshals quickly surrounded the Administration Building and three hours later Mr. Meredith was brought to Oxford. He landed in a small plane at the airport accompanied by John Dohr of the Justice Department and a Marshal, and was taken without incident through a gathering throng along the road to the University.

The reporters, not allowed in, watched from the entrance several blocks away. They could hear yells and jeers occasionally and got frequent reports from students who came and went.

As dusk came the mood of the crowd within the University grounds and outside began to change.

At the airport Mr. McShane was asked by a young woman in toreador pants for his autograph for her son. A few hours later a mob, first of students and then students and outsiders, was crying for his blood.

About dark reporters suddenly were allowed within the grounds. Television cameraman Gordon Yoder, of Dallas, and his wife, a native of Jackson, Mississippi, were the first [fol. 536] to reach the University circle. Mr. Yoder left his car to take pictures and was set up. As State Police stood by went back to his car where both he and his wife, who was driving, came under attack. Headlights were kicked out, windows smashed and eventually the rioters began rolling the car to overturn it with Mr. and Mrs. Yoder inside. The State Police took them out and away as the mob wrecked the car. Mr. Yoder also lost a camera. At the entrance to the Administration Building a Shreveport television man was manhandled, and an Atlanta, Georgia, reporter was struck by the cry, "Damn Yankee, go home."

Three troop carriers, one with a Negro driver, was the target of some of the rioters. Flaming torches were hurled at the canvas tops of the truck and the Army men were kept busy putting out the fires.

It soon became evident that Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy and the President had sent too little force to cope with the situation and it was too late, for the moment, to get in support and forces.

Edwin O. Guthman, the Justice Department public relations officer who had come to Oxford came out and said in ten minutes he would meet with reporters at a nearby motel for a briefing on what had happened. The briefing still has not been held and the reporters contact with Mr. Guthman inside the Administration Building had been by [fol. 537] telephone.

The students and others kept pushing in on the Marshals standing shoulder to shoulder around the building. There were cries, "tear gas" and the Marshals donned their masks and took out their containers and readied their tear gas guns. Then the order would come, "Hold gas" and a little later, "Secure gas."

All of a sudden the explosion came. The order came and this time a cascade of canisters and tear gas bombs fell amidst the advancing students. A squad of State Police and newsmen were caught in the fumes. Mr. Guthman explained later that Chief Marshal McShane gave the order after a piece of iron pipe had been hurled at a Marshal and left a big dent in his helmet liner.

Inside the building Col. Birdsong was asking the Justice Department official if they wanted the State Police to remain. He was told they did. A Mississippi official recommended that Military troops be called out and at 8:30 p. m. central standard time the order for troops went out. Then the State Police, angered because they were caught in the first tear gas barrage and resenting, it seemed, the presence of the Marshals, began withdrawing. Orders came up to them to keep back from the fighting lines. Conditions rapidly worsened without the presence of the State Police. The attacks on the Marshals grew bolder and more and [fol. 538] more people, including women and girls, were pouring into the fighting area. There were advances and threats, depending upon the volume of tear gas."

Now, Mr. Holland, does that article which I have read concerning the incidents on the campus reflect the report that you made to your paper?

A. In most particulars, yes.

Q. I believe you have stated, and this is repetition, but I wanted to ask it again, if I may, that that report was made without conference or consultation with any AP newsman, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct.

Q. You had not—do you know a reporter for the AP by the name of Van Savell?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had you ever met him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had you talked to him prior to the time you wrote that story?

A. If I did, it was just among a group of reporters without knowing.

Q. Did you read or see any AP news report prior to the time you called that story in to your paper?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: That is all.

[fol. 539] Redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Holland, you have talked to AP personnel, including Mr. Leon Pearl of New York, the chief counsel for the Associated Press, haven't you?

A. Since that time?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir, since that time.

Q. When and where was that conversation held?

A. With Mr. Pearl?

Q. Yes.

A. It was in Washington, D. C.

Q. Is Mr. Pearl in the room?

Yes, sir, the gentleman standing there, is that the man?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Roughly when was that conversation held?

A. I just have to guess now.

Q. Well, this year, last year?

A. I think it was last year, I believe.

Q. Now, if I understand, Mr. Holland, this long article that counsel has read has the by-line, "By Cecil Holland, Star Staff Writer". That is yourself.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you answered his question that some of these [fol. 540] statements in the article were reported by you to your company or to your paper; is that right?

A. I didn't quite understand.

Q. You answered, as I understood it, Mr. Gooch's question to you that some of the statements he had read were reported to you by your paper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do I take it, then, some of them were not?

A. Some of the statements in that story were not mine.

Q. Were not your story?

A. Were not mine.

Q. Now, let me ask you particularly about this statement. "Mr. Walker, the man who led the troops ordered by President Eisenhower into Little Rock in 1957 in another desegregation crisis, led 1,000 college students in one charge that fell back 100 yards from the Marshals. Mr. Walker jumped on a campus Confederate monument and yelled, 'If you can't win, go home. Don't stay at the University; let's not quit, we can win.'"

Is that your language?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you report anything even approximating that to your paper?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 541] Q. Did you see General Walker at any time on the Confederate statue?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see him or ever talk to anyone specifically who did see him, that purported to state that Walker led a charge against the U. S. Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, then, do you know what an AP news release is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or a wire service release?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Directing your attention now to the Plaintiff's Exhibit 3-M and we have, as I understand it, if Your Honor please, a stipulation that all of these exhibits—I will ask the reporter to give us the number, one through, as I remember, 9-G are original wire service reports by the Associated Press. Do we not have that stipulation, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: The stipulation was there would not have to be any proof of authenticity but we could still make objections to admissibility.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I understand, but it is admitted, is it not, that these documents I hold in my hand are official wire service reports from the United Press—I mean the [fol. 542] Associated Press, I am sorry, and might I inquire did these come from the New Orleans office or the Fort Worth office?

Mr. Gooch: New Orleans office. That is what you asked for.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, Mr. Holland, you are an experienced newsman, are you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you experienced in the make-up of news articles and reports?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what a teletype wire service release is?

A. Yes.

Q. Directing your attention to the Plaintiff's Exhibit 3-M, and particularly this language right here, starting with, "Walker then said . . ." do you see that language?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will read you this statement that is attributed to your by-line in this Defendant's Exhibit 2.

"Mr. Walker, jumped on a campus Confederate memorial and yelled, 'If you can't win go home. Don't stay at the University but let's not quit; we can win.'"

Now, will you please read that wire service release [fol. 543] there?

A. "Walker then stood on the Confederate monument not far from the Administration Building and addressed his followers 'If you can't win, go home,' he declared. 'Don't stay at the University. But let's not quit; we can win.'"

Q. Now, I will ask you for your expert opinion as a newsman connected with this paper, having read that news release and having read this article under your by-line, will you tell the Court and Jury, please, sir, what was the source of that language Mr. Gooch read to the Jury?

Mr. Gooch: To which we object, being a conclusion on the part of this witness.

Mr. Watts: Let me ask a preliminary—

(Conference at the Bench between the Court and attorney for the Plaintiff.)

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, Mr. Holland—

The Court: I will sustain the objection.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, Mr. Holland, did the Washington Star have any other reporter on the Ole Miss campus that night?

A. No, sir.

Q. Directing your attention to another article here in Mr. Gooch's—rather, the Defendant's Exhibit 2, which is an article here by Relman Morin, Associated Press staff writer.

[fol. 544] Directing your attention to that article which has a headline as you see there, I will ask you if the New York—as you were, if the Washington Evening Star had the Associated Press wire service?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they have at that time any other wire services?

A. Not unless possibly something like a newspaper syndicate, sir, but—

Q. I mean, did they have the United Press?

A. They did not.

Q. And directing your attention further to a statement on page 1 of this Defendant's Exhibit 2, "The rioting in Oxford came after former Major General Edwin Walker had appeared in the square clad in a dark suit and wearing a ten gallon hat, the Associated Press reported."

Is that your language?

A. No. I mean, it is rather obvious I—

Q. Is that same language under your by-line?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you previously related to this Jury a complete and ultimate detail everything you saw on the Ole Miss campus that you could remember on the night of this incident?

A. No, sir, I haven't. I have just sketched generally [fol. 545] what I—

Q. Have you outlined generally, as best you could?

A. Yes, sir, as best I could from my present recollection after this period of time.

Q. And have you outlined as best you recollect everything you knew about General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I think so.

Q. And as to any statement in here about General Walker that you have heard Mr. Gooch read, did you report those to your paper; yes or no?

A. None of those statements I reported.

Q. Now, Mr. Holland, what is the mechanical or technical newspaper procedure that would result in these quotations that you have read and that you have heard, in this particular quotation I just read to you a moment ago which says, "The rioting in Oxford came after former Major General Edwin Walker appeared in the square clad in a dark blue suit and wearing a ten gallon hat, the Associated Press reported."

My question is: What is the mechanical newspaper procedure that would cause an article like that to appear in an article that has the by-line "By Cecil Holland, Star Staff Writer"?

A. Well,—while I was writing the general story and quite often in a case like this I may not have all the in-[fol. 546] formation and other information will be included in the story from the Associated Press. It is done quite frequently.

Q. Now, then, turn, please, sir, to the next page, which is the Plaintiff's Exhibit 4-D and I will ask you to follow this language to which I place my finger and let's compare that language in the Associated Press news release with this language in this Defendant's Exhibit 2 that is presented under your so-called by-line.

"Mr. Walker jumped on the Confederate memorial and yelled 'If you can't win, go home. Don't stay at the University but let's not quit. We can win!'"

Now, will you read that Associated Press news release, please?

A. "Walker then stood on the Confederate monument not far from the Administration Building and addressed his followers: 'If you can't win go home,' he declared. 'Don't stay at the University, but let's not quit; we can win.'"

Q. I will ask you to compare that statement that Mr. Gooch read out of your by-line article with that verbatim quotation from the Associated Press news release, and tell me what, if anything, there may be in the way of difference in those two statements.

A. Well, the first paragraph is somewhat different. One [fol. 547] says—my story says he jumped on the campus Confederate memorial and yelled, and the other says Walker then stood on the Confederate monument not far from the Administration Building and addressed his followers.

Q. All right, sir.

A. The quoted part seems to be identical.

Q. In your final conclusion, did that quoted part in this article come from this?

A. I have no recollection of writing it.

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, we move the Court to strike, and admonish the Jury not to consider this statement in this Defendant's Exhibit 2 which is presented to the Jury since it is shown that this part of the article was not written by this witness.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 548] By Mr. Watts:

Q. One other thing. Mr. Holland, did you have any, have a conference with your personnel back in your office concerning this alleged statement that Walker had led a charge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you relate that, please, to the jury.

Mr. Gooch: I object, if the Court please, to what may have occurred in the confines of his building or with his staff.

The Court: That would be hearsay.

Mr. Watts: All right, I think that myself. . . .

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Holland, when you conferred with Mr. Leon Pearl, the gentleman whom you identified there, did you give him this copy of the newspapers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did he already have it when he talked to you?

A. I don't recall whether he got it or not. He was going to the paper to get some.

Q. I see. And did he ask you what in that article was your language and what wasn't, or do you remember?

A. I don't remember that.

Mr. Watts: I see. That's all.

Mr. Gooch: No further questions.

The Court: I am going to release this witness, if you don't need him.

[fol. 549] Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, we would appreciate his being released.

The Court: All right, you are excused, Mr. Holland.

Mr. Watts: Thank you, Mr. Holland.

Mr. Gooch: Thank you, Mr. Holland.

Mr. Watts: Might I check out with this witness about his . . .

The Court: Surely.

(Sotto voce conference.)

Mr. Watts: I might suggest to the Court that this deposition was, also, taken at Oxford, Mississippi, on March the 12th, 1964. Mr. Gooch and myself being present.

Mr. Gooch: This is Mr. Watt's deposition.

Mr. Watts: Sir, it was my deposition, yes, sir.

ROBERT CARRINGTON, testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name, please?

A. Robert Carrington.

Q. Your residence both on the campus and at home?

A. Byhalia, Mississippi, and Lester Dormitory.

Q. What town in Mississippi?

A. Byhalia.

[fol. 550] Q. Who are your parents?

A. Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Carrington, Jr.

Q. You are a student at Ole Miss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What school?

A. Business.

Q. What class?

A. Junior.

Q. Were you on the campus the night of September 30th, 1962, when the disturbance occurred?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you arrive on the campus?

A. I was here all day.

Q. Did you arrive out in the area called the Oval that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there when tear gas was first fired?

A. Yes.

Q. How long had you been there?

A. I had been there since about 4:00 or 5:00 o'clock.

Q. From just before they fired the tear gas and until I stop you, give us a narrative account of what you saw and what occurred.

A. I didn't understand that. Would you repeat the question.

[fol. 551] Mr. Watts: The question was repeated.

A. That afternoon I saw them when the Marshals came in the campus. I saw them when they were down by the park, the roadside park, I saw them coming in then and I went on up to the Lyceum and I saw them getting off the trucks and surrounding the Lyceum and I stayed there all afternoon until everything occurred. I saw everything.

Q. Did you see the tear gas when it was first fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Describe to us what happened.

A. Well, I was standing behind the crowd and some boys hollered out, "Gas," and I started running back towards the "Y" and they, the students, were all running around just crazy like. They didn't know what was coming off. I saw Marshals start running out towards the crowds and that is when I took off. I left.

Q. Did you come back?

A. Yes, sir, I ran back towards the "Y", I ran behind Fulton Chapel but I came back in a little while.

Q. Were you out in this so-called grove area there pretty much all during that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you?

A. I was over close to the Fine Arts Center and around the "Y".

[fol. 552] Q. That is north and northeast of the grove?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you where you could see what was happening out in the grove?

A. Yes, sir, I could see the Marshals running out there and some of the students throwing things at the Marshals, throwing bricks and things.

Q. Did you ever hear that General Walker had come on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, I heard he was there.

Q. Between the time of the first tear gas being fired and the time you heard that Walker was on the campus, was there anything approximating an organized charge of a large number of people with a leader in front of them—

Mr. Gooch: Object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

A. No, sir.

Mr. Watts: I think the next is just argument of Counsel there and a similar question. Now the second question on Page 7.

Q. After you heard Walker was on the campus, tell what did occur out here in the Oval in the proximity of the Marshals?

[fol. 553] A. I never did see because I was at that time a good distance from the grove. I just heard scattered reports of people just telling me that people were just running up and hitting the Marshals and everything and I never did see it. I never actually was in the heat of it. I have asthma and I couldn't take that tear gas.

Q. How far were you from where this happened?

A. I was around the Mississippian Office.

Q. Where is that? You are looking now at Exhibit 1, which is a plat of the campus area and this circle in the middle is the grove and here is the YMCA.

Mr. Watts: I think the jury knows where the YMCA is, so. . . .

A. The Mississippian office is right here.

Q. That is the Journalism Building?

A. Yes, sir. I was right in this area right in here.

Mr. Watts: In order to identify that, perhaps I should point it out on the chart. Journalism (pointing).

Q. Where were you when you heard that Walker was on the campus?

A. I was at the Mississippian Office.

Q. Did you stay at the Mississippian Office all the time after that?

A. No, sir, I stayed at the Mississippian Office until about 12:00 o'clock, and then I went to the Fraternity House.

[fol. 554] Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You never did see Walker, did you?

A. No, sir, I never did see him.

Q. Were there lots of bricks and stones lying around the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir, the next morning.

Q. Okay.

Mr. Gooch: That's all.

Mr. Watts: Turn over to Page 3, the deposition of Duncan McFarlane.

DUNCAN MCFARLANE, testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name, please?
A. Duncan McFarlane.
Q. Your residence both on the campus and at home?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is it, where do you live?
A. On the campus on Odom Dormitory, B-10.
Q. And your home address?
A. Natchez, Mississippi.
Q. What street?
[fol. 555] A. 1803 Wheeler Drive.
Q. And your parents?
A. A. D. McFarlane.
Q. Were you a student at Ole Miss in September of 1962?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What school?
A. In the school of business and commerce.
Q. What class?
A. I was a Sophomore.
Q. Were you present the night the disturbance took place on September 30, 1962?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Outline to us in narrative form what you saw and what occurred.
A. I arrived on the campus about 8:00 o'clock, maybe a quarter until, and there was tear gas being fired at that time.

I was in the grove from about 8:00 until approximately 1:00, maybe 2:00 o'clock, and the students were throwing bricks and bottles at the Marshals and they were shooting tear gas back.

There would be little groups of maybe three or four people that would charge up there and throw bricks and retreat and then they would fire tear gas and then an[fol. 556] other little group would go up there and throw theirs.

Then they burned a couple of cars and there was some shooting going on but I couldn't find out where it was coming from, but there were guns being fired at the time. This just went on a pretty good while, all night, in fact, until I left about 1:00.

Q. Did you hear that General Walker was on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Did you actually see him and get around him?

A. He was pointed out to me from a distance but I did not hear him talk.

Q. Did you ever at any time after you heard that Walker was on the campus, observe an organized charge of a large number of people toward the Marshals all at one time?

Mr. Andress: Did such an incident occur?

Mr. Gooch: I think you read the question.

Mr. Watts: Yes, that's the rest of my question.

Q. Did such an incident occur?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did anything occur other than what you have outlined in the general narrative that you have told us involving a large number of people in the crowd?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in the grove all during the period of time from the time you heard that Walker was on the campus [fol. 557] for, we'll say, an hour after that?

A. Yes, sir, I was.

Q. If an organized charge of as many as 500 or one thousand people had occurred, would you have seen it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you give us roughly the distance from the Confederate statue to the Lyceum Building?

A. I would say roughly it was a little over 100 yards.

Q. Were you ever during the period that you heard Walker had come on the campus for an hour thereafter out of the so-called grove area?

A. No, sir.

Q. Outline to us during this period of time just what you saw and what occurred.

A. Well, when I heard he was there, somebody said he was there, a group of people down at this statue where he was, it was where he was I guess because a bunch of people went down there, and I was back up front near the flagpole, that is where I stayed most of the time around the flagpole.

Q. Right at that point, when you heard he was there and a group of people went down toward the monument, did all of the people that were up in the grove go down there or just part of them?

A. No, I would say part of them went down there because there was still a good number of people around the flagpole.

[fol. 558] Q. What activity was taking place up near the flagpole and in that area while this other group went down to the monument?

A. These little groups were still throwing.

Q. Was there anything organized about the operation?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any change in the activities that occurred up next to the Marshal's after he made his speech at the monument that you have outlined?

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion.

The Court: It's good. Sustained.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

Q. Between the time you first heard that Walker was on the campus and the time that you saw the people going down there to the monument, was there any organized charge against the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Where is that coming from?

Mr. Watts: Bottom of Page 6, top of Page 7.
Mr. Gooch: Oh, I see.

Q. Describe for us just what happened in terms of this activity in the grove area between the time you heard Walker was on the campus and when you saw all the people going down to the monument.

[fol. 559] A. Well, part of the people left and went back down there and others stayed at the front and continued throwing bricks and the Marshals continued to shoot tear gas back and the people would just run up and throw and fall back to the flagpole or further back and then after the tear gas would clear out of the way, they would go back up again and throw.

Q. Assuming hypothetically that when Walker arrived on the campus,—

Mr. Watts: Let me look at that. That might be . . . .

Q. Assuming hypothetically that when Walker arrived on the campus, two leaders of the mob met him, one waving a big Confederate flag, that the two men took him by the arms, positioned themselves in front of 1,000 people and marched on the Marshals, were you in a position to where you would have seen that, had it happened?

Mr. Gooch: We object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

The Court: Sustained, Counsel. We are not going into hypothets, Counsel.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir. The rest of that, I believe, still refers to that one question, so that will be all at this time.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You never did see General Walker, did you?

[fol. 560] A. Yes, sir, he was pointed out from a distance. He was with three or four people and people were around him and he was pointed out to me.

Q. Did you consider him a public figure?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. There was a considerable number of rocks, stones, and bottles, and so forth, thrown at the Marshals?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You say little groups or groups would go up and throw their missiles and then retreat when they would fire gas?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did that go on all the time or continuously?
A. Yes, sir, it did.
Q. Did you throw any of those rocks, bricks and bottles?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Okay.

Mr. Gooch: Well, to get continuity:

Q. How many was in your group when you threw them?
A. Two or three.
Q. Just two or three of you; there was never more than two or three that would go up at any one time?
A. Possibly four or five, maybe six.
Q. Not over six?
A. No, sir.
[fol. 561] Q. Would ever go at one time?
A. No, sir.
Q. You said groups of two, three, four or maybe six would run up and give—throw their missiles or whatever they had in their hands at the Marshals and then come back?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where would they come back to, the main crowd?
A. Right past the flagpole, yes, sir.
Q. Now where was the main crowd that was watching all of this?
A. There was about 20 or 30 people behind the flagpole.
Q. You mean east of the flagpole?
A. Well, just a straight line parallel to the Lyceum Building behind the flagpole, they were grouped around there.

Q. How many were in that group?

A. 300, 400 or 500 students.

Q. And the group that would go up and throw their missiles would come out of that group, run up and throw their missiles and then come back to that group?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then some more of that group would go up and throw their missiles and come back, is that the way they did it?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 562] Q. But they were almost a solid line north and south just about where the flagpole was, is that right?

A. Not a solid line. They were just mingling around.

Q. About 400 or 500 people were in that group?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from that group came these missile throwers, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you getting those rocks and stones and bricks?

A. I heard that the bricks were coming from the new Science Building they were building back behind the statue back down there.

Q. Where did you get yours?

A. Off the ground, the people were bringing them up in a wheelbarrow and, I think, they were just dumping them around the flagpole.

Q. That is right in where all this group was standing?

A. Guess—by the flagpole, most of the people were back behind the flagpole.

Q. When you reached to get your missiles, where would you get them?

A. Off the ground, those that had been thrown and those that had been left around the flagpole.

Q. That had been dumped right in this group of several [fol. 563] hundred that were gathered around the flagpole, is that right?

A. No, they were dumped up in front of them.

Q. They came up in front of the group that was standing, and those that wished to would come out of that group, pick up their bricks and rocks and go throw them, be fired at and retreat back to get some bricks, is that the way it went?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: That's all.

Mr. Watts: Robert Lee Watkins is next.

[fol. 564] Mr. Watts: All right, on page 3, by Mr. Watts.

Q. State your name, please.

A. Robert Lee Watkins.

Q. Your address at school and home?

A. Labuve 83, University of Mississippi, and 1110 North Spring Street, Waynesboro, Mississippi.

Q. In what school are you enrolled?

A. Business school.

Q. What class?

A. I am a junior.

Q. Were you a student in September of 1962?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Were you present on the campus the night of September 30, 1962, when the incident of that date occurred?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What time did you arrive on the campus that evening?

A. Approximately 4:00 o'clock or 4:30.

Q. Where did you go?

A. First I went back to my room and unpacked my clothes. I had been home for the week-end, then I went back up to the Lyceum Building where there was a large crowd gathered.

Q. Orienting you for the purpose of this deposition, [fol. 565] we have Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, which is a scaled plan of the University and shows the Confederate monument on the east end of an installation called the Circle, it shows the Lyceum Building on the west end, and shows the YMCA up here on the northeast, and as you give your answers, if you can, remember the compass directions and it will help us to follow them later.

Now, when you first arrived in the area of the Circle where did you go?

A. I first went to the north end of the Lyceum Building, between the Lyceum Building and the Math Building, which is Peabody.

Q. What did you see?

A. At the time there were a lot of Marshals gathered around the Lyceum and lined around the Lyceum Building and a lot of students were gathered there.

Q. In your own words, give us a narrative account of what you saw, heard, and what occurred?

A. You mean at this time?

Q. From that time, and just carry it right on through.

A. That afternoon it started out and it was just, I don't know, it must have been 200 students there, and as time went on more students gathered there and things got rough, and a little later on some of the Marshals fired [fol. 566] the tear gas and everybody ran back then, ran back in the Grove, a lot of students did. They just spread out and a lot of people started throwing bricks and bottles and things at the Marshals and more tear gas was fired. This kept on going and went right until, I guess, I don't know what time in the morning. During this time we were up in the Grove but I was there most of the time. I only left a couple of times and went back over to the dorm and came back and all during the time I saw these students throwing things.

Q. Just tell us what the activity was that was directed by the students against the Marshals. Son, do you know what a charge is?

A. Yes, sir. Just during the course of the riots there were just students, I don't guess I ever saw any organized, I know I never saw any organized charge during the course of the riot. There would just be several students, maybe three or four at a time, that would charge in and throw bricks at the Marshals and they would go back and they would shoot tear gas and it would clear up and then some more of the students would come in but there was nothing organized that I saw. If anything had been organized, I don't think the Marshals would have stood too much of a chance of defeating us on the University at that time.

[fol. 567] Mr. Gooch: To which we object to the last part of the answer as an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Did you hear or learn that General Walker was on the campus at any time?

A. Yes, sir, I heard a little later on, it was later on, not that afternoon but that night, I heard that he was there.

Q. What did you do when you heard he was there?

A. I was standing up close to the statue as you come off University Avenue when you first come to the Circle there that circles by the Lyceum Building, and the boy that was standing with me, we were standing over between the statue and the YMCA Building and they said that General Walker was there at the statue. We walked over there and I think he was standing there talking to some of the students or something, some of them were talking to him, and somebody told him to get up and give us a speech. He stepped up beside the statue, I don't think he stepped upon it, he stepped up right beside the statue and maybe up on the side of it or something and just talked to the students.

Q. Now, prior to the time he stepped on the statue and started to make a speech, were you in a position where [fol. 568] you could see what was occurring out there in the Circle area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to the time he stepped upon the statue, was there any charge against the Marshals that involved a large number of people?

• • •

Mr. Gooch: To which we object as leading, suggestive, and calling for a conclusion and an opinion of the witness.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Now, then, exactly where, with respect to the monument, was Walker when you first got over there?

A. When I first got there, he was standing down beside the statue, if I remember right, he was standing down kind of on the east side of it and I was standing on that side, I guess it would be the north side of the statue instead of the east.

Q. What attracted your attention to the fact that he was there?

A. Somebody told me that that was General Walker. I didn't know him.

Q. How far from the statue on the north side were you?

[fol. 569] A. I guess at the time they said General Walker was up there by the statue, I guess I must have been about, to the best of my knowledge, about twenty or thirty yards away.

Q. In which direction from the statue?

A. In the north direction of the statue toward the YMCA Building.

Q. Now, looking at the chart, can you see that the YMCA is north of the statue and slightly to the west?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that position could you see what was going on in the Circle?

A. Yes, I could.

Q. How long had you been in that area there that you have outlined just now?

A. I don't know, I had been in the Grove there inside the Circle, I had been in and out of there the whole time, all the afternoon and a part of the night. And I was standing there, I guess, for five minutes.

Q. From the time the first tear gas was fired until you heard that Walker was coming on the campus, had you ever left the area so far that you could not see what was happening in the Circle?

A. No, sir.

Q. And up to that time had there been any charge at [fol. 570] all?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as an opinion and conclusion.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Gooch: And ask that the Jury be instructed not to consider it.

The Court: The Jury is instructed not to consider the last question and answer.

Q. Tell us what you saw and what occurred when you went over to see Walker?

A. I walked up there and I noticed he stepped up, I believe he stepped up on the side of the statue, and he was talking to the students and only two things stuck in my mind that he said in the course of his speech. I think he said at one time that this was not the correct route to Cuba, I remember that statement. He said there should be no violence used out here, that the students shouldn't use violence, that this was not the proper course to end this riot, and to better our relations here on this campus and everything. I thought he was more or less trying—

Mr. Gooch: I object to that, if the Court please, as a [fol. 571] conclusion.

The Court: You are talking about the balance of the answer?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: I wish Your Honor would look at the last sentence. Is that admissible?

The Court: Yes, sir.

• • •

A. . . . I walked off, I got a little mad with him.

Q. Was there any general reaction then of the crowd at any time during this speech as to whether they were pleased or displeased with what he was saying?

• • •

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion of the witness.

The Court: I think I will permit that.

Mr. Gooch: All right.

A. It seemed to me that most of the students were displeased. That was the general opinion that I got. I know several of the students standing around, a lot of them around me, began walking off from him.

Q. Did he at any time during this speech encourage or suggest to the students that they take violent action of any kind against the Marshals?

[fol. 572] Mr. Gooch: I object to that, leading and suggestive.

The Court: Overruled.

A. No, sir, he didn't. He didn't suggest it at any time, as a matter of fact, it seemed to me and a lot of the other students that he was trying to put down the riot. He said that violence shouldn't be used out here.

Q. Where did you go, you said you walked off, to what area did you go then?

A. I just walked off toward the YMCA Building and stood over there beside the street.

Q. Were you in a position where you could still see Walker and see what the crowd was doing?

A. Yes, sir, I was, I guess, fifty yards off from him or so and I was standing in the Grove, in the edge of the Grove beside the street across from the YMCA Building.

Q. By the Grove, you mean the Circle, where it says the Circle on this plat?

A. Yes, sir, inside the Circle.

Q. What happened after the speech that Walker was making at the monument?

A. Nothing.

[fol. 573] Q. That is after you went back toward the YMCA and from that position, what did you see happening?

A. Just the same thing that had been doing—been going on all the time, the crowd just broke up it seemed to me and people just went on doing what they had been before. While he was speaking a lot of people were still running around throwing bricks and everything, everybody didn't come in to hear him speak. A lot of people didn't know it, I don't guess I would have known he was up there speaking if someone hadn't told me.

Q. While he was speaking, were there still people down here in contact with the Marshals or in the general area where the Marshals were?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see Walker again after the speech on the monument?

A. No, sir, I don't think I did.

Q. After the speech on the monument, were you in a position where you could and would have observed had there been an organized large scale charge of as many as five hundred or one thousand people?

Mr. Gooch: To which we object, leading and suggestive.

The Court: I don't think I will permit that, counsel.

[fol. 574] Mr. Watts: All right.

The Court: At this point.

Mr. Watts: That is all.

Mr. Gooch: Go to page 19, please, Mr. Andress, the last question.

• • •

Q. Did you see Rev. Duncan Gray or anybody else trying to talk to General Walker during the time that he was about to make his speech or was making his speech?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did you hear General Walker telling the students that Col. Birdsong was the one who had sold them out?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear that.

Q. Did he make any statement to that effect?

A. No, sir, I don't think he did. Not while I was there, he didn't.

Q. How long was General Walker's speech?

A. I don't have any idea how long he spoke. I was there, I guess, five or ten minutes, something like that.

Q. Were you there when he finished his speech?

A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. You had walked away?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't know what happened to General Walker [fol. 575] after he finished his speech?

A. No, sir.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: Go to page 22, the last question.

Q. Did you hear General Walker allude to the fact that he was ashamed to be an Episcopalian?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear that.

Q. Did you participate in any of the missile throwing?

A. Yes, sir, I did, some of it.

Q. Could you see the Marshals at the time you were throwing at them?

A. Sometimes I could and sometimes I couldn't. The tear gas was so thick sometimes.

Q. Did you throw any before you heard General Walker make his talk?

A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you throw any afterwards?
A. Yes, sir, I did.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: I believe that is all.
Mr. Watts: The deposition of Mr. McRae, page 3.

[fol. 576] Q. State your name, please.
A. Alpheus McRae.
Q. Your address, residence at home and school?
A. I live in Laurel, Mississippi, and I go to school here at the University.
Q. Who are your parents?
A. Mr. and Mrs. A. H. McRae, Sr.
Q. What school are you in?
A. Law school.
Q. What class?
A. Fourth semester.
Q. Were you a student at Ole Miss in September of 1962?
A. Yes, sir, I was.
Q. Were you present the night of the incident that occurred on the campus on September 30, 1962?
A. Yes, sir, I was.
Q. Will you outline to us, please, sir, where you were, what you saw, and what occurred and what you heard?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. From after the time the first tear gas was fired by the Marshals.
A. I was in front of the Peabody Building at the time the first tear gas bomb was shot. We were listening to President Kennedy on the radio, a girl had a small portable [fol. 577] radio and when the first tear gas bomb shot, we all turned around and saw it, and the next thing we knew two hit around where we were standing and we all left from where we were and ran in back—let's see, what is this?

Q. To get oriented, I will point out here this chart, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, which shows the circle with the monument on the east, the Lyceum on the west, the Peabody Building.

A. We ran right back here behind the Fine Arts Center and then we heard a few more tear gas bombs being shot and we came around the Fine Arts Center over by the YMCA over here and went back out to the flagpole and there I met a girl from my hometown who was overcome pretty bad with tear gas and she asked me would I take her back to her sorority house which was down here on Sorority Row and by the time I got back everything was back—around where things were going on, everything was pretty much in a mess and people were just milling around and I met up with a bunch of my friends right around Rick Dormitory which is down from the Circle. We stood around there trying to see what was going on and then we left from there and went across the Grove here to University Avenue because some of the Marshals at that time were coming down this street here that the dormitory is on and we watched from down there and later on that evening we went up here to one of the professor's house who lives over [fol. 578] the railroad track, or he used to live there, to get a drink of water because we couldn't get back to our dormitory, we would have to go right through where all the rioting was going on and so we just tried to stay out of the way of as much of it as we could.

Q. Did you learn that evening that General Walker was on the campus?

A. The first time that I knew General Walker was on the campus was when we came back up University Avenue and saw a big crowd in front of the statue. When we got there I said, "Who is that talking?" I had never seen General Walker and I just knew of him. I had heard of him. Someone said, "It is General Walker." I decided I would go up there and see what he had to say. I was not there at the beginning of his speech but I assumed he had only been speaking for a few minutes. I was there through the rest of his speech.

Q. Tell us the best you can remember what you heard?

A. When I got up there, he was talking about that we had been betrayed, he never would mention the man's name but he said or inferred that it was the head of the Highway Patrol that had betrayed us and had let the Marshals on the campus. I didn't know what kind of stand he was taking because I had known he was at Little Rock during that situation and I said, "Is he with the Government or [fol. 579] what?" I asked why he was there and so they said, "No, he is just here." Then I heard him say that we had a right to protest but that we did not have any right to violence and if any blood was shed, let it be on the hands of the Federal Government and not our hands, and then at that time there were a lot of students that were here—were in front of there, students and people, I don't know who, that booed him.

Q. Did you hear it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. This has been a good while ago.

Q. Yes, just do the best you can.

A. I can't really remember the rest of what he said that night. It was just along those same lines, and then he got down from the little statue there.

Q. Just before he got down did you know a little minister here, Rev. Duncan Gray?

A. Yes, sir, I know him.

Q. Did you see him there?

A. Yes, sir, he was standing on the left of the statue.

Q. To the left, would that be the north toward the YMCA?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 580] Q. Did he get upon the statue?

A. Yes, sir, I saw him try—I don't remember whether he actually got on the statue or not. I remember him trying to get up there and I remember somebody pulling on him and then they lobbed one of those tear gas bombs and they lobbed it real high.

When Walker got down, I turned around and walked back and we were standing over there by an automobile and that thing lobbed right about as far as from me to you from where we were standing so we decided we had better get out of there so we went on back down to the bridge again.

Q. Were you close enough to the monument at the time you saw the minister there to tell or hear, or overhear, any conversation between him and Walker?

A. No, I would be telling a story if I said I did. I didn't hear anything.

Q. Just keep it absolutely accurate as to what you saw and what you heard and nothing else.

What occurred then after the talk on the monument that you saw?

A. I saw General Walker get down as I said, when he got through with his talk, and from his talk I thought he was telling us to calm down, now, that is the impression I got. So, I just turned around, I figured the whole thing was [fol. 581] over and so I got down and turned around and as I said, walked back to the car where I saw three or four people that I knew and I don't know where he went or what he did after that.

Q. Did you see which direction he got down from?

A. You mean he got down from the statue?

Q. Yes.

A. There was another guy with him and the last time I saw him he was standing with the other man that came with him.

Q. About how long was that after his speech that you saw him standing there?

A. A minute or two at the most.

Q. And that is the last time you saw him?

A. Yes, sir.

• • •

Mr. Watts: That is all.

Mr. Gooch: That is all.

[fol. 582] HAROLD JAMES SCHNEIDER, testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name, please?
A. Harold James Schneider.

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute. May we identify this as being another deposition Mr. Watts took in Mississippi?
Mr. Watts: Okay. That is accurate.

Q. What is your residence on the campus and at home?
A. 1341 Leavell A 35, on campus and I live at Laurel, Mississippi.
Q. What is your school?
A. Law.
Q. What class?
A. Second.
Q. Were you on the campus the night of September 30, 1962?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. When the incident occurred?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you in the area of the circle?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you there when tear gas was fired the first time [fol. 583] by the Marshals?
A. I was over by the Fine Arts Center.
Q. Is that north of the circle, I am pointing now to Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1, which is a plat of the University?
A. The Fine Arts is north of the circle.

Mr. Watts: I oriented you again. I will skip that question.

Q. What did you see and what happened then?
A. I ran down by Fulton Chapel and over towards Ricks Dormitory, right in here, and stayed there for a little while. Then I came over and walked down through the grove by this Geology Building, the old building that looks like a tower, and then somebody said General Walker was talking up at this Confederate monument and I went on up there.

Q. What did you see?

A. He had already started talking and I stayed a little while and they shot some tear gas and I ran down University Avenue.

Q. Did you hear any of his speech?

A. Yes, sir, a little bit.

Q. Would you outline to us what you heard him say?

A. All I can remember is, he said something about a peaceful demonstration, that is all I can remember.

Q. Could you tell what the reaction of the crowd was to his speech?

[fol. 584] A. No, sir.

Mr. Watts: The next question I think is probably leading. That's all. Turn then over to the next witness on Page 3, a similar deposition, Henry Edwards.

Henry Edwards, testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is your name, please?

A. Henry Edwards.

Q. Your address at school and at home?

A. Yes, sir. My address is Box 394, Richton, Mississippi.

Q. Who are your parents?

A. Mrs. Henry Edwards.

Q. What dorm are you in at school?

A. Leavell, 824.

Q. Were you on the campus the night of September 30, 1962?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Were you in the area of the circle at the time tear gas was fired first?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. I wish you would tell us what you saw or heard and what happened.

A. You want me to start just before the firing of the [fol. 585] tear gas?

Q. Right.

A. I was standing on the front lines near the front of the Lyceum Building on the curb there and there was a large number of people there and it was just about dark and I can't tell you what caused it or anything and anyway the first tear gas was fired, into the group standing there, it was about 6:30 or quarter to 7:00, I don't know what time it was, whatever time it gets dark, and tear gas was fired into the group there and the group scattered way back into the grove there.

Everybody was scared out of their wits and of course the firing sounded like a large gun going off when it was first fired.

The people moved back and they kept firing tear gas then to scatter everybody out and the group moved way back to Hume Hall and the people began gathering bricks, stones and things up there, people gathered these and started throwing at the Marshals and the Marshals kept firing and the people kept throwing.

Q. All right. Tell us just exactly what your observation of the activities of the crowd was.

A. At what time?

Q. Go on and in natural sequence tell us.

A. There was no organized activity of any kind that I [fol. 586] saw any time during the night. People were just running back at random and gathering stones and anything they could find, rocks and bottles, where people would drop them on the ground, and of course if they could find a rock or a bottle or something, they would gather it up and go up into range of the Marshals and throw it and they kept firing tear gas. It was just the same thing, it was a mad confusion.

Q. Did you ever see General Walker on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. When and where?

A. I saw him near the monument and I would say the time was around quarter of 8:00.

Q. What was he doing?

A. At the time I was about 50 yards from there and I heard someone say, "There is General Walker or here is General Walker," so I moved down towards the monument there.

I got down there and it was a large group, I wouldn't say a large group, but a group of people around him and they were talking and carrying on and everybody was saying, "Lead us, lead us, here is our leader, here is our leader," and "speech, speech, here is our leader, here is our leader," and I stood around for a few moments there and people were still saying, "Here is our leader," and "speech, speech," and things like that.

He acted like he didn't want to give a speech because he [fol. 587] was talking about something else and he got up on the monument and he made his speech.

Q. Do you remember what he said?

A. No, I don't remember very much of it. He made some comment about Cuba. He said, "This is the long way to Cuba," or, "This is the wrong way to Cuba," I don't know which one it was, and the minister started getting up on the monument and I saw an arm and a shoulder reach up and pull him down.

Q. Did you hear any conversation between him and General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, when the minister was getting up on the monument, Walker asked him what was his faith and he said he was an Episcopalian and Walker said, "Well, he was, too, and that made him ashamed of his faith," or that he would denounce knowing him or something or other. He said that the people had a right to protest. He didn't say what to say to protest or anything, he just said they had a right to protest.

Q. Do you remember anything else he said?

A. No, that is about all I can remember.

Q. Did you observe what he did after the speech?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Tell us about it.

A. He dismounted from the monument there and in get[fol. 588] ting back to the sidewalk there a group of people, not rushed him, but gathered around him real close and I couldn't get in that group, it was real tight, and they were talking to him and shaking his hand and things of this nature. I didn't get right up to him, I don't know what was said then. I guess this group around continued talking to him 10, 15 minutes, something of that nature.

Q. There was this conversation with respect to the monument?

A. It was on the side of the monument, I believe it was on the south side of the monument.

Q. Now this chart you are looking at—

Mr. Watts: And we oriented the chart.

Q. When he first got down there, where was he?

A. I believe he was on either the east or the northeast part of the statue there because I was standing on the east to get the advantage of the wind that was blowing in that direction that kept the tear gas off.

He would be on the east or the northeast part of the monument and he dismounted from that same side there and I believe he moved around to the south side of the monument and this tight knit group of people were still around there and they were talking and he was talking.

These people talked to him 10, 15 or 20 minutes, something like that.

[fol. 589] After that the group started moving, not in a hurry, no urgency, by this time the people had had some time to cool off and they had been in a terrible pitch before and they had had some time to cool off and there was no urgency and no fast walking about the group as there had been before.

They moved up the sidewalk and then as they approached the flagpole, they swerved to the left and pushed on and there is a flower bed on the edge of the grove here. They stopped short of the edge of the grove and in the edge of the flower bed.

I remember the green flowers there were growing and blooming at that time. There was no activity of the group, there was no missile hurling and some guy on the front was waving a white flag of truce.

The Marshals recognized that this was something different from what had been happening and they stopped firing. There was no missile hurling on the front of the Lyceum Building and there was no tear gas firing. I can't say about the other side as to what was going on there but on the front there was no tear gas firing and no missile throwing at that time.

Q. Did you observe what Walker did?

A. As we walked up there sometimes he would talk and sometimes not, it was just a slow casual walk up there. He walked up there and stopped and a student, I assume it was [fol. 590] a student, came from behind the Marshals line and stopped in the middle of the street there and he said he had been inside and he had seen this Marshal that was cut on the throat and dying and he asked if a Senior would step forward and represent the group and nobody stepped forward and he said, "Will even a Freshman or a Sophomore step forward and represent the group?"

Some guy stepped forward, I don't know who it was, I don't have any idea, this guy stepped forward and this student pleaded with him to represent the group and to tell them all to quit rioting, that he had seen this Marshal inside that he was dying and what a sight it was with the blood and everything.

This student in the street pleaded to them and the general answer was, "No."

Q. The general answer was, "No," I don't hear too well?

A. Yes, the general answer was, "No," there was no expressed, "No, we won't give up," or anything but the people were just disappointed to see this person.

Q. Where was Walker during this time?

A. He was standing, not exactly on the front, but in the front. You can't say the front because sometimes there were people in front of him and sometimes he would be on the front.

[fol. 591] There was a front line there but you can't say he was leading it. I might have been leading it or anyone else that was on the front there might have been leading it because sometimes he would be ahead and sometimes we would be ahead.

Q. Go ahead.

A. After this the crowd sort of generally consented, "No," that they weren't going to stop fighting now, the group started moving back, just moving back slowly and as the whole group got past the flagpole, moving back towards the monument, some of the group filtered out and went back and started hurling missiles again and the Marshals started firing and the people started throwing, it was the same thing over again.

Q. Was Walker with this group when it went back to throwing missiles?

A. No, he wasn't. He was in the group that continued on toward the monument, and upon the shooting of the tear gas it was getting thick in there again and I stayed with the group a short while but the tear gas was getting thick there so I moved over towards the biology and engineering building in that direction, to get this cool wind that was blowing from that direction and the last time I saw Walker, he was moving towards the monument and in the direction of the monument and the "Y" Building there, in that direction.

[fol. 592] Mr. Watts: That's all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now when you came down to the Lyceum, after you got to your dormitory, how many people would you estimate were around in front of the Lyceum?

A. In front?

Q. Yes, in front of the Lyceum?

A. I would say at least several hundred were in front of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Now was that before dark?

A. Right, before dark.

Q. And as the evening went on and the night came, the crowd did increase tremendously, didn't it?

A. Yes, I believe there was an increase in the crowd.

Q. What was the first evidence you saw of any actual disturbance any place other than people just standing out there in front?

A. Well, there were cigarette butts being flipped on top of the truck that was parked there and there were taunts and jeers and things, "Yankee go home," and things of that nature.

Q. And some profanity?

A. Yes, some. Quite a bit. Were—

Q. Were not pebbles being thrown?

[fol. 593] A. I didn't see any pebbles being thrown. There might have been.

Q. Now were you up near the front when the first tear gas was fired?

A. Yes, I was. I was standing on the front.

Q. What happened then?

A. The group just scattered; everybody was scared and they ran. A lot of them moved way back; some of them just scattered all over. After this first tear gas was shot, there were numerous other tear gas bombs shot off.

Q. The crowd got pretty mad, didn't it?

A. Yes, sir, it did.

Q. They were highly aroused, weren't they?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. And they began to arm themselves with bricks, sticks, stones and anything they could get ahold of?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When they did that, what did they do with them, these sticks and stones and bricks that they had armed themselves with?

A. Well, they threw them at the Marshals who were lined up around the Lyceum Building.

Q. Describe how they threw them at the Marshals.

A. These people would just run up to within throwing range of the line of Marshals and throw them and run back [fol. 594] before the Marshals had a chance to hit them over the head with a billy stick or shoot them with a can of tear gas.

Q. You say General Walker made his speech about 8:00 o'clock?

A. That is right.

Q. Where did you say you were when you first heard that Walker was on campus?

A. I was in a south-southwest direction of the monument where the cool air was blowing in, the fresh air.

Q. Just what was it you heard about Walker?

A. I heard somebody say, "Here is General Walker, here is General Walker."

Q. People were excited about it, were they not?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. Had you heard any of his radio speeches or his television appearances?

A. I had heard something, I had not read it or heard it over the radio, some friend made some comment about Walker was supposed to bring some men or something of that nature.

Q. How many men did you hear he was supposed to bring?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you hear the statement that he had 10,000 coming?

A. There was a large number.

[fol. 595] Q. A large number?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else did you hear Walker say?

A. I have already said that the people had a right to protest, he said that.

Q. Have you told us everything that you heard him say?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. You didn't hear him say about, "You've been sold out"?

A. Oh, yes, he did. Someone said, "Our Governor has sold us out, our Governor has sold us out," and he said, "No, your Governor didn't sell you out. It was Birdsong and the Highway Patrol Department."

Q. Immediately after he completed this speech, I believe you said he got down off the monument and started up the sidewalk towards the Lyceum Building?

A. No, sir.

Q. Towards the flagpole and the YMCA Building?

A. No, I said after he got down from the monument, then this tightly-knitted group of people got around him there and I didn't get up into the group to see what was going on and they stayed there for five, ten, fifteen or twenty minutes or something of that nature.

These people were talking to him and after that, after a period of time, the group started moving toward the Ly-[fol. 596] ceum Building up the sidewalk.

Q. And there was a group around him or with him, is that correct?

A. Well, he could have been with the group.

Q. Well, one or the other. He was with them or they were with him, is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. And they went up, they got almost to the flagpole and then he veered left, you say?

A. To the left.

Q. Then went past the flagpole on the left side, going to the Lyceum Building, that is your statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Walked right on up and got to a flower bed just across the street from the Lyceum Building, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And that happened within five or ten minutes after he finished making his speech?

A. Something like that period of time there.

Q. What became of all this crowd that had been listening to him down there if they didn't go with him?

A. It was not a large crowd to begin with.

Q. How many?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you say there was about 50 or 100 when you got [fol. 597] there and more probably came in?

A. No, I said 50 or 60 and I said more could have come and more could have left.

Q. Did that 50 or 60 go with him?

A. They weren't following him. He wasn't leading any group.

Q. I asked you if they went with him?

A. Yes, they were with him.

Q. Where were you at that time?

A. I was in this crowd.

Q. You were with the crowd. Did you have anything in your hand?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Had you had anything in your hand down there that night?

A. I had rather not answer that.

Q. You won't say whether you had thrown bricks or rocks or sticks or stones or not?

A. No, I won't answer that.

Mr. Gooch: That's all.

Mr. Watts: Now I would like to go back and read some more of the cross examination he left out. It is rather short. Would you turn back to Page 20, please, sir. I think the last question Mr. Gooch read:

"Question: Did you hear the statement that he had [fol. 598] 10,000 coming?

Answer: There was a large number.

Question: A large number?

Answer: Yes, sir."

Q. Were you expecting him to come and bring those men?

A. No, I wasn't.

Q. Why wasn't you if you had heard it?

A. Well, because I am not a follower of General Walker and I have nothing against the man and I never have had anything for him.

Q. You realized, of course, that he is a public figure?

A. To some people.

Q. And he is known through the press and over the radio and over the television, is he not?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. His is a familiar name in the public?

A. It was not so familiar at that time.

Q. It is now?

A. Yes, sir, very familiar now.

Q. When you heard he was down at the monument, you went down there?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was there quite a crowd down there?

A. There was a group of people there, yes.

Q. How many would you say?

[fol. 599] A. I don't know. I was on the front again because I tried to find out what was going on and I was on the front there.

There were 50 or 60, I would say, when I first went up there and some more might have come behind me and some more to my left, I don't know, because I was looking ahead to him, looking toward him.

Q. How close were you to General Walker?

A. At that time I must have been 15 feet from him, or 20 feet.

Q. Did you hear the beginning of his speech?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. How long did he speak?

A. That is hard to say. I would say 10 or 15 minutes.

Q. Just tell us what he said during that 10 or 15 minutes?

A. It has been quite a while, I can't remember exactly what he said. He did talk about Cuba, he said, "This is the long way to Cuba," or "This is the wrong way," the word I could not hear because there was some noise, people milling around and everything.

He said that people had a right to protest and then the minister tried to get up on the monument with him and he asked the minister what faith he was and the minister said he was an Episcopalian and he said, "Well, this makes [fol. 600] me ashamed to know you," or "ashamed of you," or, "I denounce you," or something of that nature.

Q. What had the minister done or said to make him ashamed that he was an Episcopalian?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you hear the minister tell him, "General, you can stop this if you would," or "help us to stop this"?

A. No, I didn't hear that.

Q. Did you hear anything like that at all?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you hear the minister tell him that these people would go home if he asked them to?

A. I could see that the minister was saying something to him. I couldn't tell what was said.

Q. You didn't understand anything that the minister said?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. Didn't you gather that the minister was trying to get General Walker to advise the sudents to quit their demonstrating and go home? Wasn't that your impression?

A. I don't know, you can't tell about ministers.

Q. And you are not much for ministers?

A. Some.

Q. But you do know that General Walker said, "Here is an Episcopalian minister that makes me ashamed to be an [fol. 601] Episcopalian"?

A. Something to that effect, yes.

Q. What happened to the minister then, when he said that?

A. I saw an arm and a shoulder reaching up above the crowd and pulled the minister down.

Q. In other words, when Walker said that somebody reached up and pulled the minister down?

A. I don't know whether they pulled him down when he said that or whether he was just pulled down, I don't remember when he said it.

Q. Do you know what became of the minister?

A. No, I don't.

Q. What else did you hear Walker say?

A. I have already said that the people have a right to protest, he said that.

Q. Did he say, "You have got a right to protest, keep it up"?

A. I didn't hear him say, "keep it up," there.

Q. You didn't hear him say that?

A. I heard him say we had a right to protest. He didn't say protest by any manner. He didn't suggest any manner of protesting.

Q. He just said you have got a right to protest in any manner, is that right?

[fol. 602] A. No.

Q. What did he say about "any manner"?

A. He said that he said these people had a right to protest but he did not advocate any manner of protesting, he didn't say, "Go out and hit them with a brick," or anything of that nature.

Q. Did you hear him say, "I compliment you on the protest you have made," or "I congratulate you on the protest that you are making here tonight"?

A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Would you say he didn't say it or do you say that you just don't remember?

A. I would say I don't remember.

Q. If Walker, prior to making his speech, walked up to the flagpole or in the vicinity of the flagpole and stayed up there for some time and observed what was going on up towards the Lyceum, looking towards the Marshals, did you see that?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Where were you during the five, ten or fifteen minutes before Walker started to make his speech?

A. I was in the south-southwest direction near the biology and engineering department over there in the fresh air.

Q. You didn't see Walker up around the flagpole before [fol. 603] he made his speech?

A. No, I didn't see him up there.

Q. Have you told us everything that you heard him say?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Watts: Now skipping the rest of that, it seems to be repetitious, over further in the cross examination, a question by Mr. Gooch, Page 26. Let's see, I think, didn't he read the last question on Page 25, "Towards the flagpole"? I believe he did, according to my notes here, and he quit after saying, "These people were talking to him and after that, after a period of time, the group started moving towards the Lyceum Building up the sidewalk."

Q. You say that was five or ten minutes after he got down off the monument?

A. Something like that.

Mr. Watts: Page 26, second question.

Q. Something like ten minutes that the group got around him, how big a group was that, would you say?

A. The group that was right around him was just a small number of people, ten or twelve.

Q. As he started towards the flagpole and the Lyceum, other people fell in behind, didn't they?

A. No, the group was not led by any one person, neither was it led by any one group of persons. It was just a [fol. 604] casual walk, there was no hurry, there was no rock throwing at that time, the group just ambled up in this direction.

Q. That is what you said. Now the thing I am asking you is not what kind of walk it was but five or ten minutes after his speech, he started up the sidewalk that led to the flagpole and the Lyceum Building?

A. That is right.

Q. And there was a group around him or with him, is that correct?

A. Well, he could have been with the group.

Q. Well, one or the other. He was with them or they were with him, is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. As they went up, they got almost to the flagpole and then he veered left, you say?

A. To the left.

Mr. Watts: I think he read the rest of that. I believe that's all.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until five minutes of 4:00.

(15-minute recess.)

[fol. 605] Edwin A. Walker, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Q. Yes, after you reorganization at Little Rock?

A. Yes, I used to see you from time to time on Military activities with respect to going and going around through [fol. 612] the states, because we reorganized and extended the command from then just the Little Rock area to several states, to include a portion of—oh, I forget which, but there were several states involved, part of Louisiana, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Q. Did any unusual incident of a semi or Military or semi-Military nature occur while you were Corps Commander at Little Rock?

A. Yes. There was the incident that the Military referred to as Operation Little Rock, and that came about a month, say a month or so—I got up there about the latter part of August and I think this came about about a month later in '57.

It was referred to as Operation Little Rock by the Military Service in the plans and this—there was no planning for it at the time. I went there strictly as District Commander to command the reserve, the Reserve District of Arkansas, and this was the integration requirement on Central High School that began around the 27th of September, or 28th, sometime within a few days of that area.

Q. What was your rank at that time?

A. I believe I was just promoted to Major General with my second star, as I went to this—to Little Rock, because when I came out of Hawaii it is a One Star job to Command [fol. 613] Division Artillery, so I am sure I must have gotten a promotion just about that time.

Q. And when you were first assigned that command did you have any regular troops under your command? That is, regular Army combat type troops?

A. No, in that command you only have the reserves of the state. These are the people in the state that are doing business all over the towns and communities and about their requirements in general, it is two hours at night a week of training at the Armory, and they are strictly businessmen, and everybody in the community that are in the reserves.

And they train two hours a week in the Armory and then they have two weeks training requirement in the summer, usually where the organization gets off and goes to a regular Army post and trains in the field, or whatever its requirement is, depending on what type unit it is.

Q. In connection with your Operation Little Rock, did you have any combat type troops transfered to your command?

A. Well, there was a few regulars, to go back on the other question. My headquarters was set up with about fifteen people that were on permanent duty keeping the headquarters running, fifteen or twenty, say, in our requirement. It took that to keep the staff organization up and [fol. 614] fulfill the requirements to the State people, the reserves.

Now, your question with regard to—

Q. At the time then of the operation at Little Rock were any combat type regular Army units attached to your command?

A. Yes, there were. There was an organization that came from Fort Campbell, Kentucky, part of the 101st Airborne Division.

Q. What was the strength of that unit?

A. Pardon? That unit was finally decided to be 1,000 people.

Q. How long did it remain under your command in Little Rock?

A. I would guess that was—I can't say definitely, but pretty close to the end of the school year. Maybe just after the school year—I believe—I believe certain portions we began to send back earlier than that. We would get 150 or 200 men back, and they were always very anxious to get out and get back, and they were always wanting to get back to their regular training. They didn't like what we were doing, and we were anxious to get them out, the regulars, get them back to their normal job. And so we were getting them out just as much as we could.

It would have been somewhere between, say, April and [fol. 615] the end of the school year. I think there were still a few of the regulars there at graduation.

Q. Were you assigned a mission as commander of those troops?

A. Yes, I got the command by being the senior officer in the state. I was designated as commander when they knew that Federal forces were going to be used in Little Rock. I was designated as commander, then the senior member in the state, actually while the press kept saying I commanded the 101st Division in Fort Campbell, Kentucky, I didn't at all.

I took command of these troops, these troops came under my command as they flew across the state boundary into Arkansas and landed there at Little Rock in the outskirts of town at the—I believe they landed out there at the airport ten or twelve miles from town.

Q. Was this 101st Airborne Division the whole division or just a task force out of the division?

A. Well, in a form it is a task force, because you don't get just 1,000 men from any organization in the Army. It was sort of a made up task force, for what the requirements would be to fit the mission, that particular mission. [fol. 616] Q. While you were performing this mission, was there any violence of any kind that occurred?

A. Well, there was one minor incident, I remember, one very minor incident.

Q. Was there anything that occurred in the nature of a riot or anything like that?

A. No, there was no rioting. There were some antagonism and some people standing and protesting. There was quite a protest at Little Rock, at Central High School, quite a protest.

And I think there could have been violence. In fact, in Washington, when I was—

Q. Just a second. Let's don't get to Washington. Might be here the rest of the day.

Continuing then with the aftermath of that incident, did you have any contact with the Department of the Army after that, after the incident had terminated?

A. You mean the entire military operation?

Q. In simple language and to shorten this, did you try to resign when that was over?

A. Oh, yes, I turned in my resignation before I left Little Rock.

Q. Was it accepted?

A. No, it was refused. It was—I was called in and they—

[fol. 617] Q. Was your tour—excuse me?

A. They wanted me to explain why and I told them why—

Q. No, you don't know why—

A. —and they refused—

Q. I think you understand from the trial this far all you can testify is what went on in your own mind, not someone else's.

Did your tour of duty terminate at Little Rock?

A. Did my term—

Q. Did you terminate that tour of duty in Little Rock and transfer somewhere else?

A. Yes, in '59, I was ordered to, 1959, I was ordered to Germany to command the 24th Infantry Division.

Q. And did you assume that command?

A. I did.

Q. And without getting too much into detail, did you have, while you were on that assignment, did you have some incident or misunderstanding with anybody that resulted in national publicity?

A. In Germany?

Q. In Germany?

A. Yes, I did. After 17 months with the Division—

Q. Just very briefly, what was the general nature of that?

A. Well, I was attacked by the press, stirred it all up [fol. 618] over what was a paper in Europe. It's an English paper, incorporated in Maryland—

Mr. Watts: Just a moment. He wants to—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I move that the answer, that he was attacked by the press, be stricken as not responsive; it's wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case.

The Court: Sustained.

The Witness: Well, can I say I was attacked by a newspaper?

Mr. Watts: No, wait just a minute.

The Witness: Maybe I should have said a newspaper.

Mr. Watts: No, hold on just a minute. You listen to my question, Mr. Witness, and for once in your life, now, I have got command over you.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. So if you will, just try to understand my question and answer it very simply, why, I think we will get along pretty fast.

Did some adverse publicity that caused you to become involved in nation-wide newspapers appear in a newspaper, the Overseas Weekly?

A. Certainly did.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that. Irrelevant and immaterial to any issue.

The Court: What is the materiality, Mr. Watts?

[fol. 619] Mr. Watts: The materiality is, if Your Honor please, about this time there was a, the start of what expanded into a running feud between this witness and the press.

The Court: Yes, but how was the Associated Press involved in that?

Mr. Watts: They were, as would come out later, they gave him a pretty rough time.

The Court: Well, I'm not going to permit it until there is some proof.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir. We will have another look at it before I go back into that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Were you relieved of your command in Germany after a telephone call with some official in the Pentagon?

A. Yes, sir, I was. I was relieved and moved to the higher headquarters up at Heidelberg.

Q. And from there, where did you go?

A. I was in that headquarters about, from April to November, and was assigned in October to the top training in operations in supervisory job of the entire Army in the Pacific, in Hawaii, the Theatre Headquarters in Hawaii.

That assignment was—came in October.

Q. Now was that in the nature of a demotion or promotion?

[fol. 620] A. Well, that was a higher job than I had been in training and supervision of troops because it included all the Army troops in Laos, Vietnam, all the Southern Pacific Area.

Q. After you were relieved as Commanding General of the 24th Infantry Division, were charges of any kind instituted by anyone against you, investigation?

A. None at all.

Q. Were not. Was any investigation held by a military authority?

A. Yes, sir, it was what we call in the service a preliminary investigation but that it—it's an investigation which has to be repeated to even prefer charges.

Q. Was any punishment of any kind imposed upon you?

A. No, there wasn't.

Q. Did any—well, strike that. That may be a little off the target there.

Where did you go from Germany then?

A. From Germany I came back to the United States and had a couple of periods of three weeks' leave and I was due reassignment in the States.

I had had my full tour of duty with the Division, you might say, except for being relieved. I had served longer than the previous 20 commanders that had commanded it, with the Division, before I was relieved.

[fol. 621] And I came back to the States and went to Heidelberg, to the Central Army Headquarters there.

And then that lasted until about—I took a couple of leaves to the United States for three weeks and the second time, why, my orders were—everything was re-arranged so that I was—didn't go back.

Q. Was any action taken by any headquarters, either Department of the Army or European Headquarters, to initiate an investigation of your actions while commanding general of the 24th Division?

A. Oh, yes, that was initiated—I remember the date because it was—my relief was the same day in Germany, I—on April the 17th, that the Bay of Pigs failed.

Q. But in a different year?

A. The same year.

Q. Sir?

A. It was the same year, my relief, '61, April the 17th, was the day the Bay of Pigs failed and that's the same day I was relieved in Germany.

Q. Now then very briefly without getting into the details, what was the basic issue that was involved in this investigation of you that attracted national publicity?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as being irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case.

[fol. 622] (Conference at the bench.)

Mr. Watts: All right, sir. I will be very brief.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Very briefly now and without getting into any politics or philosophy or anything that might keep us here the rest of the week, you just tell the Court and jury very simply what that issue was for which this investigation was initiated.

A. Well, may I ask a question? Does that previous objection hold?

Q. Yes, that previous objection holds. You just tell the Court and jury—

A. Okay. We were involved over the training program of the 24th Infantry Division.

Q. And in simple language, what was the objection to your training program?

A. I considered that all soldiers should know who the enemy was and I thought the enemy was where it is and where everybody refers to it. I was teaching them all I could about that enemy and what I thought they should know about it.

In this type of warfare, why, everybody's got to know it down to the last soldier, even the Lieutenant, because in this type of warfare today, why, everybody may be on his own anywhere and every Lieutenant or every Sergeant may be responsible for the lives of 15 or 20 men, cut off, not seeing anybody for 10 or 15 days, he's got to make his [fol. 623] decisions about whether he would rather be a prisoner like they were in Korea and—I guess—nobody is supposed to be a prisoner, don't think I am advocating that.

But those decisions, when you are cut off 15-20 days under the most dire hardships, why, certainly people would have to make their own decisions.

Q. Now that's enough on that. I think you have covered it. Now let me ask you if that training program of yours was given a name within the Division?

A. Yes, it was referred to and got quite a bit of run across the press here, as the "Pro-blue program."

Q. Pro-blue program?

A. Right.

Q. Now what was the effect of that training program on the 24th Division under your command?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I hate to object—

Mr. Watts: This is very short, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Gooch: I see no materiality about what effect anything had on the 24th Division.

The Court: I will permit it.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right, sir. Go ahead. You are permitted to tell what you observed, the effect of this training program to be on the training of this Division. Keep it short.

[fol. 624] A. I observed the best Division in the United States Army when I got through with them—and I wasn't half through.

Mr. Gooch: I renew my objection.

A. And it raised the morale, it gave the soldiers an objective, as it does young people, and it gave them a purpose for being overseas away from their families with great sacrifices.

Q. How did your church attendance program react?

A. Church went up—attendance went up about five-fold.

Q. What happened to delinquencies?

A. I worked, talked to the Chaplains once a week about—by the hour.

Q. What happened to the delinquencies after you initiated the program?

A. Delinquencies went down. The Division was holding the record in Germany for the delinquents. Had the least record of delinquency.

Q. I believe that's all. Now then were you punished in any way for this program that you had initiated and carried through in your Division?

A. No, but I think everybody—this is all on reflection. I was certainly not punished. There was no position to punish me for—[fol. 625] Q. What action was taken by the Department of the Army or your Superior Headquarters?

To shorten it, did you receive—

A. After an investigation, 900 pages and 267 exhibits, where you sit down in a preliminary investigation and discuss all your psychology and what you think with an investigating officer, who's one promotion above you—

Q. Three-star General?

A. Yeah, three-star.

Q. General Brown?

A. Sir?

Q. General Brown, was it?

A. General Brown.

Q. All right. Did you receive any punishment? Yes or no?

A. No, I did not.

Q. What action did General Brown's investigation result in?

A. Cleared my training program. It had been cleared a month after it was written by the next higher command, the next—the star above me had cleared it within three weeks and told my boys it was the best program in Europe.

Q. And where did you go from there?

A. Well, where did I go from there?

Q. Yes, sir.

[fol. 626] A. Well, this investigation mostly took place in Europe and by this time—this was through the period I was at Heidelberg at the Army Command Headquarters and then I took some leave to the States and was in the United States for these leave periods and then the second leave, I didn't go back. It was all arranged.

And I was due to come home. I was awaiting orders all the time I was at this Army Command Post back to the States: My tour of duty over there was up.

Q. In short and simple language, did you resign?

A. Yes, I resigned.

Q. What's the difference, on the termination of a professional Army Officer's career, between a resignation and a retirement?

A. The difference is, when you retire, that you have available to you and it's—you get all your benefits and your retired pay and all your fringe benefits, like medical, hospital and post exchanges and so forth.

Q. Were you ever—

A. When you resign, why, you cut off all that. That is no more. You have no rights to any retired pay or any fringe benefits, medical or post exchanges or anything.

Q. For your then rank, what were they, roughly, in amount?

A. About $15,000 a year.

[fol. 627] Q. Have you drawn one dime from the Army since your resignation?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. Or from any Governmental source?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. Now since that period of time, have you engaged in activities that have resulted in your name becoming apparent to the American public in various newspapers, magazines and other news media?

A. Yes, several activities.

Q. Have you, since your experience in Germany, had any conflict with reporters connected with the Associated Press?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I believe the issues in this case are limited to the Savell story.

Mr. Watts: I thought General—

Mr. Andress: There is malice, Judge—

(Conference at the bench.)

The Court: Go ahead, Mr. Watts.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. After you resigned from the Army, where did you go?

A. I went to Center Point.

Q. Was that your family home?

A. That's right, where my father lives and my brother.

Q. Live on a ranch?

[fol. 628] A. What we call a small stock farm.

Q. How long did you stay there? Oh, roughly.

A. A month and a half or so until I moved to Dallas—month, maybe.

Q. Where did you go?

A. I moved to Dallas.

Q. And has that been your home since then?

A. Yes, sir, it has.

Q. Now did you have some type of a venture in politics?

A. Yeah. Yes, sir.

Q. You have held no public office?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now did you have an occasion in September of 1962, to go to the State of Mississippi?

A. Did I have a what?

Q. Did you have occasion in the latter part of September of 1962, to go to Mississippi?

A. I went to Mississippi in the latter part of 1962, right, in September.

Q. And prior to that time, had you been to Mississippi, for instance, making speeches or any—

A. Yes, I had been to Mississippi. I made a speech over in Mississippi either in December or January of sixty—well, it would have been December, '61, or January of '62. I can get the date but I don't know—I don't—it was six [fol. 629] or eight months before the September, '62, trip.

Q. Now did you learn from either the press or any other source that along in September, an incident involving the possible use of military force was building up in Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And what parallel was there, if any, between what was developing there and what you had experienced in Little Rock?

A. Well, there was quite a parallel over the use of military forces, was building up. The question became whether there was going to be military forces used just as it was over in Little Rock, whether there was going to be military forces used. And I had set in on the military side of the decision, whether the military forces would be used in Little Rock in September of '57.

[fol. 630] Q. And at that time did you make any type of investigation or study of the Military—the impact upon military forces of this type of duty?

A. Oh, I would say yes, definitely. It wasn't a formal study, but with all the staff meetings and all the contact you had to have in the Military you certainly came out with a position with respect to the whole situation and what you had to understand, the whole constitutional process to be able to tell how any soldiers could operate or would operate.

Q. And did you develop any personal concept as a result of that experience toward the use of Federal troops within the borders of the states, for purposes of this kind?

A. I certainly developed a concept with respect to the use of Military forces in strictly civilian domains and under civilian problems, and what is the civilian traditional method of handling our processes.

Q. Did you have any contact or—strike that.

When did you consider the possibility of personally going to Mississippi? That is with respect to the end of September?

Was it the first, middle or last part of September, or was it the previous month.

A. I am back on the other question. I don't think we [fol. 631] completed it.

Q. That is all right. Let me worry about that.

A. Okay.

Q. You let me worry about that; you answer the question.

A. Say about the 25th or 26th of September of 1962 was the decision, when I made a decision that I would go to Mississippi, but only if Federal troops were used.

Q. And did you, pursuant to that decision, make any public utterance?

A. Yes, through that period I had made some public utterances.

Q. What was the first of these public statements you made? I don't mean the exact time, or just tell us where was it? Or to simplify it, was it in Shreveport or some—was it over the Party Line Station at Shreveport?

A. It could have been. I would have to refresh my memory. There was three or four or five I made a week, and it may have been over Party Line Station. I made one statement over Party Line Station from Shreveport, Louisiana; then from Dallas.

Q. You heard Mr. Gooch's opening statement, the statement that you had sought out the press and insisted on giving numerous statements to the press. Tell the Court [fol. 632] and Jury exactly what occurred?

A. Over the statements?

Q. Yes. Did you seek out the press or did the press seek you out, or both?

A. Sometimes you would find I would ask them if they would want a statement, as I had for months, and months and months, and sometimes they would come to me and ask for a statement, and sometimes neither, and sometimes they would complain, "You don't tell us you want to make a statement, how do we know it?" And sometimes—most of the times they don't print what I say anyway, so you don't know where you stand with the press.

Q. Did you have any personal acquaintances within Mississippi you talked with over the developing situation there?

A. Yes, I had some friends over in Jackson.

Q. Were they people with whom you had had contact during the previous speaking engagements?

A. Yes, sir, people that I had met and that I knew on different trips to Mississippi.

Q. Without getting into too much detail, just tell us what you did in preparation toward making up your mind whether you were going to go to Mississippi or not?

A. Well, all during this period there was much discussion about Mississippi, the sovereignty of the state, the [fol. 633] violation of the Constitution, the Governor's position, and so forth, and my interest extending from Little Rock, even went back further than that. My interest during that month if they—I recall hearing that month that Cuba was very, very hot and serious in the news.

And this was taking most of my interest through this period, this August-September period.

Q. Did you—

A. And we were working on all the information we could get on Cuba. It was obvious in September that there were missiles being placed in Cuba. And it is also obvious, by releases in the press and the headlines that Cuba was getting and the statements that were going back and forth and the reports on Castro, it becomes perfectly obvious, even by the statements of officials in Washington, that Cuba —that there were missiles in place, and supposition that there was, and there wasn't any doubt of it; and that Military forces, foreign forces were moving into Cuba.

Q. Now, did you talk to somebody in Mississippi?

A. At what time, please?

Q. Shortly before September the 30th? To simplify the thing so it won't take too much time, didn't you or not call Dr. Ney Williams, or did he call you?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 634] Q. That is what I am trying to get around to.

A. Yes, I called Dr. Ney Williams several times, probably. Every now and then I call him, maybe once a month, or I might get a couple of calls in a week, just like I call a lot of people.

I called Dr. Ney Williams sometimes three or four times a week, say around the first week of September.

Q. Were you in contact with him one or more times since then, between then and September 30th?

A. Yes, I called him. We were, I believe—say Friday, the 28th.

Q. And what—did you make arrangements of any kind?

A. Yes, we discussed what was going on. Now, we are getting down to the area of—close to the area, say, between the 25th and 30th, right?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. All right. In this area I may have talked to him a day or two before. I can't remember. But it wouldn't have made any difference because the whole conference was about—getting information about what was going on in Mississippi with regard to the situation there, what is happening and what the people in Mississippi think, and what he knows about the Governor's situation and what has been said. And I think I even asked him to subscribe to a [fol. 635] paper, the Jackson Ledger, for me, and I—we made—say the Friday, then, we would have discussed over the telephone conversation, I probably got so interested in what was going on over there, and the statements that were beginning to look like there was definitely going to be used the Military forces, Federal forces, in some form.

Q. Did you approve of the use of Federal forces in some form in Mississippi?

A. Well, it wasn't my position to approve anything, but I was interested in the use of Military forces.

Q. That is what I am talking about. Did you approve or disapprove of the concept of using Federal Military forces in Mississippi?

A. Yes, based on what I think, I don't think the Military forces, and it is pretty hard on moral and they don't like this business in which they are not used for what they are for, and I think it takes more than we have done in this set up to establish the right of the Federal Government to march in with bayonets, either 1,000 or 20,000 troops, Little Rock or Oxford.

Q. Did you make arrangements with Dr. Williams that you might go to Jackson?

A. Yes, sir, in the conversation back and forth it was about what the situation was. I said, "I will probably come over," and hinted to him to find me a place to stay.

[fol. 636] "Probably come over," and talk firsthand with him about it.

Q. Did you go?

A. Of course, at that time I focused on the whole state of Mississippi. I went—

Q. Wait just a minute.

A. I say I went about—well, that would have been Friday we were talking about?

Q. Right.

A. So it would have been Saturday I went over there, on the 29th, to Jackson.

Q. At that time did you have a present intent to go to Oxford?

A. Certainly not.

Q. How did you go?

A. I flew to Jackson in a friend's 'plane.

Q. Would this have been on Saturday, September 29, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Take it from there on and just tell the Court and Jury what happened the rest of the day and that night.

A. The rest of the day and that night, I landed, I guess it is an hour and a half, I have forgotten the time I left Dallas, but a friend had an airplane.

[fol. 637] As I remember, he and I were in it, and we landed in Jackson about, say between 11:00 and 12:00 o'clock on Saturday. This the 29th of September.

And this friend, Dr. Ney Williams, met me at the airplane, and, as I remember, he was by himself with a car, and he took my friend, who owned the plane and myself to lunch.

We sat around the table and talked and I had discussed —he asked me if I wanted to go to the football game that night and I said yes, I would go to the football game with him. And he finally said, "Well, I will put you up, you can stay right here at the house."

I said, "Well, I better stay somewhere else." I didn't want to cause him any trouble. And he said, "No. I want you to stay here at the house."

So the idea was, I would spend the night after the football—this was a 8:00 p. m. football game at night. Ole Miss was playing, I believe it was the University of Kentucky that night. And we went to lunch.

Q. Who was the friend that took you over there?

A. Joe Allred.

Q. All right. After lunch what did you do? Very briefly. You are not into the lawsuit yet.

A. Cafe for lunch, and he, knowing I was going to the football game, he had a couple of tickets, as I remember, [fol. 638] but they were not together, so we stopped at a place or two in town to get the tickets together. I didn't go in. He said he had to straighten out the tickets, and then we on down to a printing company which—where the man—the friend that had the airplane, either Mr. Williams wanted him to take something back to Dallas, I believe it was, or maybe—I didn't pay much attention to it, I didn't go into the printing company, but this pilot picked up something there, and we parted from him there and left him so he could—he was going on back to the airplane. And I went on with Dr. Ney Williams to his home.

Q. Did you meet Louis Leman there?

A. Well, Louis was either there, or I believe he was there, or just arriving, or something, right.

Q. Had you had some kind of previous 'phone call with Louis that brought him there?

A. Yes, he had called me from Mississippi and said that he was over there and we had discussed what the situation was and I said, "Well, if you want to talk to me . . ." I believe there were two telephone calls involved, and finally he found out definitely, I said, "If you want to see me you can come on down to see me at Jackson." He asked me when I was getting in and I probably didn't know the first call and later I did and I told him and he showed up at—said, yeah, he would come on down.

[fol. 639] Q. Now, then—

A. We met at Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. Did you spend the afternoon at the Williams' house?

A. Yes, we spent the afternoon.

Q. And what did you decide then, or what did you do?

A. Well, there were—Dr. Ney had his call coming in and out about the situation and we discussed the situation, what was going on with respect to Mississippi and the possibility of the use of Military forces, and how far they had been committed, or if they had been committed, with respect to the decision to commit them, and what plans had been made for their commitment, and what they knew about it over there.

Q. Did you finally learn troops had been committed or would be?

A. Yes, during that afternoon why it became very obvious that Military forces had been committed.

Q. And what did you do then?

A. To a Military operation.

Q. Did you—

A. Toward Oxford.

Q. The question was: What did you do then?

A. I had some coffee.

Q. After you finished what did you do? I am not trying [fol. 640] to trap you. Did you and Louis Leman go to Oxford?

A. Well, I am not too sure.

Q. What time?

A. Yeah, but that is later. What did we do then? We had a press conference. People were calling about a press conference, and we went to some place called the Sun & Sands Hotel, or motel, I believe. That was about 6:00 o'clock. I gave—I made—I talked to Ney and his wife and we discussed telephone calls that were coming in to him and he got a call from Oxford from somebody, and there was a little excitement over a call that he was getting that somebody thought that Meredith was being moved in that afternoon, and he called a friend, I believe, in the radio station and asked him if he had heard anything. And this sort of thing, as we sat around in the parlor and I had moved my suitcase in to spend the night, and I would say about, say, somewhere between 4:00 and 5:00, that I wasn't going back; that there had been enough definite information on commitment of Military that there was going to be something definitely in the use of Military forces and we, in the meantime the press had called, and we gave them the final answer on the press conference at the Sun & Sands, and we were supposed to be there at 6:00 and Ney went on with his wife to the football game, as I remember, and we told him I wasn't—I wasn't going, and I gave him his [fol. 641] ticket back.

Q. You say you were supposed to be over there at 6:00 o'clock?

A. Sir.

Q. You say you were supposed to be over there at 6:00 o'clock, over where?

A. At the Sun & Sands Motel for the press conference.

Q. Did you show up?

A. Yes, sir. A little late, I think, because the traffic was so heavy and we had to cross a lot of this football traffic.

Q. Did you have a prepared statement for the press conference?

A. As I remember I did have a prepared statement.

Q. You still have a copy of it?

A. Should be in some of the files.

Q. And did you give that statement to the press personnel there at the conference?

A. As I remember, I did, right.

Q. And how long did that conference last?

A. Well, there were sort of two parts to the conference and it didn't last—I would hope or guess or say—over fifteen or twenty minutes, I guess, at the most, getting in and out and away from it.

Q. What were the two parts?

[fol. 642] A. Well, the first, you went into a TV room and there were two, as I remember, legged cameras there, these three-legged TV cameras. I think there was two but it was obvious it was a set-up in all this light, and the set-up is to question you and twist things around as much as you can.

I recognized this. That is why I usually prepare a statement. I prepared a statement and gave it to them. I don't remember, the man may have questioned me a time or two. I may have answered or I may have not, but I know I got mad at him because I didn't like his questions. They were vicious. So I turned around and walked out right in his face, and walked out in the hall and there were six or eight others there.

The TV man was taking over, of course, and I walked out in the hall and got around the other people and let them ask their questions so the press could get a chance and not let the TV take advantage of the newspaper people and the local boys, right?

Q. I don't know. Did you call that press conference, or did the press call it?

A. Well, I actually don't know. I didn't—we talked about a press conference and I have got many friends in Jackson. When you go over to Jackson they always want to talk to me and I have got a lot of friends in the press over there [fol. 643] and Mr.—Dr. Ney talked to a press man. I can't tell you how that got arranged, whether it was on his instigation or out of the house we were in or whether it was that they heard I was there and asked him if I would hold a press conference, or not, it could work either way.

[fol. 644] Q. Where did you go after the press conference?

A. I went to—we went back to Dr. Ney Williams' house.

Q. How long?

A. Well, by this time we were getting through the press conference and had made early in the afternoon a commitment of troops and I had made statements that I would go to Mississippi if there was a commitment of troops.

Q. But the question was, how long did you stay at Williams' house after the press conference?

A. I went over—I went there, oh, I guess we were there half an hour or so getting a last message or whatever Dr. Ney had left for us and telling the maid goodby and thanking her for the coffee and getting our bag back in the car and—

Q. Where did you go?

A. —getting in the car. We started then—

Q. Hold it just a minute.

The Court: Let's go ahead and recess. That seems to be a good stopping point.

Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 9:00 o'clock, in the morning.

Keep your seat in the audience until after the jury passes out.

(Thereupon, at 4:55 o'clock, p.m., an adjournment was [fol. 645] taken until the following day, Thursday, June 11, 1964, at 9:00 o'clock.)

EDWIN A. WALKER, having been previously sworn, testified further as follows:

Direct examination (Continued).

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Your name, please?

A. Edwin A. Walker.

Q. You were on the stand yesterday, weren't you?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. As I remember, we had just about reached the point where you had concluded your news conference and went on from Jackson to Oxford, Mississippi. How did you go?

A. I went in a car with a friend of mine, Louis Leman.

Q. Was he the only one who was with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he drive?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you go?

A. Sir?

Q. Where did you go?

A. We left—we went to—drove up through the campus about, I would say somewhere along about midnight when [fol. 649] we first got into Oxford, and went on to the Mansell Tourist Court, which was about two miles west, or a little northwest of town, where we stayed.

Q. Did you check in?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you check in there?

A. I didn't. Louis Leman checked in for me. I didn't get out of the car.

Q. General, do you have a little touch of artillery ears?

A. Quite a bit, right.

Q. Which is your best ear?

A. Left.

Q. All right. Who did you have register in?

A. Louis Leman got out of the car and went in and registered. I didn't go in.

Q. Did you understand that he was registering you under the name John Waters?

A. I didn't when he went in. When he came out he told me he had registered me under the name John Waters.

Q. What was the purpose of that?

A. Well, I know what his purpose was. I didn't say anything. I knew what his purpose was. He just has to answer all the telephones and just to keep him from being bothered by the press and calls coming in continuously.

[fol. 650] Q. What did you do the next day? First, did anything significant happen that night after you got in?

A. No, I don't remember anything significant. Nothing.

Q. Well, what happened the next day?

A. The next day we got up and went—it was Sunday morning, September 30th, and we drove down to the cafe to the right, further away from town. This cafe—this Mansell Tourist Court was way out about a mile and a half or two miles from town, out in a pretty lonely area.

Q. And did any newsmen show up that morning?

A. Yes, I remember—yes, three newsmen showed up at the door.

Q. At what door?

A. At the door of our apartment.

Q. About what time?

A. I don't remember the exact time. After we got—

Q. I don't ask for the exact time.

A. After we got back from breakfast, I will say.

Q. Relate what happened.

A. Louis went to the door and opened the door and they wanted to see me. I saw the discussion pro and con. He didn't seem to know whether to let them in or not, so I stuck my head out the door and told them I had nothing to say.

Q. Did you arrange to meet the newsmen later?

[fol. 651] A. Not at that time. At that time I had no idea of having a press conference. Later I did.

Q. Go ahead and tell us what happened. Did you go on to town after that?

A. We did some calling and—telephone calls. I was keeping my Dallas home notified about what was going on, and I had gotten word, I believe, the night before when we came in, probably made a call back to Dallas, and I had gotten word that someone had taken my car from my house in Dallas and gone off with it and nobody knew where it was, and they thought it had been stolen, and then in the morning we were discussing the car on the 'phone, and then there was a call, probably, to Jackson; talked to Ney Williams some time during the morning. And during that time there were calls that went out of that tourist court, trying to catch Sheriff Ford and see when he would be in. And there was a call with regard to the location of Judge Moore, I believe. I was trying to find him. I had heard he was in Oxford up from Jackson. Judge Russell Moore, whom I had heard represented Gov. Barnett—Gov. Barnett.

Q. All right, sir. Where did you go then from the tourist court?

A. We went to—we went to Oxford and I can't remember the exact sequence, but at one time we were on the campus again, just driving through it in the daylight; we had driven [fol. 652] through it in the dark, just not stopping, didn't see anything but what you could see at night, on a very quiet campus, and everybody was away for the week-end, and then I am bringing this up because I don't remember the exact time but I know we drove back through the campus just looking at it, a big beautiful campus. I had never seen it before.

Q. Did you go to the downtown area?

A. Yes, I went to Oxford and at that time—sometime during the morning stopped in and talked to Sheriff Ford.

Q. All right.

A. I believe—I believe I said before at one place that I stopped in that night when we came from Oxford, but I am not sure of the time. It seems to me it was this—I know, now, it was this morning.

Q. Do you remember just very generally what the visit was between yourself and Sheriff Ford?

Mr. Gooch: To which we object.

A. Yes.

The Court: Do not testify what Mr. Ford said. That would be hearsay.

[fol. 653] Mr. Watts: Do I understand he can say what he said before?

The Court: Yes.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right, sir, tell, relate to the jury, please, what you told Sheriff Ford.

A. I told Sheriff Ford that I had gotten in from Oxford and I let him know where I was staying and told him I was out at the Mansell Courts, and told him that I hadn't come up to Oxford for any violence, that I was very interested in what was going on, and to see for myself what was happening in Oxford and that I would be happy to assist him in any way I could, if he wanted, if there was anything he wanted, I would be happy to help, and that I would be at the Mansell Hotel.

Q. All right. Now then how long did that conference last?

A. Oh, I would say it last 15 or 20 minutes. He was interrupted a time or two by a telephone.

Q. And where did you go from there?

A. Now, this could have been the time we just drove back to the campus and around it and in, and it could have been before this.

But basically, there wasn't anything to do in particular except go have lunch.

Q. Well, it's relatively immaterial, but just carry this [fol. 654] sequence of events on from then.

A. We went to the Mansion House Cafe for lunch.

Q. Now, do you remember—to orient everybody's thinking, where was this cafe from the courthouse?

A. Well, the courthouse is—the whole City of Oxford, 5,236 people, something like that, is a typical—like many of our cities, where it's got a beautiful big old white, colonial courthouse in the center of the square and most of the town is just a block and a half, the key part of the city, the business area is just a block and a half off the courthouse square, with the four streets running center off of each end of the building on each corner of the ends, and off the center street.

And a block and a half, I believe it's the west side, is the, down the street, in the first block, about two-thirds of the way down, is the Mansell—is the Mansion House Cafe, Mansion Cafe. It's just a normal, just a cafe, that's all.

Q. Now, I don't believe you are oriented. As a matter of fact, the Mansion House Cafe is a block and a half due south of the courthouse, down Main Street, towards University Avenue.

Does that straighten your orientation out?

A. A block and a half due—

Q. Due south of the courthouse. Now do you recollect [fol. 655] now the relative location of these areas?

Then you go from the courthouse to the Mansion House Cafe on the west side of the street, then on down to University Boulevard, where you would turn right and go to the campus.

Now am I straightened out on my directions?

A. I thought it was in the first block but you probably know.

Q. All right, sir. Now then that is where you ate lunch, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Where did you go after lunch?

A. We went on back to the Mansion House—Mansell Court, Mansell Courts, motel.

Q. And then where did you go in the afternoon?

A. We went to a press conference.

Q. Where?

A. At the Ole Miss Motel, about a block and a half from the courthouse.

Q. Would you describe that press conference please, sir, to the jury.

A. How it was set up?

Q. Well, just give them a running account. They weren't there and you were. Just tell them what you saw and what happened.

[fol. 656] A. Well, the press conference was set up at the cafe by continuous requirements of the press all the time I was eating, at the cafe when we were eating lunch.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And I said if I held a press conference—I told them I wouldn't—many of them that came by, practically couldn't eat my lunch for people coming up and wanting a press conference and asking me question, and I wouldn't answer their questions.

And finally said, after I had been bothered about six times in the middle of the meal—which was all right, I finally realized that he—that it was a little bit . . . trying to be antagonistic with their questions and being on top of me continuously, and I finally said, "All right, if I hold a press conference, I know where you all are. You are at the Ole Miss." I had heard that.

"The Ole Miss Motel and if I have a press conference, I'll join you down there and let you know by calling in,

I'll call in and let you know at that place and let you know.'"

I think I said 2:00 o'clock, "I'll let you know," for a 4:30—4:00 or 4:30 press conference.

Some of them came on back and said, "I can't make that because my press has got to go to press sooner than that. I want some answers right now."

[fol. 657] And so it was sort of argumentative and I, sometimes as a fairness to the press, you tell one you are not going to talk and then you try—then the other one asks you to talk to them, it's not quite fair, if you said you are going to meet them, you ought to give everybody the same, equal break.

And so I got a little bit ugly about it. I said, "You heard—" I said, "I can't help what time everybody goes to press, print at a different time. You've got to wait, that's all."

And so this was set up for 4:30 at the Ole Miss.

Q. Motel?

A. Motel, in town, sir. And we were a little bit late getting there.

Q. Of this group that came by your table, were any of them Associated Press personnel or did you know?

A. I don't know. They were in-state and out-of-state, of Mississippi. I couldn't identify them.

Q. Yes, or no, did any of them identify themselves as AP personnel?

A. As far as I know, they didn't identify themselves as any particular one.

Q. The answer is "no"?

A. No.

Q. All right. And what happened then, after you had [fol. 658] this—after you had gone to lunch, did you go back to your motel?

A. We had been back to the motel. Now we are at a press conference.

Q. All right, go ahead and tell about the press conference.

A. After lunch, I had been back to the motel. We had finalized and made the call that we would have the press conference.

And then we went back to the, went to the press conference I have been discussing.

And we were about 30 minutes late getting to the press conference.

Q. All right.

A. Due to telephone calls, or something, that had delayed us. When we got there, one of the reporters said—I just walked out in the center of the court and it looked like they were going to hold the press conference right outside in the center of the court and it was no particular set-up or any arrangement or anything. There were just six or eight of them standing around.

And one of them said, "Your press conference has sort of been scooped."

And I said, "What do you mean?"

And he said, "Well, they have gotten word that the [fol. 659] Marshals are on the campus."

And so there were questions. We went on with what few were there, three or four or five.

And four or five people standing around, watching. And I made a statement and some questions were asked and that seemed to be enough and I would say—

Q. Let me ask you a question here.

Was that statement you made a written statement?

A. I had written out a statement before I got there and I used that statement as a lead-in, which I usually do.

Q. Do you have copies of the statements that you issued there and elsewhere?

A. I don't have them right here. I think they are in the files and records.

Q. Now you have, or have you not previously given to Mr. Gooch or to Mr. Cravens, his partner, during the course of taking your depositions these written statements?

A. Yes, sir, we have.

Q. And they are of record in court in your depositions?

A. Yes, the ones they have got have been handed to them from us.

Q. And was it one of those written statements that you read at this press conference?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And then do I understand it, you were asked several [fol. 660] questions after that was over?

A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Now where did you go then after your press conference was over?

A. We went to the courthouse—no, we drove by the courthouse and drove back out to the campus and there was a policeman standing way down at the bridge and the railroad and he wasn't ever letting—he wasn't letting any cars come through.

And he stopped us and he said, "You can't go in."

And so we turned around and we on back to Oxford.

Q. And what happened then? Did you go to the courthouse?

A. We went to the courthouse.

Q. All right. What happened at the courthouse?

A. Well, I had talked to Sheriff Ford earlier in the afternoon and then we'd talked to him again sometime from the Mansell Motor Court and at the courthouse, went in the courthouse and there were, say, 15 or 20 people standing around downstairs and most, six or eight of them must have been Sheriffs. And I met them all.

Somebody introduced me around to the Sheriffs. I think it was Sheriff Ford. And there were people on telephones back in the corner.

And I asked—we talked to several of the Sheriffs and [fol. 661] they were trying to get a call through to Jackson at the time. They were—they wanted—

Mr. Gooch: I object to what the Sheriffs may have said.

Mr. Watts: No, don't—

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just tell what happened and what you said and who you saw. Did you see any people—any representative there of the Governor?

A. Yes, after 10 or 15 minutes—

Mr. Gooch: We object. It would be a conclusion on the part of this witness.

Mr. Watts: It's common knowledge—

The Court: If he knows, I will permit him to testify.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. If you know, did you or did you not, yes or no, see a representative of the Governor there at the courthouse?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. All right.

Mr. Gooch: To which we object on the grounds that's a conclusion on the part of this witness.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Gooch: Exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. And after this conference at the courthouse, did you [fol. 662] go then back to the Mansell Court or did you go eat your dinner?

A. In the deposition, I believe I said I went back to— I went to eat dinner.

But actually we didn't. We went on back to the Mansell Court.

I had forgotten we went back there again.

Q. Well, that's all right, those immaterial things I am not concerned with.

You did go to the Mansion House Cafe then, which was about a block and a half south of the courthouse and ate?

A. Yes, went there for supper.

Q. All right. Relate to the jury what happened while you were in the Mansell—while you were in the Mansion House Cafe eating?

A. We got in the Mansion House Cafe, which is just a street cafe along the side of the street as we have identified. And I went in at about five or ten minutes to 8:00 on September the 30th, and sat down at a table and ordered our meal.

And somebody walked in the front door with a radio and it was announcing that Kennedy's, Mr.—the President's speech was coming on.

And the radio was sitting up near the front and he sat [fol. 663] it on a heater or something up there and we were sitting back about four or five tables back and I couldn't hear it. And when it started, I walked up there and there was two or three people standing there. It was up by the counter, check-out counter, at the door.

And I stood around and listened to President Kennedy's speech from the time it started until just about the last of it before—

In the meantime, why, it looked like our meal was coming and I went back and sat down and started eating dinner.

Q. All right, go ahead from there.

A. The speech was completed and, with Louis Leman, he was with me, the only one.

There were other people in the—

Q. Excuse me right there, General. At this point, don't worry too much about those details. We don't care about the other people.

Just hit the highlights and tell us what happened after that.

A. We were—we ate dinner, got up to pay the bill, were delayed at the counter talking to some people that came in, delayed by my request for a carton of cigarettes.

About that time somebody stepped up—we had finished dinner—somebody stepped up and said, "While—while I was standing at the counter, "There is trouble going on, [fol. 664] on the campus," and I said, "Oh, is there?"

And he tried to get me into a conference and I wouldn't—

And I finished my business with paying the bill and getting cigarettes and went on out the door and got in the car with Louis.

And I said, "After we got in the car, I said, "That feller said there is some trouble. I don't know who he is. At the campus. Let's drive on out there."

Q. And did you?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. Where did you go?

A. We drove out Oxford (sic) and I guess a mile, mile and a half to the campus, whichever direction it is, you go out University Avenue.

He was driving. I didn't pay much attention to directions and the road, but it goes on out in a mile and a half of the campus and you got back to that same bridge and the policeman was stopping people there.

Q. Now, as you left the Mansion House Cafe, going south, you turned west onto University Boulevard. I wish you would pick up that ruler right there in front of you and go to the plat and show the jury approximately where you parked and where this roadblock or policeman was.

Do you see the pointer there on the desk?

[fol. 665] A. (Indicating) University Avenue coming out of Oxford would come right down this route and gotten to the railroad tracks, which there is a bridge over the railroad tracks, which is right there.

It's a big, wide street and right here there was a policeman standing in the center of the street, waving, stopping cars, not in contact with them but, with the cars, but you could see him up here.

So you stopped right in here and we turned right in here. I got out of the car right here, as we decided to park after the police stopped everybody.

There were also cars parked up here that had been parked up here evidently beforehand. You could see them in the street, maybe three or four, on up this way—no, it's on up this way, further.

But we turned right here short of the railroad track and I got out of the car, walked across the bridge. You could hardly tell this is a bridge, it's so smooth over the street.

This is a big, deep gully and tracks down in here. Parked right here.

Louis, after the car turned, I got out and he parked the car in this area and I walked on across the bridge.

Q. Did you walk in the street or where?

[fol. 666] A. No, I walked right on the sidewalk, right here. There was a sidewalk going across.

Q. Would you trace the course then that you took from the railroad overpass onto the campus?

You can step out a little further, it's all right. Move the chart there so you can—kind of a tight fit for a big man.

Mr. Watts: Excuse me, if Your Honor please, may I back the chart up just a little, kind of tight fit for him?

[fol. 667] A. The question was where I went from there? I walked right on up the street here on the sidewalk, always on the sidewalk, and I went right on up the sidewalk to the campus, here to this area. A big lamp post here, and I stopped right in this area (indicating chart).

Q. All right. Tell the Jury just what occurred in that area?

A. When I got here there must have been, oh, anywhere from seventy to one hundred students around this whole area, say within one hundred yards, or seventy-five of this lamp post, and down in the street here. You are coming uphill, sort of, here, and this is the main light that is on the whole campus, actually, this evening.

It's the big overhanging street light, sort of hangs over and hangs over a third of the street here, and it is right on this corner.

And the campus, it is a dark night, it is very dark. They—I got up here and talked to students that were hanging around in this area. Nobody—there wasn't any mass welcome, or any mass knowledge that I was there and a lot of them don't even recognize me; a lot of them don't know who I am.

Pretty soon I would walk—I would walk into a group, or they would walk up to me and say, "You are Walker," and then you would hear them tell somebody else, but—[fol. 668] Q. How were you dressed?

A. I was dressed just about like I am now, with the hat on.

Q. Big white hat?

A. White hat, normal—

Q. Texas hat?

A. Texas hat.

Q. Okay, go ahead.

A. I stood around in this area talking to the students for ten or fifteen minutes. I even got, at this time, talking to students—the light extended, as you say, the light would show you people about in this area at the time. There was just this one light, and the basic other light through the evening that was even near, was way up here, a very small light (indicating).

Q. By "up here," you are pointing to what installation?

A. Well, it was—it was right along here. I am talking about the Lyceum Building. That was the Lyceum Building, or Administration Building. You could see one tiny little light, like a candle light, practically, from this distance. At night it looked a long way up there, longer—it looked a long way up there, and it appeared to be. Because distances at night look long and you—you can't see that distance. You [fol. 669] couldn't even see—you could vaguely, if you thought you knew what the outline of this building was, you might have—you might try to make it out. I couldn't even—couldn't have even drawn the outline of the building from any area in here. But, this is dark, it is overly dark in this area, because these are tremendous trees, great big pine trees and they go up thirty or forty feet and they are all overlocked in the top. So, there is no seeing the sky or anything. You are under trees, it is very, very dark. So, you don't see the tops of buildings. You might see the tops of a skyline of a building in a light sky if you didn't have the trees, but you can't stand in here and see even the second story of this building.

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. And that is true of this building (indicating). That night I couldn't see that building. I didn't even know this building was on the campus until the next day.

This is a dark area. You can—as people walk past the light maybe up in the distance you can catch his image or watch him go by.

Q. Now, then, excuse me just a minute. I think you have covered that adequately. As you arrived there, where you have your pointed, had you walked along the sidewalk or along the street?

A. I have walked all the way along the sidewalk, never [fol. 670] getting off the sidewalk.

Q. Where the Circle starts does the sidewalk on which you were walking enter into the street? Approximately in the area of the street line.

A. It either ends right here, it goes at least this far, or it turns to the left a little, I am not sure.

Q. At that point what did you do?

A. Well, for fifteen or twenty minutes I was discussing—asking questions about what was going on and saying "hello" to people that wanted to meet me and wanted to talk to me, and a lot of the people indicated they were interested in me for an autograph, or something like that.

Q. All right.

A. And I asked them about the situation, what was going on. I—

Q. Now, at that point, did this group have any leadership that you could identify?

A. No, there wasn't any leadership. They were just—they looked more like bystanders, enthusiastic and interested and, certainly interested in the activities there that night, but as far as leadership, they were just students moving around talking to each other in twos and threes.

Q. Speaking of activity, what was the activity on further to the West, up towards the Lyceum building?

[fol. 671] A. Well, when you got to this point (indicating) you began to smell tear gas. I no sooner got here than I recognized tear gas.

Q. Had you smelled tear gas before?

A. Oh, yes, plenty of time.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And, talking to people in this area, it began to make you weep, and you recognized that it was tear gas. Then within five or ten minutes you saw tear gas being fired from this direction out into here (indicating).

Q. Could you hear any reports?

A. Oh, yes, you can hear them go off. You can hear them two or three blocks, at least, at night. Maybe if it is a very still, quiet night, you might even hear them half a mile.

Q. How did the report of these weapons compare with the report of a GI Army rifle?

A. Well, a Army rifle is sharper, got more of a crack. I just—

Q. All right, sir. Go ahead.

A. Now, the students in the area, after you get up here, you see a few more. Nobody is standing for any particular time or reason, or just moving around talking to each other.

Q. Now, stop just a minute. You made a statement, "As [fol. 672] you get up here." Did you ever get up "here"?

A. No, I never got near this building. But I am trying to describe the—from what I can hear and tell, there were students going in and out of the YMCA.

Q. Now, excuse me.

A. Which I couldn't see and never got near.

Q. When you said, "As you get up here," do you mean you went up there?

A. No, I didn't mean I got up here, but as you get up here—I was describing the situation as I can, the situation around the campus there as I know it.

Q. Put the pointer back to where you were.

A. I was back in this area here (indicating).

Q. Did you see the individual who was here in Court a couple of days ago, this Sheriff Witt, the heavy-set Sheriff?

A. Yes, I saw Sheriff Witt. I met him right in here (indicating).

Q. Near the monument?

A. Right. That was within fifteen or twenty steps of the monument.

Q. All right. Tell us about that meeting.

A. Either I had said "hello" to him or he said "hello" to me, and I shook hands with him, and asked him, probably, what was going on, and we discussed what was going on on [fol. 673] the campus.

Q. Did you ask him in seriousness or in jest or in any other manner about deputizing you?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, the form is objected to.

Mr. Watts: I will withdraw it. What I want to cover here is what, if anything, was said about his deputizing you, if anything, or do you remember?

A. Well, there was a statement in jest, "Well, why don't you deputize me, Sheriff?" And, of course, I suspected he couldn't do it. I never heard of deputizing anybody out under a tree.

Q. All right, go ahead. Did the Sheriff then—did you have any association with him, or any contact with him from then on?

A. I probably talked to him a few minutes at different times. I saw him two or three times, either as I went past him or as he walked past me, or something.

Q. Did you consider him as one of your associates at that point, or—

A. Well, I considered him as one on the campus that would keep the students from getting hurt, and being in any violence.

Q. Go ahead and tell us what you saw, and what happened.

[fol. 674] A. The students—there was, as I came in that area, the students finally, as the word went around, in five or ten minutes, within this location, this local group I am talking about that you could see, the word went out, "Walker is on the campus," and I did hear a remark, "We have got a leader now."

The prevalent question, the ones that would come up and stand around and talk was wanting to know if I would speak to them, and I told them, "No," I had nothing to say to them, and would continue to reverse the conversation to ask them about what had happened, and what was going on, and got the word that it had started at 8:00 o'clock when the tear gas was fired directly at the backs of the Marshals and into the students in mass, and I was trying to put the picture together, what had happened.

Students were saying that they were being shot at, and I was immediately told, or within five or ten minutes of being in this area, that two people had been killed. And they referred to a girl, a student that had been hit with a missile of some type and had been killed and carried off, and they referred to the killing of a Highway Patrol that had been taken off on a stretcher.

Q. Did you later learn some of those reports were inaccurate?

A. Yes, sir, I later learned that they were not so.

[fol. 675] Q. All right. Go ahead. From that point where did you go and what did you do?

A. There was other questions from the students, "Well, will the Government use Military force?" I sort of avoided it. It was obvious that the students were using Cuba, "Why not be in Cuba?" And, "Why take Military forces on the campus?" And the question was, "Will they?" And my answer, I didn't know whether they would or wouldn't.

It seemed pretty obvious to me, but I wasn't saying anything because nobody knew what was going to happen.

It was obvious that the Marshals were already on the campus, and had been on, evidently, since about 4:00 or 4:30, according to what the students told me, and they wanted to know if I would speak to them.

Q. Oh, yes, incidentally, in that direction, did they ask some of you—did some of them ask you to lead a charge?

A. Not—that wasn't the prevalent question right then. They—

Q. Well, was you asked?

A. They were asking me if I would lead them, and would we get organized. It was obvious for a charge. "Are you going to be our leader?" And, "Will you lead us?" And—[fol. 676] Q. What was your answer to that question?

A. I ignored that question, and said, "No, you are not supposed to, you are not going to close with the Marshals, you are not going—there is not going to be any violence. You are not—it won't do you any good to approach the Marshals.

Q. All right. Go ahead. Where did you go from there, from the vicinity of the statue?

A. Just in this area right around here (indicating).

Q. Do you know where the flagpole is?

A. At that time I didn't know where the flagpole was. You couldn't see it. Later in the evening I found out where the flagpole was.

Q. You now know—you now know where the flagpole is, don't you?

A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. How far toward the flagpole did you go in that period of time from the monument area?

A. Not past about this area (indicating). But most of the whole time was spent right around in here, because this is where the students were, in small groups, and this was permeated with tear gas, and tear gas was rolling out to about this line (indicating chart).

Q. For the sake of the record, where you said, "Not past this area," did you point to an area approximately half [fol. 677] way between the monument and the flagpole?

A. Half way between the monument and the flagpole, or a little bit over half way.

Q. All right. And did you in this period of time walk westward at least to that point? Yes or no?

A. During this period, yes.

Q. What was your gait?

A. Walking slowly.

Q. Was it—all right.

A. And with no particular course because people would be coming by, or I would stop to talk.

Q. And what did you do when you got to the furtherest point westward?

A. I tried to see what was going on up in this area. You could see from back here, but it was so dark you had to go a little forward to see a little more, and I could see the tear gas coming in this area. And I could see people up in this area, students in groups of one, two or three, moving around. I would say there were thirty or forty that you could see at any one particular time. They were all doing something different. And wandering around, and one might throw something. I could see the motion of throwing.

Q. And—

A. And then there would be fire gas fired—tear gas [fol. 678] fired back in that area.

Q. Then how long did you stay at that particular point between the monument and the flagpole?

A. Between the monument and the flagpole? I was in this—I couldn't identify—

Q. I don't believe you heard the question, General.

A. About ten or fifteen minutes before—

Q. Before you turned around and went back?

A. Right.

Q. And tell us what happened as you started back, and after you started back?

A. Well, I was up here, to answer your question, about three to five minutes.

Q. All right. Thank you. Then, what happened after you left and started back?

A. I went on back and went to talking to people. And by this time there was a movement, I could hear automobiles coming over in this way (indicating).

Q. Did you ever become acquainted that evening with a preacher, Rev. Duncan Gray?

A. Oh, yes, I did.

Q. Did you know who he was at the time?

A. No, I had never seen him before, and didn't, no.

[fol. 679] Q. Did you see a preacher along about this time, or somebody you could identify as a preacher?

A. Yes, sir, right in here (indicating). He was wearing a black coat and a high collar.

Q. Did he approach you or did you approach him?

A. He approached me.

Q. And tell the Jury—you may take your seat now.

Tell the Jury as nearly as you can remember what the conversation was between this preacher and yourself, and tell what his actions and demeanor was.

A. Rev. Duncan Gray, later identified as Rev. Duncan Gray—I didn't know who he was. And he approached me in sort of an argumentative mood make demands that I do this and I do that and—

Q. That you do what? What did he ask you to do?

A. Well, during the—I don't remember, but it was perfectly obvious that he was very excited, and that he was very argumentative, and his approach was not quiet in any way, and I just turned and walked off.

Q. Well, what did he ask you to do?

A. Well, then, the next time I stopped he came up to me again, and this time he grabbed a hold of my sleeve and pulled on it, or my arm, and was argumentative again and either I walked off or moved over, or turned my back [fol 680] and he moved around on the other side of me, and started in an excited mood, and sort of frenzied, demanding that I stop the students. And, "You can stop them," and, "You certainly cannot let them do this." And, "This is terrible."

Q. All right, sir. Go ahead and tell us what you told him, as nearly as you can remember?

A. I asked him whether, if he belonged on the campus, if he was attached to the campus, or had duties on the campus. It was my understanding that he said he did.

Q. All right. And what did you say?

A. I said, "Well, why don't you stop them?"

And he kept right on. It was just sort of in a manner that was not where you could converse with him quietly. And—

Q. What else did he say to you, or what else did you say to him, that you can remember?

A. I probably said—I did say, "Well, what denomination are you?" And he said, "I am a peace Episcopalian." And I said, "You make me ashamed to be an Episcopalian."

Q. And then what happened? Roughly in what area were you when this occurred, with respect to the monument?

A. About twenty steps west of the monument, there in the Circle.

Q. You started to tell us something about automobiles [fol. 681] and probably I interrupted you. You started to tell us something about automobiles. Will you go ahead and relate that incident to the Jury?

A. Automobiles started out, as you face the Lyceum, on this left road coming out. I think I pointed to it.

Q. Yes, you identified that.

A. I could hear them coming and I had no idea what they would be, what the automobiles would be coming out from the Lyceum area, and I asked a student or somebody standing around the area what was that. There was always people walking back and forth, west back to the east, and I said, "What is that, what is that?" And one of them said, "That is the Highway Patrol leaving."

Well, that didn't seem to make any sense in what was going on, so I stepped over to the curb and looked right down in the cars to identify them myself, and I was about twenty steps down the road from the monument. I stepped right out on the curb and looked right down in the car to see if they were leaving.

Q. General, up to that time had you participated in any way in any activity of the crowd that was throwing things at the Marshals?

A. I hadn't participated in any way, none at all.

Q. Did you assume any command over this crowd?

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as a conclusion on the part [fol. 682] of the witness, if Your Honor please. He can tell what he did.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Well, let's—

The Court: Mr. Gooch, I am going to permit this witness to answer that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did you assume command of that crowd?

A. I certainly did not.

Q. Do you know what I am talking about when I say, "assume command"?

A. I certainly know what it means to assume command.

Q. And did you at any time prior to seeing these Highway Patrolmen leave position yourself in the vicinity of anyone that you knew had a rock or a missile?

A. None that I saw. I didn't position myself near anybody that had any rocks or any missiles.

Q. At this period of time what was the very closest point you were to anyone who you could identify as throwing something at the United States Marshals?

A. At least half way across that whole Circle, which would be over a hundred and fifty yards.

Q. Were you, or were you not, as you approached and arrived at that monument taken ahold of by men on each side, and taken by the elbows?

A. I certainly was not. At no time was anybody taken [fol. 683] ahold of me and I am sure there wasn't—there wasn't any reason to take ahold of me. I wasn't going anywhere.

[fol. 684] Q. When you arrived at the monument, was or was not a leader of the mob waving a big Confederate flag? (Indicating) Yes or no?

A. No, there was not.

Q. All right, sir. Now then as you returned from this position between the monument and the flagpole and saw the highway patrolmen in the cars, as you have outlined, did you hear any comments from the crowd concerning the highway patrolmen or the situation as it then existed?

A. Yes, I did. The word began to pass around through the students that, "Barnett has sold us out."

And there was a build-up of enthu—of excitement over a rumor that Barnett was selling them out and that—just seemed to be more excitement over it and more—

Q. Up to that time, had you been requested to speak on the monument?

A. Yes, I had.

Q. Or anywhere in that area?

A. I had been continuously requested to speak.

Q. And up to that time, had you spoken?

A. No, I had not. I said definitely that I had nothing to say.

Q. After you heard this word going through the crowd that Barnett had sold them out, did you do anything?

A. Yes, finally another group said, came back by me [fol. 685] and said, "Well, General, please talk to us."

It wasn't all in the words, "Making a speech." They, a lot of them said, "Won't you talk to us? Won't you say something?"

Well, the group came back and another came by and said, "Please, talk to us."

And I said, "All right, I'll—I'll talk to you."

Q. Up to that time and including that time, were you and any group around you met with a heavy barrage of tear gas about 75 yards from the Lyceum steps?

Yes or no.

A. Certainly not, no.

Q. Now then after you had decided to talk to these people, tell the Court and jury what you did and what you said.

A. They said, "Come on," this group, "And stand up here."

Well, sort of spontaneously there had been a group of students, about 150 had moved around on the east side of the monument, were in that general area.

And as I moved around with one or two or three, somebody said, "Stand up here on the monument."

And the students began to gather around, sort of a spontaneous group of about not over 150 students, standing in the south—on the east side of the monument, in the [fol. 686] street.

I got up on the edge of the monument. It was only about —stepped up on the edge, which was about a foot or foot and a half high. I could just see over the crowd well, the group there, which was about 150 and sort of fringed out into other people standing other places and even way out of hearing distance.

Q. And did the monument have a base on it?

A. Well, that's what I have described, this base which was, you could stand up on, put you up about, I would guess, 15 or 18 inches higher than the street.

Q. Now I wish you would tell this jury—and I know it's been difficult to remember under those circumstances exactly what you said—tell them as nearly as you can remember or in substance what you said to this group of people.

A. I told them that this was not the place for violence, that nobody came to Mississippi—I definitely told them in these words, "That nobody came to Mississippi for violence, that no violence was intended."

And there was a boo and a mass boo when that statement was made, and yells, "He's not going to do anything. What's he here for?"

And it was just a mass psychological opposition through the crowd.

[fol. 687] And even some of them turned and started on off. And each time you would wait to watch and let it calm down again.

I said, "If there is any blood shed at Mississippi, at Oxford," or Mississippi, "it will be on the hands of the Federal Government."

I told them that truth and the seriousness, tragedy of this situation was in a sign that was on their own airport, which said, "Cuba, that way (indicating)."

I had decided only to talk because of this rising crescendo that Barnett had sold them out, which was getting them excited.

And I had just been to the Sheriff's office and the courthouse.

And so I wanted to tell them that, to quiet them down, that this wasn't true, that Barnett had not sold them out.

I remember very distinctly, I had thought of Birdsong's name and I couldn't think of anything but Birdwell and that seemed the natural thing, and I knew that was wrong, so I turned down and Louis Leman, who had been with me at the courthouse, was standing on my right, and as I wanted to tell them about, that Barnett had not sold them out, that a representative of the Governor, whose name I would not mention to the students—it was Judge Russell [fol. 688] Moore who had come up to the courthouse to talk to the Sheriffs, which I had lis—sat in on when I was at the courthouse.

And I didn't, wouldn't refer to his name. I only said, and I made it very clear twice, "That this is a representative of your Governor saying this. I am not saying this but I am telling you what I just heard at the courthouse this afternoon. And the representative of your Governor was there and he said that his orders and his desires had not been carried out that afternoon with regard to what had hap—what had transpired on the campus, "That the head of the highway patrol had escorted, with others, of course, which the students knew, but the highway patrol had, head of the highway patrol had escorted Meredith on the campus.

And I couldn't think of the—the students said, "Who?" And I didn't think it made any difference to tell them. And I couldn't think—I thought of Birdwell and I knew that was wrong and I turned down to Louis Leman and I said, "What was the fellow's name," sort of under my breath, and he said, "Birdsong," and I said—I said, "The man, the Gov—the representative . . . was referring to Birdsong. He said that Birdsong had not carried out the decisions and the desires of the Governor."

Q. Now General, at this point, and quoting from the [fol. 689] news report of the Associated Press, the language of the reporter, Van H. Savell, I will ask you specifically, did you or did you not make these statements to these people at that time:

"I heard Walker say that," and here are the statements, "Governor Barnett had betrayed the people of Mississippi."

Did you or did you not say that?

A. I did not say that.

Q. "But don't let up now. You may lose this battle but you will have been heard."

Did you say that?

A. I did not say that.

Q. Did you say, "This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now."

Is that your language?

A. It certainly is not. I did not say that.

Q. About how long did this speech last?

A. About five, seven minutes. Five to seven.

Q. What—oh, incidentally, did you, either during the course of the speech or at the end of it, again see the Reverend Duncan Gray?

A. Yes, this delayed it a little, you might say, during the early part of the speech.

[fol. 690] I can't just remember where but somebody started clambering up on the monument and grabbing hold of my leg, as I remember.

And the Reverend is a very tiny, little feller, very, very small. And he was sort of clawing his way up. And the students were booing him and I stopped and I didn't know what was going on and I looked down and made some remark, "I believe your Reverend wants to speak."

I may have even said, "He has a right to speak, too, if he wants to speak. But I am talking now."

Q. And did you then repeat the statement that his action, or something about a Presbyterian—strike the Presbyterian —Episcopalian—

A. I didn't remember this. It's come up in testimony. I may have said it again at the time. I remembered saying it once before when he met me out there. I may have said it.

But it was very obvious that the students were pretty mad about the situation and any word I might have said that was wrong, somebody was going to hurt him because there was a student crossed in front of me, ready to take him on, and quick. And it was—Mr. Gray was in a little rough situation and I was—

Q. What happened then at that point?

A. Well, the Sheriff, or somebody—and I recognized [fol. 691] a Sheriff or looked like a law enforcement agency, reached up there with, or somebody else reached up and put him on the first ledge and somebody else took him from there and led him off.

Q. Have you since learned that it was this Sheriff Talmadge Witt that did that?

A. I have since learned that it was Sheriff Talmadge Witt.

Q. All right. Then tell the jury now, in your own words, and you may take your pointer and step back to the chart, tell the jury just exactly what you did, what you saw, what you said and what you heard from the time you made that speech on, for the next, we'll say, 30 or 40 minutes.

A. Well, the students had begun to boo and protest and I held their attention, got them back a little bit, trying to give them the word on Barnett.

But some of them had moved out, and the rumor was going around in the fringes, "He's not going to do anything."

But basically, I kept the group there with the statement —oh, I had said during the speech that, "You can protest," that, "You have a right to protest, but this is not the place for violence."

The—

[fol. 692] Q. Go on over to the circle there, put your specs on so you can see.

A. Well, I do need—no wonder I have been having trouble.

I am standing right on the edge of the monument, facing this way. This group was right in here. I stepped off the monument, I don't remember which, one of the—I have heard this way or this way (indicating).

But I walked right out in here. And the people, after a talk, want to talk to you.

So there immediately were students around me here and I stood here and definitely turned my face so I could see, look this direction, and watch this group of students.

So the boy, whoever he was, the boys that were talking to me, talking about what was going on, and Cuba, and so forth, I turned and stood right in this area and watched this crowd disperse.

Now the most of it, as the ones that had left, gone these directions, but the most of this crowd, group of 100 to 150, moved on down this direction (indicating).

Now they would go this way and come on back out here and I watched the students come on back through here and go back to what they had been doing up in this area.

I saw one or two groups go through here—a group, say, was four or five, six.

[fol. 693] Some of the group, you could obviously tell by them passing that they were just walking and talking and that they were headed on back up in this area.

Of course, some of them were back up here as they had been before, before I went on the monument, up here throwing rocks and getting tear gas continuously thrown out in this area.

There was hardly a time within 10 or 15 minutes that there wasn't a blast of tear gas, say five dispersed tear gas, that would come in about this area.

So I stood right in here and talked and watched the whole crowd disperse. I wanted to see it disperse. It did.

Some of them mozied along down here, some of them stopped and stood here.

Students went on back up here and went to rock throwing again. Others went out in this area and worked in this way to rock throwing.

I was talking to people in here and finally, after I—when I saw this whole thing had dispersed, go on back to what they were doing, moving off in every area and then there was just, oh, back again, the way it looked, when I came on, 50 or 60 standing around in different places in this whole—I turned around, talked to these boys a few minutes.

As one testified, we talked there 10 or 15 minutes and [fol. 694] about Cuba and the inter—the general situation in the world and what was going on and there were—I turned and walked from person to person or in generally up, on up to this area again (indicating).

Q. What was your gait as you walked?

A. Just slow walking, watching and looking and trying to see all the time.

[fol. 695] Q. All right, take your seat again.

A. This is taking at least fifteen or twenty minutes.

Q. On that walk did you get as far as the flagpole, or where, with respect to the flagpole? Just tell the Jury.

A. I got up within ten or fifteen steps of the flagpole and stopped and looked again, watched to see what I could see.

Q. Then did you go on past the flagpole?

A. Not at that time. I stood around there for a few minutes and moved a little bit to the left or to the right, and then the next ten or fifeen minutes, why, I moved up a little bit more to see if I couldn't see more clearly.

All the time you are trying to see. I am trying to see the Lyceum Building. I haven't seen it yet. I mean up to this time in my conversation.

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. So, in the next—we have already covered, say, fifteen or twenty minutes after the speech. Now, this is going on for five hours, all evening. It didn't all happen as the radio runs it off, like when they speed up these radios and TV's so that everybody is dialing every direction at once. This is spread out over much time.

[fol. 696] Q. Did you finally then get up in the immediate vicinity of the flagpole?

A. I am up to about ten steps short of the flagpole.

Q. Ten steps is thirty yards. Not thirty feet, thirty yards.

A. Okay, then, I move up to fifteen or twenty feet from the flagpole. I am still trying to see something, you are still trying to see, you are looking right, you are looking left. You still can't see those buildings. The limbs of the trees, now, are about the height of your ceiling here, at the edge of the ceiling.

Q. Now, were there people in the area while this was going on?

A. Yeah, all over the area. No big group. No big racket. You would hear a holler and look over that way, or you would hear a student say something or you would hear a burst of tear gas, then you—or you would hear a racket, say like somebody was beating up some tin, or—basically it turned out to be automobiles.

Q. Did you lead anybody at that time?

A. No, I certainly did not.

Q. Did anybody in your immediate vicinity at that time throw any rocks, sticks, stones or missiles in the direction of the Marshals?

A. Nobody around me at all. There were—I was—there [fol. 697] was boys off forty or fifty steps. I could see people that were moving back and forth from the Marshals, or like they were trying to get up close to them.

Q. Did you at that time participate in any of such activities?

A. I did not.

Q. Did anybody at that time, or at any time after you made the speech on the monument come up and grab you by the arm and you march in front of a large number of people toward the Marshals?

A. I certainly did not. That never occurred.

Q. At any time while you were there that night did you see anything that approximated 1,000 people in one place at one time doing the same thing?

A. Never from the time I got on that campus until the time I left did I see anybody approximating 1,000 people, that I could even see at one time or that were together at one time. Nor was there even 500 together at any one time. Nor was there even 100 massed up together to do anything. No. There wasn't even twenty massed up to do anything. They were just scattered out in groups of fours and fives and you could see that they didn't even know what each other was doing. Not a single one had any connection with what another was doing.

When they talk about thousands on the campus, people [fol. 698] are talking about dormitories and where they have been fifteen minutes before.

Q. Wait just a minute. I am not talking about what people are talking about. What I want to do is get what you saw and what you did.

Now, after you were there in the vicinity of the flagpole this first time, after the speech, what did you do? Did you stay there the rest of the night or did you leave?

A. I didn't leave until about 1:00. Between 1:00 and 1:30, 1:00 to 1:30 or 2:00, or something. About 1:30.

Q. And did you stay all that period of time in the vicinity of the flagpole?

A. No, the whole—that is eight, nine—9:00 o'clock until 1:30, you have got about three or four and a half hours. You get tired and boring. I was staying most all of that period between, back in the area over here by the monument and to the left of the road.

Q. And how long at that time, after the speech, did you stay in the area of the flagpole? Ten or fifteen minutes, thirty or how long?

A. Well, what is the vicinity of the flagpole?

Q. I would say within fifty feet of the flagpole.

A. Oh, about ten—five to ten minutes. Ten minutes, say.

[fol. 699] Q. Where did you go from there?

A. Back toward the monument, and toward the left.

Q. Did you again that evening go westward toward the flagpole and the Lyceum Building.

A. Yes, I walked up just a little to the left of the flagpole maybe an hour later and stood around in that area listening to some racket up on the left, which I couldn't see, and tear gas was being fired and it rolled out by me.

Q. Were you west of the flagpole at that time?

A. At one time I was about ten steps west of the flagpole, just watching and looking and trying to hear a bulldozer, once, and another time when a car was being beaten up. I couldn't see either one.

Q. All right. From the time you left the flagpole area and went back to the monument area what did you do in the area of the monument at that time?

A. I talked to students and people that were around and stood just by myself a lot of the time, just watching what was going on, and talked to Mr. Cecil Holland in this time.

Q. Now, he was the news reporter that was here yesterday, was he?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. About how long did you talk to him?

[fol. 700] A. Oh, about fifteen or twenty minutes, then I think I saw him once again for two or three minutes, or saw him in passing as he went one direction and I stayed where I was.

Q. At any time for the rest of the night after you had been on the monument, did you participate in any activities of the crowd which involved throwing things at the Marshals?

A. I certainly did not.

Q. Did you see boys going back and forth past the area where they were carrying bricks, rocks and other things?

A. I saw—

Q. Yes or no?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Did you, during that period of time, see a wheelbarrow, a boy pushing a wheelbarrow with anything, rocks or bricks in it?

A. No, I never saw a wheelbarrow.

Q. All right. Now, then, just tell the Jury from this time on—by this time I mean after this second trip you made toward the area of the flagpole, tell the Jury what happened, and what you saw?

A. This is probably around 10:00 o'clock.

Q. Right.

[fol. 701] A. Up around the flagpole you can—I saw people throwing rocks and the gas coming out, but I—probably the most significant incident was I was still back at the monument, or in that area. May I use the map?

Q. Sure.

A. There was a tree here, a fir tree. These are all big pines up about ceiling high and there was a fir tree standing in here, right along here on this side of the road (indicating map) and I spent a lot of time under that. There was a block here, say, right by this light, where I stood and talked to some students during the evening with my foot on a block of concrete. It was a permanent block. I don't know whether it was a curb, but about that high (indicating) and, but at this particular time, we will say around

10:00 o'clock, between 10:00 and 10:30, something like that, I heard and was standing either here or here—I spent my time right in this area mostly, and I heard a student—there seemed to be something, yelling or something about a truce, and somebody went by and I said, "What are the students trying to do?" And, "What are they going to do?" And, "What do I hear?" And he said, "A group of students are going forward to try to have a truce."

And I didn't go directly, but I moved on up into this area to see if I could hear more. You never could be sure [fol. 702] of any of the word you were getting was exactly right, and when I got up here I noticed a group of, say, twenty or thirty students in this area, a little more congested than normal, and it looked like they were being quieter and yelling back and forth to the Marshals.

And I still wasn't sure what this was all about. I couldn't tell what they were saying, but the tone of events was sort of changing, with respect to the students and the Marshals right in this area.

Then I noticed that there were three or four students walking up forward of the group, and they were right up in this area, and then the thing finalized with three or four students—three or four Marshals coming out right here, and beginning to talk to these three students. And I could, by this time, I walked on up into this area, and this group of about fifteen, say, had moved on up here. I was way back behind them, maybe fifty or sixty steps, watching this, and I saw three—about two or three or four of them talking to the Marshals up here in sort of a loud tone. But I still couldn't hear what they were saying.

About ten or twelve students moved up here. So, I easily walked right on up behind this group to see what I could hear, and there was at least twenty steps distance from this three to this group, and I sort of stuck my head in be- [fol. 703] hind those lines of students standing here, and listened to this truce conversation that was going on about —I couldn't tell what they were saying, but it was an argument, and it became pretty—looked like it was a stand-off and nobody was getting anywhere, and somebody in this group hollered, "Well, you can't do anything with those people," and I didn't say anything. I finally saw that that was about the end of it and I just walked off and left them all up there and walked back in this area here (indicating).

Q. Would you know if there was a flower bed up there somewhere?

A. I believe there was a little tiny flower bed right around this flagpole, but you don't see that much at night. You do recognize it when you cross one of these walks. These are not curbed walks, but this walk is, as I remember, it was just a flat laid brick walk that sort of runs easily into the grass.

Q. All right. Take your seat.

Now, you say there was a bulldozer incident that occurred sometime that night?

A. Well, first, there was a fire truck incident, then there was a bulldozer incident.

Q. Did you participate in that?

A. I certainly did not; neither one.

[fol. 704] Q. What was the fire truck incident?

A. Well, I heard a vehicle coming up from some direction. I never could identify where, but I was back left of the monument standing twenty or thirty yards from the monument and I heard the noise, like a vehicle coming on the campus.

And it—some students,—I said, "What is that?" And he said, "Well, I think somebody has gotten that fire truck."

I said, "Where on earth would they get a fire truck?"

Well, there was some conversation about they would go to town and take it away from the fire department or something—they. And I stood and watched, and this noise finally stopped just short of the flagpole, evidently from the way it was coming, and there was no more vehicle noise any more. I couldn't see where this vehicle come from, I couldn't see the vehicle.

Q. Did you go over in that direction?

A. After the thing stopped and they said there was a fire truck parked over there, why I went over to take a look, and it was short—it was east of the flagpole and just a little to the right of the walk, facing sort of toward Lyceum.

Q. All right, sir. Now, what about the bulldozer inci[fol. 705] dent?

A. The bulldozer was later, as I remember the sequence. The bulldozer—there was a noise coming up from the left, way down south of the Lyceum Building. Sounded like the direction of travel—it sounded like two or three hundred—at night, maybe closer, but it sounded like a couple of hundred yards away at least, from the Lyceum.

And I asked a student, I said, "What is that, sounds like a tank coming." And he said, "Oh, that is that old bulldozer down there on the—grading or something they were doing down there, they have gotten that old thing to running."

And I heard the racket, the noise, the movement of the engine coming closer and closer, and I could hear it sounded like it was up on the left side or south side of the Lyceum Building. I am still back over in this area, over by the fir tree that I designated, right in that area. You still can't see vehicles. You can't see vehicles in front of the Lyceum Building, too dark. You are looking under a dark bunch of trees. And I looked up toward it to see if I could see in. I moved up to about, oh, about a little bit south of the flagpole, wandered on up there, hoping that I could see it, on that walk, along about up to that walk, just south of the flagpole.

[fol. 706] Q. Were you ever—

A. About twenty steps from the flagpole. Huh?

Q. Were you able to see the bulldozer?

A. I never saw the bulldozer, no. I didn't. And then I—a student came by and I said, "What are they doing?" He finally, during the course of the conversation he said, "They are trying to—they are going to put a sandbag on the accelerator, they are going to head it toward the Lyceum Building."

Q. And did you have anything to do with that?

A. Certainly did not. And it didn't get anywhere. The—it wouldn't get anywhere. It took one bounce at the curb, or something, and died. You heard it just go dead.

Q. From there on did you have anything to do with the activities of the students toward the Marshals?

A. I never have had anything to do with the activities of the students toward the Marshals. The answer is no, I didn't.

Q. You say you left about 2:00 o'clock?

A. 1:30 or 2:00.

Q. Where did you go?

A. We went—we walked, just walked off the campus. Nobody knew we were going, or anything. Just tired. I am tired. We went on down to the car where I said it was [fol. 707] parked, got the car and headed back toward the Mansell Motel.

Q. All right. Go ahead and tell us what you did the rest of that night. Skip any irrelevant details you can.

A. We stopped on the way, I would say about half way, I don't know the distances, but it was out of town, and I believe it is beyond—at least half way to the Mansell House.

We stopped at the side of the road. There was a group of people on the right. There was sort of an, old garage, and a commercial building or two sitting out there by themselves, and then there were ten or fifteen Highway Patrol cars sitting on the left of the road in a bunch.

We parked on the right. I talked to three or four people there, including one student who was out of his—run out of his dormitory and didn't have any place to stay. They were hunting places to stay. And one of them said, "You can still hear them." This was an hour later. He said, "You can still hear them shooting on the campus." And we listened to it. And I am not sure I could hear it, but they kept saying, "Don't you hear that?"

And I had talked there for about an hour to a group of people on the right, three to four to five, going and coming, [fol. 708] and then I would move over and talk to the Highway Patrol who had gotten out of their cars and were standing around talking. I went over and talked to them for ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. Did you see anybody you knew?

A. Well, not right at that time, no, we had been there anywhere from forty-five minutes to an hour or an hour and fifteen minutes. From then on then I called somebody to come down and join us from the other direction, from the Mansell Motel where we were. And they come on down there and joined us, and take us on back to the Mansell.

Q. That is—did you call somebody to come get you?

A. Sir?

Q. Did you call somebody to come get you?

A. Right.

Q. Whose car were you in at that time?

A. Well, up to this time I had been in Louis Leman's car.

Q. Did he go somewhere else then?

A. No.

Q. What was the occasion of your calling somebody to come get you?

A. Well, we knew—we picked up that somebody was [fol. 709] following us as we came out of Oxford. In other words, we had already gotten into Oxford and we turned on this highway, I believe it is 6. And we had—either Louis or I said, "There is a car tailing us, right behind us."

So, we pulled off the road and he went on by. He pulled right over the hill and he stopped. We moved up on him and saw him again and were recognized and we went on ahead again and here he came again. So, it was obvious that he was following us or watching our car. We had known we were followed. We saw a man at the Mansell Tourist Court Sunday morning.

Q. Did you understand whether it was a newsman or some official?

A. Well, it must have been an official. Too new of a car for a news man. It was some designated person. Perfectly obvious.

Q. And go ahead and tell us what happened between then and the time you went back to the motel?

A. Well, I called friends who had come into the motel and said, "Come on down here and join us here, we are right down the road. You will see us, I will watch for you, come on down here and join us." And when they got there I hadn't seen them before since leaving Texas, say, and maybe some of them for weeks or months, and we kind of talked a few minutes, and then we got in their car and left Louis' [fol. 710] car and we got in their car which actually come—and the car they were driving, and went on back to the Mansell—Mansell Motel.

Q. Did Louis go with you too?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you leave his car?

A. We left his car sitting there.

The Court: Let's stop at this point for a recess. Ladies and gentlemen, we will recess until a quarter until 11:00. Keep your seat in the audience until after the Jury files out.

(Short recess was had.)

[fol. 711] Q. Now I believe when we took a recess, you were telling the jury about going back to the motel after you changed cars?

A. Right, sir.

Q. And did you spend the rest of the night at the motel?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did anything of any significance happen at all?

A. Nothing of any signficance.

Q. What time, roughly, did you get up the next morning?

A. That would have been Monday morning, October the 1st. We got up about, oh, about 9:00 o'clock, 8:30 or 9:00.

Q. Where did you go?

A. I went back to Oxford. To Oxford.

Q. Did you go to the University area again?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Where did you go in Oxford?

A. We drove to Oxford within a block of the courthouse square.

Q. Was there any rioting or anything of the kind going on there?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. Was there ever, that next morning, that you had any observation of?

[fol. 712] A. Yes, just before I left town, about 10 or 15 minutes before I left, there were some sporadic shooting and people running and soldiers trying to catch people.

Q. Did you participate in that in any manner?

A. Certainly did not.

Q. Were there military personnel around the town of Oxford when you went down there?

A. Yes, there were.

Q. Did you eat there that day?

A. Yes, I ate what we could get of a breakfast there.

Q. Roughly what time with respect to being early, middle of the morning, or late?

A. Oh, it would have been around, I guess, somewhere around 10:00 o'clock, or 9:30 or 10:00.

Q. Where did you go then from there?

A. We—I left in the car with Louis Leman driving and several other people, for Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. And what happened?

A. We were stopped going out of Oxford, about two miles, at a roadblock, military roadblock.

Q. And what occurred at that point?

A. At the outskirts of Oxford where we were stopped, Lieutenant on a radio and eight or ten soldiers around blocking the roads and checking people going out of town, we were stopped and told we couldn't go any further, to park [fol. 713] on the side of the road.

Q. All right, sir. Continue.

A. And wait.

Q. Continue.

A. We sat in the car and talked to the Lieutenant, who was on a communciation system out of his radio jeep to his Commanding Officer, and I heard some of the discussion back and forth.

They couldn't make up their minds about anything or what to do, anything except reporting that I was there, I'm sure.

And that—I told them and they saw—he stopped us across the road from him and he said, "You just as well wait," and we got—I got in the car and sat 15 or 20 minutes and talked to him a few minutes and sat in the car with two ladies that I knew and three men that were in the car. There were about five.

Q. Is that the same car you had left in or was it a different one?

A. That's the same car that I had been in all the time, Leman's car.

We were headed back to Oxford and this was out about, I would say, about two miles from the center of town, on the outskirts of Oxford.

Q. Were all these people with you when you left? Who [fol. 714] was in the car when you left Oxford?

A. These same people, all of them, got in the car after we had some coffee at the drugstore.

Q. All right. And were you taken into custody there at the roadblock?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. By whom?

A. The military.

Q. And what, where were you taken?

A. I was told to get in a jeep. I said I would follow in our car and he said, "No, you would get in the jeep," and we were driven back—I said, "All right, my car will follow."

And I got in the jeep and they drove us back to the Administration Building, the Lyceum, on the campus.

Q. And where were you taken from the Administration Building and by whom?

A. I was taken from the Administration Building to the Federal Building in Oxford, the Post Office Building, right on the courthouse square.

I was taken there by Marshals out of the Lyceum Building.

Q. All right. And what occurred when you got to the courthouse?

A. When I got to the courthouse, why, after standing [fol. 715] around, they didn't seem to know what to do, why, they said, "Come on upstairs," and we were under guard. There were four guards on me from the Lyceum Building. They had held me in custody in the Lyceum for over an hour.

Q. Who is "we"?

You said, "We were under guard."

A. Well, a friend of mine that got out of the car with me, got in the jeep with me and stayed in the Lyceum Building with me. And then he went on to—he got in the car with the Marshals when we drove, when they forced, put us in the car and never released us, kept us under guard, in the Lyceum, and he—he and I, because he got out of the car with me and then we—at the Federal Building, why, the two of us, they said, "Come on upstairs."

We were under guard. And two or three big Marshals, or four. And went upstairs.

Q. Were you taken before a United States Commissioner?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Were you told that you were being charged with some type of a Federal crime?

A. Yes, while we were up there, after 10 or 15 minutes, why, they finally, somebody came in the door. I think it was a Marshal. And gave me an arrest order, charge.

Q. Was that a warrant for your arrest?

A. Yes, it was.

[fol. 716] Q. And were you able to learn with what you had been charged?

A. Yes, I learned what I had been charged with.

I was charged for assaulting Marshals, for assault, for conspiracy, for insurrection against the Gov—the United States, for seditious conspiracy.

Q. And did this U. S. Commissioner, to refresh your recollection, one Omar D. Craig, did he take any action in your case?

A. Well, after this, and we had been served with the charge or the complaint, why, 10—I don't know what was, they were going to do.

We were sitting in a room under guard and they said—all of a sudden somebody came in and said, "Come this way." And we walked across the hall and they opened their door and there was a whole courtroom set up with 30 or 40 people in it.

Q. And what, right quick, happened in that courtroom?

A. Omar Craig was at the head of the court. I learned his name later. And in that courtroom they said that I was being brought to decide, to determine the amount of the bond.

And I asked them, I said, if—"This has nothing to do with, based on what I have been charged with of moving this out of the State of Mississippi," and then his answer [fol. 717] was no, it wasn't, it didn't have anything to do with it.

And I said to him again specifically, I said, "Is this hearing just for establishing the amount of bond?"

And he said, "Yes, it is," which, of course, is false; that is not true.

Q. Was anything said about a lawyer?

A. Yes, he said, "You have a right to get counsel."

I said, "I can't get counsel here. My counsel would be outside of the state."

And he said, "You—" when he said it, he said, "I'll give you an hour, hour and a half to get counsel."

I said, "I can't get counsel here."

He said, "Well, if you—" Well, he said, "You can either—" the inference was, you can use our counsel.

Well, I didn't want their counsel.

And, "An hour and a half," I said, "I can't get counsel outside of the state."

Q. Did you waive—

A. And I said again—this was probably the time I repeated, this is what I said, "Is this only for the purpose of deciding the amount of the bond?"

And he said, "That is all it's for."

Q. Did you waive your right to a counsel at that hearing?

A. I did not. The conversation ended like that.

[fol. 718] Q. Were you given the right to have a preliminary hearing?

A. I certainly was not.

Q. Did you waive your right to a preliminary hearing?

A. I did not.

Q. And what happened to you then?

A. I said, "Can I have a minute to go out and talk?" Yes. And he said, "Yes," and so we went out in the other room and I took my friend, I said—

Q. Don't tell what you said out in the other room.

A. Okay. And we came on back in and either I repeated some questions or asked him what effect this would have on —if this had anything to do—oh, I also said, "I am going to be free after this is over to go and come as I please?"

And he said, "Yes, that is right, under bond."

Q. And did you make preliminary arrangements to make your bond?

A. I said, "All right, I waive the hearing," when it came to that point.

Q. And at that point then you did waive the preliminary hearing?

A. On the bond.

Q. I see.

A. Right, on making a bond.

Q. All right, sir.

[fol. 719] A. But my previous question was a hearing about anything else they did.

Q. I see. And did you, were you taken then— Strike that. Where were you taken?

A. I was taken back into the room where we had been, just a vacant room with tables and chairs and, let's—we sat there 10 or 15 minutes and then finally somebody came in and said, "Come on down."

And they took us downstairs to the Post Office Building. This is the building facing the courthouse.

Q. Right.

A. Yeah, the center of the square. It's the Post Office Building in Oxford. We were taken downstairs into a little room on the side of the hall, little tiny room.

And there was a desk there and a phone and a Marshal, or whoever he was, my guard was sitting right in front of me.

Q. And where were you taken from that room?

A. From that room, that was the—I was taken out of the building and on an airplane to Springfield.

Q. Were you given or served with any type of a court order to take you to Springfield?

A. I was not.

Q. Did you know where you were going?

A. They refused to say whether they were taking me to—[fol. 720] where they were taking me—where I was going or give me any telephones to call or let anybody know where I was going.

Q. And what happened to you then?

A. I—oh, when they got me at the bottom—away from the phone and away from the desk and my friend with me, they got me to the bottom of the courthouse, the Federal Building, going out the back door, they turned around and started searching me and taking—searching me and telling my friend he could go no further.

Q. How were you taken to Springfield?

A. We were driven from there to the airport, four men in the car. They got lost going to the airport. Finally got there.

I was gotten out of the car, walked over to a plane that was all ready to go and got on this Ranger plane, it looked like, and marched on the plane.

They wouldn't tell me where I was going, they wouldn't tell me where, where I could phone anybody or where anybody could catch me.

I was put on this airplane and it was ready to go and I heard some of the crew say something about Springfield as I got on the plane. I didn't say anything.

Got on the plane. And engines started and off we went and I looked at the clock, I think about 5:00 o'clock, took off.

[fol. 721] Q. Did you find out where Springfield was, which Springfield?

A. Well, on the plane the only thing I said to anybody on the plane, I said, "Now I heard the word 'Springfield,' is that Springfield, Illinois? Where is this plane going?

He said, "No, that's Springfield, Missouri."

Q. And did you get to Springfield, Missouri?

A. We landed then at Springfield, Missouri, about an hour and a half later and were met there.

Q. Where were you taken?

A. Somebody met us and we were taken to the Springfield Prison, medical—called a prison medical center, U.S. Prison, Medical Center.

Q. And were you advised what type of an institution that was?

Mr. Gooch: Now, if the Court please—

The Witness: I asked the man in the car—

Mr. Watts: Wait just a minute.

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as a conclusion. It's wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case, as to what happened—

The Court: Overruled, Counsel.

Mr. Gooch: Note the exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Were you advised, yes, or no, what type of institution that was?

[fol. 722]. A. Not until I got in the car. I said, "Where are we headed?" When I got in this automobile. It was obvious, the man that was driving was, seemed to be—

Q. I don't care about the driver.

A. And I asked and he said, "You are going to the Springfield Medical Center."

I said, "I object. I don't want to go there." And, "I'm not going there under free will."

He said, "You are going there, that's our orders," and he took me there.

Q. Did you later find out what type of institution that was?

A. I certainly found out immediately what type it was. There was a sign on the road going in saying what it was.

Q. What was it?

A. U.S. Prison, Medical Center.

Q. What, did it have anything to do with mental patients?

A. It's basically for mental patients, criminal, mentally insane.

Q. Were you incarcerated in that institution?

A. I certainly was, in a six-by-eight cell.

Q. For how long?

A. For six days.

Q. Then where did you go after you got out, where did [fol. 723] you go?

A. I went to—I went back to Dallas.

Q. And when you got back to Dallas, did there come to your attention a news report or a couple of news reports that were printed in the Fort Worth Star Telegram under the byline of the Associated Press?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. And are those the reports that you heard me read to the jury when this trial first started?

A. Yes, I have heard those reports read to the jury.

Q. Will you tell the jury please, sir, just what effect it had upon you when these Fort Worth Star Telegram reports of the Associated Press came to your attention?

A. Well, it's very humiliating and degrading and, of course, very hurtful, hurt your sense of feeling and it's depressing and just unbelievable that these sort of reports could be going out clear all over this part of the country where I have so many friends and all over the west part of the state, in this Fort Worth Area, and even into the Dallas Area, saying that you had been leading charges on a campus of students and then that you are six days in a cell for insane people as a criminal.

Mr. Gooch: Just a minute.

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, skip the insane.

Mr. Gooch: I move the answer be stricken. That is not [fol. 724] in this case.

The Court: Sustained. The jury is instructed not to consider it.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now I am talking strictly about these articles in the Fort Worth Star Telegram, about your leading this charge.

A. Oh, I see. Well, that I am leading a charge and that this is putting out the word, it would make anybody naturally look like they were crazy, people and your friends and everybody all over the country would think you were crazy that read the press saying that.

Mr. Gooch: We object.

Mr. Watts: Don't say what they thought, that's right.

The Court: Sustained. The jury is instructed not to consider it.

The Witness: Well, this is my feelings—

Mr. Watts: Let him—

The Court: Just a minute.

The Witness: I'm sorry, Your Honor.

The Court: The jury is instructed not to consider any part of the answer relating to what someone else may have thought about the reports.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Well, what I am trying to get is, what you thought in your own mind when you read this article that you, as [fol. 725] a former Major General of the United States Army, had led a charge of students.

A. Well, I felt humiliated, after being in the service for 30 years, and you got millions of friends in the service and then you, as a Major General, I was humiliated and degraded throughout the entire military service as well as—

Mr. Gooch: We object, as to where he was degraded.

Mr. Watts: What you thought.

The Witness: Let's stick to the Fort Worth and Dallas and friends in Texas—

Mr. Watts: Wait just a minute. He wants to object.

Mr. Gooch: I move the answer be stricken from the record.

The Court: It's stricken.

Mr. Watts: That's right.

The Court: The jury is instructed not to consider it.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now what I am asking you is what you thought in your own mind when you read this article in the Fort Worth Star Telegram. You have covered it fairly well but finish the rest of it now as to what impression it had on you personally.

A. Impression of humiliation.

Q. How long had you, as an individual, been reading [fol. 726] this newspaper?

A. I read this newspaper all—off and on all the time when I have been in Texas, from time to time.

Q. All your life?

A. Right.

Q. And what was the position with which you, as an individual, had held the Fort Worth Star Telegram all of your life?

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Go ahead and tell the Court and jury.

A. Well, it's one of the major press papers in the State of Texas and certainly it has a high circulation among farm and ranch people all over the South, southwest part of Texas, and you find it everywhere in ranch people and where my many friends are and where I am known and where I know people, and just humiliation to think about it and I was—I thought about it night and day for a long time. It's just a—

Q. Did it affect your sleep any?

A. Well, sir, certainly, you end up nights thinking about what you can do to bring—to recover.

[fol. 727] Q. Did you have any way to explain or to counteract this publicity?

A. No, no way. You just know it's gone out and that's what everybody's thinking, they have every right—

Mr. Gooch: We object to what everybody is thinking.

Mr. Watts: Don't tell that.

The Witness: All right.

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just tell what you thought, not what the others were thinking.

Mr. Gooch: Move the Court to instruct the jury not to consider it.

The Court: The jury is instructed not to consider the last part of the witness' answer relating to what anyone else may have thought when they read the article.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. In other words, just tell what you thought they thought—

Mr. Gooch: They thought?

The Witness: What I thought they thought?

Mr. Watts: Strike that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. I am trying to find out what you thought up between these two ears (indicating). I don't care about anybody else.

A. Well, I thought I was well humiliated, well degraded, [fol. 728] well deceitful and false information.

Q. Did you consider that prior to that time you had any type of reputation in the area where you were born and raised, so far as being a peaceable, law-abiding citizen was concerned?

A. Well, I certainly did. I—

Q. Had you ever been at any time charged with a crime before?

A. No, I hadn't.

Q. Now speaking of crimes, what finally happened to you, so far as these charges of crime were concerned?

A. These charges were all placed against me on October the 1st, and the Government found, or the—the charges were all dropped, the court found—

Q. You don't know what the court found.

A. Well, the charges were dropped, and insufficient evidence, there wasn't any proof of it.

Mr. Gooch: Just a minute.

Mr. Watts: No, you don't know anything about the evidence.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. You had been out up until the time these charges were dropped, you had been out on bond, hadn't you?

A. That's correct.

Q. Was your bond released?

[fol. 729] A. Yes, my bond was released. The charges were dropped.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, I believe you have testified that you were born in Center Point and I believe that's in Kerr County, I guess?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a rather stable, God-fearing, law-abiding community, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You came up in the atmosphere that law and order must be obeyed, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You attended the schools there in Center Point and then the Shriner Institute, I believe you have stated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Shriner Institute is a military school, is it not?

A. I believe it had an organization in it and it's by choice.

Q. All right. And did you take the military training afforded in Shriner Institute?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Shriner Institute is a private school as distinguished [fol. 730] from a tax-paid school, is it not?

A. It may still be. I believe it was at that time.

Q. It's a very good school and you can get a good education there, can you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are taught law and order there, aren't you?

A. In all schools, yes.

Q. Then you went to New Mexico Military Institute?

A. Right, sir.

Q. Is that a military school?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any choice there but to be in the military units?

A. No, it's a state school.

Q. And the courses there are based on, as well as academic education, based on military ideas and ideals, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then from New Mexico Military Institute, I believe you stated that you entered West Point, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not attend West Point as a matter of right, do you?

A. Will you restate that question?

Q. I say, you do not attend West Point as a matter of [fol. 731] right; I mean by that, General, that you must be appointed, based on qualifications, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, but anybody has a chance to apply for those qualifications, anybody in the country.

Q. I realize that, but you can't enter West Point like you would enter the University or TCU or some place of that sort; you have to apply and it's competitive, isn't it?

A. There are some more requirements but you have requirements for every school.

Q. All right. But you have to receive an appointment from some Senator, or Congressman or the President, to get in West Point, do you not?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 732] Q. Well, I have been misinformed.

A. You have, Mr. Gooch, because you can get an appointment from other sources. You can take it competitive.

Q. What are the other sources?

A. Competitive examination.

Q. Doesn't the appointment still have to come from a Congressman, a Senator or the President of the United States, even after the competition?

A. The source of that appointment can come from other sources. As I understand, they can—they may come through those hands, but they are based purely on competition, and they may come without the people seeing the person or knowing them.

Q. Did you go there on competition, or were you appointed?

A. I was appointed from Texas.

Q. All right. You took the four year course, I assume, at West Point?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that a school that is designed, among other things, to teach leadership?

A. Not just for that purpose.

Q. No.

A. It teaches leadership.

Q. I said among other things, General.

[fol. 733] A. Yes, sir.

Q. You completed that course there at West Point within the four year allotted period of time, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of your graduation from West Point I believe you stated yesterday that you had an option to either go on with the Military career, or resign, is that correct?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, that is—a—

A. No, sir, not exactly.

Mr. Watts: No such thing.

The Court: He is asking, and he answered.

A. It is changed from time to time. Whether it is two or four, I don't know what it is now. But they can keep you in the Service for a certain length of time.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. That is my point.

A. That is the requirement, see.

Q. My next—

A. Then—but everybody knows that before they come in, so you see there is no decision to make when you come out of there. Now, if a boy wants to get out, he can get out whenever his time is up, whatever that happens to be, two or four years. It is varied. Sometimes they are not too strict about it. On whether there is a country emergency, whether they don't need them, or they do.

[fol. 734] But, in general, everybody goes to West Point with the idea that that is a career for them, and then quite a few of them drop out after their time is up.

Q. My point was that after a certain length of time, which you say varies from time to time, you have your choice of either staying in for a Military career or resigning your commission, is that correct?

A. Generally, yes. Nobody presents this choice. You just go—you don't consider it. Yes, the answer is yes.

Q. You elected, then, of course, to make the Military your permanent career by staying in, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. It is obvious I don't know too much about the rank and file above that of corporal, but as I understand, you come out with a Second Lieutenant's commission, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated, and I may be in error in this, that you got out in, did you say 1930?

A. '31, sir.

Q. 1931. And you rose rather rapidly through the ranks from Second Lieutenant to Major General; is that correct?

A. I rose along with my classmates.

[fol. 735] Q. Are the—strike that.

Is the procession from a Second Lieutenant to a Major General based entirely on seniority, or is it based on aptitude and training, and records?

A. Both.

Q. All right. Did you advance along with your classmates, or did you surpass some of them, or some of them surpass you?

A. Some of them surpassed me and I advanced along with some of them.

Q. Did you surpass any of your classmates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, you spoke yesterday of after you graduated from West Point that you have opportunities, and I didn't know whether you said opportunities, obligations or commands, to continue your Military education. Which is it, General?

A. You have the requirement and opportunities both, in the Military Service.

Q. All right. That is the question I am asking you.

A. Both, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated you availed yourself of opportunities to do some work in the air division, Air Force?

[fol. 736] A. Right, sir.

Q. As a commando, or guerrilla warfare?

A. Right, sir.

Q. And perhaps artillery, or was artillery originally what you set out to be?

A. Artillery is basically right.

Q. All right. Now, in the training for this commando, or guerrilla warfare—by the way, what is guerrilla warfare, General?

A. It is warfare in smaller groups with less organization; a large organization getting special training to fight guerrilla warfare, like you have seen reported in Vietnam.

Q. It is sort of small group action that requires special training to rush in rather quickly, hit an objective and withdraw, being able to live off the land, something of that sort?

A. To have guerrilla training you must have all other training, and this is on top of the other training you have had, and that includes to fulfill any requirement of striking the enemy in any size numbers.

Q. All right. And that, as distinguished from drawing battle lines and digging trenches and digging in, shall we say, for a long seige, is that correct?

A. Basically right, yes.

[fol. 737] Q. All right. Now, when did you receive your commission as a Brigadier General?

A. I received it in 1953, on leave in Texas.

Q. 1953. Now, that was based, I believe you stated, on seniority, on leadership, on education, and perhaps I don't know, but maybe you can enlarge on, but at least are those factors considered in your advancement?

A. Yes, they would have to be, like they are in any profession.

Q. All right: You mentioned also in your direct examination that up to around, and I believe I am correct, I am not sure—sometime around '60 or '61 you were in command of the 24th Division in Germany; is that correct?

A. From '59 to '61.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Right, sir.

Q. All right. I believe you also said with considerable pride that you thought the 24th Division was the best outfit you had seen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you attributed that to your leadership, did you not?

A. Not entirely. I had some good men in it, and they made the organization.

Q. That's right. It takes all men to make the organiza-

[fol. 738] tion, is that right?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. The General is successful when he can get the cooperation of the subordinates, isn't he?

A. That certainly helps.

Q. It also permeates from his own staff down into the foot soldiers, shall we call them, the privates.

A. Even the corporals, Mr. Gooch.

Q. All right. You took a good deal of pride in the fact that you had been able to bring that 24th into what you considered a great organization, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, prior to the time you had the 24th in Germany you stated that you had an assignment in the State of Arkansas. Can you tell us when you received the assignment to the State of Arkansas?

A. Well, sir, I received it before I left Hawaii, and I had some leave in there on change of station and—say a month and a half or two months.

Q. Well, I was just trying to get at the timing that you were in charge of the Arkansas—and frankly I didn't get just the correct name of your title in Arkansas. Will you give me that, please, sir?

A. Arkansas Military District, parenthesis Reserve, I believe, parenthesis closed, and then the title changed dur-
[fol. 739] ing that period of time because we were doing—reorganizing the Reserve all over the United States, and it had something in it with regard to Corps 8—no, I have forgotten it. Maybe General Watts will remember. I think part of Oklahoma was in it. 8th Corps Reserve?

Mr. Watts: 19th.

A. 19th Corps Reserve.

Mr. Gooch: You mind letting the witness testify?
Mr. Watts: Excuse me.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. My question originally was: Do you remember when you assumed command of the Arkansas unit?

A. I went there within two or three days of the first of September, as I remember it.

Q. I was trying to get it as related to the time of the Little Rock incident.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which you have testified about.

A. Right, sir.

Q. And would you say about how many days you were in charge of the Little Rock contingent before the Little Rock incident occurred?

A. About twenty-five or thirty days.

Q. At the time you went to Little Rock I assume you knew nothing about an incident that might occur later on?

[fol. 740] A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. I believe you also testified, coming down chronologically, that you resigned your commission as a Major General in 1961?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. At that time I believe you also stated, and contradict me if I am wrong, that you had an option of retirement or resignation; is that correct?

A. Well, they wanted me to retire but I didn't want to, so I resigned.

Q. I assume the answer to my question is "yes", you could either take a retirement or you could resign, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, had you taken retirement, I believe you testified that your emoluments, pay and fringe benefits and so forth would have amounted to around $15,000.00 a year?

A. Something in that area, right, sir.

Q. And by your resignation you forgave or forfeited any right to that retirement benefit; is that correct?

A. Right, sir.

Q. Then you returned to the State of Texas, you stated. Now, you stated yesterday, without giving a reason, that [fol. 741] you had reasons for retiring—I mean for resigning from the Army rather than retiring. Did you make those reasons known at the time you resigned rather than retired?

A. Not all of them, no, sir.

Q. Well, did you make some of them known?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were your reasons, or some of your reasons, if you don't care to give them all, as to why you resigned rather than retired?

A. Well, the difference between retiring and resigning is the pay, and you are in subsidy of the Government, the taxpayers money, when you retire, and I felt that I wanted to be able to speak, if I wanted to speak, or if I decided to say anything, I wanted to be able to free to say just what I wanted, and without any strings attached, and I didn't feel that it would be fair to everybody and say everything you want when you want, so I wanted to resign.

Q. You wanted full freedom to express your opinion on any subject that you cared to; is that a fair statement?

A. I wanted the freedom as I have stated, Mr. Gooch.

Q. You wanted the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States of freedom of speech, did you not?

[fol. 742] A. I just changed, Mr. Gooch, from the title of General to the title of Mister, and I expected the things to happen that happen when you do that.

Q. You expected what?

A. I expected the rights and so forth to change as it would from getting out of the uniform of a General to getting into civilian life. I wanted the title Mister, not General. That is the way I am now. I have no right to be called by the title of General. People can call me whatever they want to, but I don't sign my name General, and I don't intend to, and I don't have any right to. I am a Mister.

Q. Do you object to my calling you General?

A. I can't object to it, no, sir.

Q. The rank of Major General is a respected rank, is it not?

A. A General in the Army is a very respected rank, yes, sir, and certainly some of the other ranks ought to be more respected.

Q. And the rank of a Major General is respected in all climbs among all people, is it not, sir?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is rather a sacred trust, isn't it?

A. So is corporal.

Q. Well, I believe a Major General is just a wee bit [fol. 743] higher than corporal, if I am not mistaken; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, you are right.

Q. All right. Now, upon your resignation from the Army I believe you stated you went back to your home for a short period of time and then moved to Dallas. At the time of your resignation, did you receive a considerable amount of publicity concerning your resignation and the events leading up thereto?

A. Yes, sir, there was quite a bit of information in print about it.

Q. Did you then decide upon a political career, speaking career, or what, General?

A. I decided to speak and talk to people and—

Q. Did you expect to receive some kind of emolument from the speaking you engaged in?

A. Well, I assume I did. I had to have some way to live.

Q. Was that the way you chose to live, by your speaking engagements?

A. Partially.

Q. I don't intend to pry into your financial affairs, unless you want to reveal them, but $15,000.00 a year is a good deal of money, isn't it, General?

A. Quite a bit.

[fol. 744] Q. You felt you could manage on your speaking engagements as well, I assume, as you could have on your retirement pay?

A. Basically, at that time, Mr. Gooch, I just considered I could always get a job. I wanted to be Mister and get a job.

Q. Did you apply for a job?

A. Well, I talked to people about jobs.

Q. Did you ever take a job?

A. Well, a fringe one, you might say, or semi-one.

Q. What was that job?

A. Well, as you asked me about later, did anybody ever pay me for anything, I will say, "Yes, they did."

So, not much of a job, but fringe things. I have done things that people have paid me for.

Q. What was the first job you had after your resignation?

A. Well, the first job you might say, first started with my Dallas speech in December, I believe December or January, '61 or '62. December if it was '61, or January if it was '62.

Q. It must have been '61, because you made a lot of speeches before September, 1962, didn't you, General?

A. Quite a few, yes, sir.

Q. Where did you make your maiden speech? Do you [fol. 745] recall?

A. Made my major speech?

Q. Your maiden, first speech you made after you got out of the Army.

A. My first speech was made in Dallas, as I recall, to about 6,000 people, with a committee from all over the State of Texas, to include, I believe, Gov. Coke Stevenson as Chairman; ex-Gov. Coke Stevenson.

Q. Did you receive pay for making that speech?

A. There was no plan before the speech to pay me. I believe after it was over they had a little money left over that they gave me.

Q. From then on down to the present, have you engaged rather extensively in speech making all over the country?

A. I have been making speeches across the country, yes, sir.

Q. Is there a constant demand on you and your time for speaking engagements, General?

A. Yes, sir, off and on and continuously, yes, sir.

Q. Has that continued right on down to the present time?

A. Well, there have been changes when it went up, the requirement, and when it went down through this period.

Q. You mean it has fluctuated?

[fol. 746] A. It fluctuates.

Q. Did it fluctuate before the Oxford incident, or have you been more in demand since the Oxford incident than you were before?

A. I certainly wouldn't say that following the Oxford incident it went up. Certainly it didn't.

Q. Well, did it go down?

A. Well, it wasn't going up, it wasn't staying where it was. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. How many times did you have speaking engagements prior to the Oxford incident? Do you have any records of that?

A. No, I don't have any records.

Q. Do you have any record of how many you have made since the Oxford incident?

A. No, sir, not in—not laid out anywhere.

Q. All right. You testified a moment ago you did gain—have some employment shortly after or sometime after your resignation? Where was that employment? You said the Dallas speech in December, I believe you said, of 1961; that would have been about a month after you got out of the Service?

[fol. 747] A. No, sir, I didn't say I had a job, had a job or anything. I had a consultant card that I used and then I—

Q. Who employed you?

A. I was paid once or twice for contact work which—

Q. By whom, please, sir?

A. Mr. Arthur Leman.

Q. Is that the father of the young man who testified here yesterday?

A. Right, sir.

Q. That was with the Southwest Oil Products, I believe he stated was his employer?

A. Yes, sir, down in Houston.

Q. You did some work for them?

A. Contact work, yes, sir.

Q. In the nature of what, please, sir?

A. Oh, it's oil well equipment and oil field equipment and as I knew a lot of people and was going around the country, why, I could ask people if they couldn't use Southwest Oil Products.

Q. General, didn't you testify on your deposition that it was to talk about Americanism?

A: Yes, I— That's part of the contact work with respect to their factory, and so forth. I was in their firm two or three times and talked around the men in the factory.

[fol. 748] Q. All right. Now you stated that your first major speech or maiden speech—it must be coincidental—was made along in September of 1961, or January of 1962, do you remember which it was?

A. May I refresh my memory off of—

Q. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: What would you like to have? The deposition? What would you have—

(Witness leaves witness chair and returns.)

A. Dallas, December the 12th, 1961.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. It has been called to my attention by my associate counsel that I inadvertently said 'September." I meant to say December, 1961 or January, 1962.

A. Yes, sir, I think, answering the question, was about the Dallas speech?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. It was in Dallas on December the 12th, 1961, sir.

Q. That was about a month and a half after you got out of the Army, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, General, are you a member of the John Birch Society?

A. Yes, sir, I am a home member.

Q. How long have you been a member of the John Birch Society?

[fol. 749] A. I joined the John Birch Society when I was in Little Rock: I think it was the spring of '58 or '59. '59, probably.

Q. Are you active in that organization?

A. Not too active.

Q. Do they provide speaking engagements?

A. I'm too busy.

Q. Do they—

A. Sir?

Q. You are too busy, did you say you are too busy to take part in that organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Is your time pretty well occupied, General?

A. Yes, sir, I think so. Maybe some of it is wasted but I stay pretty busy.

Q. Are you able to keep something going at all times, is that correct?

A. Oh, I am interested in what's going on all the time.

Q. Do you do a good deal of writing?

A. Yes, sir, but I am not good at it.

Q. Well, do you do it, that's the question I'm asking?

A. Oh, research and reading and writing.

Q. Do you sell it?

A. Yes, sir, after it's well-edited and read over and takes [fol. 750] a lot of time to get my writing into print because I am not—

Q. What is the name of your publication?

A. We go under the name, I and one other fellow, as "The American Eagle Publishing Company."

Q. And where is that located?

A. In Dallas.

Q. And how long has it been in existence?

A. Sometime in 1962, say the—I don't remember the exact date. June, July, August, somewhere in the center of 1962.

Q. Who is your associate?

A. Mr. Robert Surrey.

Q. Does it have a subscription list or do you sell it by the copy or do people subscribe to it or how do they pay for it?

A. We don't have any regular publication. Whenever I get something on a particular subject or that I think would interest people, why, I, we print it under the title of the American Eagle Publishing Company and send it to friends or distribute it or we do have a subscription group that is set up just to get anything we print at any time.

We have got no regular—and they were told they have no regular time of publication.

Q. Do they pay a subscription fee for it per year?

[fol. 751] A. A group of people do.

Q. About how many subscribers do you have, General?

A. About 250 or 300 subscribers. Sir?

Q. Are those the subscribers?

A. Yes.

Q. How do the others purchase copies of the publication?

A. Well, there are friends in different areas and they see a copy with them. We often send out a mailing of two or three thousand to our friends.

Q. And do they pay for that when they receive it?

A. Not that I—some do, some don't.

Q. Well, now you mentioned in your deposition, "Friends of Walker."

Is that the same as the publication list of the American Eagle Publishing Company?

A. No, but they overlap. No, sir, but they overlap.

Q. What is the organization known as "Friends of Walker"?

A. Just a vague organization. They are groups in the country that call themselves "Friends of Walker". There are some in California, there are some in Arizona and there are some in Dallas and they are different places. They have—people step up and say, "We are friends of Walker," and that's all they say.

[fol. 752] Q. Do they make a contribution to you?

A. Some, as groups, and some as individuals. It's—there is no organization in particular to it.

They may have organized a little group locally and call themselves, "Friends of Walker".

Q. Are those groups still in existence?

A. Oh, I think so.

Q. Now in the spring of 1962, did you take a venture into politics?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you announce for the office of Governor of the State of Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where you made your announcement?

A. I believe I made it in Austin, sir.

Q. Well, I was just wondering. Some of the reports, or one of your publications said you may have made it in Chicago. I wasn't sure about that.

A. I may have.

Q. Well, do you remember where you made it?

A. I have a Chicago speech here. February the 9th, 1962, and I believe I—I believe the sign-up date, if it's the same as it was this year, which I don't remember, is February the 3rd. Is that right?

Q. I think that's somewhere around near. I was just [fol. 753] trying to find out where it was that you made your first announcement?

A. I don't know, sir.

Q. But anyhow, you did subject yourself to the primaries for the year 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made an extensive campaign, did you not, General?

A. Yes, sir, that's where I met Mr. Leman.

Q. You covered the state as best you could during the time from your announcement until election day, did you not?

A. Yes, sir, that was my objective.

Q. You received press reports concerning your ideologies and ideas during the Governor's campaign, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were serious about running for the Governorship, weren't you, General?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You weren't running for the governorship just for publicity, were you?

A. I was running to be Governor of the State of Texas, Mr. Gooch.

Q. Along with the duties of the Governor of the State of Texas is one of the leadership of the people of the State, is it not?

[fol. 754] A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wanted to be the leader of the people of Texas, or you wouldn't have announced for Governor, is that correct?

A. Wanted to be Governor of the State of Texas.

Q. All right. Now, after your race for Governor, which I believe, the primaries were in May of 1962, I believe they were, is that correct, General?

A. I don't know.

Q. Anyhow, after the race for Governor in May of 1962, you did engage in speaking engagements thereafter, did you not?

A. I was campaigning throughout the State of Texas.

Q. No, I mean after the election, did you still continue to make speeches?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you usually receive press notices and coverages on the speeches you made?

A. Maybe so, maybe not, sir.

Q. Well, there has to be some publicity concerning a speech or a speaker before you can get an audience, doesn't there, General?

A. Yes, sir, but they can sure let you go into town and not say a word about it.

Q. I am getting down to the next question. You stated [fol. 755] that you had been able rather successfully to get press conferences because the press sought you out and on occasions you sought the press out; did you make that statement, somewhat to that effect?

A. Yes, sir, about a certain area and time, yeah, that's a good statement. Yes, sir, I'll stick by it.

Q. All right. You were able, were you not, at most any time you choice to get a group of reporters, when you would advise that the—advise them that you had a statement to make, is that not a fact?

A. What period are we talking about? During the campaign?

Q. During the campaign and after the campaign, down, we'll say, until September 30, 1962?

A. Mr. Gooch, it doesn't matter how many, whether you get a group of reporters or not. It's what they say after you've talked to them. You can talk your head off to a group of reporters for two hours. They question you and then they go out and print nothing and you are just wasting your time.

Or they print something that doesn't mean anything. I don't think it means any particular thing, my answer, I'm not trying to—but the point is, it's a question of what they say, it's not whether you get a group of physical people looking at you. They'll come and look at you any time and [fol, 756] you'll think, "Oh, boy, this is going to be great." And when you get through, there is nothing in print. Or they put it down when it doesn't say what you intended or it's drawn out of context.

Now right now, the whole thing is, the effort—nobody will say anything you say about foreign policy or Cuba or DM or—they won't even talk about it.

They won't even mention MacArthur, what I say about MacArthur. So what's the point about getting a bunch of people together? I'm not—this is off the—just so it's understood. It doesn't quite make it clear that when—just because you can call people together,—oh, they'll come together. I have had the most wonderful groups of people together, say, in Portland, and some of the biggest press conferences I ever saw.

When you get to looking for what happened, nothing.

Then you try to go into a town, many places, or you are going into a town for a speech, if they don't want to carry you, they won't. You would think they would that day. And then sometimes else you may think, "Well, maybe they won't carry that," and maybe they will say something good about you or at least tell the public you are there.

Q. Anything else, General?

A. Oh, there are a lot of things, Mr. Gooch, but we can go on with your story.

[fol. 757] Q. Go right on, if you have got something else to say.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I don't think this is proper testimony.

The Court: Let's go on.

Mr. Gooch: He hasn't answered the question. I will reask the question. I asked him if he had any difficulty in getting press conferences. That was the question I asked to start with, Your Honor.

Mr. Andress: I think he answered it, Judge. Said he could always get a group of people together.

The Court: You may answer it again.

The Witness: Your Honor?

The Court: You go ahead and answer the question.

The Witness: Will you repeat the question, sir?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Did you have any trouble from the time you started making your speeches—we will generalize now—from December of 1961 down to September 30th of 1962, getting news reporters, newspaper reporters to come to you when you wished to have a press conference?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. All right, tell me about it.

A. Many times when your most important subject comes up, situation of what's going on in this country or things that I would know about, the press doesn't want to hear about it. Not going to print, so there is no use them coming [fol. 758] to me.

Q. Have you been denied at any time a press conference when you had asked the press to come and receive a statement from you?

A. I don't have any right to make them come to me, sir.

Q. That wasn't what I asked you. Have you been denied —have they told you they weren't going to come and listen to you at any time?

A. I wouldn't be put in that position. I wouldn't give them that chance.

Q. Then I assume when you have called a press conference, you have received the press, is that correct?

A. When I called a press conference, I have received the press, the press has come, as I remember, except there have been times when the press didn't show up, as we thought it would, or I thought it would.

Q. Well, I'm just asking the question now, which I will repeat once more, at the times you have asked for a press conference, you have gotten a press conference, haven't you, General?

A. Basically, yes, Mr. Gooch. Right.

Q. All right. All right. Now in September or let's go back a little further, from the time that the primary was over in May of 1962, when you ran for Governor, and the 30th day of September, 1962, did you learn of the litigation [fol. 759] in the State of Mississippi concerning the entry of one Meredith into Ole Miss University?

A. In general, I learned about it, right.

Q. Did you consider at that time and during that period that the question of integration throughout the United States, and particularly the South, was a subject of national interest and perhaps national controversy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you keep up generally with the Court battle involving the entry of Meredith into Ole Miss?

A. Oh, not in detail from day to day. Just in general.

Q. Did you learn prior to September 30, 1962, that the Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans had made a final order directing that Meredith be entered as a student in the University of Mississippi?

A. I knew an order had been—a court order had been issued. I don't remember whether I knew it was the Circuit Court—that Meredith would be entered in Mississippi, yes, sir.

Q. Well, you knew that long prior to September 30, 1962, that the Courts had ordered the entry of Meredith into the University of Mississippi, did you not?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Q. You were well aware of that prior to September 25th [fol. 760] or 26th or 27th, 28th, 29th or 30th of September, were you not?

A. Yes, sir, I was aware of it.

Q. You knew that the Courts had said that Meredith must be entered, did you not?

A. In effect, yes, sir.

Q. You knew that, or did you know that Governor Ross Barnett was opposing the entry of Meredith into the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, he was, sir.

Q. Did you ever learn from any source that Governor Barnett ever changed his position in opposition to the entry of Meredith into the University of Mississippi?

A. Changed from opposing it to not opposing, or assisting it?

Q. That's right.

A. From opposing it to assisting it?

Q. Or being passive about it? Let me rephrase the question:—

A. No, sir, as far as I am concerned, he was opposing continuously the entry of Meredith.

Q. And that was right on down to the time that Meredith was actually on the campus, wasn't it, General?

A. As far as I know, he was.

Q. And, as a matter of fact, in your speech to the stu- [fol. 761] dents on the campus, you told them that Barnett was still standing fast against the entry of Meredith on the campus, didn't you?

A. As I remember, in my speech, it was, as I said it, that I told them that Barnett had not betrayed them and that Barnett, in effect, that Barnett is standing opposing, the same as he had been standing all the time, was my idea.

Q. You knew that Barnett was openly defying the judgment of the Federal Court which ordered the entry of Meredith into Ole Mississippi, didn't you?

A. I knew that he was opposing it.

Q. You knew prior to the time that you had any utterances relative to going to Mississippi that Governor Barnett had blocked the entry of Meredith into the Registrar's Office at Ole Miss, didn't you?

A. You—the question with respect to him personally?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I knew he had been on the campus and that he had stood opposing and blocked the entrance of Meredith, yes, sir. I think that answers the question.

Q. It does. Prior to the time that you went to Mississippi, were you or not informed that Governor Barnett, as well as the Lt. Governor, had been held in civil contempt by the Circuit Court at New Orleans for forcibly blocking the entrance of Meredith into the University of Mississippi?

[fol. 762] A. I don't know that I had heard that, if you can refresh my time and the date of that, I might be able to say but I don't think I had heard it, but he may have.

Q. I think it was around the 25th of September.

A. Now this was contempt?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That Barnett had—question, sir—

Q. As to whether or not Governor Barnett had been held in civil contempt by the Circuit Court of New Orleans for disobeying the orders of the Circuit Court?

A. Yes, sir, and there had been an appeal made and that Barnett, as representative of the state, had a requirement before the Supreme Court to go back into court and to be heard for himself and the State of Mississippi.

Q. All right.

A. And this was the position, as I understood it, about that time.

Q. But you did know that an Injunction had been issued out of the Circuit Court in New Orleans prohibiting Barnett, Jackson (sic) and those knowing about the Injunction, for Barnett and Johnson and the School Board to cease and desist from preventing the entrance of Meredith into the University of Mississippi, did you not?

A. I understood that was a ruling in some court. I'm not sure that I knew that was the—which court it was. [fol. 763] But I knew that had been a ruling in some court and I—there was other activities on the other side that had gone about in the Courts, opposing that.

Q. All right. But you did know that there was a court order decreeing that Meredith be entered into the student body at Ole Miss as early as, we'll say, the 25th of September, 1962, did you not?

A. As early as—what date?

Q. September 25th of 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now General, are you familiar with how the processes of the Federal Courts are carried out?

A. I wasn't too familiar at that time. I am becoming more familiar all the time.

Q. Well, you know that the United States Marshals serve the same function in Federal Courts as Sheriffs and Bailiffs and Deputy Sheriffs in State Courts?

A. I don't know that I considered it. That they have the same functions as the Sheriffs in a county?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, I wouldn't consider that they had the same functions as the county.

Q. No, I said insofar as enforcing the judgments of the court, did you have any knowledge—

A. Oh, you have a right to force the en-judgment (sic) [fol. 764] of a court by Marshals, right.

Q. That's the very question I asked you.

A. Right, sir, that's what I wanted to tell you. Sure, I know that.

Q. All right. And that the Marshals are charged with the duty of enforcing the judgments of the Federal Courts, are they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you knew—

A. I don't quite compare them to Sheriffs, though.

Q. Well, I was trying to draw an analogy. I don't know that I am slandering either one of them. I respect both offices.

A. So do I, Mr. Gooch.

Mr. Watts: I don't think that's a proper comment, if the Court please.

The Court: I don't think there was any harm by it, Counsel.

Mr. Watts: No, I don't think there is any harm.

The Court: Let's recess until 2:00 o'clock, Ladies and Gentlemen.

(Thereupon, at 11:57 a.m., a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock, p.m., of the same day.)

[fol. 765]

Afternoon Session

2:00 P. M.

Cross examination (continued).

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, just before the noon recess we were discussing the various Court orders in connection with Meredith's entrance into the University of Mississippi, and you have testified concerning your knowledge of those. That was the substance of our interrogation and answers before the noon recess, was it not?

A. That I had general knowledge of them, yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We now offer in evidence, if the Court please, a certified copy of the Order vacating stay, recalling mandate, and issuing new mandate forthwith in the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, No. 19475, James H. Meredith, on behalf of himself and others similarly situated, Appellant, versus Charles Dickson Fair, President of the Board of Trustees of the State Institutions of Higher Learning, et al., Appellees.

Mr. Watts: No objection.

The Court: That is Defendant's Exhibit 3?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Court: It is admitted.

[fol. 766] Mr. Gooch: At this time we would like to read a portion of it—it is all in, but I will read the injunction. This is an opinion by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans, dated the 27th day of July, 1962.

EXCERPTS FROM DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 3

"The case is reversed and remanded with directions to the District Court forthwith to grant all relief prayed for by the Plaintiff and to issue forthwith a permanent injunction against each and all of the Defendants-Appellees, their servants, agents, employees, successors and assigns, and all persons acting in concert with them, as well as any and all persons having knowledge of the decree, enjoining and compelling each and all of them to admit the Plaintiff-Appellant, James H. Meredith, to the University of Mississippi under his application heretofore filed, which are declared by us to be continuing applications. Such injunction shall in terms prevent and prohibit said Defendants-Appellees, or any of the classes of persons referred to from excluding the Plaintiff-Appellant from admission to continued attendance at the University of Mississippi. Pending such time as the District Court has issued and enforced the orders herein required and until such time as there have been full and actual compliance in good faith with [fol. 767] each and all of said orders by the actual admission of Plaintiff-Appellant to, and the continued attendance thereafter at the University of Mississippi, this Court herewith issues its own preliminary injunction enjoining and compelling each and all of said parties to admit Plaintiff-Appellant to, and allow his continual attendance at the University of Mississippi, further prohibiting and preventing said parties, or any other of them, from excluding said Plaintiff-Appellant from attendance to and continued attendance thereafter on the same basis as other students at the University of Mississippi."

(Said Defendant's Exhibit 3 was marked by the Reporter.)

Mr. Gooch: We next offer in evidence the Opinion by Judge Hugo Black of the Supreme Court of the United States in the same captioned case as the previous number, filed September 12, 1962, in the Circuit Court at New Orleans; was entered the 10th day of September, 1962, in Washington.

(Conference at the bench, between Court and Counsel.)

(The instrument next above referred to was marked Defendant's Exhibit 4.)

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 4

Mr. Gooch: The instrument is entitled "Supreme Court [fol. 768] of the United States, October Term, 1962, James H. Meredith versus Charles Dickson Fair, et al. Order. Upon consideration of the application of counsel for the movant and of the opposition of the respondents thereto, it is ordered that the orders of Circuit Judge Ben F. Cameron of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit of July 18, 1962, July 28, 1962, July 31, 1962, and August 6, 1962, purporting to stay the effectiveness of the mandate of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, be, and the same are hereby, vacated and that the Judgment and Mandate of said Court shall be effective immediately.

Be it further ordered that the Respondents be, and they are hereby, enjoined from taking any steps to prevent enforcement of the United States Court of Appeals' Judgment and Mandate pending final action by this Court on the Petition for Writ of Certiorari now on the docket."

And that is signed by Hugo L. Black, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, September 10, 1962.

[fol. 769] Mr. Gooch: Will you mark this, please, as Defendant's Exhibit 5.

(Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibit 5 was marked for identification.)

Mr. Gooch: For identification, this is the order—

Mr. Watts: No objection.

Mr. Gooch: —is the order signed by the United States District Judge, S. C. Mize, for the Southern District of Mississippi on September 13, 1962, following the two other instruments which have been introduced.

The Court: Have you offered it?

Mr. Gooch: I am about to offer it. I was identifying it. We now offer it in evidence.

The Court: Defendant's 5 is admitted.

Mr. Gooch: The same style and number of the case as previously indicated.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 5

"ORDER GRANTING PERMANENT INJUNCTION"

This matter is now before this Court by virtue of the Mandate of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and the Mandate of Mr. Justice Black of September 10, 1962 setting aside all stays granted by Judge Ben F. Cameron and putting into effect the mandates of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit enjoining the Trustees and officials of the University of Mississippi from [fol. 770] taking any steps to prevent enforcement of the mandates of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and this Court having now considered the mandates of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit of July 17, 1962, July 27, 1962 and its final order of August 4, 1962, and this Court having considered the mandate of July 17, 1962, wherein the Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the District Court with directions to this Court to issue an injunction as prayed for in the complaint and by its mandate of July 27, 1962 ordered that the judgment of that Court issued as and for the mandate on July 17, 1962, be recalled and amended by making explicit the meaning that was implicit as expressed in its opinion dated June 25, 1962 and ordering that this Court "forthwith grant all relief prayed for by the plaintiff and to issue forthwith a permanent injunction against each and all of the defendants-appellees, their servants, agents, employees, successors and assigns, and all persons acting in concert with them, as well as any and all persons having knowledge of the decree, enjoining and compelling each and all of them to admit the plaintiff-appellant, James H. Meredith, to the University of Mississippi under his applications heretofore filed, which are declared by us to be continuing applications. Such injunction shall in terms prevent and prohibit said defendants-appellees, or any of the classes of persons referred to from excluding the [fol. 771] plaintiff-appellant from admission to continued attendance at the University of Mississippi.

And by its mandate of August 4, 1962 the Court of Appeals reaffirmed its orders of July 17, 1962 and July 27, 1962, in the following language: "All of our orders of July 17, July 27 and this date, therefore continue in full force and effect and require full and immediate obedience and compliance."

Now, therefore, it is here ordered, adjudged and decreed that the plaintiff, James Howard Meredith, be and he is hereby granted all the relief that is prayed for by him in his complaint and that the defendants, Charles Dickson Fair, President of the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning of the State of Mississippi, Louisville, Mississippi; Euclid Ray Jobe, Executive Secretary of the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning of the State of Mississippi, Jackson, Mississippi; Edgar Ray Izard, Hazlehurst, Mississippi; Leon Lowrey, Olive Branch, Mississippi; Ira Lamar Morgan, Oxford, Mississippi; Malcolm Mette Roberts, Hattiesburg, Mississippi; William Orlando Stone, Jackson, Mississippi; S. R. Evans, Greenwood, Mississippi; Verner Smith Holmes, McComb, Mississippi; James Napoleon Lipscomb, Macon, Mississippi; Tally D. Riddell, Quitman, Mississippi; Harry Gordon Carpenter, Rolling Fork, Mississippi; Robert Bruce Smith, II, Ripley, Mississippi and Thomas Jefferson Tubb, [fol. 772] West Point, Mississippi, Members of the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning; James Davis Williams, Chancellor of the University of Mississippi, Oxford, Mississippi; Arthur Beverly Lewis, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts of the University of Mississippi, Oxford, Mississippi, and Robert Byron Ellis, Registrar of the University of Mississippi, Oxford, Mississippi, and each of them, their agents, servants, employees, successors, attorneys and all persons in active concert and participation with them be and they hereby are permanently restrained and enjoined.

13th of September, 1962.

Mr. Watts: Let's see that last document, please, sir. Thank you.

Mr. Gooch: Next one is a certified copy of the order of the Circuit Court, certified May 14,—

September 25, 1962, by the Circuit Court.

Mr. Andress: Is that a final order or is that still on appeal?

Mr. Gooch: As far as I know, it's a final order. I know nothing further about it.

Mark that as Defendant's Exhibit 6.

(Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibit No. 6, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Gooch: I say to you it has not so far been set aside, [fol. 773] Mr. Andress.

The Court: Are you offering 6?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Court: 6 is admitted.

Mr. Gooch: (Reading)

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 6

This Court having on September 25, 1962 issued orders requiring Ross R. Barnett to appear before this Court today at 10:00 a.m., to show cause, if any he has, why he should not be held in civil contempt of the temporary restraining orders entered in this action on September 25, 1962, and Ross R. Barnett having been given notice of the orders to show cause, and it having been regularly called on the calendar for hearing at 10:00 a.m., this day, and Ross R. Barnett having failed to appear or respond in person or by counsel, and having failed to deny the factual statements contained in the verified application of the United States, and of the appellant and

The Court having heard and received evidence on behalf of the United States and of the appellant, and having deliberated and considered the legal issues involved, now renders its Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Judgment as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Since this Court entered into its order of July 28, 1962, and the District Court for the Southern District [fol. 774] Mississippi entered its order on September 13, 1962, requiring the admission of James H. Meredith to the University of Mississippi, Ross R. Barnett, as Governor of the State of Mississippi, has issued a series of proclamations calling upon all officials of the state to prevent and obstruct the carrying out of the Court's orders with respect to the admission of James H. Meredith to the University. Two of these proclamations were issued by Ross R. Barnett on September 24 and September 25, 1962.

2. On September 25, 1962, this Court entered its temporary restraining orders restraining Ross R. Barnett from interfering with or obstructing in any manner or by any means the enjoyment of rights or the performance of obligations under this Court's order of July 28, 1962 and the order of the District Court of September 13, 1962.

3. At approximately 4:30 p.m., on September 25, 1962, Ross R. Barnett, having full knowledge of the existence and terms of this Court's temporary restraining orders, went to the office of the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning in Jackson, Mississippi at a time when James H. Meredith was due to appear at the office and be enrolled as a student in the University of Mississippi, pursuant to the order of this Court. When James H. Meredith arrived at the office and sought to enter for the purpose of enrolling, Ross R. Barnett deliberately prevented him from [fol. 775] entering and told him that his application for enrollment was denied by Ross R. Barnett.

4. On September 26, 1962, James H. Meredith sought to enter the campus of the University of Mississippi, in Oxford, Mississippi. He was prevented from entering by Paul B. Johnson, Jr., Lieutenant Governor of the State of Mississippi, acting pursuant to the instructions and under the authorization of Ross R. Barnett.

5. The conduct of Ross R. Barnett in preventing James H. Meredith from enrolling as a student in the University of Mississippi has been with the deliberate and announced purpose of preventing compliance with the orders of this and other federal courts.

Conclusions of Law

1. This Court has jurisdiction of the person of Ross R. Barnett.

2. Ross R. Barnett is in contempt of the temporary restraining orders entered by this Court on September 25, 1962.

JUDGMENT OF CIVIL CONTEMPT

Upon the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law:

IT IS ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED THAT:

Ross R. Barnett is in civil contempt of the temporary restraining orders of this Court entered September 25, [fol. 776] 1962; that such contempt is continuing; and that Ross R. Barnett shall be committed to and remain in the custody of the Attorney General of the United States and shall pay a fine to the United States of $10,000. per day unless on or before Tuesday, October 2nd, 1962, at 11:00 a.m. he shows to this Court that he is fully complying with the terms of the restraining orders, and that he has notified all law enforcement officers and all other officers under his jurisdiction or command:

(a) To cease forthwith all resistance to and interference with the orders of this Court and the District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi;

(b) To maintain law and order at and around the University and to cooperate with the officers and agents of this Court and of the United States in the execution of the orders of this Court and of the District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to the end that James H. Meredith be permitted to register and remain as a student at the University of Mississippi under the same conditions as apply to all other students.

Nothing herein shall prevent a later assertion of a charge of criminal contempt against Respondent.

Jurisdiction is hereby reserved for such other and further orders as may be appropriate.

Judges Jones, Gewin and Bell dissent from that portion [fol. 777] of the judgment imposing a fine upon the Respondent.

[fol. 778] Filed in the Court of Appeals on September 28, 1962.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, General Walker, prior to your going to Jackson, Mississippi, prior to September 30, 1962,—and to back up a moment, what was the date that you actually went to Jackson, Mississippi, from Dallas?

A. September 29th.

Q. 29th. Prior to September 29th had you held press conferences at any place or places in which you expressed yourself concerning the Oxford, Mississippi, incident?

A. I had held press conferences the previous week with respect to the sovereignty as a state and objections to Military forces being used in the state.

Q. All right. I am not sure that you mentioned this in your deposition or in answer to questions on direct examination, but did you issue a report or a news release to be carried on Party Line over station KWKH, Shreveport, Louisiana? On Wednesday, September 26, 1962, at about 7:30 p. m.

A. I think that is the date. It is in the deposition.

Q. That is right.

A. I can verify it, and my attorney.

Q. I will hand you what has been marked as Defendant's [fol. 779] Exhibit 2 to your deposition at the time it was taken. Has a notation, "Station KWKH, Shreveport, Louisiana, Party Line, Wednesday, September 26, 1962, at about 7:30 p. m., by Ted Walker."

Mr. Watts: No objection.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, do you identify, or can you identify—I better mark this as Defendant's Exhibit 7. Excuse me, General.

A. All right.

Q. Defendant's Exhibit 7.

(The instrument above-referred to was marked Defendant's Exhibit 7.)

Q. I hand you what has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 7 and ask you if you will identify that as the news release that you gave over the Shreveport station on September 26, 1962?

A. That is identified.

Mr. Gooch: I will read Exhibit 7.
The Court: Are you offering it, Counsel?
Mr. Gooch: I am offering it.
The Court: It is admitted.
Mr. Gooch: Excuse me, I am sorry.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 7

"It is time to move. We have talked, listened and been pushed around far too much by the anti-Christ Supreme Court. Rise to a stand beside Governor Ross Barnett at [fol. 780] Jackson, Mississippi. Now is the time to be heard. Ten thousand strong from every state in the Union. Rally to the cause of freedom. The battle cry of the Republic. Barnett, yes, Castro, no. Bring your flags, your tents and your skillets. It is time. Now or never. The time is when and if the President of the United States commits or uses any troops, Federal or State, in Mississippi. The last time in such a situation I was on the wrong side. That was in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957, and 1958. This time I am out of uniform and I am on the right side and I will be there."

Now, General, is that the speech you delivered from that radio station at that time?

A. It certainly is.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, at that time, that being September 26, 1962—so, apparently, from that statement, particularly the last four words, you had made up your mind then to go to Mississippi, had you not?

A. Yes, sir, I had if and when troops were used.

Q. Well, now, let's pause right there. There were no troops used until after the Marshals had been attacked on the campus of the University of Mississippi on the night of September 30; is that correct?

A. The troops had been committed.

[fol. 781] Q. Now, do you know of the commitment of those troops, General?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you have any troop commitment on that?

A. Yes, sir. I think you will find press reports in the newspapers of the 29th that said the President was committing troops. I believe there was much discussion about it, on the commitment of troops for a week.

Q. I believe it was September 30, to be exact. I am trying to ask you if you knew about the commitment of troops at that time? No, that wasn't what I asked you.

A. Well, I didn't say that. That there was a commitment of troops. I said that I was told if and when troops were going to be used—I didn't know they were going to use them, the troops now.

Q. The question was my error entirely. You did commit yourself to go, but you say it was a conditional commission, to go only if and when troops were used?

A. Additional commission—that was the only commission. I was only going if and when troops were used.

Q. You knew at the time you went on the campus that night that there were no troops on the campus, didn't you?

A. I had no way of knowing it.

[fol. 782] Q. After you got to the campus you knew the troops were not there, didn't you?

A. I didn't see any at the time I got on the campus.

Q. Did you make any inquiry to see whether or not there were any troops there or not, General?

A. I listened to the conversations with respect to whether there were any troops on the campus, and asked questions about whether or not troops were on the campus. Yes, I did query about it, whether they had seen any troops on the campus.

Q. What was the answer to the query?

A. I didn't find anybody that had seen any.

Q. As a matter of fact, the troops didn't come in until after the Marshals had become beleaguered, isn't that correct?

A. Mr. Gooch, I cannot answer that question unless you have some definite proof that there was no soldiers on the campus. In my opinion, there is bound to have been some soldiers on the campus. I was at Little Rock and I know what happened. And I know you can't just tell troops, go somewhere, and have them there for yourself.

Q. Well, in your deposition, I can't get the page and number now, but I can if necessary, you stated you were still on the campus that night after you had made the [fol. 783] speech, when you observed an Army convoy of troops coming onto the campus?

A. Yes, sir, I saw a convoy come on the campus.

Q. Had you seen or heard of any troops being on the campus prior to the time you observed them coming on there?

A. No, I hadn't but I had heard of them fifteen miles from Oxford, and they were setting up bases all across Tennessee. In Memphis it was already in the press that it had been discussed for days. It told about troops all in Tennessee, and they had told about—before I went on the campus they had—there was word before I even left Jackson that a Military installation was being set up fifteen miles north of Oxford. Perfectly obvious nobody was moving fifteen miles north of Jackson if they were not coming on the campus. They were already being used in Mississippi at that point.

Q. I wish you would get your copy, if you can find it, of any commitment orders on the use of those troops.

A. That is not necessary. When the troops are used there is an order. Corporals don't go off by themselves, sir. Somebody is directing them to.

Q. Now, did you issue a news report on or about September 27 from your residence in Dallas in which you [fol. 784] appeared before a TV cameraman and made a statement of similar import to the one that you had made over Party Line the previous evening, and in connection with that TV interview answer a question or two before the TV cameras were shut off?

A. May I have it, sir?

Q. Let me see if I can find it. I don't have it, you didn't furnish it. I have what purports to be one which I will let you see. This is my copy. It is what I have been told is the speech you made. I don't know whether you made it or not.

A. I thought everything went in the deposition. Is there a copy of this?

Q. You didn't furnish that, General.

A. Oh. I recognize it as portions of this statement I made some time, and I think the first part of it has been furnished in the deposition. The others are questions and answers by the reporter, but I don't think I have any particular record of it.

Q. Well, would you say that you did or did not make the answers to those questions asked, the questions asked and the answers given? Or would you need the refreshment of your memory?

A. Well, this has got dots in it and dashes and so forth. This is the way the press does you. They may fill it in [fol. 785] or they haven't filled it in, or you have taken it out of context. "This is the cause of freedom," and then they have got a bunch of dots in here. What does that say? "This is for America."

Q. It is supposed to be a quote from you. I don't know. A pause, I suppose.

A. I can't verify this as my exact statement or wording or a quote from me.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—

A. I think that the initial statement that I made covers the point and I am perfectly willing to release that to you.

Mr. Gooch: Well, in order to ask the question in connection with the interview which I have determined from my investigation occurred on September 27, 1962, the voice asked you in front of the TV camera, "General, if the forces go . . ."

Mr. Andress: Judge—just a moment. He has already testified he can't identify this, can't remember it. Such being the case, we don't think it is proper to repeat it.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, at this time we would like to bring in the TV camera and the operator to show [fol. 786] the film for the refreshment of his memory.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, it will take a little time.

The Witness: May I say this, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes, sir.

The Witness: It may save a lot of trouble. It doesn't make much difference.

Mr. Gooch: No, I think we will just go to the trouble.

Mr. Watts: Go ahead, let's do it.

The Court: Will it take a few minutes to set it up?

Mr. Watts: I might suggest we might return to that later, Your Honor, we may draw a ring around this until the recess. We can set it up at the recess.

Mr. Gooch: We would like to do it now.

The Court: I don't want to try to control his method of offering his proof.

Mr. Watts: I don't want to either.

The Witness: May I solve this very simply, Your Honor?

Mr. Watts: No, he wants to show the news release anyway.

The Court: Move into the Jury room, and we will call you when the camera is set up.

[fol. 787] (During the recess, a projector and screen were set up in the courtroom, the jury returned to the courtroom, said film was run and following is a transcript of the sound portion of said film.)

General Walker: We have talked, listened and been pushed around far too much by the anti-Christ Supreme Court.

"The battle-cry of the Republic, Barnett, yes, Castro, no."

Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet. It's now or never. The time is when and if the President of the United States commits or uses any troops, Federal or State, in Mississippi. The time is when they decide, if they do, to use troops in the State of Mississippi against the State Sovereignty and the Governor of the State.

The last time in such a situation, I was on the wrong side. That was in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957, and '8. This time, out of uniform, I am on the right side. And I will be there.

Unidentified Voice: General, if forces go, will you lead this force?

General Walker: This is a cause for freedom. This is Americans', patriotic Americans' from all over the nation. It is a movement for Freedom. And I will be there. [fol. 788] Rise to a stand beside Governor Ross Barnett at Jackson, Mississippi. Now is the time to be heard. Thousands strong from every state in the union. Rally to the cause of freedom.

The Court: Turn on the lights, please.

Do you have any more at this time, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir, I do.

I would like now to have this marked for identification as Defendant's Exhibit 8.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I hand you what's been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 8, which purports to be an address, or a press release, from Mississippi, Saturday, September 29th, at about 5:00 p.m.

It states on here, "From Jackson, from the residence of Dr. Ney Williams."

This was furnished as Defendant's Exhibit 4, to your deposition and I will ask you if this is the release that you gave at the Sun & Sands Motel in Jackson.

A. This is on the 29th?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now in connection with that news release and the text, were you asked any questions while you were in front of the TV camera?

[fol. 789] A. I don't recall definitely. I have—I may have been, one or two. But I cut it very short because we were sort of—the camera, the press man I thought was taking advantage of me and I walked out in the next hallway to get out from under the cameras and grouped around another group of press people and discussed further, other questions with them.

Mr. Gooch: We offer in evidence at this time Defendant's Exhibit 8.

The Court: It's admitted.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 8

Mr. Gooch: Statement from General Walker from the Sun & Sands Motel at Jackson, Mississippi, September 29, 1962.

"I am in Mississippi—beside Governor Ross Barnett.

"I call for a national protest against the conspiracy from within.

"Rally to the cause of Freedom in righteous indignation, violent vocal protest and bitter silence under the Flag of Mississippi at the use of Federal troops.

"This today is a disgrace to the Nation in 'Dire Peril'—a disgrace beyond the capacity of anyone except its enemies. This is the conspiracy of the crucifixion by the anti-Christ conspirators of the Supreme Court in their denial of prayer and their betrayal of a nation."

[fol. 790] Now will you run the tape, please, sir.

The Court: Put the lights out.

(A tape was run and following is a transcript of the sound portion of said tape.)

Unidentified Voice: You are the speaker, sir. Would you like to read your statement?

General Walker: This is Edwin A. Walker. I am in Mississippi, beside Governor Ross Barnett.

I call for a national protest against the conspiracy from within.

Rally to the cause of Freedom, in righteous indignation, violent vocal protest and bitter silence under the flag of Mississippi at the use of Federal troops.

This today is a disgrace to the nation in dire peril—a disgrace beyond the capacity of anyone except its enemies. This is the conspiracy of the crucifixion by the anti-Christ conspirators of the Supreme Court in their denial of prayer and their betrayal of a nation.

Unidentified Voice: Sir, have you been in contact with Governor Barnett?

General Walker: I have been in contact with his office.

Unidentified Voice: Do you hope to see him while you [fol. 791] are here in Jackson?

General Walker: I certainly do. Thank you very much. And I am very happy to have been with you.

Unidentified Voice: Sir, can you tell us what your plans are, specifically?

(No response.)

Will you tell us what your plans are specifically, sir?

(No response.)

(Remainder of voice inaudible.)

• • •

Mr. Watts: Do you have another one to show?

Mr. Cravens: We have another one to show but not right at this minute.

Mr. Gooch: We would like at this time to introduce in evidence the films that have just been shown to the jury.

Mr. Watts: No objection.

Mr. Andress: No objection.

The Court: They are both admitted. Are they both on one reel?

Mr. Cravens: No.

The Court: Separate reels?

All right, we will mark them 9 and 10.

Mr. Gooch: The one from Dallas will be 9 and the one [fol. 792] from Jackson will be 10.

(Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibits 9 and 10, were marked for identification.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, General Walker, did you make a third appearance before a press conference, a fourth, rather, after you arrived at Oxford?

I believe you stated that you made one along about 4:45 or 5:00 o'clock, on the afternoon of September 30, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have a copy of that script?

A. I believe it's in the deposition, both attorneys have it.

Q. Well, I have one here that was marked Defendant's Exhibit 6, to your deposition and we never were for sure whether or not this is the one you used or one that you called back to Dallas.

I believe you testified that you did use that script at Oxford, I'm not sure.

[fol. 793] A. I believe we testified in the deposition, and as far as I remember this is the script that was used on the 29th, in the afternoon at 5:00 o'clock, as you stated, yes, sir.

Q. At Oxford?

A. At Oxford, and I think it was also called back to Dallas.

Q. Will you please—

Mr. Watts: Is that the 29th? Let's see.

The Witness: That is dated—

Mr. Watts: Couldn't have been in Oxford—

The Witness: No, no, wait a minute. Friday, September 30th.

Mr. Watts: That's right. We have no objection to it. I just wanted to get the date and everything straight.

Mr. Gooch: That is not my writing, that is somebody else's writing.

Mr. Watts: I just wanted to keep it straight.

A. Called back from Oxford. This reminds me, this was called back from Oxford, as marked on here, about 9:00 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Watts: What date?

The Witness: Friday.

Mr. Watts: What date?

[fol. 794] The Witness: September 30th. Called back to my office in Dallas.

Mr. Gooch: Mark that as Defendant's Exhibit 11.

The Court: Are you offering it?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Court: It is admitted.

(Document marked Defendant's Exhibit 11 by the Court Reporter.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, I hand you what has been identified as Defendant's Exhibit 11, and do you identify the words used on Defendant's Exhibit 11 as the statement that you made to the press in the courtyard of the Ole Miss Hotel along late in the afternoon of September 30, 1962?

A. Unless you can remind me of something better, well, this is the best of my memory.

Q. I have nothing to remind you with except I understood you to say in your deposition that was what you said.

A. I said in my deposition I think this is it. I know these are my words and this was released to the press.

Q. At the top of the page, "On to Mississippi." "As the forces of the New Frontier assemble to the north, let history be witness to the courage and determination that calls [fol. 795] us to Oxford to support a courageous Governor. His lawful stand for state sovereignty is supported by thousands of people beyond the state borders, now on their way to join you at Oxford."

Now, General, I believe the chronology indicates that your first of these releases in which you spoke of " . . . your flag, your tent and your skillet," was released from Shreveport on September 26, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a live broadcast or had you previously sent the word into the station, was it telephonic or just how did you get it over there?

A. I don't remember. I telephoned the statement in. It probably went on the air right at the time I telephoned in.

Q. Did you get any response from that broadcast?

A. I am sure there were telephone calls with regard to that broadcast.

Q. Going a step further, I—to the next night in Dallas, when you uttered a statement of similar import relative to flags, tents and skillets, and using the terminology, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet," and calling for ten thousand from each state, did you get any response at your home in Dallas?

A. Yes, I did.

[fol. 796] Q. I believe you testified in your deposition, did you not, that the 'phone calls were backed up six or eight deep and for hours, in response to your pleas?

A. That is a general statement. That is correct.

Q. All right. Did that indicate to you that your plea and statement had been heard for considerable length and breadth of the land?

A. I don't know where these were released, sir.

Q. Checking back with your deposition, we can find the pages, I believe you stated you got calls from California,

Ohio and Florida as a result of these press releases, did you?

A. I had calls from different parts of the country, yes, sir.

Q. Indicating they had heard the broadcast?

A. They had in many areas of the country.

Q. And offering their services, is that correct?

A. Discussing whether they were coming or weren't coming.

Q. General Walker, you furnished us to the deposition a tape which has been identified as Exhibit 5 to the deposition. We asked the Court Reporter, Mr. Frank Nuss, to play the tape over and write out on paper what the tape says. Now, we have that tape and we will submit the transcript to your counsel and to you. If you think that [fol. 797] is accurate we will read that into the record rather than play the tape, but at your pleasure.

[fol. 798] Mr. Watts: Could we identify this as to time and place?

Mr. Gooch: It was his Exhibit 5.

Mr. Watts: Where was it supposed to have come from?

(Sotto voce discussion of counsel.)

Mr. Gooch: We asked him on his deposition if he had any other statements.

Mr. Watts: This purports to be a telephone interview?

Mr. Gooch: It is a tape record. I assume it is an interview on a radio station. He said it was.

Mr. Watts: I think we can probably agree on that. Can I confer with him on that just a minute?

Mr. Gooch: Sure.

Mr. Watts: And save a lot of time here.

(Sotto voce discussion of Plaintiff and Plaintiff's Counsel.)

Mr. Watts: No objections.

Mr. Gooch: I believe, according to this caption on this other copy I have, it says radio interview, WNOE, Friday, September 28, 1962, General Edwin Walker.

The Witness: Sir, I believe that tape came from WNOE. That was what it was. And when it was taken in the [fol. 799] deposition,—this was taken by the reporter?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. No, General, to be accurate we asked you on the deposition if you had any more and you later sent this one in.

A. Right, and we stated on the deposition this was given at a certain time, and later when I went home and listened to it I told in the report it was given at an earlier time, I believe it was, or vice versa, I don't know which. But, this tape came—the only thing I know about WNOE, which is down in New Orleans—the only thing I know about WNOE, it has got "radio interview, WNOE." The only thing I know about that is that I found this tape with somebody on that station, and they mailed it to me and it was put into the record at the time of the deposition.

Q. All right. And, that is the September 28th interview that you had with Station WNOE, is that correct?

A. Not necessarily, sir. I don't know that. That tape could have been gotten anywhere by any reporter being anywhere, or taking it off a news release. You can tape tonight off your own radio. I don't know how they got it, but it came to me from WNOE.

Mr. Watts: To simplify the thing, we will be prepared to admit this statement was given to him on some radio station on the 28th. Won't that do it?

[fol. 800] Mr. Gooch: That is all I am trying to prove.

Mr. Watts: Save a lot of time.

Mr. Gooch: That will do it.

The Court: What is that number, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: That will be Defendant's Exhibit 12.

The Court: Defendant's Exhibit 12, and you are offering it?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Court: It is admitted.

(Transcript of tape marked Defendant's Exhibit 12 and read as follows, by Mr. Gooch:)

"Interviewer: General Walker, do you still intend to follow through with your plans to go to Mississippi after the Government warning today, supposedly that you will be held in contempt?

"General Walker: I plan to go to Mississippi as I had intended if and when Federal troops are used in Mississippi. I do not feel that there is any constitutional law that prevents a citizen moving from state to state or place to place as he sees fit, and there are hundreds of causes moving to Mississippi, or that are reflecting their attitudes in Mississippi, and I am only a small part of this movement, and I intend to be there if and when the decision is made to use Federal troops there.

[fol. 801] "Interviewer: Well, do you personally, sir, believe that that order will be given by Attorney General Robert Kennedy?

"General Walker: I would hope that they certainly do not use Federal troops as it was a catastrophe when they did it before in 1957 and '58 in Little Rock. It was unconstitutional then, as several Governors had pointed out, and also many members of the Bar, and they should read the Constitution more carefully and they would recognize this is unconstitutional. There is no law that requires integration.

"Interviewer: Well, now, sir, what do you think the repercussions would be if these Federal troops are sent to Oxford and, as a matter of fact, the State of Mississippi?

"General Walker: I am not sure. It depends on what their mission is and what they are supposed to do and how they carry out their mission, and what the intents are after they get to Mississippi. I would say it certainly is obvious now that the cause of State rights extends far beyond Mississippi, and practically every state of the Union is recognizing the importance of the sovereignty of the state, and that is very much involved, greatly involved, in [fol. 802] this issue.

"Interviewer: Sir, what has been the general reaction to your plans of going to Mississippi with groups of citizens? I am sure you have heard from quite a few people throughout the United States.

"General Walker: We are just utterly swamped here with telephone calls and offers of help and assistance and notifications that people are moving to Mississippi and that they want to assist in every way possible; that they are opposed to what the administration is doing in opposing the Governor in Mississippi. I can assure you that the telephones shall never stop ringing. Calls are backed up six and eight deep. People are telling me it's taking four or five hours to even get into a telephone system, and we have seven 'phones in the house. Messages are coming in offering support in groups of ten to twenty to even two thousand.

"Interviewer: Well, sir, do you find these telegrams and well wishes from people throughout the United States are predominantly southern, or are they also coming from the north and the west and from the east?

"General Walker: They are from all parts of the country. Many have come in from Ohio, just a few minutes ago [fol. 803] from St. Paul, quite a few from New York, Florida, of course, Los Angeles and many of the states in between. I have just gotten off the line to Seattle, Washington.

"Interviewer: Do you have plans, sir, for rallies, if and when the Federal troops are entered into Mississippi, of a certain point in the state where all your followers will then meet with you to protest the integration if it does come about?

"General Walker: I intend to join the movement. There are thousands of people, I am sure, already in Mississippi —probably hundreds of thousands there—that are already standing beside their Governor Barnett. The best place to do this would, of course, be at the capitol or at Oxford, at the University, since that is where the issue is involved, and I am sure that that is where most of the movement will move to, to show the grass roots of movement in this issue.

"Interviewer: One final question, sir. Just what were your thoughts when acting as an officer of the United States Army when you were commanded to enter Little Rock? What were your thoughts in 1957, seeing these same type of citizens in another state, so opposedly or reportedly op- [fol. 804] posing Federal seizure, or Federal acts, against a sovereign state, supposedly?

"General Walker: At that time I knew it was unconstitutional and felt that it was at that time, in using troops, and it should never have been done. My principles have not changed, but now, out of the uniform I'm on the other side, and this time on the right side, and that is in opposition to unconstitutional actions by the Federal Government, and I'm very happy to be free from the requirements of the Military Service in those cases where the Military Service has been unconstitutionally used against the citizens of the United States. It would appear to me with all the problems in the international situation, and with an enemy, and a very critical enemy ninety miles off our coast, it would be as utterly fantastic, as well as impossible, that the administration should now be in a cause and a purpose which is as to the disunity of the United States of America, when the important thing is today that all Americans be unified against the one and only important enemy in the world today, the one who has established that he intends to bury us—and by the President's own statement, this country is in dire peril."

[fol. 805] By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, General, just what was your purpose in going to Mississippi?

A. I thought it was absolutely wrong to use Military forces, troops, American troops in a strictly civilian problem.

Q. All right.

Mr. Watts: Let him finish.

A. And I wanted to see for myself exactly what happened. I wanted to know from first hand information. And I did not trust the press reporting of it in any form, since I had been at Little Rock and seen that exaggerated out of all proportions, and I intended to see for myself.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You intended to see for yourself the use of Federal troops?

A. That is exactly right.

Q. And that is all you went for?

A. If and when Federal troops were committed, which I stated were used in Mississippi.

Q. Well, after you got to Oxford and prior to the time of your entry onto the campus on September 30, 1962, no Federal troops had been sent to the campus, had they?

A. They had been—as far as I know, I don't know whether they were on the campus or not.

Q. All right.

[fol. 806] A. They were in Mississippi and they were in Tennessee in large numbers.

Q. All right. Let's back up just a minute, sir. In all of these statements you refer repeatedly to Governor Barnett and his stand, do you not?

A. I have referred—not in all those statements. I have referred to the State of Mississippi and the sovereignty of the State of Mississippi in many of those statements, with regard to the sovereignty of the state and Governor Ross Barnett.

Q. All right. This statement comes to hand first. That is the one you read in Mississippi?

A. Why don't you use that one, Mr. Gooch.

Q. Because this is the one I want to use, General Walker.

[fol. 807] Mr. Gooch: Because this is the one I want to use, General Walker.

The Witness: I'm sorry.

The Court: Just a minute now.

Mr. Watts: That's not—

The Court: Go ahead, Mr. Gooch.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. This is the one that you used in Oxford, Mississippi, shortly before your advent to the campus: "As the forces of the new frontier assemble to the north."

I presume you were talking about the Kennedy's in that context, were you?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that. That's argumentative and—

The Court: He can say no or he can say yes.

Mr. Watts: Well, okay.

A. "The new frontier," refers to the Administration, the national policy, the international policy and the administration of government, Federal Government.

Q. Well, I understood that President John F. Kennedy was the one that coined the expressed, "new frontier," and I was just trying to get your views on it.

A. Well, those aren't my views, sir.

Q. All right, sir. "Let history be witness to the courage and determination that calls us to Oxford to support a [fol. 808] courageous Governor."

Now in that interview at least you were talking about Governor Ross Barnett, were you not?

A. In that interview, is as you have read it, sir. May I have the date?

Q. September 30, 1962.

A. That's in Oxford?

Q. In Oxford.

A. Right, sir.

Q. My question again, if you will answer it, does that refer to Governor Ross Barnett?

A. It did.

Q. You knew at that time that Governor Ross Barnett had been enjoined from taking any further action against the entry of Meredith to the University, did you not?

A. I am not a lawyer. I was thoroughly dependent, completely dependent on the legal advice of Governor Ross Barnett and the great lawyers he had there.

He had his Attorney General, he had the ex-president of the Bar Association, Judge Satterfield—

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute.

Mr. Watts: Let him finish.

The Witness: Was—I was dependent entirely—

The Court: I don't believe it is responsive. Just a minute now. What was the question again, Mr. Gooch?

[fol. 809] Mr. Watts: Let him rephrase it.

Mr. Gooch: Am I prohibited from breaking in when the witness is not responding to my question?

The Court: No, sir, you are not. You are not. Go ahead.

Mr. Watts: I would suggest, if Your Honor, please, it's my understanding, address the Court, but I would object to him breaking into the witness. Now, in other words—

The Court: He had to break into the witness to stop him, Counsel.

Mr. Watts: Well, all right, sir.

The Court: Rephrase your question or re-ask it, Mr. Gooch, please.

Mr. Gooch: Frank, can you tell me what it was?

The Reporter: "You knew at that time Governor Ross Barnett had been enjoined from taking any further action against the entry of Meredith to the University, did you not?"

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I suggest it is responsive, in that he says that he was depending on the Governor's counsel.

The Court: Responsive would be whether he knows or whether he didn't know.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

[fol. 810] The Court: Did you or didn't you know, General, that's what he wants to know?

The Witness: In general, I knew what the papers were saying, that the Governor had, through the legal procedure at this position in the legal process, he had been enjoined, as you stated.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You, also, knew at that time that he was acting in open defiance of that court injunction, did you not?

A. No, I did not. He was acting under legal authority with due process. He had many times said and enjoined (sic) the entire State of Mississippi to join hands and—with him in legal opposition under the Constitution.

This is the position that we are in now. He had asked all the people, including the officials of the State and everybody else, to join hands together with each other and with the Governor in opposing in every possible means the—with all legal authority, under the Constitution, in opposing the administration's, Federal Administration's action against the State then and what might transpire.

Q. The question I originally asked you, General, was as to whether or not you had knowledge at the time you went to Mississippi that Governor Ross Barnett was acting contra to the injunction which had been issued out of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit at New Orleans?

[fol. 811] A. Now just to be simple—to get me straight, you have "defiance," you have got, "contra," you have got, "opposition". I am just a layman. I am no lawyer.

As far as I'm concerned, through legal procedures and processes, he is opposing the legal processes from the other side with his own staff, which I depended upon.

Q. Then you made an election, I assume, that you would follow Governor Barnett rather than the edicts of the Federal Courts?

A. I was supporting completely Governor Barnett's position which represented a million people in Mississippi and he, as Governor, was the sovereign state. Barnett was the sovereign—was the State of Mississippi, with a million people, and perfectly capable, law capabilities, as far as I'm concerned.

Q. General Walker, do you believe that one man or a group of men is above the law of the land?

A. Nobody—

Mr. Andress: We don't think that's a proper question now, Judge.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Watts: Go ahead and answer it.

The Court: You may answer, sir.

The Witness: Will you repeat the question?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Do you believe that one man, a group of men, or a [fol. 812] million men, by their actions, whether in concert or singularly, is above the law of the land?

A. I certainly believe nobody is above the law, no single individual is the law of the land, above the law of the land, and if anybody had been charged as I was, for such, he probably would have been convicted, if they had found sufficient evidence, which I don't believe the Government did.

Q. Well, I don't know what you are talking about here. I asked you about being above the law of the land. Now I don't follow your answer.

A. Your question was whether I believed that anyone—any one individual should be above the law of the land. Mr. Gooch, I certainly do not.

Q. All right. That was the question I asked you. I was just trying to get your answer.

A. And I believe it's been proved by the fact—so you will understand what I am talking about, that it's been very definitely proved. Otherwise, the Government charges against me wouldn't have been dropped.

Q. Well, now General Walker, when we get into that question, I don't know why you are skipping over to that one, the Grand Jury in Oxford, as I read the transcript, did not fail to indict you. They merely didn't pass on the matter, is that correct?

[fol. 813] Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that. First, it's not the best evidence. They did fail to indict him. The charges were dismissed by the Federal Government against this man and that is not the best evidence.

And it's certainly argumentative, to argue a hypothetical action of a Mississippi Grand Jury. They are official proceedings and could be available.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I don't want to belabor the point but when I get these—

Mr. Andress: Judge—

The Court: Wait a minute. Mr. Gooch is talking. One at a time.

Mr. Andress: We ought to argue this outside the presence of the jury.

The Court: Mr. Gooch.

Mr. Gooch: The question was—the answer was completely unresponsive to my—the answer was completely unresponsive to my question but since he brings in a matter like that, I certainly believe that I have the right to interrogate him about the facts of the matter.

Mr. Watts: I have no objection to him being interrogated. The only thing I object to is asking this witness—

[fol. 814] The Court: I understood your objection, Counsel, and I sustained it.

Mr. Watts: Oh, excuse me, sir. I'm just running a little . . . I'm sorry, Judge. I didn't intend to—

The Court: Gentlemen, at this point, let's take a recess. Recess until a quarter of 4:00.

Now the audience remain in your seats until after the jury has left the jury room, please.

(15-minute recess.)

[fol. 815] Q. General Walker, just prior to the afternoon recess we were discussing the question of the constitution and the orders of the Court and the actions of Governor Barnett in connection with constitutional authority. Would that be a fair statement of what we were talking about when the recess was called?

A. In general, in the use of Military troops.

Q. All right. Now, let's go back to your 1957 and 1958, when you were in command of the troops at Little Rock, when you were called upon with your troops, I assume, and correct me if I am wrong, to see that the edicts of the Court there with respect to integration was carried out. Is that a fair statement? Were you called in with your troops at Little Rock to enforce the orders of the Federal Court on the integration of the Little Rock, Arkansas, school?

A. I wasn't called in there, I was already there, and had been there for about a month and I was under orders of Military command, sir.

Q. And you observed those orders?

A. I was given my orders, yes, sir.

Q. Did those orders come from the Pentagon, from President Eisenhower, or where did they come from?

A. They came through the Military chain of command.

Q. You understood that they were the orders from the [fol. 816] commander in chief, General Eisenhower, did you not, or then President Eisenhower.

A. That is—yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any riots in Little Rock?

A. We had quite a protest at Little Rock, continuously, and no—no particular violence.

Q. Did you have any violence at all?

A. Sir?

Q. Did you have any violence at all?

A. One incident, an individual—

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. One individual took a—jerked a rifle away from a soldier and took it completely away from him and a soldier beside him gave the individual a poke with his gun, and with the butt end of it, and got it back, and this man then had three or four stitches taken in his head, but he had taken the gun completely away from the soldier.

Q. That just about stopped any violence up there when that happened, didn't it?

A. (No answer given.)

Q. Is that the only incident that happened?

A. No, the way—well, the way it was handled helped stop violence.

Q. In connection with troops at Little Rock you told the troops the orders that you had to see that there was integra- [fol. 817] tion at Little Rock, that those orders were going to be enforced, didn't you?

You gave your troops instructions?

A. I followed my Military directions and commands, yes, sir.

Q. And you were going to see to it that those edicts of the Court was carried out under your command?

A. I was only carrying out Military orders.

Q. Did you stand out in front of your troops there and give your orders, or did you send them by written communication, or word of mouth through subordinates?

A. Well, it was an entirely different situation there, sir. Little Rock—Oxford—Oxford is the first time in history that the troops have seized, searched and arrested without Martial Law. Now, we didn't have Martial Law at Little Rock either. But we didn't seize, search and arrest people.

Q. Did it become necessary?

A. No, sir. It was handled different.

Q. In connection with the Little Rock incident of which you have testified about, did you make an address to the student body of the Little Rock High School expressing your views as to the lawful authority of the United States to—

A. No, sir.

[fol. 818] Q. Did you deliver an address?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that address did you discuss the question of the constitutional rights of the people?

A. The way that address was written, it came up in the deposition before—I gave the address that was given at Little Rock, and it discussed, as I remember it, the constitutional rights of the people.

Q. I hand you here a photostat, a photostat of portions of page 14 of the Arkansas Gazette, dated Thursday, September 26, 1957, which is headlined, "Text of General's speech to students." This is an AP story, I believe. Would you look at this and see if that is the address that you delivered to those students, or whether it is not?

A. I believe we can shorten this without reading the whole thing, sir. Is this the exact copy of what was placed in the deposition?

Q. It never was placed in the deposition. As I recall, it was not readable. You stated at that time you couldn't read it.

A. I said I couldn't identify what a newspaper did to an address. I can't take responsibility of accepting this address for the Government. The Government did keep the statement made at Little Rock by me, that you are referring [fol. 819] to as an address. We will even go further. It was made to the students, the students in the Little Rock High School, that had legal advise and legal—

The Court: Pardon me just a minute.

The Witness: That was developed by my chain of command.

The Court: Pardon me. The question was: "Is that the statement that you made?" Is that the speech that you made. That is the question.

A. I have nothing to remind me to say this is the statement I made, Your Honor.

Mr. Watts: Let me see it, Your Honor.

The Witness: And I won't accept a newspaper statement of it.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Just a minute.

Mr. Watts: Oh, might I?

Mr. Gooch: I believe the witness is still under cross examination.

Mr. Watts: I thought I might shorten it by just agreeing to it.

Mr. Gooch: I don't care whether he agrees to it or not, Mr. Watts.

Mr. Watts: I am sorry.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General, I hand you a certificate from the Pentagon and ask you to take a look at that. Look at the certificate, [fol. 820] and then look under the certificate to see if that is the speech, a certified copy of the speech you made to the students at the Little Rock High School on or about September 25th, 1957?

A. I believe we advised your counsel—the lawyers at the time to please get a copy. Is this the copy you got?

Q. That is the copy I got.

A. An exact copy of what was stated?

Q. If you compare that with the Associated Press—

A. This comes out of the office of the Secretary of Defense?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Washington, D. C., signed by Shirley B. Meyer, Executive Assistant, offices of Administrative Services; has my counsel got a copy?

Q. Excuse me. Here is the Associated Press dispatch. I will introduce both of them.

Mr. Watts: Have you compared this with the original?

Mr. Gooch: I have and they are the same.

Mr. Watts: We will take counsel's statement that this is an exact statement, the one the witness was reading, and he can read either one of them. As I understand, he has compared them and they are the same. There is no use [fol. 821-2] killing all this time.

Mr. Gooch: Please mark the Arkansas Gazette article of September 26, 1957, I believe it is Defendant's Exhibit 13.

The Court: 13.

Mr. Gooch: 13-A, as I remember, in the deposition, there was something missing on that article, at the last line. May I see it? We couldn't read it when we were taking the deposition.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. In the deposition we had a very bad photocopy.

A. I see. I can't read portions of this.

Mr. Watts: Is there a question to the witness?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Whether or not that was the address that he gave to the Little Rock High School students on September 26, 1957?

[fol. 823] A. As far as I can tell, this is the address that was made.

Mr. Gooch: Please mark that as Defendant's Exhibit 14.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 14, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Gooch: We now offer it in evidence, if the Court please.

The Court: 14?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.
The Court: It's admitted.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 14

Mr. Gooch: Pursuant to the provisions of the Department of Defense Directive Number 5015.1, dated July 31, 1952, I hereby certify that the annexed document is a true copy of a microfilmed message on file in the Department of Defense.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Department of Defense to be affixed this 9th day of June, in the year of 1964, A.D., at Washington, District of Columbia, Shirley E. Meyer, Executive Assistant, Office of Administrative Services.

This is on the stationery of the Department of the Army:

"Staff Communications Division." Caption. Speech by Major General Edwin A. Walker to students of Little Rock [fol. 824] Central High School, 0900 hrs. 25 Sep., '57.

"Young ladies and gentlemen of Central High School. Mr. Blossom, your superintendent of schools, has asked me to come to your school this morning and discuss with you the situation in Little Rock and what it means to you students. I welcome this opportunity to do so.

"As you know, the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States guarantees to all citizens the equal protection of the laws. Since the adoption of this amendment, many states have provided separate schools for their children on the basis of color. The laws establishing such schools have, however, been challenged in the courts, and about three years ago, the Supreme Court of the United States determined that such laws are contrary to the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment and consequently invalid. This decision by the highest court in the land is, of course, an authoritative interpretation of our Constitution, is binding on all citizens and government officers, both state and Federal, and may not, under our law, be changed except by an amendment to the Constitution.

"Because of the Supreme Court's decision, it became necessary for those states maintaining separate schools to revise their systems to eliminate distinctions on the [fol. 825] basis of color. The nature of these plans was left to the states and local communities, subject to approval by the local Federal District Courts. The Little Rock School District prepared such a plan which was approved by both the District Court and Circuit Court of Appeals. This plan provides for a very gradual abandonment of the separate schools system starting this year.

"Subsequent to the approval of this plan, attempts were made in the courts to prevent the school authorities from putting it into effect.

"I need not go into the details of this litigation, sufficient to say it was unsuccessful, and that the plan as originally approved remains unchanged and in full force and effect.

"During the past few weeks, as you are well aware, the situation in Little Rock has been such as to prevent the entrance of a few students into your high school. Therefore, to see that the laws of the land be faithfully executed, the President has found it necessary to call the National Guard of Arkansas into the Federal Service and has directed that this force and each other armed forces as may be made available be used to enforce the orders of the Court, as an officer of the United States Army, I have [fol. 826] been chosen to command these forces and to execute the President's orders.

"What does all this mean to you students. You have often heard it said, no doubt, that the United States is a nation under law and not under men. This means that we are governed by laws, properly decided upon by duly constituted authority, and not by the decrees of one man or one class of men. Since this is true, it means that we are all subject to all the laws whether we approve of them personally or not and as law-abiding citizens have an obligation in conscience to obey them. There can be no exceptions, if it were otherwise, we would not be a strong nation but a mere unruly mob.

"I believe that you are well-intentioned, law-abiding citizens, who understand the necessity of obeying the laws and are determined to do so. You have nothing to fear from my soldiers, and no one will interfere with your coming, going or your peaceful pursuit of your studies. However, I would be less than honest if I failed to tell you that I intend to use all means necessary to prevent any interference with the execution of your school board's plan. This is what I have been ordered to do, and I intend to carry out my orders. Those who interfere or disrupt the proper administration of the school will be removed by the soldiers on duty and turned over to the local [fol. 827] police for disposition in accordance with the laws of your community.

"One last word about my soldiers. They are here because they have been ordered to be here. They are seasoned, well-trained soldiers, many of them combat veterans. Being soldiers they are as determined as I to carry out their orders. However, as I stated before, the law-abiding people have nothing to fear from them. They have been carefully instructed not to molest any law-abiding citizen in his person or property, and they will obey these orders. Since a peaceful atmosphere must be maintained in the school and its vicinity, it may be necessary for them to issue instructions concerning such things as loitering, assembling in large groups, and otherwise making it difficult for them to perform their duties. I earnestly ask that you cooperate, for your own benefit and ours.

"I wish you all success in your school year and Mr. Matthews, I thank you for the opportunity to talk to the student body."

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, just prior to the time you went to Mississippi on September 29, 1962, do you recall having a news conference with a reporter in Dallas, by the name of Phenas E. Mothershed? Do you know Phenas E. Mothershed?

A. No, sir, not that I recollect. I don't know him.

[fol. 828] Q. I will ask you if in a telephone interview this question was asked you: Just a second until I find it.

"Do you recommend that the volunteers go armed?" He's talking about your impending trip to Mississippi.

Do you recall that statement, that question being asked you?

A. By a reporter?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir, I have no recollection of it.

Q. Would you say it was not asked you?

A. May have been. I don't know whether he identified himself or not.

Q. And your answer to that question, which I am asking you if you made, "The Administration has indicated that it will do whatever is necessary to enforce this unconstitutional action. I have stated that whatever is necessary to oppose that enforcement and stand behind Governor Barnett should be done."

Did you make that statement, General Walker?

A. I can't verify that exact statement. I probably did.

Q. All right. The next question, the reporter asked you whether or not you meant to imply that you advocated physical force. Do you remember a question such as that being asked you?

[fol. 829] A. Yes, many times. I walked off when such questions were asked.

Q. To which you replied, according to this release, "The decision for force will be made in Washington. Evidently it has not been made yet. When and if it is, it's their decision to make. We will move with the punches."

Did you make that answer, General?

A. I may have. Can you identify the reporter? Is that the same reporter?

Q. I'm just asking you if you made the statement?

A. I may have.

Q. All right. Now, General, when did you have a communication by telephone with Louis Leman before you went to Mississippi on the 29th of September, 1962?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you remember the date of that communication?

A. A telephone call?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. It would have been on the 28th, as I remember.

Q. Did you know at the time he made the call to you that he was in Mississippi?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. You had already planned, according to these news releases, to go to Mississippi, had you not?

A. Yes, sir, I had planned to go to Mississippi. I be-[fol. 830] lieve there were two or three telephone calls have been referred to with respect to Louis Leman.

Q. In one of those phone calls, we'll say on the 28th, were you told by him that there was a growing situation at the Ole Miss campus, an explosive situation?

A. Not that I recall. We discussed the situation, at Mississippi, and he referred to some of the students' attitudes and also, with respect to the State and, also, at Oxford, and some of the attitudes on the campus.

Q. Did he tell you that a majority of the students, according to his opinion, were backing Barnett but the student newspaper was anti-Barnett; do you recall him making that statement?

A. He may have.

Q. Do you recall him telling you that all that they needed was leadership?

A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. All right. Would you say that he didn't tell you that?

A. No, I wouldn't say he didn't.

Q. Now did you tell him in that first conversation that you were coming?

A. As I recall the first conversation, I didn't know whether I was coming or not and later I said I was—I talked to him again and said that I would probably be in [fol. 831] Oxford the next day—I mean in Jackson the next day.

Q. Now as early as the 26th, you stated you would be there, didn't you?

A. If troops were used.

Q. All right. Now, you went to Mississippi, as I recall your testimony, on the 29th of September, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you have testified that you went by private plane, isn't that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe that you stated that you had had some previous conversation with Dr. Ney Williams?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I presume that Dr. Williams met you at the plane, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any newspaper reporters at the plane?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. You went on to Dr. Ney Williams' house, I assume, after your lunch, as you have testified to?

A. After we had lunch, we went on to Dr. Ney's.

Q. And how did you get ahold of the press? Did you call the press and tell them you were there?

A. Dr. Ney Williams called the press about a call he got into the house about that they were moving Marshals on [fol. 832] the campus, on Saturday afternoon, the 29th.

And there was a call came into his house that Marshals were being moved on the campus and he called, as I remember, he called the press and asked them about it. He had a very close friend in the press.

Q. Well, I'm asking, the question I asked you was, how did the press know you were there?

A. That's the way they would have known.

Q. Did Dr. Williams tell them, the press, that you were there?

A. He probably did.

Q. And then did the press call back and ask for a conference?

A. As I remember, that's the way it worked.

Q. Then you did ask for that press conference or the press asked you, which was it?

A. I don't remember. When you are talking about "the press," if it was a press man and he called and he wanted a conference or asked if he could see me, as I understand our conversation, that would be a request by the press for a conference.

Q. That's right.

A. Right, sir.

Q. And you did hold the conference there at the Sun & Sands Motel, the text of which has already been introduced [fol. 833] in evidence, is that correct?

A. Yes, about 6:00 p.m.

Q. Then you went from the Dr. Ney—you went back to Dr. Ney Williams' house, as I understand your testimony, and from Dr. Williams' house you and Louis Leman then started for Oxford?

A. After the—

Q. I believe you did get a cup of coffee before you started there.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got into Oxford about midnight?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went on the campus that night. What was the purpose of going on the campus at midnight?

A. We just decided to drive through it as we went on up and see it.

Q. It was about 1:00 or 1:30 in the morning?

A. No, sir, I think it was about 12:00.

Q. Between 11:00 and 12:00. Then you went on to the hotel. Now at the hotel, you have testified that you were registered in under an assumed name by Mr. Leman in order to keep the press from getting ahold of you?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, now for the last four or five days prior to that time you had been quite vocal in the press, hadn't you, [fol. 834] General?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The 26th, the 27th, the 28th, 29th, you had—you had called press conferences for the one on the 26th and the 27th, hadn't you?

A. Well, either they called me or I called them.

Q. Well, now, did the Shreveport station call you to get this party line statement or did you call them?

A. No, I called them.

Q. Then you wanted to be sure that statement got out as close to Mississippi as possible, didn't you?

A. Which statement, sir?

Q. The one from Shreveport. The Shreveport station reaches over into Mississippi, doesn't it, General Walker?

A. Mostly Louisiana and Texas, yes, sir. The answer to your question is yes, sir.

Q. All right, you called to Shreveport to get a release on a Shreveport station?

A. Right, sir.

Q. Then the next day you called a conference in Dallas, Texas, in front of the TV cameras is that right?

A. I don't know who called it. Maybe I did.

Q. Well, you were anxious to get your message out to those who cared to listen, were you not?

A. Very glad to get it out.

[fol. 835] Q. All right. That was your appeal, to bring your, "Your flag, your tent and your skillet," is that right?

A. On Wednesday the 26th of September, yes, sir.

Q. And Thursday, the 27th, you reiterated your flag, tent and skillet, did you not, or did you?

A. I don't think so but I may have.

Q. Well, let's take a look at that. I think we can find out.

Mr. Andress: If the Court please, they are in evidence. We think this is repetition.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: We have read them and heard them.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Gooch: That's the one we played over the . . . No,

I am not. On the transcript of the movie we played, the first paragraph, I think you will find a reference to, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet"?

A. Yes, it leaves off the first part, evidently.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I am talking about the flag, tent and skillet part.
A. Yes, it's in there.
Q. All right.
A. Was that—may I ask a question about that, sir?
Q. Yes, sir.
[fol. 836] A. Was that in the—
Q. In the movie just showed?
A. Oh, I see. Right.
Q. This is a transcription of the movie that was shown, General?
A. Right, sir.
Q. Now was that expression, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet," was that an original phrase or statement from you or had you borrowed that from somebody else?
A. As far as I'm concerned, it's original. Somebody else may have said it. Practically everything's been said before.
Q. Now did you mean by that that the people were to come on to Mississippi, when you said, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet,"—
A. When I—with reference to coming to Mississippi, it refers to bringing your flag, tent and skillet, that you will need somewhere to stay and you will probably have to feed yourself, even the people—
Q. And a flag with which to rally under, is that correct?
A. You don't necessarily have to rally under a flag. You can carry one.
Q. It's a pretty good idea to rally under a flag, though, [fol. 837] isn't it, General?

Mr. Watts: I object to that, if Your Honor please, as argumentative.
The Court: It could be. Sustained.

[fol. 838] A. That is immaterial, whether you have a flag or not, to rally.

Mr. Watts: Well, the objection has been sustained Mr. Witness.

Mr. Gooch: Well, we have got two Courts now that is determining it.

Mr. Watts: He doesn't hear very well, Tiny.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, take the one from Oxford, General Walker. That was subsequent to your flag, your tent and your skillet coming to Mississippi, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, that was afterward, on the 30th.

Q. And in that Oxford statement that you issued, that meant come on to Oxford, didn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, those that had been importuned to bring their flags, their tents and skillets to Mississippi were then informed, to the extent that the news media would reach them, to change their course from Jackson and elsewhere and converge on Oxford? Is that correct, General?

A. Yes, sir, they would probably need their skillets in Oxford, and Jackson too, sir.

Q. But they also—I suppose you meant for them to bring their flags, their tents and their skillets on to Oxford, is that correct?

A. To Mississippi and Oxford, or Jackson or wherever [fol. 839] they came from.

Q. The last one is what I am talking about, and that is the one in which they are directed or invited to come to Oxford, as I read it? I may be in error.

A. Yes, sir, but where the skillet was mentioned, it didn't mention Oxford did it?

Q. Oh?

A. It mentions Mississippi.

Q. I know. I am talking about, though, the appeal you made for them to come to Oxford. I assume that you meant for them to bring their flags, their tents and their skillets and come on to Oxford, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir. I didn't tell them to take them home and come back.

Q. All right. Now, after you had registered in at the Mansell Motel, I believe you testified that the next morning you went down to see Sheriff Ford?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you informed Sheriff Ford where you were and where you could be reached if anyone wanted you, I assume, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you informed Sheriff Ford that you would like to be of any assistance to him that you could?

A. That I would be of any assistance to him, I could.

[fol. 840] Q. Well, suffice it to say, without quibbling over words, you offered your services to Sheriff Ford, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time, General Walker, you knew that the Sheriff's Department, including Sheriff Ford, the Highway Department under Col. Birdsong, or the State Highway Police, rather, under Col. Birdsong, were all under the jurisdiction as far as orders were concerned from Gov. Ross Barnett, did you not?

A. Yes, sir, they would have been.

Q. You knew at that time that Gov. Ross Barnett had used the Mississippi State Highway Patrol, together with the Sheriffs, Deputy Sheriffs and Constables from the various counties in Mississippi for the purpose of keeping Meredith from entering the University of Mississippi on his attempt on September 20, 1962, did you not?

A. September 20?

Q. 25th.

A. May I ask the question: Is it the 20th or the 25th? You said 20th.

Q. Two different times. One was the 20th and one on the 25th.

A. I don't recall any on the 20th but—

Q. Well, I asked about the 25th, to be specific.

[fol. 841] A. I don't know in what legal manner he used his forces to stop the entrance of Meredith.

Q. I am not talking about legal matters. Aside from the legality of the situation, do you know whether or not Gov. Barnett used the police forces of the State of Mississippi, consisting of the Highway Patrol, the Sheriffs, the Deputy Sheriffs, to prevent the entrance of Meredith on the campus, from entering the University of Mississippi on or about September 25, 1962?

Did you know that?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. All right. You also knew from having been in the State of Mississippi on September 30, 1962, that Gov. Ross Barnett had not changed his position and had not released or relinquished his opposition to Meredith entering the University of Mississippi, did you not?

A. As far as I know he hadn't.

Q. Then when you went to Sheriff Ford on Sunday, September 30, and offered your services you were also offering your services to Gov. Barnett, were you not?

A. Sheriff Ford is a law enforcement agency, sir, law enforcement, required to keep down violence.

Q. Back to my question—

A. And I went to Sheriff Ford and offered my assistance with the idea that I would assist him in keeping down any [fol. 842] violence.

Q. Did you make it known that that was what you were there for, or did you say, "Anyway I can serve you?"

A. I said I could serve him. I would serve him.

Q. That was what—

A. If he needed me. I gave him the address of my—where I was staying.

Q. Did you say that you would do anything you could to keep down violence?

A. I was—I forget how I stated it, but I told him that I was not there for violence and that I would assist him in any way that I could.

Q. You just implied that you would assist him in keeping down violence, is that right?

A. That's right, that was the implication.

Q. Did you attempt to assist the Rev. Duncan Gray in attempting to keep down violence after you got on the campus, General Walker?

A. I assisted in keeping violence down on the campus.

Rev. Duncan Gray—when you get instructions in mob activities, you don't—and I have had plenty of instructions and study in the activities of mobs and how to suppress them. This is a military requirement. This is in our training program, and you don't assist people—you lose effec- [fol. 843] tiveness if you assist people that the crowd is against, and opposing. And definitely Duncan Gray was in a—he, himself, was in a personal position where he was subject to violence.

Now, the violence, the overall major violence was the violence that might occur, or did to some extent occur in the opposition of one group against another. But not Duncan Gray. He was just immaterial to it.

Q. Back to my question, did you assist or refuse to assist the Rev. Duncan Gray when he sought your help in stopping the violence that you observed on the campus of the University of Mississippi on the night of September 30, 1962?

A. I assisted Duncan Gray by not using him.

Q. All right. He advised you, did he not, that the students would listen to him—listen to you, and implored you to use your influence, did he not?

A. He made those statements, or something similar to them, but he was a frenzied little minister.

Q. And you told the Rev. Duncan Gray that you didn't come there to stop anything? And wouldn't stop it if you could, didn't you?

A. I recall no such statement.

Q. Would you say you didn't make that statement?

A. I wouldn't make—I wouldn't say I didn't to Duncan [fol. 844] Gray. Didn't make any difference what I said to Duncan Gray. He was frenzied and useless.

Q. You told all those around him, including Duncan Gray, that since he was an Episcopalian it made you ashamed to be an Episcopalian. Did you make that statement?

A. I did.

Q. Now, in your statement on the monument—I am drifting a bit ahead, but just to get your viewpoint on it, General,—you stated you assisted Duncan Gray by not helping him—I believe that was the import of your statement?

A. May not have assisted him directly, but it was an assistance to the United States Government.

Q. Were you trying to help the United States Government that night, General Walker?

A. As far as keeping violence out of what was going on, I was.

Q. What kind of a reaction does it have to a mob of people when you tell them somebody sold them out? You think those are soothing terms, General?

A. Yes, sir, that—when they are claiming that the Governor has sold them out. That is one step lower, and that is a soothing term. I am sure Birdwell (sic)—immediately the way the rumor started that was inflaming them that they were being sold out—now, you must get the picture, Mr. [fol. 845] Gooch. It was like this.

I wasn't even going to speak to them for a long time, as I have stated. I didn't expect to speak. Until they begin to rise up in this enthusiastic determination over the statement, and get excited over Barnett selling them out.

Now, the reason for this, which hasn't all become clear, it becomes perfectly obvious that the students saw the Highway Patrol leaving the campus, and they felt that the Highway Patrol were their friends and were on—even though the Highway Patrol were standing physically and pushing them back, but they felt when the Highway Patrol went, fourteen or eighteen cars, whatever it was that I saw drive off the campus, they immediately thought the Governor had sold them out and the Highway Patrol had gone off and left them, and they were getting all riled up and more—more purposeful, and determined—so that is why the rumor that Barnett—that is the origination of the rumor of why Barnett had sold them out. Because here is the Highway Patrol on the campus was leaving the students, and about this time was when the students began to come toward the monument. It wasn't all because I got there. It wasn't because I was there, but the Highway Patrol were leaving just ten minutes before that. And they came to see why they were leaving. They even talked to [fol. 846] some of the Highway Patrolmen. I didn't hear them. In the cars. As they started off the campus, and the Highway Patrol went right on by the monument. I asked a student, "Who is leaving the campus, who are those people in automobiles?" And one of them said to me, "That is the Highway Patrol," so I walked over to the curb about twenty steps from the monument on the left, coming out on the south side, and I looked right down in the automobiles to verify that the Highway Patrol was leaving. I didn't understand why the Highway Patrol would have been leaving at that time, and it became very obvious to the students when these people left, that Barnett had sold them out. And this was getting them quite excited.

Q. I don't want to interrupt you if you have more to say.

A. Will you re-read his question?

Q. No, that has been—

The Court: We will go on to his next question.

Q. Been about ten minutes ago. I don't even know what I asked you now.

General Walker, I may be repeating a little bit, because I am trying to get back to the continuity, but you did see Sheriff Ford down there on the morning of September 30 and tendered him your services, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 847] Q. Then, I believe after that incident you stated that some newspaper reporters found out you were in town. Do you know how they found out you were in town?

A. No, sir, I don't.

Q. Could have been by virtue of the fact you had told them you were going to Oxford the night before, couldn't it, General?

A. It may have been, but it wouldn't be necessary. They would find out where I was.

Q. They sort of have a way of seeking you out if they want to find you, don't they, General?

A. They sure do.

Q. At any rate, you were contacted by some newspaper men, and I believe you said—I may be in error—along about 9:00 o'clock—no, I am in error. You testified you went up to the Courthouse about 9:00 o'clock or to breakfast about 9:00 o'clock.

A. Sunday morning?

Q. Yes. What was throwing me on that, I notice on that statement you made from Oxford you have got a 9:00 o'clock date on it, but apparently that means you called that into Oxford before you had your press conference—I mean called that in to Dallas before you had your press conference; is that correct?

A. As far as I remember that was the reason for that. [fol. 848] It was called back to Dallas, usually at the same time, yes, sir.

Q. All right, General. After you had already talked to Sheriff Ford, had your breakfast and gone to talk to Sheriff Ford, did you return back to the motel?

A. Yes, sir, as I remember we went back to the motel.

Q. And then I believe you went in to lunch, was that about the next sequence of events?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated at the luncheon table, or in the cafe you ran into some reporters there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the time you told them that you would hold a press conference at the Ole Miss Hotel?

A. Yes, sir, they were quite demanding in their requirement for a press conference.

[fol. 849] Q. I believe you further stated that you knew that that was where the reporters were staying?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you know that, General?

A. Conversation in the cafeteria—in the cafe.

Q. So how did you spend your afternoon, General, from the time of your lunch, which I assume was around midday, until your press conference that afternoon?

A. Back at the motel, probably getting a nap and making telephone calls to certain people back to my house to find out about my car that had been taken that night, and to work up a press statement for the press. It takes me usually an hour or hour and a half to work up a statement for the press.

Q. General, you had worked that statement up by 9:00 o'clock, that morning?

A. I may have, yes, sir. That is the usual occurrence. I usually go over them and—

Q. Only about six lines. Take you an hour and a half to work up that conference?

A. Well, this part of it, in seeing that it was right for the situation as it was at that moment, and making telephone calls, and probably getting a nap.

Q. All right, did you listen to the radio to see what was going on in the news?

[fol. 850] A. Probably did. Probably read a paper.

Q. Didn't believe anything you heard or anything you read, did you?

A. The question is what, sir?

Q. We will go on to the next question.

About what time, General, did you have your dinner that night?

A. My lunch or dinner that night?

Q. Well, did I say lunch? I meant dinner. I thought you had lunch around midday, and I was talking about dinner, or supper, as we used to call it down in Ennis County.

A. Dinner—I had—I got into the cafe and—cafe in Oxford about 5 or 10 minutes until 8:00, I would say.

Q. And who were you with?

A. Louis Leman.

Q. Anybody else?

A. Nobody else.

Q. Now I believe you testified that you—someone came in with a radio, and you heard President Kennedy's speech, is that correct?

A. That is right, sir.

Q. Did you hear the proclamation issued by President Kennedy along about that time relative to the Oxford, Mississippi, incident?

A. I heard whatever he said, Mr. Gooch.

[fol. 851] Mr. Gooch: Please mark this as Defendant's Exhibit 15.

(Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibit No. 15, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Gooch: For identification, Plaintiff's Exhibit 15 is Proclamation No. 3497, Obstructions of justice in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. Watts: As a matter of information, was that read over the radio as a part of his speech?

Mr. Gooch: It's my information that it was.

Mr. Watts: I have no objection to it, if it was.

Mr. Cravens: Or referred to. It may not have been read. It may have been referred to.

Mr. Watts: Well, I would object to it unless it came to this witness' attention. I have no objection to you asking if it did come to his attention but I object to it going in evidence unless—

The Court: He hasn't offered it yet, Counsel. Save your objections until the offer.

Mr. Watts: Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I tender to the witness Defendant's Exhibit 15, and ask you to take a look at that instrument and see if the language or the import of that instrument is such as to have been remembered by you as uttered by President Kennedy on the evening or after[fol. 852] noon or evening of September 30, 1962?

A. May I confer with my Counsel?

The Court: Yes, sir, you may.

The Witness: Is this supposed to be the Kennedy speech?

Mr. Watts: No, this is an official proclamation issued by the President.

Mr. Gooch: It was issued over radio and TV.

Mr. Watts: I think we can depend on Mr. Gooch's statement. As a matter of simple information, was this included in the President's speech?

Mr. Gooch: It was alluded to in the President's speech and part of it quoted from.

Mr. Watts: Do you understand, part of it was apparently quoted in the President's speech and we have no objection to the proclamation, as such. What part was quoted, I do not know?

Mr. Gooch: We offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 15, being Proclamation No. 3497, obstructions of justice in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. Watts: We have no objection to the Proclamation.

The Court: It's admitted.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 15

Mr. Gooch: By the President of the United States of America.

[fol. 853] A PROCLAMATION.

Southern District of Mississippi and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit; and

WHEREAS such unlawful assemblies, combinations and conspiracies oppose and obstruct the execution of the laws of the United States, impede the course of justice under the laws and make it impracticable to enforce those laws in the State of Mississippi by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; and

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN F. KENNEDY, President of the United States, under and by virtue of the authority vested [fol. 854] in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including Chapter 15 of Title 10 of the United States Code, particularly sections 332, 333 and 334 thereof, do command all persons engaged in such obstructions of justice to cease and desist therefrom and to disperse and retire peaceably forthwith.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this 30th day of September in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and sixty-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eighty-seventh.

Signed by John F. Kennedy.

We offer that, if we have not. I believe we did already offer it in evidence.

The Court: You did offer it. It's been admitted.

Mr. Gooch: I would like now to mark for identification as Defendant's Exhibit 16, and instrument entitled, "Executive Order 11053," which was also referred to and quoted from in the Kennedy speech, duly certified by the—whoever puts the red ribbons on.

Mr. Watts: No objection.

(Defendant's Exhibit 16, was marked for identification.)

[fol. 855] Mr. Gooch: We now offer in evidence Executive Order 11053.

The Court: Defendant's Exhibit 16, and it's admitted.

Mr. Gooch: Providing the assistance for the removal of unlawful obstructions of justice in the State of Mississippi.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 16

EXECUTIVE ORDER

WHEREAS on September 30, 1962, I issued Proclamation No. 3497 reading in part as follows:

"WHEREAS the Governor of the State of Mississippi and certain law enforcement officers and other officials of that State, and other persons, individually and in unlawful assemblies, combinations and conspiracies, have been and are willfully opposing and obstructing the enforcement of orders entered by the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit; and

"WHEREAS such unlawful assemblies, combinations and conspiracies oppose and obstruct the execution of the laws of the United States, impede the course of justice under those laws and make it impracticable to enforce those laws in the State of Mississippi by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings; and [fol. 856] "WHEREAS I have expressly called the attention of the Governor of Mississippi to the perilous situation that exists and to his duties in the premises, and have requested but have not received from him adequate assurances that the orders of the courts of the United States will be obeyed and that law and order will be maintained.

"Now, Therefore, I, John F. Kennedy, President of the United States, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including Chapter 15 of Title 10 of the United States Code, particularly sections 332, 333 and 334 thereof, do command all persons engaged in such obstructions of justice to cease and desist therefrom and to disperse and retire peaceably forthwith;" and

Whereas the commands contained in that proclamation have not been obeyed and obstruction of enforcement of those court orders still exists and threatens to continue:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including Chapter 15 of Title 10, particularly Sections 332, 333 and 334 thereof, and Section 301 of Title 3 of the United States Code, it is hereby ordered as follows:

[fol. 857] Section 1. The Secretary of Defense is authorized and directed to take all appropriate steps to enforce all orders of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit and to remove all obstructions of justice in the State of Mississippi.

Section 2. In furtherance of the enforcement of the aforementioned orders of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, the Secretary of Defense is authorized to use such of the armed forces of the United States as he may deem necessary.

Section 3. I hereby authorize the Secretary of Defense to call into the active military service of the United States, as he may deem appropriate to carry out the purposes of this order, any or all of the units of the Army National Guard and of the Air National Guard of the State of Mississippi to serve in the active military service of the United States for an indefinite period and until relieved by appropriate orders. In carrying out the provisions of Section 1, the Secretary of Defense is authorized to use the units, and members thereof, ordered into the active military service of the United States pursuant to this section.

Section 4. The Secretary of Defense is authorized to [fol. 858] delegate to the Secretary of the Army or the Secretary of the Air Force, or both, any of the authority conferred upon him by this order.

THE WHITE HOUSE

September 30, 1962.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, is that the Proclamation that put the Federal forces into the Oxford Mississippi situation?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that question because it's not within this witness' knowledge. He's asked him the legal effect of that Proclamation.

Mr. Andress: That's an Executive Order.

Mr. Watts: That's an Executive Order. That's a matter for the Court.

The Court: In view of the past experience of the witness, I'll permit him to testify, if he knows.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir. Yes, his understanding of it, I would....

The Witness: Will you read the question?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. The question is, General, is that the instrument by which the use of Federal forces were being permitted or commanded to be used in connection with the Oxford incident?

A. I have never seen this. I have never seen one before. I do not know.

[fol. 859] Q. Well, I'm sure if you don't know, you don't know. But being a man who was learned in military law and the man who commanded Little Rock, I thought perhaps you would know that an instrument, Executive Order such as that, is required before troops are used in a matter such as the Oxford incident.

If you don't know, that's quite all right. The instrument is self-explanatory.

Do you still say you don't know whether that's the executive order that brought the militia into this matter?

A. I don't. I don't remember seeing one like that at Little Rock.

Q. All right. You have testified previously that troops, Federal troops, had been committed to the Oxford incident prior to September 30, 1962, have you not?

A. Yes, sir, from all the reports I—

Q. Never mind the reports. Do you know of any instrument other than the instrument of which I have handed you that committed Federal troops to be used in the Oxford, Mississippi, incident on September the 30th, 1962?

A. I know of no other instrument.

The Court: Do you have a pretty good stopping place, Mr. Gooch?

[fol. 860] Mr. Gooch: The next series is rather lengthy, Judge.

The Court: All right, then let's recess.

(Thereupon, at 4:50 o'clock, p.m., an adjournment was taken until the following morning at 9:00 o'clock, a.m., Friday, June 12, 1964.)

EDWIN A. WALKER, having been previously sworn, testified further as follows:

Cross examination (Continued).

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, in yesterday's proceedings there was introduced an exhibit which portrayed a news release made by you in Jackson, Mississippi. I refer to Defendant's Exhibit 8, and the first sentence.

"I am in Mississippi beside Governor Ross Barnett." That was a part of that press release, was it not?

A. Yes, it was. Just a part of it.

Q. Now, were you actually or figuratively beside Governor Ross Barnett?

A. Figuratively.

Q. Did you see Governor Barnett after you got to Mississippi on the 29th?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. You let him know you were there?

A. I didn't personally, no, sir. I had no contact with him.

[fol. 864] Q. Then by that figurative statement that you were standing by him I assume that you meant you were adhering to the principles that Governor Barnett had previously expressed?

A. I was supporting the principles that he had expressed.

Q. All right. You were, of course, aware at that time that he had prevented the entry of Meredith into the Ole Miss University?

A. He had opposed it, yes, sir.

Q. And he had prevented it, had he not, up to that time?

A. He hadn't been entered up to that time.

Q. All right. When did you first learn that Meredith was actually on the campus of the University? Was it after you got to the campus, or did you ever learn he was there?

A. There was discussion of it all day Sunday afternoon, you might say, and I thought there was a remark made about him being on the campus at the press conference when I got there and they said I was scooped by Marshals having moved on the campus. I think there was a reference to Meredith being on the campus at the same time. But it—I would have definitely known about it when I got to the campus.

[fol. 865] Q. Is that the first time you definitely knew Meredith was on the campus, was when you got to the campus?

A. I considered him on the campus after the press conference, the discussion at the press conference.

Q. Had you been told prior to the press conference he was actually on the campus?

A. No, but this was all being told. You were told several times. Even in Jackson we heard he was coming on the press conference (sic). There was much discussion about it. But nothing that appeared definite to me, Mr. Gooch.

Q. You mentioned a conference at the Courthouse on Sunday afternoon with Sheriff Ford and a number of other Sheriffs?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also mentioned there was a Governor's representative there, I believe?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Governor's representative tell you at that time that Meredith was on the campus?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did you take that as authoritative?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, let's get on now back to the dinner at the Mansion House Cafe, which we were getting close to yesterday afternoon.

[fol. 866] I believe you testified that you got into the cafe sometime shortly before 8:00 p. m. and that someone had a radio and you moved up to where you could listen to the speech of President Kennedy; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you listen rather carefully to the President's speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall whether or not the President informed all of the listeners that Meredith was then on the campus?

A. I don't recall that he did, sir.

Q. Do you recall generally what the President—the text of the President's speech?

A. The text of the speech was to the effect that the administration intended to see that Meredith was entered into this University of Ole Miss, and it referred to the use of Military forces, as I remember. I believe we should have the text of the speech.

Mr. Gooch: Well, suppose we just have the President's speech played, for the sake of continuity.

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, I think this is going a little too far. Your Honor knows all the emotional impact connected with the President's speech. It doesn't prove or [fol. 867] disprove anything. I think we can read it.

The Court: It might be relevant.

Mr. Watts: I have no objection to the speech, but I say playing it—

The Court: We will play it, if they want to play it.

Mr. Watts: All right. If Your Honor please, I will object to the movies. This man did not see a movie.

The Court: What did you see?

The Witness: I heard it on the radio.

Mr. Watts: If you turn the movie part off, I have no objection to the sound. I think it would be better to read it, however.

The Court: I will permit the sound of exactly what the General heard.

Mr. Gooch: Well, can you turn off the picture and just have the sound?

The Technician: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: All right. That is all right.

(Whereupon a sound recording purporting to be the speech of President Kennedy was played to the Jury as follows:

"News Commentator: We take you now to the White [fol. 868] House in Washington, D. C.

"Second Commentator: From the White House in Washington, NBC News brings you John F. Kennedy, President of the United States. As the President speaks to the Nation, Meredith has arrived on the University of Mississippi campus to be enrolled tomorrow. Governor Barnett asked that bloodshed shall be avoided. The President.

"President Kennedy: Good evening, my fellow citizens. The orders of the Court in the case of Meredith versus Fair are beginning to be carried out.

Mr. James Meredith is now in residence on the campus of the University of Mississippi. This has been accomplished thus far without the use of National Guard or other troops, and it is to be hoped that the law enforcement officers of the State of Mississippi and the Federal Marshals will continue to be sufficient in the future.

All students, members of the faculty and public officials in both Mississippi and the Nation will be able, it is hoped, to return to their normal activities with full confidence in the integrity of American law. This is as it should be. For our Nation is founded on the principle that observance of the law is the eternal safeguard of liberty. And defiance of [fol. 869] the law is the surest road to tyranny. The law, which we obey, includes the final rulings of the Court as well as the enactment of our legislative bodies.

Even among law abiding men few laws are universally loved, but they are universally respected, and not resisted. Americans are free, in short, to disagree with the law, but not to disobey it. We are a government of laws and not of men. No man, however prominent or powerful, and no mob, however unruly or boisterous, is entitled to defy a court of law. If this country should ever reach the point where any man or group of men, by force or threat of force, could long deny the commands of our court and our Constitution then no law would stand free from doubt. No Judge would be sure of his writ. And no citizen would be safe from his neighbor. In this case in which the United States Government was not until recently involved, Mr. Meredith brought a private suit in Federal Court against those who were excluding him from the University.

A series of Federal Courts, all the way to the Supreme Court, repeatedly ordered Mr. Meredith's admission to the University. When those orders were defied and those who sought to implement them threatened with arrest and violence the United States Court of Appeals, consisting of [fol. 870] Chief Judge Tuttle of Georgia, Judge Hutchinson of Texas, Judge Reeves of Alabama, Judge Jones of Florida, Judge Brown of Texas, Judge Wisdom of Louisiana, Judge DeWitt of Alabama, and Judge Bell of Georgia, made clear the fact that the enforcement of its order had become an obligation of the United States Government. Even though this Government had not originally been a party to the case, my responsibility as President was therefore inescapable. I accept it. My obligation under the Constitution and the Statutes of the United States was and is to implement the orders of the Court with whatever means are necessary, and with as little force and civil disorder as the circumstances permit.

It was for this reason that I federalized the Mississippi National Guard as the most appropriate instrument should any be needed to preserve law and order when United States Marshals, carried out the order of the Court and prepared to back them up with whatever other civil or military enforcement might have been required.

[fol. 871] "I deeply regret the fact that any action by the Executive Branch was necessary in this case but all other avenues and alternatives, including persuasion and conciliation had been tried and exhausted.

"Had the police powers of Mississippi been used to support the orders of the Court instead of deliberately and unlawfully blocking them, had the University of Mississippi fulfilled its standard of excellence by quietly admitting this applicant, in conformity with what so many other Southern State Universities have done for so many years, a peaceable and sensible solution would have been possible without any Federal intervention.

"This nation is proud of the many instances in which Governors, educators and everyday citizens from the South have shown to the world the gains that can be made by persuasion and good will in a society ruled by law.

"Specifically, I would like to take this occasion to express the thanks of this nation to those southerners who have contributed to the progress of our Democratic development in the entrance of students, regardless of race to such great institutions as the state-supported Universities of Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Arkansas and Kentucky.

[fol. 872] "I recognize that the present period of transition and adjustment in our nation's Southland is a hard one for many people. Neither Mississippi nor any other Southern State deserves to be charged with all the accumulated wrongs of the last hundred years of race relations.

"To the extent that there has been failure, the responsibility for that failure must be shared by all, by every state, by every citizen.

"Mississippi and her university moreover are noted for their courage, for their contribution of talent and thought to the affairs of this nation.

"This is the state of Lucius Lamar and many others who have placed the national good ahead of sectional interests. This is the state which had four Medal of Honor winners in the Korean War alone.

"In fact, the Guard Unit federalized this morning early is part of the 155th Infantry, one of the ten oldest regiments in the union and one of the most decorated for sacrifice and bravery in six wars.

"In 1945, a Mississippi sergeant, Jake Lindsley, was honored by an unusual joint session of the Congress.

"I close, therefore, with this appeal to the students of the University, the people who are most concerned:

[fol. 873] "You have a great tradition to uphold, a tradition of honor and courage, won on the field of battle and on the gridiron as well as the university campus.

"You have a new opportunity to show that you are men of patriotism and integrity. For the most effective means of upholding the law is not the state police or the Marshals or the National Guard—it is you. It lies in your courage to accept those laws with which you disagree as well as those with which you agree. The eyes of the nation and all the world are upon you and upon all of us and the honor of your university and state are in the balance.

"I am certain that the great majority of the students will uphold that honor. There is, in short, no reason why the books on this case cannot now be quickly and quietly closed in the manner directed by the Courts.

"Let us preserve both the law and the peace and then after healing those wounds that are within, we can turn to the greater crisis that are without and stand united as one people in our pledge to man freedom.

"Thank you. Goodnight.")

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now General Walker, the President's speech has just been played and tabulated here in the record. Does that recall to your mind the things you heard there in the [fol. 874] Mansion House Cafe that night?

A. It recalls to my mind the President's speech, yes, sir. I heard it there that night.

Q. And you did notice in the President's speech that the nation was advised, as were all the listeners, that Meredith was then in residence on the campus?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. You considered that authority, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Then prior to the time that you got to the campus on the night of September the 30th, 1962, you knew without question that Meredith was then on the campus and that he had been taken on the campus that day, did you not?

A. Yes, sir, I am not denying that in any way, Mr. Gooch. I would say I knew—I was pretty suspicious of it and suspected from earlier than this speech, as I said after the press conference.

Q. All right. Now I believe you stated that after the President—well, now just at the conclusion of the President's speech, did you make any remark concerning the President's speech?

A. I may have.

Q. I'll ask you if you uttered these words:

"Nauseating, nauseating?"

[fol. 875] A. I may have.

Q. Well, that expresses your feeling I presume then for the President's speech?

A. It expressed my feelings with respect to the situation as it was being presented at that time from the Administration's point of view, Federal Administration's point of view.

Q. All right. Now after the President's speech, you said, after some delay there at the cafe—I believe you said with relationship to some cigarettes or something, or you maybe were stopped—you and Mr. Leman went to the campus.

You have detailed on the map, which I believe is Plaintiff's Exhibit 1—did that get a number applied?

Anyhow, the large map on the wall, on the easel.

The Court: Plaintiff's 11.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. —Plaintiff's Exhibit 11, that prior to the time you got to the campus itself, that there is a railroad track underneath the University Avenue?

A. Yes.

Q. And the car in which you were in pulled in and parked at someplace east of the railroad track?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated that you got out?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 876] Q. Before the car was parked?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You started on towards the campus?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Leman was left behind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now were there people scattered out along University Avenue, walking in the same direction you were?

A. No, sir, they was scattered out sort of facing the street, watching what was coming and going to the campus.

Q. Were there people between you and the campus as you left the railroad bridge and started towards the campus?

A. Yes, sir, in spotted groups along the route.

Q. About how far did you proceed before you saw or heard of Mr. Leman again?

A. Well, I crossed a big long bridge, which is just part of the road. You can hardly tell the tracks are underneath. And I crossed that. I would say I was about 60 yards.

Q. And then did you make any motion with your arm?

A. Yes, there were people—I had passed people on the, standing there, 30 or so.

And as Leman came out of the park and turned, why, I was up ahead and I wanted him to know where I was and I waved to him to come on up.

[fol. 877] Q. Did you call him by name or did you just wave your arm?

A. No, I didn't. It was too far. I just waved my arm and signaled so he could catch where I was.

Q. There was only one way to get on down to the campus, was that street, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir, but I wanted him with me.

Q. All right. Now as you got closer to the entrance of the campus, did you observe any people there on University Avenue just at about the entrance of the campus?

A. There was no particular group up there. There were people on both sides of the street in little groups of three's and four's, as you might have come to the campus in a car or a group, and you get to the campus and then there is a group around the monument in an area of 60 feet, say, where the light would show on, that one street light was—that was there.

Q. All right.

A. And it would show the monument. It showed the monument.

Q. Now about the time you got to the edge of the campus but before you actually got on it were you hailed by a group of persons across the street?

A. I wasn't hailed. Some people spoke to me across the street, smiled at me, definitely recognized me.

[fol. 878] Q. What did you say to them?

A. Well, I had talked to three or four on the left side. Now I was right on the sidewalk. I never got off the sidewalk. On the south side of University Avenue, coming to the campus.

And I talked to three or four people on the side, on the left side, and then I turned around and, looked around. I looked at the policeman over in the center of the street to see if he was stopping anybody. He wasn't. And people were going by him on both sides on the—he was in the center of the street, just stopping cars.

And people were going up and down the sidewalks as they wanted. And I—

Q. Did you holler?

A. And I said to 'em, "Come on."

Q. Did you wave to them and say, "Come on?"

A. Across the street to a group that recognized me, about three or four people.

Q. All right. Now when you got on down to the campus, proper, I believe you said there was a street light southeast, I believe it would be, of the monument?

A. Southeast, yes, sir.

Q. And did you stop under that light?

A. Sir?

Q. Did you stop under that light?

[fol. 879] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you greeted by any of the students there?

A. Yes, three or four, six or eight, or eight or ten, in groups of three's and four's as they come up.

Q. What was said, General?

Mr. Gooch: Get the General a glass of water, will you, Mr. Sheriff?

The Witness: Thank you, sir.

Just greetings, they would come up and want to shake hands with me and say hello and, of course, every one that did, why, I would let them say what they wanted to and they wanted to greet me and see me.

Some had—well, during the evening, three or four had said they had seen me in my Jackson speech six months before down in Jackson, Mississippi, and so there were several that had other places and some had never saw me before, just heard, didn't recognize me.

And as they would come up and greet me, then I would turn the conversation immediately to find out what had gone on on the campus, what it was all about and what had happened.

And that was sort of the conversation that went on continuously all evening.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. About how many people came up to you there on [fol. 880] your first entrance to the campus, General?

A. Oh, I would say 15-20 people, probably shook hands with me out of what was standing around, what saw me. And then there were people right beside me that would look up surprised and say—they didn't know who I was.

Q. Did any of that crowd or the 15 that came around with you, whether it was a crowd or not would not be proper, but any of that group that came around you, did they ask you to lead them?

A. Not early, sir, not until—not at that time in particular. There was some students coming back, you see. I wasn't the whole center of attraction at any time there. There were people coming back from throwing rocks and up in the tear gas, boys in T-shirts and sweaty and hot and talking about what was going on up there to their friends back there.

There were people going and coming. That took a lot of the interest and all I had to do was just listen to what they were saying.

So lots of times I was listening to people didn't even know who I was, didn't even know I was there. They didn't know I was listening to their conversations.

Q. The people in the first group that greeted you there, were they all students or of student age, I would say?

A. Well, there were some spectators around, say there was 15 or 20, I would guess, that weren't students, sir. [fol. 881] The students were more down towards the buildings and in their own areas, you might say, and up towards the front in the grove.

We were in the area where the spectators—you are looking a little bit downhill when you go down University Avenue from the monument, so you are not seeing too much on the campus. In fact, you are just seeing a light up in front of you that's lighting up a monument in about 60 feet.

So the only spectator position that will show anything about what's going on on the campus has to be pretty close to that street light.

Then if you stand in the street light, it's not good because you are lighted and the rest of the area is not, so you don't—you move, move out in the light, you see, to get out in the shadows somewhere or where it's a little bit less light so that you see better to the front.

Q. As you approached this small group or while you were talking to that small group, did you see any of the students come by going east with a chemistry professor that had just been beaten up?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't—that didn't—so far as you know, nothing like that happened?

A. Oh, it may have come by. I didn't see everything that was happening. There were things going on every- [fol. 882] where. There weren't—everybody there just wasn't paying attention to me.

Q. All right. Now after you had been, talked to this group, of, say, 15 under the light, where did you move to, General?

A. As I indicated yesterday, I believe I moved around on the west side of the monument within about 15 or 20 steps of the monument, first on the south side as I crossed over, talking to people and then crossed over to the west of it about 15 or 20 steps, talked to more people.

Q. When was it that some of the crowd or some of the people indicated, "Here is our leader. We have a leader now. General Walker is here."?

A. Well, in this timing we are using, Mr. Gooch, it would have been, say, now we are 15 minutes ahead after I am on the campus—

Q. Yeah.

A. —I would be in the trees, just from 10 to 20 steps from the monument, and I heard students began, saying, I—"We have a leader."

[fol. 883] Q. Did one of the students say to you, "General, will you lead us up to the steps?"

A. Oh, they asked that many times. "Will you get us organized, will you lead us?" That was the predominate question on the campus.

Q. All right. Now, after these conversations with these entreaters, did you go toward the Lyceum Building, General?

A. Yes, sir, I walked up a little bit further. Not toward the Lyceum Building, toward the flagpole. That is still practically out of sight of the—you cannot see—I couldn't see all of the Lyceum Building. I couldn't see Marshals from the flagpole. So, I moved up a little toward the flagpole; about halfway.

Q. Physically, the flagpole is on a direct line from the monument to the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir, about straight.

Q. Well, I don't want to quibble, but if you were moving toward the flagpole you were moving toward the Lyceum Building, were you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did anybody go with you?

A. Three or four, probably the Sheriff and Louis Leman stayed pretty close by. I never was aware of exactly where he was, except certain times when he would be talking with [fol. 884] me.

Q. You say only three or four went with you as you walked?

A. Within fifteen or twenty feet of me, yes, sir, maybe five or six. But the others weren't paying any attention to me. Then somebody would come on by me and come up to me. You couldn't see more—you couldn't identify anyone more than about twenty steps at the most.

Q. As you—before you walked westward toward the flagpole, we will call it, that is when the people had greeted you down there by the monument, shouted to you, "Here is our leader, will you lead us to the steps," and then you started toward the flagpole; is that correct?

A. Mr. Gooch, it is like this: The story at Oxford was done at Oxford. And the—there wasn't any leading of anybody up toward the flagpole, or anything else. We were just standing around in the area. I wanted to get a little bit closer, hoping I could see after I got out from under the light, we were discussing what had gone on on the campus, and I just moved up toward the flagpole to see what was going on. There wasn't anybody paying any particular attention to me except people standing maybe ten steps from me, and there wasn't—there wouldn't have been six or eight.

I will say there were three or four people over here, [fol. 885] there were three or four people over there, and there may have been at any one time three or four people by me, and maybe three or four that moved up there with me. Leman, the Sheriff, maybe one or two others. And then maybe three or four joined us there, and discussed something.

The other question was, "General, what about Cuba? Will they use Military forces here—when we are—why are the Military forces coming here, when Cuba is in the situation?" This is one of the typical questions that was going on. Yes, sir.

Q. General?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Back to the question. As you went toward the flagpole, I believe you stated there were only four or five that went with you, or followed you?

A. In the immediate vicinity that were paying any attention to what I was doing, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, you mentioned this Deputy Sheriff. What was the—when was the first contact you had with the Deputy Sheriff relative to your entrance onto the campus proper?

A. I would say it was after that ten or fifteen minutes, which extends to maybe twenty minutes and he is out in this fifteen or twenty steps from the monument where he came up, or I went up to him and spoke to him.

[fol. 886] Q. And then in that conversation is it true or not that you asked him to deputize you?

A. The deputization was mentioned. I had no idea anybody could deputize you under a tree. It was just sort of a facetious statement.

Q. Did he tell you he could not deputize you because he was not from that county and even if it was his county he couldn't deputize you?

A. He mentioned that, yes, sir. He thought it was more serious than I did, I guess.

Q. Then, did that Deputy Sheriff stay with you pretty well throughout the night?

A. I never was aware that he was with me pretty well throughout the night, sir. Somebody stepped off fifteen or twenty steps away from you, he could be with you, or if he was watching you or paying any attention to you. But there were other people that were up by me, three or four or six, talking about something else, so I am not aware of where he is. But in general, I will say, I heard his testimony, it sounded like he probably knew pretty much what I was doing during the evening.

Q. Now, as you got there to the light you said some ten or fifteen people gathered around you from time to time. Could you give us an estimate of how many people you saw down around there—down around the flagpole—not the [fol. 887] flagpole, the monument?

A. Around the Confederate monument?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Oh, I guess in the area of the shadow of the light you could see about sixty people standing around talking, seventy people, something like that.

Q. You mentioned a figure yesterday from one hundred to one hundred fifty. Where was that group?

A. Well, if you included the people down the street, and start them, but they could hear what is going on. And they, if they were lined up down there, as I came through, they were in groups, sometimes threes and fours, why I don't know what happened to them, but they were facing the street, sort of. There wasn't anything to see what came and went from the campus, I guess, but that is sort of downhill and—

Q. Then, at the time you got to the campus, first went on the campus, you say there were fifty or sixty people around the monument, and that that, together with the rest of them back further east on University, would total up maybe to a hundred and fifty to two hundred, or a hundred to a hundred and fifty, whatever you said?

A. Well, I couldn't see it, sir. This would be my judgment—my judgment. Now, there were people out in front of the flagpole throwing rocks, and tear gas is coming in, [fol. 888] into the whole area. The whole area is permeated with tear gas. I could smell it when I got to the monument, certainly, or even to the lamp post, and I asked somebody, "What is that?" To reidentify it, and in answer to the question, I guess there definitely must have been—what I could see—couldn't be more than one hundred people from the time—from the lamp post to around the monument.

I probably wouldn't have seen but about one hundred people, except down on the street there were probably another sixty or seventy people, down as far as the bridge. There were twenty or thirty people standing on the bridge.

Now, the reason for this dissertation, nobody knows what area your question is about.

Then if you want to surmise, I would surmise there were six or seven hundred students over this whole area, maybe a thousand. I don't know. They were in dormitories, coming out of dormitories, in and out of the YMCA, from what I heard. I never saw these buildings. And when you want to take in the whole Lyceum, the whole dormitories, the canteen down behind the Lyceum and everybody interested in what is going on, or interested in doing something about it, as far as looking and seeing, in and out, keeping up in [fol. 889] general with it, why, most of them were spectators. I guess there were six or eight hundred or a thousand people all over that area.

I am coming back to your question in this—that around the area of the monument, at the time we have discussed now, and I am talking to the Sheriff, and I am moving up to the flagpole, I saw not more than one hundred to one hundred twenty-five people, around in groups.

Q. What did you see when you got up in the vicinity of the flagpole?

A. Up to the vicinity of the flagpole?

Q. What did you see when you got up there?

A. Well, now, this is later.

Q. No, talking about the same time?

A. Well, half an hour later, say, or twenty minutes—

Mr. Watts: I don't think he heard you.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General, you stated that after you were greeted by this ten or fifteen people you went on west toward the flagpole. You did testify, however, that you were going toward the flagpole, not the Lyceum.

Let me ask you this question: You had been on that campus at least twice before you went on there that night, had you not?

A. In an automobile, just through a campus.

Q. You knew where the Lyceum Building was, didn't you, [fol. 890] prior to the time you were on the campus that night?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. I understood you to testify that after you had been greeted there by, or shook hands with this ten or fifteen people, there under the light, you moved on a little bit west of the flagpole, and that is when they said, "Here is General Walker, we have got a leader, lead us up to the steps"?

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, I object to that statement. It includes factors not in evidence. The witness did not testify he was ever west of the flagpole. And he—that is unfair cross examination and argumentative.

The Court: Overruled.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I believe you stated, that you, with some three or four people went west toward the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, my question that I asked a moment ago is what did you see after you had walked west toward the flagpole?

A. Your question was when I was in the vicinity of the flagpole, Mr. Gooch. Nobody knows what "vicinity" means. It could be five hundred yards, or ten feet. This—

Q. Wait a minute, General.

[fol. 891] You had walked westward one step or ten steps, it matters not—

A. I am about—

The Court: Just a minute, please.

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: He hasn't quite finished his question.

The Witness: I am sorry, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I am asking you when you first made some movement to the west what did you see? Describe—give us a graphic description of what you saw, General?

A. I believe I have stated what I have seen, with regard to the people. Do you want me to repeat that?

Q. No, I am trying to find out—

A. I will say, then, that I was looking almost toward the Lyceum Building, in general. Looking toward what the people were doing, looking toward noise; anything like that would attract my attention. I was talking and shaking hands with people. I was seeing people coming and going by. I was seeing people coming and going by from east to west, going up in front of the flag, out from the Lyceum

Building. They would hit in general—their direct fire would hit about thirty to fifty steps short of the flagpole, west of the flagpole. They might roll, every now and then, one fired would roll to the flagpole. It could go that far. That [fol. 892] is the ones that were directed in this direction.

Now, then, I was trying to see what I could see of how many students there were, and how many other people there were, and basically what the Lyceum Building looked like, the Marshals and so forth.

I could not see them from where I stood. I couldn't even make out the outline of the Lyceum Building. There was a light up there. I could tell there was a building and a—a reflection. I couldn't even be sure that I could see the movement in front of that building, and couldn't identify Marshals from this position. So, there wasn't too much to see.

I was getting more information in talking to people, and seeing what had happened. I was interested in what happened on the campus.

Q. I believe you said on yesterday the most people you saw at that time was around thirty, that was between you and the Marshals; is that right?

A. I would say directly in the Grove and between the Lyceum Building and between me and the Lyceum Building, the flagpole and Lyceum Building, was about thirty and scattered groups that I could see at that time. Now, there was just enough light to see in certain areas.

Q. What were they doing, those students you saw?

[fol. 893] A. You might say they were up there to harass and antagonize the Marshals, in general protest.

Q. Did you consider it a riot?

A. Not what I am looking at and that we are discussing now. Not that portion of it, no, sir.

Q. Did you see or observe or remember about a newsman's car that had been smashed, and its camera, the car caved in somewhat, over to the south of the Circle?

A. Later I heard about it. I knew about it when it was going on. I asked a student what that racket was. I could hear it. I don't know what time this is. This might have been ten or ten thirty, or it might have been earlier. But I could hear a racket going on up there, and I asked a student, "What is going on up there?" And he said, "They are breaking up a news car," that I had already discussed with them about, "Well, why are they after the news car?" And, well, the discussion came out that they told me stories about the newsmen asking them to do things so they could take pictures of them doing it. I heard stories like that.

And he said they probably asked them to beat up the car.

But, anyway, I heard them breaking up the car and I moved around, and when this was, say about 10:00 o'clock, I moved up again short of a line through the flagpole, and [fol. 894] listened to see if I could identify what was going on. I never saw it. I couldn't see it. Lights were all out, it was as dark as it could be. Not all the lights. There was one little light, as I remember, at this time up to the right of the walk that heads toward the Lyceum Building; way up toward the Lyceum Building.

Q. Now, General, at the time we are discussing now, and we have gotten up to 10:00 o'clock, which is fine. Up to that time had you seen anybody that approximated your age, or were most of them students?

A. From the time I came on the campus?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 895] A. Yes, sir, I've seen people that approximated my age, older and younger.

Q. In the group that went up with you towards the flagpole, were some in that group?

A. As I remember, the Sheriff started with me or went with me or talked to me during that time, or was by or left or something.

And Louis Leman is bound to have been close by. And there were—I don't remember anybody in particular at that time.

Q. Did you at any time that night see any students engage in what you considered to be rioting?

A. Well, there is no doubt, sir, that you could say over-all, if you have talked about the situation, there was a riot on the campus but I saw—entirely different what I saw and what happened on the campus. I didn't see everything. I didn't get on the campus until a lot of things had happened.

Q. I suppose it would be impossible for one to see and have heard everything on the campus that went on, General?

A. Certainly would have.

Q. Would you say, based on what you saw and what you heard, that there was a riot situation on that campus that night?

A. Yes, there was a riot situation, over-all, on everything that happened on the campus.

[fol. 896] Q. All right. Now let's go back, if you will, and I apologize for skipping, but we are now back to the time that you and, you say, four or five went towards the flagpole, after you had been greeted there under the light and had talked to those students and after you had been asked to lead them up the steps.

Now as you got up there, you say you observed and you couldn't see the Lyceum Building. I believe you stated that?

A. I didn't say that, sir.

Q. Well, I misunderstood you.

A. I said I couldn't see the outline of the Lyceum Building. I could see there was a building there and I knew there was a building there and I knew it was the Lyceum Building.

We discussed the Lyceum Building through all these conversations. We knew what we were looking at.

Q. All right. Now after you had seen what you have described, did you start back eastward towards the monument?

A. Well, I went back to the monument, right, and to that vicinity, right within 30 or 40 yards of it.

Q. Was it on that trip back that you encountered the Reverend Duncan Gray, the incited, excited little minister?

A. Well, it was either on the way up or on the way back, or in general; it was along in that period.

[fol. 897] Q. He asked you to stop, help him stop the rioting, did he, General?

A. He said, "You can stop it."

Q. What did you say to him?

A. I said, "Why don't you stop it?"

Q. And what did you say then or what did he say?

A. I don't remember the sequence, but the idea was he wanted me to stop the—the—demanded and was frenzied about it and was all upset and excited and—over, I believe —didn't we—wasn't this—shall I repeat everything that's been said on this before?

The Court: Yes, go ahead and answer his question.

A. Well, I—his approach was all excitable and frenzied and just turned my back on him and walked off and I even again, when he approached me, why, I twisted the other way and went to talking to somebody else.

Q. Did you tell him you wouldn't stop it if you could?

A. I don't recall saying that.

Q. Would you deny that you said that, General?

A. I don't recall it.

Q. All right. Now was it then or later that you told him and the crowd that you were ashamed of being an Episcopal?

A. I remember telling him that.

Q. And you repeated that on the monument later?

[fol. 898] A. I didn't remember that I did but I have heard many witnesses say that they heard me say it on the monument. Maybe I did.

Q. It's pretty difficult for a person to remember all at this stage what he did say on a given occasion, isn't it, General?

A. The key areas of what you said and didn't say and whether you charged or not are very easy to remember, Mr. Gooch.

Q. I understand that.

A. Certainly wouldn't forget whether you were leading charges on the campus or not.

Q. I understand that. But I am talking now about the question of what you remember you said and, to be blunt about it, you have heard a lot of witnesses given conflicting testimony up to this point as to what you have said, haven't you?

A. Pretty clear statements, I think, so far.

Q. And the ones that you have heard so far, without enumerating them, do they represent generally what you recollect you having said, the clearness of the statements by the witnesses thus far?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you concur in what the witnesses thus far have said you said on the monument?

[fol. 899] A. Their's is a guessing and their's is a remembery (sic) and their's is a—I'm not substantiating that the actual details of what they said versus what I say, or in general what they have said about the situation that night and about everything that's there is the best of their memory and paints the picture about as I see it.

But we are not—we can't make the same words, Mr. Gooch.

Q. Nobody can make the same words, General. The reason I asked you that question you said that up to now the witnesses who have testified painted a pretty clear picture of what you had said on the monument.

Now all I asked you to do was either affirm or deny that statement.

A. I would rather refer to my own remarks about what I said on the monument. And I'll stand on those. And what supports those, the witnesses are correct. What doesn't support them, that's their opinion.

Q. All right. Now with relation to the time that you first went westward toward the flagpole, did you go westward at any time thereafter and prior to the time that you made the speech on the monument?

A. I never went—no, sir, never went past the flagpole. I was way short of the flagpole.

Q. No, I don't mean that time, General. I am talking [fol. 900] about—and please try to follow me and I believe we can get along a little faster. You have stated that you and a group of four or five did go towards the flagpole?

A. That's right.

Q. There you encountered Duncan Gray and you came back to the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now my question is, did you go back westward at any time prior to the time you made the speech on the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Tell me about that.

A. I moved five or ten feet west, steps westward, to talk to somebody else.

Q. All right. Anybody go with you?

A. Nobody that I know of.

Q. All right. After that few steps to the flagpole, did you go westward any more before you made the speech on the monument?

A. Now we are, say, half-way between or a third of the way between the monument and the flagpole?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. All right. In general, I moved five feet, five steps, east, or ten steps, ten steps north.

Q. All right.

[fol. 901] A. Talked to somebody.

Q. All right. Then are we about back down now to where you were at the monument when you—

A. No, I moved 20 steps south, talked to somebody.

Q. All right. What else?

A. Then I am in the vicinity of the monument.

Q. All right. Now when you got back to the monument and shortly before you made your speech, was there any urging you on to lead them at that time?

Was there any urging to lead them at that time?

A. This is turned in—basically, the question before, starting to lead was to start to ask, "Will you talk to us? Will you make speeches."

That was the predominating question about that—I believe I said—"Will you lead and organize us?" That came a little bit later. That was interspersed, too.

But the main question, "Will you talk to us? Will you—will you make a speech?"

Q. All right. Then you did make a speech?

A. If you call it a speech. I got up on the monument and talked to them.

Q. Well, did you make a talk to the students, General, we'll put it all—we'll put it that way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you outline as best you recollect what the entire [fol. 902] speech, as you made it that night, or talk, was?

A. I told the students that they had a right to protest, they could continue to protest but that this was no place for violence; that the truth and the tragedy of this situation was indicated by a sign on their own airport which said, "Cuba is that way (indicating);" that nobody came to Mississippi—and these were my exact words—nobody came to Mississippi for violence. Violence is not intended.

I said that if there is any violence on the campus, it is on the hands of the Federal Government.

When I said there was no violence intended, there was a rousing moan and boo and, "He's not going to do anything. Let's go."

And I waited until it calmed down and people began off the fringes to leave and there they were talking back and forth, "He's not going to do anything. What's he here for? Let's go on."

And during this, probably before this point, a minister, as we have identified as Duncan Gray, something catches the side of my leg. Again he's grabbing ahold of me and he's sort of clawing his way up to get up on the monument.

I don't remember exactly what he said. I think I said, "The minister would like to speak but I am talking now. And he can speak and say what he wants when I get through."

[fol. 903] And there was a—the reaction was, "Get him off of there. Get ahold of him. Jerk him down."

And some boy walked across in front of me that looked ready to take him apart and the inference was that I sort of quit, watched, looked at it. And I am looking down, I am about 15 inches or 18 inches higher than the other people, and somebody pulling him off.

And I waited and somebody had took him around to the left side and I went on talking.

And I had made the determination only changing my mind after refuting time and time again, that I had nothing to say and all the time finding out what was going on, on the campus.

At this time, before I got on the monument, there was a discussion, and it began to pass the word around the crowd and excitement over the fact and getting mad over the fact that Governor Barnett had sold the students out, he had—that "We are sold out. Let's get going. Let's do something."

And then people had said, "Will you speak?"

There was a drunk there on the campus that was quite drunk, talking about an old frontier and new frontier, an Alamo frontier, and he was just all mixed up, he wasn't making any sense at all.

And I had to walk off from him about five or six times [fol. 904] and he was as drunk as he could be, to be standing, in my opinion.

And I decided, when the situation, as was, as it was at this time, I changed my mind and I said—actually Louis Leman came by me and said, "Those students really want you to talk to them."

And I said, "All right," to the next students, I said, "All right, I'll speak to them."

In the meantime—you want me to go ahead?

Mr. Gooch: General, the question I asked you originally was to give everything you said on the monument. That was the question I had asked you.

The Witness: Right, sir. Well, we will go right on to it.

By Gooch:

Q. All right.

A. Been a long time getting to the monument, sir.

Q. No, you had—well, go ahead.

Mr. Watts: Go ahead.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I had asked you to detail what you had said on the monument. Now if you have finished with that—

A. Now we are on the monument. I have stated what I have said, as I recall so far. These were the major, important emphasis, points I was getting across.

Very carefully—this is a very unusual situation. The [fol. 905] reason because, not as Savell stated, that I said that the Governor had betrayed you—that is exactly what I didn't say. And that is exactly why I got on the monument, to stop the rise in the determination to do something over the Governor getting out.

I got on the monument just when they began to say this and now I have just come out of the courthouse about two or three hours before and had heard the story of Sheriff Moore told to the Sheriffs, the Governor's representative, and so I am on the monument and I am speaking to the students and I wanted to make this clear to them, that the Governor had not sold them out, that the Governor's orders had not been followed out and his desires, that a representative of his—not mentioning the man's name—but definitely his representative—I'm not telling you this but I am telling you what I heard at the courthouse this afternoon, and that is that the Chief of the Highway Patrol, Birdwell—and I realized, thinking of Birdwell, that I am misusing his name, that's not the right name, and I turned down to somebody to my right, which I didn't know at the time but it was Mr. Leman and he said, "Birdsong."

And I said, "Mr. Birdson, according to this representative, escorted and accompanied, you might say, Meredith on the campus that afternoon," and that this was not according to the representative, the Governor's desires, and [fol. 906] this is not the way the rumor I am hearing on the campus now.

Q. In other words, you were telling them at that time that your best information was that Govenor Barnett was still protesting the entrance of Meredith, on the campus, is that correct?

A. I was telling them that Mr. Birdwell had brought the, had escorted or been with the group that had come on the campus with Meredith and that Governor Barnett had not sold them out.

Just before this, the Highway Patrol had left, as I remember. On a group of cars coming off the campus. This was before I got on the monument. Pardon sir?

Q. General, you were telling them that the Governor had not sold them out, that Birdsong had sold them out, and that the Governor was still standing fast in his original position with respect to the entrance of Meredith, were you not?

A. I didn't say that.

Q. Was that the implication, would that be a reasonable implication?

A. I believe that's your statement, Mr. Gooch.

Q. No, I am asking you for yours, General?

A. No, sir, it's not.

Q. Now have you told us all that you remember of your [fol. 907] statements made on the monument?

A. I have told you all I remember, as I did before. Unless something else refreshes my memory.

Q. Well, I believe when your deposition was taken in this case, that with respect to violence, you stated that what you told them, that no violence was intended, do you recall that?

A. No, I don't, sir.

Q. All right. At the time you told them that they had a right to protest, did you tell them that they had a right to keep up the protest?

A. I told them they—they could continue to protest, right.

Q. By continuing the protest, did that mean that they could continue, that you thought it was all right to continue what they had been doing?

A. I didn't say that, sir.

Q. Did you know at the time you told them that they had a right to continue their protest that they had been throwing rocks and bricks and missiles at the Marshals?

A. I knew that they had been throwing rocks at the Marshals, yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. And that they had been fired on by the Marshals continuously.

[fol. 908] Q. Now let's—at any time that night, did you ever loosen your tie and collar, General?

A. Yes, sir, my back was getting tired. This is over a period of four and five hours, you might say, until, I think when I left about 1:30 or 2:00, and my back was getting tired, say, around 11:00 o'clock, something like that.

And I felt like I was getting a headache and took off my hat and stood under a tree for—over to the left of the monument, for 20 and 30 minutes at a time, took my—loosened my tie.

And when I did it, I was entirely by myself, except maybe Leman may have seen me or somebody, and loosened my shirt collar.

Q. I quote from your deposition, Page 253, with reference to what you said on the monument:

"I stated that any blood shed on the campus would be on the hands of the Federal Government."

A. That's right, sir.

Q. "That the students had a right to protest." Correct?

The Court: I don't think he heard you, Mr. Gooch.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Correct?

A. Will you repeat that?

Q. That the students had a right to protest?

A. Yes, sir, but your reference is to—I don't know I [fol. 909] said it in that sequence. The sequence would make a lot of difference.

Mr. Gooch: Get the deposition. I believe that I quoted it exactly as you said it, General.

Look at Page 253, at Line 14.

A. Line 14?

Q. Yes, sir.

[fol. 910] Q. Did I quote you correctly?

A. May I read it?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I am looking for the question, sir? Have you got the question?

Q. I guess it is the line before the answer.

A. Back to line three?

Mr. Andress: Line one, "By Mr. Cravens".

A. Is this the question?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Yes, sir, the last question up there—I am asking you about the speech you made on the monument and what you said. The question just before the answer, "Can you answer the last question?" And your answer, "Yes, sir, be happy to, sir." And then your answer, as I get it—

A. "I am asking you about the speech you made on the monument." And I stated, "That any bloodshed on the campus, that this was—any bloodshed on the campus would be on the hands of the Federal Government; that the students had a right to protest; that no violence was intended and nobody came to Mississippi for violence. That the tragedy of the situation was very obvious with respect to Cuba and what was going on in Cuba, and it was well reflected by signs on their own airport that said, "Cuba that way."

[fol. 911] And this statement doesn't even cover the Birdsong activity.

Q. I didn't ask you about Birdsong in the question. I asked you if you made the statement that you just read.

A. Yes, sir, but that is not the sequence of the speech.

Q. The sequence of what?

A. That is not necessarily the sequence of the way—I couldn't identify the sequence of what happened.

I am—what I am saying, Mr. Gooch, that in the intent of that speech, and the general tone of it, was to keep the students from any violence; to keep them in the area of a protest only. I intended to keep them in the area of protest, to try to stop any violence that was possible. Any violence on that campus would have been exactly opposite to what—and would have played right into the hands of the use of tremendous Military force. Any violence would have played right into the hands of the use of Military force.

As it was, the thing was looking fantastic and ridiculous. Absolutely ridiculous. It is still ridiculous, with 23,000 troops on the campus. Any fifty or one hundred men could have put any student on any campus in the United States on a week day.

Q. General, the question I originally asked you was to [fol. 912] reaffirm as to whether or not you had made the statement which is attributed to you on page 253 of your deposition. That is all I asked you. No sequence at all. I just asked you if you made that statement in the deposition.

A. I made that statement in the deposition referring to general things that were stated in the speech as I remembered it at that time.

The overall—I will take that—retract that. If it is in the deposition, definitely I said that, sir.

Q. Did you say also in the deposition, I believe at page 255, that Col. Birdsong was in violation—"In fact, he said that Col. Birdsong was in violation of what the Governor ordered and desired?"

Mr. Watts: Correction, Tiny. "What the Governor wanted and desired."

Mr. Gooch: Maybe I have got the wrong one. Wanted and desired.

A. That, yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now, did you tell them, again on the monument, you were ashamed you were an Episcopalian?

A. I may have. May have not.

Q. All right. Now, General, I am going to ask you these questions relative to the remarks that you made on the monument to see whether or not they conform with what [fol. 913] your recollection is of your speech.

Did you say, "Marshals ought not to be here"?

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Would you say you didn't?

A. I don't recall it.

Q. "You have a right to demonstrate against the Marshals being there." Did you say that?

A. I certainly don't recall anything like that.

Q. That, "They had a right to protest against what happened there and that the Marshals being sent in against the University to make sure Meredith got in . . ." Did you say that?

A. Will you repeat that?

Q. "That they had a right to protest against what happened there and the Marshals being sent in against the University to make sure Meredith got in." Did you say that?

A. I said only that they had a right to protest, as I recall.

Q. Did you say, "You may not win, but you will be heard"?

A. I may have said, "You may be heard." I don't recall the other.

Q. You didn't say, "You may not win"?

A. I don't recall,

[fol. 914] Q. Would you say you didn't?

A. I don't recall it.

Q. Did you say something to the effect that they had been sold out by the Kennedys?

A. This is the speech on the monument?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I don't recall it.

Q. This statement is attributed to you on the monument while you were making your speech. "Protest all you want to. They might run out of gas. Help is on the way. Thousands are coming."

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not make that statement?

A. I don't recall anything like that.

Q. Did you make this statement: "It is wrong for the Marshals to come in and force integration."

A. I don't remember making that statement on the monument.

Q. Did you ever make a statement that it was wrong for integration to be forced?

A. Did I ever?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That it was wrong for integration to be forced?

Q. Yes, sir.

[fol. 915] A. With reference to Military forces, yes.

Q. I am talking about in the absence of Military forces. Did you ever make the statement it was wrong to have forced integration?

A. Anywhere, on or off the campus? Yes, I have. To force integration.

Q. Regardless of Federal troops or otherwise, is that right?

A. I am talking about Marshals, Federal troops or any way. I have made that general statement. I don't believe it is right.

Q. All right. Did you ever make this statement: "You are fighting a good fight. Keep it up. Help is coming. Don't be discouraged."

A. I recall no such statement.

Q. This statement: "You have every right to protest." Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. "It is your constitutional right to protest." Did you make that statement?

A. I probably have said, "You have a constitutional right to protest."

Q. And, "I will lead you in your protest." Did you make that statement?

A. I don't recall it.

[fol. 916] Q. Did you make this statement—

A. Are we referring to just on the campus, now, or somewhere else?

Q. Talking about on the campus.

A. I don't recall it.

Q. Did you make—

Mr. Andress: Pardon me, isn't the question "On the monument?" I thought it started out on the monument only.

Mr. Gooch: That is what I am talking about. I am asking him if these statements weren't made on the monument.

The Court: I think he has referred to the word "campus".

Mr. Gooch: Excuse me, I am using campus and monument synonymously, and I apologize for that, but the original question I asked him was what was said on the monument.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Did you make this statement, "You will be heard all over the world"?

A. I may have made a statement to the effect that, "You will be heard," or something of the sort. Seems to me I remember such a statement, that they would be heard.

Q. General, at the time you made this statement on the [fol. 917] monument you knew there had been casualties?

A. I didn't say I made that statement, Mr. Gooch.

Q. No, at the time you made a statement on the monument?

A. No, sir, I didn't know there had been casualties.

Q. Didn't you testify prior to the time you made the speech a man came up with blood on his stomach, pulled up his shirt or pants leg or something?

A. Oh, casualties, yes, sir, of that type. Yes, sir. My mistake.

Q. That is what I mean.

A. My mistake. I was referring to other type casualties. Yes, sir. I knew there had been some minor injuries, and there had been reports of some major injuries.

Q. You knew that the students were throwing bricks, bottles and missiles at the Marshals prior to the time you made that speech, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever say on the monument, "All right, I will lead you"?

A. I don't recall any such thing.

Q. Did you ever make the statement, "Stand by your Governor"?

A. No, sir—yes, sir—oh, "Stand by your Governor?"

[fol. 918] Q. Yes, sir.

A. I may have.

Q. I am still talking about the monument now.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make this statement, "You have a right to protest in any way you see fit, even if it involves violence or bloodshed"?

A. I recall no such statement.

Q. The next one on the monument, the speech on the monument, "I want to congratulate you students on what you are doing here this evening."

A. I recall no such statement. I recall referring to congratulations regarding protest. Not necessarily on the monument though.

Q. You did congratulate them on the protest at some other time?

A. I have mentioned that protests were perfectly all right if they kept it to a protest.

Q. Did you compliment them on the campus that night, on the protest they were making?

A. You are talking about all over the campus?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Referring to just protest, I had said, "You have a right to protest." And I have used the word "compliment" [fol. 919] on protest, but not anything else; to talking.

Q. Did you make this statement on the monument, "There are thousands who are behind you, or with you, and you will win in the end?"

A. I don't recall it.

Q. Now, deviating a moment from the speech, did you ever—were you ever asked where these tens of thousands were that you had talked about on the news releases?

A. Probably in passing around somebody asked me, "Is anybody coming?" Or, "How many," or what?

Q. Did you make any reply to that?

A. Usually not. I didn't know.

Q. Did you tell them, "They will be here when needed?"

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you give any advice that night, General, on an effective method of putting out or combating tear gas?

A. I remember standing way back during the course of the evening and discussing what was going on with people, and I remember somebody standing by me just quietly, and saying, "What is the Military do to put out tear gas"? And I said, "As far as I can recollect, if water doesn't do it you can use sand."

Q. Anything else said about it?

[fol. 920] A. I believe so. I believe I said something about, "I don't think you have got any sand. No sand is available, or where would you get sand."

Q. What was said then?

A. I guess the student walked on off. I don't know what was said.

I gave no orders or directions to anybody to do anything. He asked me a Military discussion, what usually happened, and how you did it. Well—

Q. General, at any time prior to the time you made the speech on the monument did you see any wheelbarrows or carriers bringing up bricks from the building under construction down on the south side of the campus there, or south side of the Circle?

A. I don't remember seeing them, Mr. Gooch. I know brick were coming up from the thing because the students told me at different times they were getting brick from down there, and I saw the old building. I didn't know whether they were tearing it down or putting it up. Had a lot of weeds and stuff around.

But I don't remember exactly seeing a wheelbarrow, but I know that from time to time I knew there were some bricks coming from down there. I didn't actually see a load of them all night.

Q. You did know they were coming from there?

[fol. 921] A. Yes, sir, the students told me. I asked them and they told me where they were getting them.

Q. And you knew the purpose for which they were being brought up there, didn't you?

A. Well, as I believe the witness said, you can't pull up the pavement, hardly. But it seems to me I saw a fence all torn up, or something, and they were getting pieces of that at one time in the evening. Or they said something about tearing up a fence, or something.

The Court: Let's recess at this point, ladies and gentlemen. We will recess until a quarter until 11:00.

(Short recess was had.)

[fol. 922] Mr. Gooch: General Walker, prior to the time you went to Mississippi on September the 29th, 1962, you had been told by Mr. Leman that there was an explosive situation on the campus of the University of Mississippi, were you not?

A. He may have used those terms.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. You also knew at the time you went to Mississippi on the 29th of September that feelings were running high in Mississippi, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also knew that your going to Mississippi would create considerable publicity and create a protest, did you not?

A. I knew it was a protest. I had no idea what publicity it would....

Q. Turn to deposition Page 91. Question on Page 91: "Of course, you knew in September of 1962, that your going to Mississippi would create considerable publicity, did you not?"

A. Considerable publicity, yes. I didn't know how much, sir.

Q. With respect to the Mississippi situation, I believe you stated prior to the time you went to Mississippi the following:

"This is a critical situation. There is nothing lawful [fol. 923] about forced integration. It is not on the book. It would have to be passed by Congress to be lawful."

Did you make that statement, General?

A. At what place and time, sir?

Q. On the 28th, September 28th, 1962.

A. To who?

Q. To a newsman in Dallas?

A. I may have.

Q. Those were your sentiments, were they not?

A. My sentiments were that any—that the over-all integration problem as it's being run today should be legislated by the Congress. Those are my sentiments.

If this is what they intended, it should be legislated by the Congress of the United States, the representatives of the people. That's what I felt at that time and I haven't changed, sir.

Q. You previously testified that after your press releases on the September 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th, did you not, that you got hundreds of calls from across the country from people who said they were accepting your appeal to come to Mississippi?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you testify in your deposition that when you arrived on the campus there was an explosive condition of excitement, resentment and turmoil?

[fol. 924] A. Yes, I did. I may have said, "explosive," or —did I say, "explosive"? Are you quoting from the deposition?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Right, sir, I did.

Q. Did you testify in your deposition that you never at any time saw any one throw a brick or other missile towards the Marshals?

A. I believe I did, sir. I didn't see the brick thrown.

I testified in my deposition that I, as I recall the deposition—it's 400 pages long—but as I recall the deposition, and I can restate what I saw on the campus, I never saw anybody throw anything that I could identify.

Now I saw people going through the motions of throwing and I—but I was not close enough to see what they were throwing, except I believe I testified in my deposition I definitely did see a student that could pick up the missiles as they were laying burning on the ground and throw them back—he couldn't throw them back into the Marshals in most cases, I would say never could, because he couldn't get them back that far.

But I saw one student, which was amazing, that had learned how to pick up a burning missile that was spewing tear gas, he would reach in under it someway and throw it back towards the Marshals.

[fol. 925] Q. Did you ever see any Molotov cocktails being made or Coke or soft drink bottles filled with gasoline?

A. No, I never saw any.

Q. Did you determine that they were being made?

A. They told me they were, yes, sir, some students said that they—and I knew that they were.

Q. Did you know how the Marshals were lined up at the Lyceum Building?

A. No, sir, I was never sure. I had been told how they were lined up. One—some said they were in a complete shoulder-to-shoulder of circle and then I heard that one or two, that there were two rows of them, two deep, and I never was sure exactly how they were lined up.

I never could tell exactly or I couldn't get close enough to see or didn't get close enough to see.

One time I was up pretty close to them and that was during the truce and at that time I was mostly interested in the truce and it seemed to me at that time that they weren't too, in any formation, that they were just sort of wondering around in front and sort of spasmodically standing in groups of two's and three's in the front, talking to each other, sort of, and not too well lined up or organized.

Q. Did you ever go west to the flagpole, General?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 926] Q. Did you testify that west of the flagpole the tear gas was heavier?

A. Well, it would have to be, Mr. Gooch, because that's where the missiles were landing, up in that area. Unless the Marshals came out, which they did a time—I believe I saw them twice.

Once they came out, I remember, to the flagpole while I was there through a five-hour period and if they fired—when they came out, they could lay down a barrage that would be heavy.

Of course, the gas was heaviest where they were actually landing and the preponderance was being fired from the Lyceum Building and they were actually landing short of the flagpole, say anywhere from 10 steps to 50 steps short, towards the Lyceum, was where they was landing in general.

So that area was the heaviest concentration. Of course, it was all over by then and it had all—the wind put it down into the dormitory.

Q. General, do you remember a news conference in Dallas about the 27th or 28th of September, of 1962, with a newsman by the name of Murphy Martin?

A. I don't know which one you are referring to but I have knowledge of a news conference in Dallas, which hasn't been referred to here, with the press and some press reports that have been printed that are in the Fort Worth [fol. 927] press that indicated that I said there wasn't—something to the effect, there was no violence.

I think they can find this report. This may be the one you are referring to, Mr. Gooch.

Q. No, I am talking about before you went to Oxford?

A. This was before I went to Oxford? This was a release, I am talking about, on the 28th, and said that I didn't—there was no violence—I hoped there wouldn't be any violence on the campus.

Q. Well, let me see if I can recall to your recollection, and I will ask you if this question was asked you by Mr. Martin:

"If you moved into the State of Mississippi with force, what would you call this movement, General," to which you replied, "This movement is with all patriotic Americans standing up beside Governor Ross Barnett in his cause for freedom."

Do you remember that question being asked you and that answer given?

A. Will you read it again?

Q. "If you moved into the State of Mississippi with force, what would you call this movement, General?"

"This movement is with all patriotic Americans standing beside Governor Ross Barnett in his cause for freedom."

[fol. 928] Do you remember that question and answer?

A. I don't remember it being asked or answered but it sounds like a statement I might have made.

Q. The next question, to the same person, "How would this movement be compared insofar as a name, as to the name, 'Civil War'?"

Do you remember that question being asked you, General?

A. No, sir.

Q. To which you replied, theoretically or according to this reporter, "You are referring quite some time back in history, of course, can repeat itself. The decisions with regard to your question will all have to be made in Washington, D.C., and by the 180 million people of the nation."

Do you recall now that you were asked that question and gave that answer?

A. No, I don't recall it, sir.

Q. Would you say that you didn't make that statement?

A. No, sir, I don't remember this incident or this reporter. He doesn't—I don't recall. Would you mind telling me who he is with?

Q. According to my information, and I think I am right, he is with the Southwest Central New Agency.

A. I have no recollection of it, whether it's telephone or [fol. 929] in the house or outside or what, sir.

Q. All right. Now I believe you stated at the time you left the campus there somewhere between, and I believe you said 1:30 and 2:00 or 1:00 to 1:30, I don't remember now which—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you? Do you remember which it was?

A. No, I don't. I said 1:30 or 2:00 or in the area of 1:30. I don't remember exactly. I just turned and walked off the campus.

Q. That was my recollection. Did you testify that you were followed?

A. I testified that we picked up a car, which I believe they referred to, tailing it, outside of Oxford, after we had made the turn and headed on Highway 6, we were headed towards the Mansell Tourist Court. And we noticed a tail on us.

Q. All right. Then you stopped and talked to the Highway Patrol and some students, I believe you said?

A. Right, sir.

Q. And then I believe you said that you left Leman's car, the one you were riding in there, at that place, and went on in another car, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that to try to shake the tail, as you called it?

[fol. 930] A. You might say. It wasn't a question of shaking them. I was going to go back to the Mansell after I got through where I was and the idea was that if they wanted anything, I wanted witnesses with me, Mr. Gooch.

Q. All right.

A. So I called and asked some friends to come down and meet me so if they wanted to stop me and talk to me, I would have a witness.

Q. It wasn't a question of fear on your part, was it?

A. I am not scared of anybody, Mr. Gooch.

Q. That's what I thought. And also in this Leman car was a weapon, was there not?

A. Sir?

Q. In the Leman car in which you were riding there was a weapon?

A. I don't know whether there was or not.

Q. I believe you testified in your deposition that there was a weapon's case in the Leman car?

A. I don't recall that. I remember I testified in the deposition that I saw a weapon's case in the tourist court at the Mansell.

Q. Well, you testified it was in the car. Now I don't want to quibble over it. I just wanted to ask you—

A. I don't remember what time in the car. If you want to read it out of the deposition, it suits me fine.

[fol. 931] Q. All right.

A. I think we can shorten this, because I'm going to say if the weapon was in the car, I didn't know it and I can also say the weapon never went out of the automobile that evening except if it went back in the Mansell apartment, which I don't know.

Q. I didn't say it did, General.

A. Never went on the campus.

Q. I just asked you if there wasn't a weapon in the Leman car?

A. Well, this may clarify the whole thing.

Q. Well, was there?

A. I don't know.

Q. Was there a weapon's case in that car?

A. I think the weapon's case you are referring to in the deposition, Mr. Gooch, is with regard to a weapon's case I saw some time, maybe the next day, I'm not sure how it reads, but that somebody brought into the court, the tourist court where we were staying, two miles out of Oxford, I remember in the deposition I testified that I didn't know what was in the weapon's case. I didn't know what sort of gun it is, if you will recall.

It's there in the deposition.

Q. That's right. I'm just trying to see if it was in the car or not.

[fol. 932] A. I couldn't even guarantee there was a gun in it. It was one of these break-down cases that held, I remember that much in the deposition, held a weapon. It was a weapon's case.

And I never saw the weapon that was in that case. And it was one of the break-down kinds that you have to take the gun in half, if it's in there.

Q. All right. Now, General, in your pleading—I assume you have read your pleading in this case?

A. You don't want to read the deposition, sir?

Q. Yes, I do.

A. Well, let's go ahead. I don't see any point in it.

Q. Well, I don't either but we will find it now since you have asked me. I'll find it in just a minute.

The Witness: May I speak to my counsel, sir?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Why don't you help him, Clyde, find it?

Mr. Watts: I don't know where it is myself.

The Witness: There are 400 pages. It will help for two to look.

Mr. Watts: I will start from the back if he starts from the front.

Mr. Gooch: Page 292, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Page 291 (reading). Did you see anything in the automobile that looked like weapons?—

[fol. 933] Mr. Watts: Might I request that you go back to Page 290, where it starts, when you asked him, did he bring any weapons to Oxford, right on the bottom of Page 290.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Well, I will ask you, did you take any weapons to Oxford, General?

A. No, I didn't.

Mr. Gooch: All right, does that clear that up, Clyde?

Mr. Watts: Well, that brings it all in context, Tiny, if you just start on Line 19, Page 290. That's where you started asking him about Leman bringing a weapon.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. (Reading) Did Leman have any weapons in his automobile? And you answered, "I don't know."

Then we go on over to Page 291, "Did you inquire whether he had or not?"

And you answered, "I don't recall requiring, inquiring.

"Did you see anything that looked like weapons?"

You said, "What is your question?"

Then, "Did you see anything in the automobile that looked like weapons?"

Answer, "I recall a weapon's case which I saw coming out of one of the cars, and I don't know which one it was, which one of which cars.

[fol. 934] "Your automobile, or the one Leman was driving?"

Your answer, "Either mine or Leman's."

Is that question correct?

A. That's correct. I believe you will find in there that my car didn't come until the next—or I didn't see it until—

The Court: Just a minute, please, General. Don't volunteer anything until he asks a question.

You see, your counsel on redirect may bring out other things which he thinks are important. So we can move along a lot faster if you will just answer the question, please.

The Witness: Yes, Your Honor.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General, did you testify in your deposition that you never saw any rioting?

Mr. Watts: Page?

Mr. Gooch: 383.

A. I may have, Mr. Gooch, to the extent that at that time, and it always has been, everybody's trying to build this thing up and I say during the period I was there and what I saw wasn't everything that was went on, on the campus, and I didn't get on the campus until about a quarter to 9:00 or 9:00 o'clock, and what I saw, if just what I saw had been seen by the press, I don't believe they could have said that, they could build it up the way they did.

[fol. 935] And I don't—I believe they overplayed it and over-built it, even what they did see—or with reference to your statement, I probably stated I didn't see any overall rioting on the campus.

Q. I will refer you to Page 389, the question in Line 12:

"Let me ask you this further question: Since your trip to Mississippi, has there been any increased demand on your time for speeches and public appearances before organizations over the South or anywhere in Texas?"

Answer, "The demand is continuous. I keep no records on that."

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it true?

A. It's—there is always a demand for speeches. There is always a request, in the house, for a speech somewhere, maybe three, five, ten.

[fol. 936] Q. General, have you ever made a statement to a representative of the UPI, United Press, as follows:

"Former Major General Edwin A. Walker said today the integration riot at the University of Mississippi last year in which two persons were killed were 'like a comedy, most amusing'."

A. No, sir, that is the most false report I have ever heard, and that report was made when I was on a speaking engagement. That report stems from Jackson, (sic) Florida, and it was a press conference and the intent of it was to spread it across the country so it would ruin our crowds as we were speaking. We had set up speeches from Florida to California, hitting a speech every night, clear across the nation, and we have a copy in our file, I believe—I am glad you identified it because I have the press release from Jackson that made that statement and if you will look at it it has got dits and dots and quotation marks and if you will look it is the most distorted, lying statement I have ever read.

I made so—no such inference. I had talked to the press for fifteen or twenty minutes, questioning me about Mississippi, and I made a statement during a conversation that went on for some time.

This is typical of the press, and I am so glad you brought it out, Mr. Gooch, because I think it is very, very interest- [fol. 937] ing. And went clear across the country as far as they could spread it, that I laughed at the comedy of the Mississippi situation.

The Mississippi situation was an out and out tragedy, stemming right out of Washington, D. C.

And during that conversation, to answer your question further, during that press conference in which there were about fifteen people present in one of the hotels in Jackson, Florida, (sic) the UP and the AP man was sitting side by side. One of their tricks. We noted it, and we knew it before they left the conference, and they wanted to question me on Mississippi, which I was perfectly willing to tell them, as I have said all over the country, continuously, I led no charges, I never got involved in any charges in Mississippi.

And, of course, I told them that that night, that I didn't lead any charges, and they wanted to know about Mississippi, like thousands of people are dying to know what happened on Oxford that night, or on the campus that night and in Mississippi and in Oxford and the surrounding area.

And I told them that once during a five hour period, or twice, or maybe three times I had to laugh at something the students originated, or something they did.

You have got your own press releases that say this thing [fol. 938] started in zest, with these students, and that they were laughing, and certainly they were using their songs and there were things that they did that were—even one of them that had the wound, he was laughing himself. He was laughing at what was going on.

Overall, the thing was a tragedy. Of course it was.

And then they distorted, and you read this to the Jury, sir, you read what happened, the dots, dashes, quotation marks, and there is a copy in my briefcase.

And that is where that story originated, and the intent of that story and of the press was to destroy the audiences which was set up, and they knew the schedule.

That I was laughing at the tragedy in Mississippi, it is the foulest reporting that I can ever think of. I am not mad at anybody, but it is just foul reporting. It is false, it is untruthful, it is deceitful, and it's destructive.

Q. General Walker, this is not the AP, this is the United Press.

A. The two sat side by side at that press conference and when they could get a little comedy, or reference to comedy, about something the students did, they both jumped up and quit the meeting. Just like that. We saw them go out.

[fol. 939] Q. I don't believe the AP carried anything like this at all.

A. It is typical reporting. It doesn't make any difference, sir.

Q. The next one attributed to you, "I wouldn't call it a riot, just student hijinks."

Did you make that statement?

A. To who and where?

Q. The UPI at Savannah, Georgia.

A. Probably with plenty of other statements. That is out of context and out of concept.

Q. I will ask you if you made this speech in—this statement in Savannah, Georgia: "Asked if he found the two deaths at Ole Miss a comedy, Walker snapped 'one of them was a foreign newsman. What was he doing there?'"

Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, sir, and I went further, Mr. Gooch, and made the statement, "This is a foreigner that should be protected, that the administration has all of the responsibility, within the hands of the judiciary, to find out why they haven't found out anybody that—and they should. This is a key responsibility, and I am convinced that it is very important, that the true story of Mississippi, which he had on tape and had just come from Auburn, Georgia, with in his [fol. 940] possession, why didn't somebody— why—do they want him to go back to Europe with the true story of Mississippi? I can assure you there is much objection to getting the true story of Mississippi in Europe, of what happened on the Oxford campus.

Why doesn't somebody find out that whole statement you read is out of context because I explained that the whole judiciary has the capability to—it is their responsibility to find out. Now, I can't say that they can.

But this is a reporter—a reporter killed.

Q. Do you know Mr. Kuettner of the UPI?

A. Do I know him?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Where from?

Q. Atlanta.

A. Kuettner?

Q. Kuettner.

A. Kuettner, yes, we have Alfred Kuettner, K-u-e-t-t-n-e-r (spelling).

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir, we met him over there and we took the—there has been a deposition taken over there in that office, of several people.

Q. I quote from a report of his, this is March 8, 1963, "Former Major General Edwin A. Walker yesterday [fol. 941] charged that newsmen helped engineer the violence which erupted at the University of Mississippi the night Negro James Meredith entered the school."

Did you make that charge to Mr. Kuettner?

A. As far as stories are concerned? You mean during this deposition?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Is this in the deposition?

Q. No, no, it is not in the deposition.

A. Is this a news release?

Q. Yes, sir, UPI news release by Mr. Kuettner.

A. What date?

Q. March 8th, 1963.

A. May I ask my counsel if that date corresponds with anytime I—

Mr. Watts: I don't think he understands the question. Tell him when and where.

Mr. Andress: Re-read the question, Mr. Gooch.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. According to my information, you made this in a form of a news release in Atlanta on March 8, 1963. I don't know whether you were there or not. I am asking you.

A. March 8, 1963, in Atlanta? March 8th? February 27th, '63?

We left Miami February 27th, Jackson about that thing [fol. 942] we have been referring to, and, right, we were in Atlanta. It would have been about March 8th, because we landed in California. That is the trip. It is already identified, I guess. I was in Atlanta on or about that time.

Q. Further, "But the Army veteran who commanded Federal troops during the Little Rock integration crisis in 1957 denied students were guilty of rioting."

Did you make that statement to Mr. Kuettner?

A. I may have, from what I saw, but that is not necessarily in context, because I made many other statements, and I would like to mention that that statement previously you asked me if I made, doesn't include everything I said.

Will you read the previous one?

Q. That is all there is to this one.

A. No, the one you read just before the last one.

Q. "Asked if he found the two deaths at Ole Miss a comedy, Walker snapped 'one of them was a foreign newsman. What was he doing there?'"

A. I believe we discussed that one. The next one?

It is out of context, the one you just read.

Q. "The students had a lot of laughs, plenty of fun on the campus, Walker told the news conference. I wouldn't [fol. 943] call it a riot, just student high spirits."

A. I said that, and that is out of context. That doesn't include the whole statement.

Q. Back to the Kuettner one on March 8, 1964, in Atlanta.

Mr. Andress: '63.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. '63, excuse me. "Walker said they were just playful," talking about the students on the campus.

A. I said that. That is out of context. It is referring to certain specific incidents, like this other thing where they—where I laughed at something. It was referring to a particular incident on the campus.

Q. All right. Now, General, I don't know whether you have had a chance to read the pleadings that your counsel has filed in this case, or have you?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Referring to page 8, you stated that the Associated Press showed malice in failing to report that on November 21st, 1962, that the AP placed emphasis on a Government witness who testified, and failed to report that the Court-appointed psychiatrist, Dr. Robert L. Stubblefield, had reported that Plaintiff was currently functioning under a superior level of intelligence.

Now, have you since determined that the Associated [fol. 944] Press did carry that story and made a report as to what Dr. Stubblefield said about you?

A. I haven't determined there was a wide national coverage of that statement like there was that put me in Springfield, on the front pages of all the papers in the country.

Q. Have you determined that the AP story wherein you, in Dr. Stubblefield's report, was given—was carried in the Fort Worth Star Telegram in Fort Worth, Texas?

A. I would have to refresh my memory, whether I am or am not. I believe it can be done.

Q. Sure can. You are alleging here that they didn't put out the report, and I am saying to you that the very thing you complain of was published in a news release that was carried in the Fort Worth Star Telegram on the evening of November 22, 1962.

And I hand you the reports from the files of the Star Telegram. I believe you have a copy of this, Mr. Watts, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Watts: Let's see it. I don't have it with me.

Mr. Gooch: This is the one you saw down there.

Mr. Watts: The article I saw on the 22nd?

Mr. Gooch: Right.

Mr. Watts: No, you said the 21st.

[fol. 945] Mr. Gooch: No, I said the 22nd. I read it right off of it. If I said the 21st, I meant the 22nd.

Mr. Watts: The 22nd; the following day.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I refer you to the report that's from the Associated Press that was carried in the Star Telegram under date, evening, November 22, 1962. Will you read with me, "Stubblefield's report said Walker is 'functioning currently at a superior level of intelligence.'"

A. This is at Oxford, Mississippi. It's an Oxford, Mississippi, release as of November 22nd by AP; is that correct?

Q. Yes, sir, and published in the Star Telegram.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, for the sake of the record, I would like to inquire which wire that came on, whether it came on the A or B wire, or the local wire?

Mr. Gooch: I don't know. It just says AP and we had a stipulation.

Mr. Watts: I would object to this, then, as hearsay. Because this is the repetition of what was in the Fort Worth press.

Mr. Gooch: It is not the Fort Worth Press.

Mr. Watts: Fort Worth Star Telegram.

The Court: Overruled.

[fol. 946] Mr. Watts: I see.

Mr. Andress: I would like to make a further objection there. This is a story that came out in the evening paper and unless it is shown that the original story omitting the pictures was in the evening paper, the morning paper, that would make a lot of difference, because, as I understand, the circulation of the evening paper is considerably less than the morning paper and don't go out as far, unless it is corrected it wouldn't catch up. We think it ought to be shown, the identity of this story and the edition it appeared in, that it is the same as the original story.

The Court: That objection is overruled.

Mr. Watts: Might I approach the Bench?

The Court: Yes, sir.

(Conference at the Bench.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. In connection with the pleadings, if the Court please, when the objection was made, the pleadings state we were guilty of malice because we didn't report it. This is the paper that published the other report, and it is the same paper.

Mr. Watts: I don't believe I heard that?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, you did. We offer in evidence as Defendant's exhibit 17 the clipping from the Fort Worth [fol. 947] Press—

The Court: Star Telegram.

Mr. Gooch: Fort Worth Star Telegram of November 22, 1962, showing the—among other things, the quoted portion of the substance of the question.

These are the original records of the Star Telegram, and I would like to substitute a photostatic copy, if I may.

The Court: Yes, sir, you may.

Mr. Gooch, the witness has finished reading the article.

Mr. Gooch: I beg your pardon?

The Court: I say the witness has finished with the article.

Mr. Gooch: Oh, excuse me just one second. Another one here I wanted to find.

General Walker, you have alleged on page 8 of your petition, on the ground—on evidence showing malice, "In reporting the incident involved in Plaintiff's arrest and commitment the Defendant deliberately refrained from fairly and impartially reporting the true facts that he had been transferred from the State of Mississippi where he had been committed by a judicial order, and in the State of Mississippi without a Court order."

[fol. 948] This will be Defendant's Exhibit 18.

(Defendant's Exhibits 17 and 18 marked by the Court Reporter.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I hand you what has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 18, which is an Associated Press story out of Springfield, Missouri, dated October 2, 1962, Associated Press, and published in the Star Telegram on October 3, 1962, in the morning edition, relative to the portion read from your pleadings.

I believe you will find this statement here.

A. It may take a long time, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Well, we can find it. Down on the second portion of it, "Watts—" this is Clyde Watts. Is that your lawyer, Clyde Watts?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. "Watts said he learned that Walker was transferred from Oxford to the Springfield Medical Center on telegraphed orders from James V. Bennett, director of Bureau of Prisons."

Did you see that?

A. Right, sir. The date of this is October 3rd, and it is a Springfield, Missouri release, right?

Q. By the Associated Press.

A. AP, right.

Q. All right.

[fol. 949] Mr. Gooch: We offer that in evidence as having been published by—

The Witness: Can we identify whether it was the evening or morning edition, and whether—

The Court: He already has.

The Witness: That is morning. And what page this is on?

Mr. Gooch: I don't know what page it is on.

The Witness: I think that is very important.

The Court: Pardon me just a minute, General. Orderly procedure requires that Mr. Gooch ask you questions and you answer them. Then if your counsel wants to bring out something else on redirect, then he will ask it.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Further up in this same article, read along with me, General. This is on Defendant's Exhibit 18.

EXCERPT FROM DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 18

"Watts, reading from a full page statement, told reporters he had talked to Judge Clayton at Oxford by telephone and was informed the order committing Walker for psychiatric examination was issued on the basis of testimony by Dr. Charles E. Smith, a Bureau of Prisons psychiatrist. Watts quoted Judge Clayton as saying Dr. Smith had not seen Walker."

[fol. 950] Did I read that correctly?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We offer Exhibit 18 in evidence, if the Court please.

The Court: It is admitted.

A. That is a continuation from page 1?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Yes, sir. I believe that does establish that that was on page 1.

A. Not the portion you were reading, sir.

Q. I said it was a continuation from page 1.

A. The portion you were reading was not on page 1?

Q. No, it was a continuation.

The Court: Let's don't get into an argument.

[fol. 951] Q. You also complain that the Associated Press failed to report a motion—it's in Paragraph III of your—on Page 8 of your Petition, that Defendant failed to further report the true facts, that on October 16, 1962, Plaintiff filed in the United States District Court at Oxford, Mississippi, a motion to strike the entire proceedings by which Plaintiff was committed to the Federal Mental Hospital, upon the ground that such commitment, in violation of the right to make bail and without counsel, notice of hearing, violated the constitutional rights of Plaintiff.

That is correct from the Pleading, is it not, General Walker?

A. Is that what you are reading from, sir?

Q. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: Yes, it is.

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Mr. Gooch: I will ask the court reporter to mark this as Exhibit 19.

(Defendant's Exhibit 19, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Gooch: And I hand you Defendant's Exhibit 19. I believe you have a copy of that, don't you, Clyde?

Mr. Watts: I know what it is. Yes, and may I have one?

Mr. Gooch: No, that's mine but—

[fol. 952] Mr. Watts: Well, I know what it is.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Exhibit 19 was a news release from Oxford, Mississippi, dated October 16, 1962, and published in the morning edition of the Fort Worth Star Telegram, reading as follows, and read with me, General.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT 19

"Attorneys for Former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker asked a federal court Tuesday to reverse its order that he undergo a psychiatric examination.

"U. S. District Judge Claude Clayton had directed that Walker, facing four federal charges including insurrection for his role in desegregation riots here September 30, be examined to see if he is mentally competent to stand trial.

"In a motion filed here Tuesday, Walker's attorneys charged that the court's order 'violates the constitution rights' of Walker in four ways.

"1. 'The right to make bail and be released thereon.

"2. 'The right to be represented by counsel at every stage of the proceedings against him.

"3. 'The right to notice of proceedings against him, which is a necessary element of due process of law.

"4. 'The right to be present in person at the hearing wherein defendant's mental sanity and mental competency is questioned.'"

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We offer in evidence Exhibit 19, and ask [fol. 953] permission to substitute a photostatic copy.

The Court: Defendant's 19 is admitted and you are granted leave to substitute a photostat for the original.

Mr. Gooch: Will you give us just about five minutes? That's all at this time, Your Honor.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. General Walker, there have been read to you a large number of court orders, proclamations, injunctions and things of that kind.

Did those legal instruments come to your attention at the time they were issued by the respective courts?

A. No, they didn't.

Q. Mr. Gooch asked you, as I remember the question, as to whether you did not stand beside Governor Barnett in defying court orders.

And I will ask you to tell the jury if you at any time made any defiance of court orders or advocating any defiance of orders of the court, of courts of the United States, and to whom you looked for handling of the legal problem?

A. I did not. I looked to the Governor and the State of Mississippi, which he is and represents, and his Attorney [fol. 954] General and surrounded by the best lawyers in the country, to include the President of the Bar Association, ex-president of the National Bar Association, Satterfield.

I was, depended on their carrying the procedure, legally, and constitutionally, under the requirements of Mississippi.

Q. Now, Mr. Gooch also asked you about your motivation and determination to speak out in protest against certain things at the time you resigned your commission as a Major General in the United States Army.

Would you tell the Court and jury, please, sir, at that time what was the exact condition that you were objecting to.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I object to that as irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case until it has something to do with this case.

Mr. Watts: Mr. Gooch went into it. I hadn't intended to go into it.

The Court: I overrule him.

Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Go ahead, General, do you understand the question now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, tell the jury now very briefly—don't—try not to go afield, and stay right on target here, of what Mr. [fol. 955] Gooch asked you.

A. I was, had to do in Little Rock what I felt was entirely wrong, under the military requirements, in following the directives and orders from the Administration. My orders came through military channels.

I thought it was wrong at the time. I even called home to Center Point and had my mother on the line and asked her if—

Mr. Watts: Don't—

Mr. Gooch: We object to that as hearsay.

Mr. Watts: Don't go into conversations with your mother. Go ahead.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did you then try to resign at Little Rock?

A. I definitely turned in my resignation before, resignation from the military service, which I have never seen in print, incidentally—

Q. Well, now don't get into the print. You did turn it in?

A. I turned in my resignation before I left Little Rock, Arkansas.

Q. All right, sir. Now in Germany, you were asked about your Pro-Blue Program—

Mr. Gooch: No, I didn't—

Mr. Watts: He testified from the witness stand that was [fol. 956] his—

Mr. Gooch: No, that was your question.

Mr. Watts: Oh, all right, sir. Perhaps I asked you.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Anyhow, I remember the Pro-Blue Program coming up. Did the Army, did the Department of Army's reaction to your Pro-Blue Program have anything to do with your final resignation of your commission as a United States—

A. Yes, it did. The Army position, it itself, the military side, in my opinion, was terrifically, and still is, handicapped in accepting a Pro-Blue Program.

My program was accepted by the higher commander, one star more than I was, within two or three weeks after it was written, completely and—

Q. With whom then in the Department of Army did you have your conflict, with the soldiers or civilians?

A. My conflict was not with the military, basically. It was not that I saw these other people but I knew where the problem was and who was giving all the instructions with regard to me in the military service.

Q. Were they soldiers or civilians?

A. Civilians in the Defense Department.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we say that's hearsay. [fol. 957] The Court: It would be. That would be a conclusion, I think, unless he knows.

Mr. Watts: He talked to the one—let me ask this:

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did you receive a call from one Arthur Sylvester?

A. Yes, I did, in Augsburg, Germany.

Q. Well, what was Arthur Sylvester's position in the Department of Defense?

A. He was head of public—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—
The Court: Just a minute.
Mr. Watts: Hold it.
Mr. Gooch: Suppose he was. Anything that Mr. Sylvester might say would be hearsay, so far as we are concerned.
Mr. Watts: I'm not asking him what Sylvester said.
The Court: All right. Overruled.
Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now then in simple language, what was your disagreement with the civilians in the Pentagon that caused you to go to the extent of resigning your commission as a Major General of the United States Army, very simply, tell the Court and jury what it was.

A. I instituted a Pro-Blue Program which taught the [fol. 958] soldiers and the officers patriotism and their knowledge about citizenship and their responsibilities to citizenship, their understanding of discipline and their understanding of morality and morale and their relationship with church and their necessity to accept the Lord and the necessity to know their enemies, which they have to understand his psychology, to know this sort of situation when you are facing an enemy only about 150 miles, with 13—eleven thousand troops, and about ten thousand people in their families sitting around Augsburg and Munich where the Division, U S Division was that I commanded, was stationed.

And my program was to keep and to extend the knowledge of the enemy, which was definitely what we referred to as the Communist enemy, from the East Zone, and my program was to give them a complete understanding so at any time war should break out, what we are there for, either there or anywhere else they might be sent, under those conditions we had plans in our Headquarters to leave immediately for 17 different countries through Central and the Middle East and Africa, in that general area, and the soldiers had to be prepared, knowledgeable about what sort of an enemy that we have got and what they would be confronting—the Division was alerted even at one time for a portion of the Division had to stand on the airplane to go to Katanga.

Q. Now did these civilian personnel restrict your pro-
[fol. 959] gram to so train your troops?

Mr. Gooch: Object to that as being a conclusion.
The Witness: They restricted this program—
Mr. Watts: Just one moment for an objection.
The Court: Overruled.
Mr. Gooch: Exception.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Go ahead and tell the jury what happened.

A. They restricted this program continuously. They restricted us when I was District, head of Arkansas at Little Rock, they have—they continuously restricted it.

Now I am not in their position. If they want this sort of program, that's the program they can have.

But I don't intend to command American troops, and this is why I resigned, I don't intend to command American troops without the proper instruction when they go to Vietnam or anywhere else, that they are not knowledgeable about the Communists and the way they operate under cover and cold war and prisoner of war cages in Korea, and the soldiers, this is not fair to the soldiers, in my mind, across this nation.

And if they want this sort of program, they can have it. And I made up my mind I was—I got orders from the Military Service in October, I have written orders in my file that directed me to a higher training job in the Pacific.
[fol. 960] The military has—basically out of this, they recognized my training ability and capability, you might say, and the Division's capability and they gave me orders to go to the top training operations and supervision job of the entire Army in the Pacific. That was in October.

Q. Would that have trained the personnel that ultimately ended up in Vietnam and Southeast Asia?

A. That, it exactly did. It supervises, it runs the plans and programs, it operates and supervises what's going on in Laos and at that time—

Q. Now General—

A. —Vietnam and the entire South Pacific.

Q. Did you make a comment about the so-called, and to shorten this, "No-win policy"?

A. Yes, I have continuously made such a comment.

Q. And were you apprehensive about the future of your country under that policy as it existed?

A. I certainly am, with soldiers—I have been on three continents, looking back at the United States and then to look back and see soldiers would mention to me, "I'm from Florida," and those people are just 90 miles from Florida.

Q. I noticed a comment in the morning press that you had testified that you had approved people going armed to Mississippi. Did you hear any such question?

[fol. 961] A. I should never have made that answer. I didn't hear the question properly. I recommended that nobody, or didn't make any—told nobody to go armed to Mississippi.

I made no order to tell anybody or told nobody to go armed to Mississippi.

Q. Now then when you mounted that Confederate statue to make your talk to these students, what was your estimate and evaluation of the existent situation?

A. The existent situation was very, very tragic. It was serious. It was a critical situation.

I didn't know definitely, as has been referred to, whether anybody was killed or not.

When I got on the campus, the reports that the girl was hit by a tear gas and she was dead, a tear gas missile, that would have been around 8:00 o'clock or half hour or hour, half hour or so, before I got there.

That highway patrolmen had been killed, and these were the two that were being referred to at the time.

The tragedy was very obvious about the situation.

Q. That's enough of that. When you got to the point and saw the highway patrolmen leaving and saw the reaction of the crowd, what was your procedure then in speaking to the crowd in view of what came up following the highway patrolmen's leaving and why?

A. Since the highway patrol were leaving and they were [fol. 962] very upset and getting more excited over the Barnett's departure, as I have explained, the newspapers around, it became obvious, I decided to talk to them and my idea was just to make myself enough acceptable, which you have to do in mob activities—I have had continuous training in the method, you might say, off and on through the services, of how to quell mobs and how to quell riots and you have got to know exactly what position they are in and what their state of excitement, what degree they are in, what sort of things they are doing.

Of course, it was a most unusual situation to find, and difficult one, very difficult because we are taught never to use—not only don't do it but you do not use tear gas, you never fire a salvo of tear gas—this is in mob operations—you never fire a salvo of tear gas at, a flat projectory at people. It's not to be used this way at all.

You are told not to do it. And if they were going to use tear gas, if they had decided they had come to the necessity of using tear gas here, they are only antagonizing the students and hitting people with tear gas fired directly.

If they were going to use tear gas, you want to get a tear gas into a crowd, you would rather if you could just get it there without a missile. That's your objective of tear gas. You drop it over on a downwind side and let them smell it first.

[fol. 963] You certainly would have set off, before you even started, you would have set off just a sample round off near somebody. It is not a missile.

It is antagonistic and to continuously fire it is very antagonistic.

Q. From your training and experience, what is the reasonably expected result of firing a massive volume, salvo of tear gas with a flat projectory at point-blank range?

A. Just as what happened here, it made a fantastically tragic situation, it was brought out.

Now there is another angle of that that becomes perfectly obvious, which I can understand very clearly, all law is gone in the area. I thought, of course, the Sheriffs would do what they could, and I feel that they did, to stop violence where they could stop it, but the law is all behind a range of—a ring of Marshals that nobody can get to—as you evaluate the situation and what I was told. And you found that it's all in the Lyceum Building. If a student wants to discuss what's going on with somebody or get some advice or nobody comes out to talk to him—

Now in Little Rock I just appeared out in the crowd. Whenever I went to the high school, two or three times in the morning, say, or two or three times in the afternoon, why, I got stopped in the jeep or sedan and appeared in the crowd and talked to some of the people in the streets [fol. 964] and talked around. You couldn't find here—I couldn't find—saw nobody.

And the students seemed to indicate there was nobody they could talk to.

Q. Now then the question has been asked you on cross examination if you didn't make statements that that whole riot was just a joke?

I direct your attention to the Plaintiff's Exhibit 7.

Mr. Watts: Give this one the last number, 7-B, which I think we are in agreement is an Associated Press release.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 7-B, was marked for identification.)

Mr. Cravens: Let's see what it is.

Mr. Watts: And direct your attention to this language in Exhibit 7: "The rioting started shortly after sundown—

The Court: Pardon me just a minute, Mr. Watts. Now you have never actually offered that.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I at this time offer in evidence the Plaintiff's Exhibit 7-B.

The Court: It's admitted.

Mr. Watts: And I would like to, and I hope I don't forget it, offer in evidence chronologically all of these news [fol. 965] releases which I'll—

The Court: Let's wait until we reach each one.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT 7-B

Reading to the jury, this AP news release, Exhibit 7-B:

"The rioting started shortly after sundown when about 2,500—jeering and joking—gathered at the Administration Building where the Marshals held their tight guard.

"In the early stages, much of the shouting at the Marshals sounded more like just than maliciousness.

"From time to time, even the grim-faced Marshals would break into a slight grin.

"But as the evening wore on the talk got rougher and the students started rampaging. They tore away a photographer's camera and smashed it. They smashed the windows in a car, sending a man and woman fleeing.

"Then they moved against one of the army trucks standing by with the Marshals. They got the cap off the auxiliary gasoline tank and threw a flaming piece of newspaper at the fumes, trying to set fire to the truck."

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now then did your understanding coincide with that AP news release as to the joking attitude of the students at the start of the riot?

[fol. 966] A. That was my understanding, yes, sir.

Q. Now what was the full comment you gave to this news reporter in Savannah, I believe, perhaps Jacksonville, Florida, that was reported, as Mr. Gooch read to you?

Give the jury the benefit of the full statement you made to the news, to the press.

A. We were discussing the situation on the campus, sort of as in answer to their questions and I was giving them an idea of what was happening there for news and I referred to, during the conversation, I said something about zest and that something, that some student did something that was funny and I laughed at a remark, or something he said, referring to the stories I had heard about the campus, and the zest with which this thing started and their funny remarks back and forth to the Marshals and then their school song and their cheers, and so forth, and the excited manner which one student would come out and tell about what he saw and—

Q. And was that the full text—

A. And from time to time there was joking about what they were doing.

Q. And was that the full text of the statement that caused the news release that you were shown by Mr. Gooch that said, "Walker considered the riot a joke," was that the full text of the statement you told?

[fol. 967] A. This certainly is not the full text of the statement. This is out of context.

[fol. 968] Q. Did you ever at any time tell anyone that you considered that Mississippi riot a joke?

A. No, sir, I said many times I considered it very serious and tragic.

Q. Was it your understanding that the riot did start off in a joking manner?

A. It certainly did.

Q. Except for that massive delivery of tear gas, how do you think it would have ended up?

A. Well—

Mr. Gooch: I object to that.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. Yes, sir. I think that is probably—

Mr. Gooch: I object.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, it was pointed out to you yesterday that proclamation for the use of Military forces was entered by the President on September 30, 1962. From your subsequent knowledge are you familiar with the type of units and the nature and extent of the Military forces that was committed in Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir, I am, with regard to terms and units to a certain extent, and also that this is an order for a Military operation.

Q. To shorten this, did you understand there were ap- [fol. 969] proximately 26,000 troops committed to Mississippi?

A. Between twenty-three and twenty-six thousand troops, correct.

Q. And were you in on the timing and the logistical preparation necessary for the commitment of 1,000 troops to Little Rock?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. How long did that take?

A. Well, I did some planning on my own in the Little Rock headquarters because I expected that something might happen, and I was hoping continuously they would use Marshals. And certainly it was three or four days before the Central High School incident occurred that I was in where planning was going on, in the Chief of Staff of the Army's office in Washington, D. C.

Q. How long would it be, in your opinion, the required time to make the necessary logistical planning for the staging areas, the transportation, the alerting of troops, to move that 23,000 troops from their respective bases into the area of Oxford, Mississippi?

A. From the time they got there, going backward, those troops would have had to have been alerted and logistic preparations, staging areas, and so forth, at least a week to two weeks before, somewhere in that area. Somebody was planning on this operation, in the Military, to have [fol. 970] been accomplished, when the troops went into Oxford.

Q. You have stated that you oppose the use of the Military in Mississippi.

A. I certainly do.

Q. Why, then, would you then have told the students to avoid violence in your speech from the monument?

A. Because any violence at that time would have played right into the hands of the Military and such orders coming from the Defense Department to use masses of troops, which were never called for in Mississippi for what was happening. This was a great show of force, intended to be. It was intended—

Mr. Gooch: We object to that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just a minute, you can't testify what it was intended to be.

Mr. Gooch: Move the answer be stricken.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, that's right.

A. Any violence—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just a minute now.

A. Any violence—

Q. Just a minute. Did you have any other motive behind that, aside from that, in telling these people at the monument to avoid violence, and violence was not the answer? Yes or no?

[fol. 971] A. Yes, I did.

Q. All right. Tell us about it.

A. If there was no violence there, or nothing that was worse than this fantastic force which was building up in the area, why it made it look ridiculous. It was already looking ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous, and foolish, to put one man on a campus. You could do it with any fifty men on a school day when the students were all in school. It was absolutely getting ridiculous. Well, anything that affected it—

Q. What was your concept of the operation that brought that man on there about 5:00 o'clock or 4:00 o'clock on Sunday afternoon as these students were returning from a football game in Jackson, Mississippi, under the circumstances as you found them to be? And hold up, don't answer until they object.

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as wholly irrelevant, calls for an opinion and conclusion.

The Court: It is far too broad. He wasn't there at the time.

Mr. Watts: All right. All right, shall I ask him some more questions?

The Court: No, it is close to noon. Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 2:00 o'clock. Keep your seats in the audience until after the Jury leaves the Courtroom.

[fol. 972] (Whereupon, the Court was recessed at this point until 2:00 o'clock of the same day.)

2:00 P. M.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. General Walker, when you left Jackson, Mississippi, on Saturday the 29th, did you know Mr. Meredith would be brought on the University campus the following night?

A. No, I didn't. I certainly didn't.

Q. When did you first learn it?

A. I think I learned it at the press conference. If not then, at the President's speech, or the entering of the campus. And I believe it was in the President's speech. I certainly did not expect him to be brought on the campus on Sunday. It is—I knew that the students were all away and that Sunday bible—deep bible state, seemed like the most inopportune time to slip somebody on the campus, while the students were off the campus.

Q. Now, would you take your pointer, please, and for the benefit of the Jury point out as nearly as you can on the chart an area that represents the outer limits of any part you reached that evening, and by "that evening" I mean the evening of September 30, 1962.

A. The area I was in and never of is around this area (indicating) and in the direction of the flagpole, and here to the flagpole, and one time I went right to about this [fol. 974] far here, during the truce, and never further, except for that one time—further than here (indicating), and I was in this area right here.

I never got past this point to the left, and I never—I came right this way and I was to this curb here, and right here, and across here, and I spent, oh, probably an hour and a half during the whole evening at different times under a fir tree, by a fir tree, or on the west side of it, right here (indicating) and close the circle right here.

I was never out of that area.

Q. You may take your seat. During that evening, did you ever get out of a walk?

A. I never did, no, sir.

Q. During that evening, did you ever participate in any of the activities of the crowd toward the Marshals with respect to either throwing things at them, or encouraging such actions to be done?

A. I did not.

Mr. Watts: That is all.

Mr. Gooch: Nothing further.

Mr. Watts: Oh, yes, one other thing.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. As I recollect your testimony, you saw that manifesto committing troops on the 30th of September, 1962, or did not? Did you or did you not?

[fol. 975] A. I did not.

Q. When did you first have knowledge that troops were being planned for the area, planned by the Government to be committed in this area?

A. Certainly it was by the 28th, because there were press releases on it, and from my previous experience I had knowledge of it.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, the press reports would be the best evidence.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Would you have such a press report?

A. Yes, sir, I have a press report here. I believe it is the front page of the Star Telegram. May not be the front page; the picture page. Friday, September 28th.

Q. Would you deliver that to counsel, please, sir?

A. Yes.

Mr. Andress: We would like this marked as an Exhibit.

The Court: Let counsel look at it.

Mr. Gooch: Go ahead.

Mr. Andress: Will you mark it with the next exhibit number?

(Said document marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 12 by the Reporter.)

Mr. Andress: We offer in evidence Plaintiff's Exhibit [fol. 976] 12, a portion of the front page of the Fort Worth Star Telegram for Friday, September 28, 1962.

The Court: It is admitted.

Mr. Gooch: No objection.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Prior to the time you went to Mississippi, did you have any other notice or reason to believe troops were about to be committed in Mississippi?

A. I had reason to believe that they could have been or was going to be committed, based on my experience and different indications of what was being done, and what was in the press.

Q. Without saying any hearsay, was—what anybody told you, could you outline what the source of that information was, or was it from something someone told you?

A. I remember a telephone call from the Tennessee area.

Q. You can't tell about calls from the Tennessee area.

Mr. Watts: I believe that is all.

Recross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. General Walker, as a Military man you know that troops can be called only on the order of the President of the United States, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 977] Mr. Gooch: That is all.

Mr. Watts: Thank you, sir.

The Court: Step down.

Mr. Andress: We call Dr. Beard.

• • • • • • • •

[fol. 991] Mr. Andress: Now, Your Honor, we would like at this time to ask the Court to permit this witness to testify upon the basis that after the morning recess, according [fol. 992] to my notes, of the testimony, it was almost entirely concerned with the stories in the Star Telegram and the mitigating matters in connection with whether or not there was any malice involved.

The Court: I have already ruled, Mr. Andress.

Mr. Andress: Yes.

The Court: Bring the jury in, please, sir.

Mr. Watts: Call Ed Jackson, please.

If the Court please, I forgot to ask, may that previous witness be excused?

The Court: Yes.

(Jury returns to the courtroom.)

EDWIN LEON JACKSON, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. State your name, please.
A. Edwin Leon Jackson.
Q. Was that Edwin?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where do you live?
A. Houston, Texas.
Q. How old are you?
A. I will be 21 in August.
[fol. 993] Q. Who are your parents?
A. Richard L. and Lorene Roach Jackson.
Q. How long have you lived in Houston?
A. Oh, on and off, nearly 18 years.
Q. You are then a resident of Texas?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is your father's business?
A. He puts in air conditioning, installs air conditioning.
Q. Where do you go to school or to college?
A. The University of Mississippi.
Q. How long have you been there?
A. I have attended two years. I attended one year at Abilene Christian.
Q. When did you first enroll in Ole Miss?
A. September, 1962.
Q. What school were you in?
A. Liberal arts.
Q. Were you on campus on the night of September the 30th, 1962?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What dormitory did you live in then?
A. Long Street A.

Q. Had you been in school over the weekend or did you go anywhere?

[fol. 994] A. Ole Miss played Kentucky in Jackson, Mississippi, over the weekend and I am in the band. We went to that and we got back about 1:00 o'clock Sunday morning, in the morning, that night.

Q. Where did you go? To your dormitory?

A. Yes, sir, I slept all day.

Q. And about what time did you get up?

A. Around 2:00 in the afternoon.

Q. Were you anywhere on the campus when the Marshals first appeared?

A. Yes, sir, in my dorm.

Q. Did you go out into the area of the circle where the Marshals were?

A. Yes, I arrived there—as soon as the first truck of Marshals came, the word spread out like, just like electricity, I guess, all through the campus, you know, and I was there—I ran down to see what was happening and I was there about the time the second or third truckload came in of Marshals.

Q. Would you tell the jury now in your own words, what occurred and what you saw from the time this first group of Marshals came in up until after tear gas was fired.

A. Yes, sir. Well, around 4:00 o'clock that afternoon, the Marshals started arriving—at least it seems like 4:00 o'clock, as I remember.

[fol. 995] And like I say, word spread when the first truckload came in because we weren't expecting anything on Sunday; I mean there was a tense atmosphere, I would imagine, from all that had been happening but when they came in, I ran down there and a crowd started gathering and in an hour or so, there were several hundred students, two or three hundred students, I imagine, maybe even more, came down to see the Marshals come in.

And some of the students would put Confederate flags on their car and drive through the crowd and everybody was yelling, I mean—and they were cheering (jeering) calling the Marshals names and they passed out little bitty stickers saying, "Ross was right," people were wearing on their lapels.

And some of them were telling the Marshals they ought to go to Cuba and other places (laughter) and, well, there was more—

At first, I mean, it was kind of a premonition of what was to come by what they were wearing because, I mean, we weren't expecting anything and there they were, with helmets and billy clubs and pistols and tear gas cannisters on their chests, so we didn't know what was coming off but we were still yelling at them and calling them names and just yelling, just, I don't know, it was—

Q. Were any highway patrolmen around there?

[fol. 996] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell the jury what those patrolmen were doing.

A. Well, the patrolmen, highway patrolmen, as they came, and they were in the street in front of the Lyceum in the middle, facing the students, between the students there and the Marshals on the Lyceum Building, circling the Lyceum.

The State Police were in the center of the road facing the students.

Q. Did you have any rough idea how many Marshals there were there?

A. Oh, it seemed like around 400, at least, because the Lyceum was completely surrounded with them; I mean it seemed like they kept, more trucks and more trucks and everything, truck and trucks of Marshals, you know, army trucks, those convoy trucks.

And there must have been at least 400 to have circled the Lyceum, standing up just arm to arm.

Q. Now were the highway patrolmen around the Marshals at first or did they move in later or between the Marshals and the students?

A. Well, at first, the highway—I mean around 5:00 o'clock, it seemed like—

Q. I couldn't hear. Say it again, please.

A. Around 5:00 o'clock, I believe, the State Police started [fol. 997] coming in about, more and more of them. I mean there had been State Police around the University in and on the campus all that September.

But they started really arriving and they formed a—they just stationed themselves in the middle of the street, facing the students, their backs to the Marshals, in the middle of the street.

Q. Now do you see a pointer there in front of you, a little wooden pointer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you take that and step down there to the chart, and the top of it is north, University Boulevard goes by your chin there and proceeds westward.

Do you see that circle there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What's on the east end of the circle?

A. The east end—which way is north?

Q. Right there. Put your pointer up and I'll tell you where to move. Put your pointer up. Now move your pointer to your right, to your right—not up.

A. Oh, excuse me.

Q. What's that dot right there?

A. Right here?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That's the Confederate memorial monument put up by [fol. 998] the—

Q. Do you remember the exact position of that monument with reference to the Lyceum and the other installations?

A. Yes, sir, this is a tree-clustered circle, I mean it's a real pretty place, with park benches all over it. The Lyceum is at one end and at the very opposite end, facing University Avenue, is the Confederate monument.

Q. Now put your pointer where the Marshals were with respect to the Lyceum.

A. The Marshals at first they came right here and as more truck loads came they just slowly circled the Lyceum completely.

Q. And where then were the highway patrolmen?

A. The highway patrolmen were stationed like this (indicating).

There was a whole lot of students right around here and right around here, I mean, like I say, "A whole lot," several hundred and the State Police stationed right there, right in the very middle.

Q. Where were you?

A. At what time?

Q. Before the tear gas was fired?

A. I was right there on the curb.

Q. Were you east or west of the curb of the circle?

A. Sir?

[fol. 999] Q. Were you east or west of the curb of the circle? East is on your right, remember.

A. Well, the curb is right there. I was standing—there is a cement curb and then grass there. I was standing right on the grass right by the curb.

Q. Now from that time on—take your seat again—tell the jury further what happened.

A. Well, like I said, it was a tense atmosphere, I mean naturally you expected, if you have—I mean it couldn't be anything else with how they were dressed; I mean it was just sort of, looked like something—I don't know why they were dressed that way cause half of us didn't know what they were doing dressed that way but they were there.

The Court: He asked you what happened.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Go ahead and tell what you saw, son.

A. Well, there were some cigarette butts thrown, I mean as the night progressed, I mean, 5:00 and 6:00 on like that.

Q. All right.

A. There was people started flipping cigarette butts at the Marshals, I guess—I don't know what—they were just flicking them at them.

[fol. 1000] And they put a Confederate flag on the back of one of the Army trucks. Somebody just went up there and stuck it on. And I saw one bottle thrown.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. I am not going to say there weren't more, but I mean I was up in the front and I saw one bottle thrown, and suddenly, I don't know what or why, but tear gas just started coming at us, you know.

Q. Did you see the position of the Marshals as they fired that gas?

A. They were right across the street from us.

Q. Was it fired in a single round, or was it fired in a salvo by all the Marshals you could see?

A. Well, I don't know how many Marshals fired, but it was fired more or less in a volley. And on the girls, I mean, you see there were a lot of girls out there. This was not just boys, there were girl students out there, students and boys and everybody, and some of the girls started screaming, and everybody just started turning around and just running.

Q. At the time the tear gas was fired, were the Marshals between the—strike that. Were the Highway Patrolmen between the students and the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the closest that a student was to a Marshal [fol. 1001] at the time of the firing of the gas?

A. The width of the street.

Q. Had you at any time, or had at any time any students come in physical contact with the Marshals?

A. I hadn't, and none that I know of.

Q. Would you have seen it along there? Were you in a position where you must necessarily have seen it had it happened, in that area?

A. I should have seen it.

Q. What happened after the tear gas?

A. Well, everybody ran back in the direction of the Confederate monument, back at the other end of the Grove.

Q. About how many people could you estimate, as best you could, were in the circle at that time?

A. Three hundred, or something like that.

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. Of course, there were some people over on the side too. The Lyceum Building has four sides. There were about one hundred on the side, on the north side, across the street too. And the people just started running back toward the monument, because the smell was horrible. Well, I mean it is exactly what it means, just tear gas because you just started crying. It is very penetrating. Of course, I had never been tear gassed before, but all the girls were crying. And they started running toward their dormitories, and the [fol. 1002] boys went back to the other end. And what followed from then on, I guess, was a case of reaction. I don't know what you would call it. I mean, the reaction to the tear gas and the reaction to what had happened. But I just—students were resentful at least. I mean the ones that were—they really started yelling then, I mean calling the Marshals names.

Q. Did they start throwing things then?

A. Well, they went back to the other end, at the monument, and there were some rocks in the streets and bottles there on the campus, and a bunch of the students started picking up anything they could find then and to start running back up there and throwing them at the Marshals, and from then on is what you might call a riot. It was a riot.

Q. Was it an organized activity? That is, was there any leadership?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody out there in front that was issuing orders or commands or was there anybody there?

A. No, sir. No, sir. I will say this. The first couple of charges, the very first, you know, it was sort of like a gallant, I guess, entry, when they would march across, you know, in lines, you know.

Q. Yes.

[fol. 1003] A. I mean there were several charges like that, I mean some people had Confederate flags and they were in the middle of the crowd. They were not out in front, exactly, but after the tear gas—the Marshals started firing back with tear gas so as the night progressed, very quickly they just—it came into a disorganized attempt just to get a rock or any missile that you could find that you could throw, and run up and throw it, and then dodge for a tree or anything you could hide behind, because those tear gas cannisters are approximately that long (indicating) and that big around and weigh several pounds and they are fired with such a force that they will shoot far—I mean, over the length of a football field. So they arched them over the monument from the Lyceum, because we watched them going over and landing in the University Avenue intersection out there.

Q. Outside of that first couple of movements immediately after the tear gas was fired, was there any further reaction at one time of the entire crowd, or was it sporadic, as you testified?

A. It more and more, it just became, people would run back and if you could find a brick or a rock, they went fast—they would sort of make their own missiles.

Q. In these just two moves that you testified about, did they have any leadership? Was anybody out in front of [fol. 1004] them?

A. No, sir. Just people would yell and they would say, "Come on, let's go get those Marshals."

Q. Did people then go on toward the Marshals and throw things?

A. They would run up there, and when they started opening up with that tear gas—I mean, all of them started firing, all of the Marshals.

Q. What happened, then, to the Highway Patrol?

A. The Highway Patrol, for several hours there, an hour or so, or an hour and a half and two hours, I don't know what happened to them. Because I mean I do know they were running back too, because their—we had asked them, "Don't you all have gas masks?" They had gas masks. And they said—we asked them why weren't they working. They were out crying too. And they said the smoke, I mean this tear gas penetrates this gas mask. It is not effective against this tear gas they are using.

So, the State Police, I mean they sort of tried to get out of the way too.

Q. Did you ever, that evening, see General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the Jury in your own words where and when you saw him and what he was doing?

A. Yes, sir. Well, I had run back to the monument, back [fol. 1005] in that direction, and I heard some people say, "Here comes General Walker."

Q. All right. Now, excuse me, son, right there a minute. As of that time, how long had it been since one of these—that you were talking about—general movements of the crowd occurred?

A. Oh, they had disappeared a long time ago. This was now just—this was in the nature of the riot, now.

Q. Could you estimate in time as to minutes or parts of an hour, half hours, quarter hour, whatever it was?

A. What time he arrived?

Q. Yes, how long after these general movements of the crowd you testified to about ago—a while ago, had it been before General Walker arrived?

A. Well, these movements I was telling you about at first didn't last long. I guess because experience is the best teacher. But some of these people had had their hands burned, and one boy got hit in the back. I mean, he was terribly hurt, but, I mean like I say you are not going to keep doing that with those things coming at you.

Q. From the time of the last of those general movements until the time Walker arrived would you say an hour, half an hour, quarter hour?

[fol. 1006] A. I would say over an hour.

Q. Go ahead, then. You said you heard someone say, "Here comes General Walker."

A. Well, I was right—I was right beside the monument, or right in about no more than five or ten feet from the monument, and I looked out and—

Q. Take the pointer and just explain it to the Jury.

A. Here is the monument. I was standing right about like that (indicating) and I looked out and I saw General Walker right across in this position. This is south. I saw him right here, and then people would say, "Here comes General Walker, here comes Walker."

Q. All right.

A. That was the first I saw him, so I ran over, and I said, "General Walker, I am from Texas. Would you lead us?"

I mean, it is hard to explain to you all now how I felt.

Q. Well, as best you can, tell them how you felt.

A. I was very resentful. I mean, you can't explain how you felt. I mean, it was just something spontaneous. You just wanted to get back at the Marshals, because of how they had fired at you, because several girls got hurt. One girl got hurt from firing that tear gas cannister. It hit [fol. 1007] her in the back.

Anyway—anyway, we were very resentful and we wanted to get back at the Marshals, like I said, and if we had been organized—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Just go ahead and tell us what you said to General Walker and what happened.

A. I said, "General Walker, would you lead us?"

Q. All right. What did he say?

A. He wouldn't answer us.

Q. From this point, just try as best you can to relive that instant, just visualize it in your mind and tell the Jury just what you saw and what happened.

A. Well, as I remember it, there were several men out in this—with him. I don't know what it was. They were there with him, and as I ran over he was about by the monument when I started asking him this.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And there was this sort of fat—he was a Sheriff, had a star. I guess he was with him. I remember him quite vividly because he was a prominent figure.

I mean, he was noticeable, and we kept asking him, "General Walker, what can we do?" And the people kept coming up and saying, "General Walker, what can we do? We can't get to them. Would you lead us, sir?" [fol. 1008] And he never would answer, he just kept looking at the Marshals, and walking. And they walked up a ways and—

Q. About how far would you say he walked from the monument?

A. From the monument?

Q. Yes, just point to roughly the furtherest westward point he walked.

A. This is hard to remember.

Q. Well, do you know where the flagpole is?

A. Yes, sir, it seems to me we walked somewhere in that vicinity, right there (indicating).

Q. Are you pointing to the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, it was here, this side, or this side. I am not sure which (indicating). I don't remember. And we walked over there, and he stood there and looked. And he stood there and looked several minutes, just at the Marshals. He stood there.

Q. Take your seat again. As you walked in that direction, what gait did General Walker walk?

A. It was very slow because it took us—I was right there with him. I kept asking him, I was persistent would he lead us. And it took us about five minutes to get up there. It was about—

Q. Now, tell the Jury about the crowd in the vicinity, [fol. 1009] how many there were, if you can. I am sure you didn't count them, but tell us what they were doing, what they looked like.

A. The crowd of who?

Q. The crowd in the vicinity of General Walker. Now, you were walking with—were you walking along with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you remember whether—I don't guess that would be a fair question, whether you were on his right or left, or do you know?

A. I was on his left.

Q. Incidentally, did anybody have a hold of his arm?

A. No, sir.

Q. Go ahead.

A. From where?

Q. From the time you started walking on to the westward there.

A. Well, about this time I was standing there and looking and the Highw.y Patrolmen started pulling out. I mean they got in their cars.

Q. Well, wait just a minute. Let's go back a little and cover in detail about on the way up there.

I have asked you a question about the crowd. Would there be any way to estimate how many boys trailed along [fol. 1010] as you went toward the flagpole there?

A. Well, several of the boys would run over and ask him would he lead us and when he wouldn't answer they would just run back, if you know. I mean, they didn't know what to do. They would just run—just run—they might have a brick, you know, and he wouldn't say anything, and they would just run on up and try to throw it. But, I would say approximately anywhere from ten to twenty-five people in the immediate company that stayed with him, and didn't run away from him.

Q. You say ten to twenty-five stayed with him and didn't run away?

A. Didn't run away.

Q. Were there other then that would move around in the vicinity?

A. Well, what I am saying, there were ten to twenty-five that were not participating in the riot at that moment.

Q. What were they doing?

A. They were trying to get him—they were asking him—I mean—

Q. Did Walker participate in the riot in any way?

A. Sir?

Q. I say, did Walker participate in the riot in any way?

[fol. 1011] A. Do you call his later speech participating?

Q. No, I am talking about on the trip up there.

A. No, sir.

Q. All right, go ahead. I am talking about solely from the time you were walking on from the monument up toward the flagpole. What else did he do besides walk along and talk to you students?

A. Well, occasionally this Sheriff would say something to him, but I mean, you know, he never would make any—

Q. Did any of the students around him, within as far as we will say that wall over there, throw a missile when they were that close to him?

A. No, sir, you couldn't throw that far. There were trees in the way anyway. You would have to throw it up high to get it to go that far. The trees were in the way.

Q. Now, you say you walked on to the flagpole and then turned toward the southward, or your left?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time or any time approximating that did you see a minister? He has been identified as Rev. Duncan Gray?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Were you then with him—were you right with Walker all the time?

[fol. 1012] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no recollection of Rev. Duncan Gray?

A. I have no recollection of it.

Q. Then go ahead and tell us what happened after you cut to the left, or south. You started to say something about the Highway Patrol?

A. Okay. The Highway Patrolmen, they had their cars in that vicinity and they all got in them and pulled out down the south side of the circle. They were driving out—coming out, leaving, and some of the students started running over to them and saying, "Why are you leaving us?" You know, and they would tell them to come—I heard one boy—well, that is incidental though. Anyway, they were leaving, though, the Highway Patrol were, and the students didn't know what was coming off, and anyway Walker was walking, was still walking back toward the monument. Some of the people said, "Tell us something, give us a speech, General Walker; say something. What can we do?" And about that time General Walker, he went back to the monument, and the crowd gathered around him, and he gave a speech.

Q. Did you gather around him?

A. I was above him on the monument.

Q. You mean you climbed up the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1013] Q. Which side of him were you on?

A. Well, facing down University Avenue, I was standing in front of the monument. I was hanging on above him, up above him.

Q. Was anybody up above you?

A. No, sir.

Q. As best you recollect, tell the Jury what General Walker said to these boys?

A. Well, they kept saying, "Will you lead us? Give us a speech."

So, General Walker says—oh, I can't remember all his speech.

Q. You don't have to, I understand.

A. I just remember parts.

Q. Just tell the best you can.

A. Okay. He says, "You all have a right to protest." I remember that part.

And he said something about—well, I don't remember that well enough to even know what it was. Something about blood being on the Government's hands, or something like that.

Q. All right.

A. And—oh, the people said—the Highway Patrol had just left, it seems like, or it hadn't been too long, and some of the people said, "Did Ross sell us out? Did Ross sell [fol. 1014] us out?"

And General Walker said, "You have been sold out, but not by your Governor Ross Barnett. It was by Col. Birdsong."

He is the Director of the Highway Patrol, I think, in Mississippi.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And then this minister, he tried to get General Walker—I don't remember if he tried to get General Walker to disband the crowd, or tried to tell the students to leave themselves and quit rioting, but anyway, he and General Walker said something—some things between them, but I don't remember all they said between them, but anyway, finally General Walker said—I remember this very plainly, he turned around and said, "You know I am ashamed now I am an Episcopalian," or something to that effect.

And the crowd, oh, this time, most of them, you know—I mean, these were not all rioters by no means because there were always people down at the other end of the monument, people who were not participating at all, or doing anything, just standing there and watching as observers, and they came over. And there were some women in the crowd. I remember that very distinctly. And the people would occasionally say, "Would you lead us?" And he never would answer them.

[fol. 1015] And when he—most of the people, I mean the people who were involved, I mean who were involved in the riot, they just started leaving, though, when he wouldn't say anything. They would say, "What can we do? And he wouldn't ever say anything, and they would say, "Will you lead us?" And he wouldn't ever answer, and they started going back and the crowd just sort of disbanded.

I don't know—don't remember how, exactly. I think the people just sort of left, because they were—they were—at least the people involved in the riot saw what—it was pretty futile what they were doing. They needed some kind of a plan and they had none, because everybody was sort of on their own, and when he wouldn't lead them, they just started going back. Going back—a lot of them went over to Hume Hall where they were building this new Science Building and got some bricks and broke them up, and others just ran on back up there and started throwing again.

Q. Were you still above General Walker when he finished his talk?

A. Yes, sir, I was above him when the crowd disbanded.

Q. What did he do then?

A. He stood there and was talking to these people for several minutes there, and then, I mean, I would say—[fol. 1016] I mean, it is hard to say. Maybe three hundred people were around the monument at that time, and I had to wait until they moved so I could jump down, and I was there about a couple of minutes, I would say from two to five minutes, somewhere along there.

[fol. 1017] Q. Now what was the effect on you individually of General Walker's speech?

A. Now again, you all won't understand this, but I was disappointed because I thought, I thought really and truly that we might find a leader because everybody knew General Walker and I thought we might have a leader and he didn't, he wouldn't lead me—he wouldn't lead any of us.

Q. All right, go ahead and tell what happened after the speech.

A. Well, the riot just—well, at first—

Q. Did you stay with General Walker after the speech?

A. Not for more than a couple of minutes, like I said,—

Q. What did he do in that two minutes?

A. Well, he was there talking and when I finally could get down, I ran back up—excuse me (taking pointer).

We had some cement benches on the campus there and they were trying to break them and it was right in this vicinity right here, I ran back up to here, it was right—

Q. Were you in a position there to where if General Walker had participated in a movement towards the Marshals of a thousand people, you could have or would have seen it?

A. Well, first, there weren't a thousand people rioting, not really. There may have been a thousand people observing from here (indicating), all back in here. But there was [fol. 1018] not a thousand people rioting.

Q. If he would have moved towards the Marshals, in front of or in the very center of the group of as many as a hundred, would you have seen that, do you think?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see anything of that kind after you moved up to that point?

A. No, sir.

Q. What kind—describe the activities of the crowd after you left Walker and moved up in that area.

A. Well, like I say, I went back up a ways, breaking some bricks, and there was—people, they would—there is only so many trees on that campus within throwing range of the Lyceum, I mean, you know, where you could throw without hitting the branches hanging down and reaching and usually that was pretty limited, the number of people who would go up there, because if you couldn't hide behind a tree, you were sunk, sort of.

Q. What sunk you?

A. Well, if you would have—well, those things they fired, those tear gas cannisters, they were fired with tremendous velocity and, I mean, if it hit you, boy, it could really hurt horribly bad.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Cross examination.

[fol. 1019] By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Just a question or two, please, sir.

Mr. Jackson, I believe you stated the first time you saw General Walker, he was coming on to the campus, in a westward direction?

A. Let's see, westward is towards the Lyceum?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time you and a group of them rushed up to him and asked him to lead 'em, lead them, lead you?

A. Well, there were people running up to him. I was—I yelled, "Would you lead us?"

Q. About how many ran up to him at the time you first saw him there as he came on the campus, or the first time you saw him, rather?

A. Yelling, "Would you lead us?"

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Oh, when I first saw him, the word was just spreading that, "Here comes General Walker." I would imagine five or ten people turned around and said, "What can we do," or "Would you lead us?"

Q. All right. Did any others gather after the word got out?

A. Gather where?

Q. Gather around General Walker?

[fol. 1020] A. Well, there were some people who went over, I imagine some went over just to see him, I mean, see who it was because you had heard about General Walker.

Q. Please tell us what you saw.

A. Yes, sir. Like I said a while ago, there were from 10 to 15 people around him and these were—

Q. All right. Was General Walker still walking west when these 10 or 15 people were around him?

A. They didn't get around him until he got up past the monument, I mean it takes a little bit of time to find out that this is General Walker and when they found out, I would say that from the point he passed the monument until he walked up to his farthest point, the people around, 10 to 15, I would say, students.

I said a while ago there was probably from 10 to 25 people in all. There were some, several men with him.

But these students, they ran over, were asking him, "Would you lead us, General Walker?"

Q. I am trying to get you to tell me how many people were with General Walker, say, when he got to the flagpole?

A. No more than 25.

Q. All right. What were the students doing at the time he got up to the flagpole with what you say is 20 or 25?

A. The students out front who had rocks and a tree to [fol. 1021] hide behind were throwing the rocks. Students who were just spectators and the people that were spectators were back there in the grove, were standing and watching and others were running back for more rocks.

Q. Now immediately after the speech down on the monument, isn't it a fact that there was a considerable number of people that went from that area back towards the Marshals? And threw things at them?

A. Depending on what you mean by "considerable".

Q. Well, 10, 20, 30, 40, 50, any number you want to pick out.

A. There were people who went back up.

Q. You don't know whether General Walker was with that group or not, is that what you are saying, or was he?

A. Just a second. I'm trying to think what you mean—I mean trying to—General Walker—what I am saying is, the crowd that went up to—the crowd that went up to riot again from his speech left before he did.

Q. That's what I—

A. But he stayed there for at least five minutes, I know, because it was two minutes before I could get down and I was—I saw him there talking to—with these people for another couple of minutes before I ran back up there and started breaking up some cement things.

Q. Did you ever see General Walker again that night?

[fol. 1022] A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Now you have testified that the best recollection that you have of what you heard him say on the campus was what?

A. Do you want me to repeat what I said in this speech?

Q. That's right.

A. He told us, "You have a right to protest."

Q. All right. Now the speech was made after he had gone up there to the flagpole with this group that you have described, wherein at least you could see that they were still throwing at the Marshals, is that correct?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I object to that as an improper question.

The Court: Overruled, Counsel.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

The Witness: Would you repeat your question, sir?

Mr. Gooch: Would you read that back to him, Mr. Nuss?

(Last question read.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Shall I rephrase the question or do you understand it?

A. Yes, please.

Q. You have testified, as I understand it, that when you first saw him, he was walking westward, that he continued [fol. 1023] to walk westward with the group that you fix as somewhere around 20 or 25, am I right up to there?

A. From 10 to 25, yes, sir.

Q. That he walked on to the vicinity of the flagpole or a little bit past, you indicated when you had the ruler up there, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, to the best of my recollection.

Q. And you testified at that time you could observe or at least you could observe people out in front between the flagpole and the Lyceum Building throwing at the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now my question is, that when he got back to the monument, it was after he had been up there in the group that you were with, that he made the statement that, "You have every right to protest," is that correct?

A. He said, "You have a right to protest."

Q. Did he say anything else that you remember besides Birdsong and about the Episcopal minister?

A. Well, he said—I don't remember exactly—about blood being on the hands of the Federal Government or something like that but I don't remember—I mean it was just a phrase I mean, something, seems like it's in my mind, you know, I heard him say but I mean, you know, I can't give you the complete statement.

[fol: 1024] Q. Now you were up on the monument almost leaning over him, I assume, is that correct?

A. I was in several feet because the monument is built sort of like that (indicating), and it's got a place up there, a little ledge or thing you can hang on that I was—not a ledge, but a little place you can put your feet and I was hanging on that.

He was not on the monument. He was down on the, sort of, little—the ground sort of rises above the monument. He was down on the ground.

Q. Could you see him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you hear him?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have done your best to detail what you heard him say there at the speech on the monument, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Thank you, sir. That's all.

Mr. Watts: Thank you.

The Court: I am going to excuse this witness then.

Mr. Gooch: Wait a minute. Just a moment would you, please, sir?

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. How many people would you estimate was around the monument when he climbed up to make his speech?

[fol. 1025] A. Well, he didn't climb up but when he was there—

Q. All right.

A. —it seems to the best of my memory, 300.

Q. All right. Now when he began to talk, when he said you had a right to protest, did he elaborate on that?

As a matter of fact, didn't he say this, that you had a right to protest what had happened there and the Marshals being sent in against the University to make sure that Meredith got in?

A. Well, there is a distinction between "protest" and "rioter".

Q. Well, I am asking you if that isn't what General Walker said, that you said he said when your deposition was taken in Mississippi?

A. Would you repeat it, please.

Q. I have Page 45, of the witness' deposition taken at Oxford, Mississippi.

Question—or the answer, about the middle of Page 45. Would you refresh your recollection there, please, sir?

A. (reading) I remember: . . . he said that we had a right to protest against what had happened there in—and the Marshals being sent in against the University to make sure that—[fol. 1026] Q. Do you remember testifying to that over in Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Did he say that you had a right to protest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he say something like this: "You may not win but you will be heard"? Did you hear a statement to that effect?

A. It seems like I did. I mean I can't tell you that I did because I mean it just seems like I do remember it.

Q. Did you hear him say, "This is a dangerous situation."?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you said that he mentioned something about General Birdsong?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he say anything about having sold out to Kennedy (indicating)?

A. Like I said, "or something like that." I don't remember if it was—who he said who he sold out to but he sold out.

[fol. 1027] Mr. Gooch: In order that the record might show, your deposition was taken on March the 12th or 13th down in Mississippi by Mr. Watts, was it not, in which I cross-examined you?

The Witness: This is true.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Now you know—don't know what happened to General Walker after his speech was over, do you, after he got down from the base of the monument?

A. No, sir.

Q. I believe you stated earlier that the condition worsened insofar as the taunting of the Marshals and the throwing of at least one bottle along about dusk?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I believe that's all. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Watts: Thank you.

Would you send Danny Hunter in, please?

The Court: You are excused. Send Mr. Hunter in.

DANNY LEE HUNTER, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Would you state your name, please.
A. Danny Lee Hunter.
Q. Where do you live?
[fol. 1028] A. My home is in Morton, Mississippi.
Q. How long have you lived there?
A. Twenty-three years.
Q. Who are your parents?
A. Mr. and Mrs. Woodrow Hunter.
Q. Move that mike a little closer there to you if you want to, make it a little easier.
A. All right, sir.
Q. Were you a student at Ole Miss in the fall of '42—I mean '62. I'm sorry.
A. Yes, sir, I was.
Q. How long—what school were you in?
A. I was a first-year law student.
Q. What school are you in now? What class?
A. Third year, law student.
Q. Were you on campus that night?
A. Yes, sir, I was.
Q. Were you—where did you live on the campus?
A. Howry Dormitory.
Q. Had you been on campus over the weekend?
A. No, sir, I had not. I had gone home.
Q. About what time did you get back?
A. At approximately 7:30 we arrived on the campus that Sunday afternoon.
Q. Who was with you?
[fol. 1029] A. I was with my roommate who was also from Morton and probably some more boys from Morton usually rode with us when we went home.

Q. Where did you go when you got back to the campus?

A. We drove onto the campus and went around the circle, by the Lyceum Building, and by the student union building, to Howry Dormitory, which is right there across from the old cafeteria, parked the car and loaded our luggage.

And went back out to the Lyceum Building because it was, the Lyceum Building, when we arrived, was surrounded by United States Marshals and it was a large group of students out in front of the Lyceum Building and the Mississippi Highway Patrol was there between the students in front of the students, between the students and the Marshals, and we were, of course, curious to find out exactly what was going on.

We had heard that the Marshals had come on the campus over the radio as we were coming from home to school, and when we arrived, we saw that the reports were correct.

And we parked the car and was curious to find out just what was going on, so we went down to the Lyceum Building.

Q. What did you see when you went out there?

A. Well, as I said, the Lyceum Building was surrounded [fol. 1030] by Marshals. A large number of students were accumulated. And others were coming in practically all the time.

The students were, seemed to be rather anxious, excited and angry and there was an army truck parked in front of the Lyceum Building, maybe too, a jeep, an Army jeep.

And for about, well, the next 30 minutes, or so, we were just there in front of the Lyceum Building, generally to the northeast.

Q. Did you know where the circle was?

A. Yes, I am very familiar with the circle.

Q. Did you get down in the circle?

A. Yes. Not very far. Usually right around the curb there in front of the circle.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. At approximately 8:00 o'clock, or possibly shortly after 8:00 o'clock, I remember I was standing on the curb observing the best I could just what was happening and Chief Marshal McShane came out of the Lyceum Building onto the front steps there and hollered, "Let 'em have it, gas."

[fol. 1031] Q. Now, did the Marshals let them have it?

A. Yes, sir, just at that time some of the Marshals started firing tear gas into a crowd that had accumulated in the Circle and the street.

Q. Now, did they fire that gas with a flat trajectory or lobbin?

A. It was flat.

Q. What happened?

A. Well, practically everybody—well, everybody, including myself, turned and ran just as fast as they could back down through the Circle, and I went over to the Y Building and out behind the Y in an area which is known as the Grove where the—

Q. Were there any other personnel between the United States Marshals and the students at the time this gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir, the Highway Patrol was still there all the time.

Q. What were they doing to the students?

A. Just trying to keep them quiet, see that they didn't get up around the Marshals, and talking to them and holding them back across the street the best they could.

Q. Sometime immediately before the gas was fired, what was the distance between the closest student you saw to a Marshal and the Marshals themselves?

[fol. 1032] A. Probably about eight or ten feet.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. As I said, they fired the tear gas. I turned around and ran back to the Y Building.

Q. Did you go in the Y Building?

A. No, sir, I ran out behind the Y Building to the Grove, and I stayed there a while and I could hear tear gas still being fired, and I ran back around in front of the Y to see the best I could what was going on, and there was a group of students, mostly students, probably, and a few other people, were grabbing things, bottles and rocks and running up and throwing back at the Marshals that were firing the tear gas.

Q. Now, could you tell the Jury, please, sir, how that activity looked to you as to the movement of personnel involved in it, where they would come from, where they would go, what they would do?

A. Are you asking about the students?

Q. Yes, the activities of the students.

A. Yes. It was—it was just a lot of confusion and people running around all over the place. Didn't know what to do. Most everybody was scared to death. And practically everybody was glassy eyed from the tear gas because it made you cry. Kind of made tears run out your eyes. [fol. 1033] And most of the girls, and most of the boys also, stayed back out of the way, as far back as they ran, further. But, or some of them went back up. A pretty good crowd of them came back around and accumulated around the Y, and would grab things and run up into the Circle and throw them at the Marshals and the Marshals would retaliate with more tear gas. Consequently, the air became filled with tear gas and you could see people out in the Grove, scattered out all through there, practically all over the campus. You could just look around.

Q. Now, would you know about what time this was?

A. Oh, when they first fired the tear gas I said I ran back behind the Y and I stayed back there a few minutes and come back around in front of the Y and this was probably around 8:30, something like this.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And for about fifteen or twenty or thirty minutes, possibly longer, this is where I was, in front of the Y Building. Between the Y and the Lyceum Building.

Q. Did you at any time hear anything about General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I was in the street in front of the Y Building. I heard several people say, "General Walker is here." I said, "Where?"

"Down the street in front of the statue, Confederate [fol. 1034] statue," and at the head of University Avenue which runs into the Circle, and I turned and went down there and I saw General Walker with a few students around him. And I ran up to him and introduced myself. It was—there was already several people accumulated around him. I had to edge my way through the crowd. I got up to him, I shook hands with him, I said, "Is this General Walker," and he said, "Yes, sir." And I said, "Well, I am Danny Hunter. I am glad to meet you," or "Sure am glad to meet you," or "How are you?" Or something to that effect.

And the word was getting around that General Walker had arrived on the campus. And as people would hear it they would run down there to him. Everybody was wanting to meet—get up to him and introduce themselves, shake his hands. Some of them was asking him, "General, organize us and lead us against the Marshals. They fired on us. What can we do?"

And he didn't say anything to them while I was there. But I was edged out, back on down in a southeasterly direction into a street there where the Circle runs back into the Y as it comes back around.

And, as I say, the crowd just kept getting bigger and bigger as the students kept coming down.

And I stayed in the street there, tried to look, watch and see what General Walker was doing as he milled [fol. 1035] around, meeting people, looking around, seeing what was going on.

And as I recall, seems like that he stepped out into behind the statue into what is called the Circle. That is where there isn't any building.

Q. Oh, yes, at any time in this time area did you see a big heavy set Marshal?

A. No, sir, I don't recall it.

Q. I mean a Deputy Sheriff. Now, excuse me. Deputy Sheriff?

A. No, sir, I don't recall that either.

Q. Don't recall him either. All right. Go ahead.

A. And I just stayed there in the street trying to see what was happening down here, observing to see what General Walker was doing. And he was just looking around there, meeting people. Some of them were still asking him to lead us, to organize us. And he went into the Circle, looked around out there. Walked around a little bit.

Q. About how far into the Circle did he go?

A. Oh, probably about—oh, forty or fifty feet in that direction.

Q. How long did he stay there?

A. In a westerly direction. Sir?

Q. How long did he stay there?

[fol. 1036] A. Probably about fifteen or twenty minutes. I remember I was still down there in the street.

Q. You didn't follow him then into the circle?

A. No, sir, I was still in the street. I was just looking. Just looking around in his direction, watching to see what was going on.

Q. Could you tell the Jury, please, sir, about the size of the crowd you saw out in the Circle with respect to Walker?

A. With respect to Walker, any crowd that was with him would probably be just about six or eight immediately around him?

Q. Then what about the rest of them?

A. But there were others scattered out. There wasn't too many of them out there at the time, I don't think. Most of the people still were down in the street.

Q All right.

A. And I recall that a lot of them came down there around where I was, because there was some Highway Patrol cars leaving the campus, coming around the Circle into the avenue, and a lot of the people were asking the Highway Patrol why were they leaving, asking if they were coming back, who ordered them, where they were going, begging them not to go, really, I think, and this was when—this was while I was still down there in the street.

[fol. 1037] Q. You were still—now, which direction from the monument were you at this time?

A. Generally in a southeasterly direction.

Q. Now, where was Hume Hall from where you were?

A. Hume Hall was behind me.

Q. Now, to shorten this a little, were people running back to Hume Hall and picking up brick and things?

A. Brick and anything they could find. Hume Hall was in the process of being built.

Q. Go ahead and tell us what happened after the Highway Patrol cars—first, where did they come from? Which direction?

A. They came from up on—from up in the Circle.

Q. Could you take your pointer and step over there to the chart and find the Circle and show us roughly where the cars came from?

A. I can show you where I saw them.

Q. That is what I mean. Get the pointer and walk over to the chart, which is Exhibit 11. Start out from the monument. Put the pointer on the monument.

A. This is the monument right here (indicating), and I was right in here. Hume Hall is right back in here somewhere, and I saw the Highway Patrol coming out in here, this way (indicating).

[fol. 1038] Q. All right. Take your seat again. Tell us what happened after the Highway Patrol left?

A. Didn't much happen after the Highway Patrol left, different from what was already going on. A few minutes later General Walker came back. The crowd was getting bigger down there. People were still asking him to lead us, make a speech, tell us what to do, and he walked up to the Confederate statue and made a short speech.

Q. Did you hear all or any part of it?

A. Yes, sir, I think I heard most of it.

Q. Tell the Jury what you heard?

A. He said that these troops shouldn't be here, that they should be in Cuba. He said that, "Your Governor has not sold you out." He says, "Somebody name Birdsong has sold you out." And then he told us that he had walked from downtown Oxford and that while he was downtown on the square where the Courthouse is that some gentlemen had told him that somebody named Birdsong—he had heard somebody say that Birdsong had sold them out, and that all he knew about the truth of this statement was that he had heard this gentleman downtown at the Courthouse say it. That the Governor had not, "sold you out", and that somebody name Birdsong had.

Then, cautioned the group to avoid violence. He told [fol. 1039] them they had a right to protest as long as they wanted to, but to try to avoid violence at all times. And I think that was about all that he said.

Q. What effect or reaction did the speech have on you?

A. Oh, not much effect. I didn't think too much about it. Actually, I didn't think it was what the students wanted to hear. I know when he said, "Let me caution you to avoid violence," he got an unfavorable reaction from the crowd there.

Q. What do you mean, unfavorable reaction from the crowd?

A. I heard some people say, "What the hell is he doing here?" And, "If he is not doing anything—this guy is just here to look around. Let's go. We are not going to get any help from him."

Some people booed or hissed or something like this.

I was still kind of on the outskirts of the crowd and about that time he just come back into the crowd, kind of over where I was and started talking to some people, some boys there who probably were still asking him to help them out.

And I was a little closer to him then that—than I had been when he made the speech, and it was still down in [fol. 1040] the—down in the head of the avenue there. I heard him say, "Well, let's walk up here and see what is going on." Or something to this effect. Might not have been those exact words.

Q. Was this after the speech?

A. Yes, sir, a few minutes after the speech.

Q. What did he do immediately after he quit talking?

A. He just stood around there talking to some people that was trying to get up to him.

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. And I said all the time I was watching to see—just to see, actually, what he was going to do. And I heard him say, "Well, let's walk up here and see what is going on."

And he started walking in that direction, over kind of to the south a little bit, first, and then on up toward the flagpole. And the people immediately around him, or some people was right around him all the time. A lot of the others down there following along, and including myself, I followed along.

Q. How close were you to him as he walked along toward the west?

A. Well, when we first started down around the bottom of the Circle, probably around eight or ten feet, and then as we got on up he got a little further ahead of me, and I [fol. 1041] probably followed twenty or twenty-five feet behind him.

Q. What was his gait as he walked away from the monument?

A. Sort of a stroll, real slow. Not real slow, but just kind of stepping around, crossing.

Q. I wish you would try to visualize that situation, as he left the monument, try to relive it and tell the Jury just exactly how it looked to you.

A. As he left the monument, he stepped out toward the people in the street. They were still talking. Some of them were, some of them turned around to go the other way.

I just stood there watching them, over the crowd as best I could.

I couldn't hear what he was saying to them because he wasn't saying it out loud like he was when he was making his speech.

He maybe—he kind of just walked through the crowd there, talking to these people. He would occasionally stop and talk to somebody who would seem to be pressing him.

And this is when I heard him say, "Let's walk up here and see what is going on." And I said, "Well, he is going up there." I mean I thought—I said, "Well, he is going [fol. 1042] up there," to myself, but he didn't just proceed on up there as I first thought, but—

Q. How far did he go?

A. He stood around talking to some people.

Q. Did he go all the way at a single move, or did he stop from time to time?

A. As he walked through the Circle up toward the flagpole?

Q. Right.

A. He would occasionally stop and talk to somebody when they would come up to him, but never for too long, I don't think.

Q. What was going on further up toward the westward where the Marshals were, at that time?

A. Up around the Lyceum Building there were still people up there throwing rocks and bricks and running back.

Q. Could you describe to the Jury how this operation was as to the type, size crowd, the activity and what they were doing?

A. They were small groups scattered out, probably more in the northeast than in the—on the west side, I mean on the south side. And probably less on the south side than on the north side, because it seemed to be thicker over there, because more people ran back in that direction.

[fol. 1043] The Court: Let's recess at this time.

Mr. Watts: All right.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until a quarter until 4:00.

(Short recess had.)

[fol. 1044] Q. Then Mr. Hunter, after General Walker's speech on the monument, you said, as I remember, he started towards the westward?

A. Yes, sir, shortly after the speech.

Q. And were you some little distance behind me?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Q. Were there other people around you behind him?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Q. Were you—were there people in front of him, out in front?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. All right. Where else? Were there any other people anywhere else?

A. There were people all over the place.

Q. What were they doing, the ones, we'll say, way off to the northeast quadrant of the intersection, of the circle?

A. To the northeast.

Q. In the northeast quadrant of the circle, what were those people doing? That's over towards the Fine Arts Building.

A. Do you mean in the lower part of the circle?

Q. No, way up high towards the northwest.

A. Could I go over here?

Q. Yes, go over and get your pointer so we can get [fol. 1045] straight. Do you find the flagpole?

A. That would be the northeast quadrant (indicating).

Q. What were those people in there doing?

A. Well, practically everybody over here was just standing around.

Q. All right. Then what were the people—

A. Scattered out all—

Q. —over in the northwest quadrant doing?

A. Northwest?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Most of the people over here were participating in the throwing of rocks.

Q. All right. What was the size of the groups that were engaging in that activity?

A. In this section?

Q. Right.

A. Well, I think most of it was just individuals.

Q. All right. Then what was happening down in the southwest quadrant?

A. About the same as up here, as far as I know (indicating).

Q. Tell us what was happening in the southeast area and point out where you were as you went forward?

A. Well, I was right in here (from here to here indicating).

[fol. 1046] Q. All right.

A. I walked in this direction. Most of it was just—just walking around.

Q. Was that towards the flagpole?

A. Proceeding towards the flagpole.

Q. Did General Walker ever get out of your sight as he went in that direction?

A. No, sir. Every time I looked for him I could find him easily.

Q. How far towards the flagpole or in the area of the flagpole did he go?

A. I think he went right up to the flagpole.

Q. All right, what did he do?

A. All the times I saw him, he was just standing around there.

Q. Did he ever participate in any way in the activities of the crowd, so far as throwing things at the Marshals were concerned?

A. No, sir, not—nobody around me in this part of the circle was throwing anything at all. We were just standing around there.

I personally was watching to see what General Walker was doing.

Q. All right.

A. And you see, it's trees all around in here, especially [fol. 1047] around the flagpole (indicating), and you couldn't throw one if you wanted to—at least I couldn't.

Q. Okay. Go ahead.

A. Especially through the trees. I don't know exactly where I was when the tear gas that I ran from was fired but it was right in here around the sidewalk. It might have been on the sidewalk.

The tear gas was fired, they could throw it and it would roll along the ground or they could shoot it up above the trees and let it fall. The tear gas was fired.

I turned and ran back down in here, right in here (indicating).

Q. Did you see General Walker any more?

A. Yes, I stopped, looked back to see if I could see where he was, and he was still up around the center of the circle.

Q. He didn't leave then when you did?

A. No, sir.

Q. Okay. What did you do after that?

A. Well, most of the people that were in here turned and ran back in this direction and accumulated down in here (indicating).

I was right out in here in the bottom part of the circle.

I saw General Walker still standing up in here some- [fol. 1048] where (indicating) and people were just still coming back as the tear gas was fired.

I went on down into the street after I saw him up there. He stood around up there for a few minutes.

I went back into the street and the next time I saw him was right in here (indicating), he came walking down through here, and I recall two boys came up to him with another boy; they were helping him along, one of them had him—they had him just like this (indicating).

Q. Had who now?

A. Some boy had been shot in the leg. They had ripped his pants up the side and they came up to General Walker and said, "General, look what they had done to this boy."

And he said, "Well, let's see," said, "He needs to go to the hospital," or "put him in a car," he said, "Put him in a car and take him to the hospital," or something like this.

And I think they went on down here and it was a car there and I think that the boys put him in a car and left. That's the last time I recall seeing them.

And General Walker, who was watching these boys, walked on down this way. That's the last time I saw him.

I thought he was leaving and going back downtown.

And I went back up to the "Y", around the "Y", and I saw a boy standing right out here in front of the "Y", right [fol. 1049] on the corner of the "Y", with a notebook and a pencil.

And he was, he would write—I saw him write a note down and I went up to him and I said, I told him he's better get out of there, that he'd better get rid of his pen now because these people didn't like reporters.

And he said, "I'm on their side." I said, "Where are you from?"

And he said, "Texas," and I told him—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we are getting far afield.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Watts: All right.

The Witness: I'm sorry. So I went back to the dormitory.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all. Thank you.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Hunter, have a seat. I believe you have testified that you saw General Walker not too great a time before he made this speech on the monument, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

Q. And when you saw him he was in the vicinity of the monument?

A. Yes, sir, he was right there in the street in front of the [fol. 1050] monument.

Q. Did you see him go west towards the flagpole with any group prior to the time he made the speech?

A. He went out into the circle but the only people with him was just a few people, mostly students.

Q. And they were walking west towards the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, after that you saw him back around the monument shortly before he made the speech, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you have stated that when the word got out that General Walker was there, or was going to make a speech—I may be in error on my words—that the crowd began to congregate around the monument, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many people would you estimate congregated around the monument at the time General Walker was making his talk? I know it's—

A. Over 100, probably around 200 people.

Q. Probably around 200. And did they listen pretty well at the time he made his talk?

A. Yes, sir, most of them did, I think.

Q. Now I believe you have stated, or I'm asking you this question: Isn't it a fact that after General Walker finished [fol. 1051] his speech, that he said something to the effect, "Come on, let's go," or "Let's go up and see," and started towards the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir, right after making his speech, he stepped down and people were still shaking hands with him and talking to him and he talked to a few of them and came over in the direction where I was and he says, "Let's walk up here and see what's going on," or something like that.

Q. And when he did, he started walking which way?

A. He walked out into the circle—well, he walked up the street a little piece, I believe, and then into the circle up towards the flagpole.

Q. And when he did that, what happened to this crowd that had been listening to him when he made the speech on the monument?

A. Well, some of them had already scattered out and the ones that had remained down there went out into the circle and went on up in that direction (indicating).

Q. You mean they followed him up in that direction?

A. Well, I was following him for—I can say that I was following him because I was, I wanted to see what he was doing.

Q. Mr. Hunter, do you remember when your deposition was taken down in Oxford?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1052] Q. In March. By Mr. Watts. On Page 14:

"All right, continue with the narrative statement of what occurred after he finished his speech and got down off the monument."

And your answer, "After making the speech, I said to him—no, after making the speech, I said, he said, 'Let's walk up here and see what's going on,' or something to that effect. And so he turned and walked toward the Lyceum."

Did you make that answer?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Was it true?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. Next question, "Did you see a big heavy-set Sheriff or someone that looked like a Sheriff with him?"

And you answered, "No, sir, I didn't notice."

Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, that's right.

Q. "Mr. Watts: Continue then and tell us what you saw Walker do."

Answer, "He did walk toward the Lyceum and practically everyone that was in the crowd there at the bottom of the circle around the monument walked toward the Lyceum, also, and I was among that group."

Was that a correct answer that you gave in Oxford?

A. Yes, sir, that's correct.

[fol. 1053] Q. Does that refresh your recollection of what you saw there that night?

A. I don't know.

Q. Sir?

A. I don't know whether it does or not.

Q. Well, was that a true statement when you made it in Oxford on March the 13th, 1964?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now that, I believe you have testified that Walker, with this some 200 people behind him, got up near the flagpole, that a burst of tear gas was fired, is that correct?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And at that time you came back?

A. Yes, sir, most of the way.

Q. A lot of the crowd came back?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. You looked back and General Walker was still standing there and hesitated some time before he came back, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, it was a few minutes before he came back.

Q. Now the testimony that I have read to you, is that testimony true that you gave over in Oxford, Mississippi, on March 13, 1964?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that General Walker went westward [fol. 1054] any past the flagpole?

A. He could have, two or three steps.

Q. Did you say he did go past the flagpole in your testimony? At Oxford?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Well, would you say now one way or the other?

A. I say that he might have, two or three steps—

Q. All right.

A. —he might—I say the sidewalk there runs through the circle, right through the flagpole—

Q. That's right.

A. —two or three steps, give or take either direction.

Q. Now at the time you were in the vicinity of the flagpole, which might have been at it or some few steps past, you could see the group between the flagpole and the Lyceum still throwing rocks, bricks and missiles at the Marshals, could you not?

A. I don't recall but I'm sure you could.

Q. Well, you just said that people up in that area, when you got up there, were throwing at the Marshals; that's what you just testified to?

A. Yes, sir, that's generally what was going on.

Mr. Gooch: All right. That's all.

Mr. Watts: That's all. Thank you.

The Court: I will excuse you, Mr. Hunter.

[fol. 1055] Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, at this time we shall offer in evidence the deposition and testimony of Relman Morin that was taken here in Fort Worth on March the 7th, 1964.

RELMAN MORIN testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right, your name, please, sir.

A. Relman, R-e-l-m-a-n, Morin.

Q. Your profession?

A. Newspaper correspondent.

Q. For what period of time, Mr. Morin?

A. Well, since I was 18.

Q. Where were you born and raised?

A. I was born in Freeport, Illinois, but I was brought up in California, in Los Angeles.

Q. What place?

A. Los Angeles.

Q. Where did you go to school?

A. I went to Los Angeles High School and Pomona College and then did some post-graduate work in two universities in China.

Mr. Watts: Over to Page 16, next to the last question.

[fol. 1056] Q. Well, Mr. Morin, you have watched the balance of power shift militarily and psychologically from the hands of the free world almost into the hands of the enemy?

The Court: Just a minute.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, that's wholly irrelevant.

The Court: We are not going to permit that.

Mr. Watts: Let's see, maybe I was—Page 18, then.

Q. How long have you been employed by the Associated Press?

A. Thirty years this year—1934.

Q. Now as I understand, they are a cooperative news-gathering and disseminating agency?

A. That's correct.

Mr. Watts: Over to Page 20, Line 6.

Q. As a very expert newsman, you recollect that the news can be, or you recognize that the news can be slanted?

A. Of course it can.

Q. And it can be weighed?

A. Of course.

Q. And even the timing of news releases can affect the public acceptance and influence of that news?

A. That's right.

Q. Do any of the high-level AP personnel ever have con-[fol. 1057] ferences to discuss developments in the news and reactions?

A. Yes. We have two types: Every morning at 11:00 o'clock the Department Heads get together and that's primarily for coordination. In a big organization it simply —it happens that the left hand doesn't know what the right hand is doing.

And so before the day is very hard along, they get together and the general desk and the world desk and the sports desk and the out-going desks and the financial desk, and so on, all those, they get together because that news sometimes overlaps.

In other words, there is, as you can realize easily, a point where sports news and financial news overlap.

So they get together and that's primarily for the purposes of coordination so that everybody knows what everybody else is doing.

Then once a week the general manager has us all upstairs to the Board Room and there we talk not so much on an operational level as about what we are doing and what we ought to be doing and where something has gone wrong, to trace it down and find out why and where it's gone wrong.

Once a week the full-dress conference and every day the 11:00 o'clock more or less operational conference.

Q. So out of that, then, undoubtedly must come some [fol. 1058] organized concept of various important issues, so far as this group is concerned, doesn't it?

A. I am not sure that I know what you mean by that.

Q. Well, at the end of a conference, wouldn't you have some idea in mind of how, say, your boss is thinking?

A. Yes, and more important, he would have some idea in mind about how—what we are thinking.

Q. And if some of you people get a little too far in a direction that he doesn't fully concur with, why, you realize you are getting away from his trend of thought, don't you?

A. Yes, but his trend of thought is not inflexible, by any means. In other words, if you are discussing a particular thing, let's say a particular story that is being covered or something that you are planning for, he may take a point of view on it and you may well say, "Look, it just isn't like that and here are the reasons why not." Well now he can't know those things, let's say, that someone in the field knows about it. So in that case, he's not going to insist on any particular point of view and neither are we.

Q. And you individuals of the somewhat lower echelon influence him as well as him influencing you?

A. That's right.

Mr. Watts: Over to Page 23, Line 21.

[fol. 1059] Q. Mr. Morin, were you participating in the AP conferences when General Walker first became a national figure coincidentally with his relief of command in Germany?

A. Well, let's see, what was the date of that?

Q. That was the—in the spring of 1961?

A. Where was I then? Yes, the answer is yes. I was trying to remember, because in the spring of 1962, I went abroad to cover the Eichmann trial but that was '62. It was not the spring of 1961.

Q. As I remember, you, also, covered the Little Rock incident, didn't you?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And General Walker was the commander of the Corps Area Headquarters in Little Rock at that time?

A. And a very good one, too.

Q. Well, thank you. And as such, he had been assigned the immediate command of the troops sent in by the government?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from your observation of the situation, there was absolutely no violence?

A. Well, there was violence, of course.

Q. Well, there was no violence that involved the Federal troops, was there?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1060] Q. There was?

A. Well, I don't know what you mean by "violence". There was the one instance where the man tried to take a rifle away from the paratrooper and he reversed it and caught him over the forehead like that (indicating) but that's the only case I seem to recall, if that's violence.

Q. By the term "violence," I mean—

A. You mean by a mass?

Q. No rioting or anything approximating the Oxford situation?

A. Oh, no.

Q. And that was so coordinated and controlled that the Government's mission was accomplished without any rioting whatsoever?

A. Yes, that's right.

Mr. Watts: Now over to Page 38, Line 11.

[fol. 1061] A. Oh, no.

Q. And that was so coordinated and controlled that the Government's mission was accomplished without any rioting whatsoever?

A. Yes, that's right.

Mr. Watts: Now, on page 38, line 11.

"Q. . . . Now then getting down to the Walker case, as such, what was the first you heard or first directive or order you had concerning the Oxford incident?

A. About 11:00 o'clock on the Sunday morning when Meredith was to be installed there, I had a call from one of the editors, one of the Sunday editors, and he said, "Stand by or to," not to Oxford—but I'll explain this in a moment, but, "to New Orleans."

And later in the afternoon, I think it would be around 3:00 or 4:00, the then executive editor of the AP called me and said, "I want you to go to New Orleans." Now the reason for that was that Oxford is a small town, no possible facilities there for setting up all the paraphernalia in terms of printers, I mean teleprinters, the wire photo setup and all the rest of it, so everything was going from Oxford to New Orleans. That was the way we were relaying it out of there.

And I said at that time, "Well, I would prefer to go to [fol. 1062] Oxford rather than to do a desk job in New Orleans." And he said, "All right, I think I am inclined to agree with you."

So the next thing was then to try and get a flight and by this time Sunday—I'm going beyond your question but—

Q. That's all right.

A. So I began phoning airlines and finally—I think the flight was out of New York at something like 11:20 at night, for Memphis, and that's the one I took.

Q. That was the night of September the 30th?

A. Well, if that's the date. It was the Sunday night that Meredith was installed in Oxford and—

Q. And you left New York at 11:20?

A. That's my memory of it. I could check the flight.

Mr. Walker: A. M.?

A. No, no, 11:20 P. M. I didn't get the definite word to go or, rather, where to go, Oxford or New Orleans, until about 3:00 or 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. And, roughly, what time did you arrive in Memphis?

A. I would say 4:30 or 5:00.

Q. What did you do then?

A. Well, I had phoned down there and told them to have a rented car reserved for me because I felt sure that there [fol. 1063] would be a lot of correspondents coming and there might not be any cars.

Q. Were you alone?

A. No, I met Warren Rogers, who was at that time of the Herald Tribune, on the airplane and he found that he couldn't rent a car and so he rode to Oxford with me.

Q. Did you and Mr. Rogers discuss Walker at all at any time en route to Oxford?

A. I don't think we knew he was there.

Q. You had not—

A. I'm pretty sure we did not.

Q. You had not seen the national publicity where Walker called on, over the radio, for people, "To bring their flags, tents and skillets," and come to support Governor Barnett?

A. Oh, I had heard that one, yes.

Q. Sir.

A. I had heard that one. But in connection with what was going on in Oxford, I don't believe that I knew at the time that General Walker was there.

Q. I understand. And you and Mr. Rogers had no conversation at all on the way to Oxford concerning Walker?

A. No—well, I am 99 and 9/10 percent sure that we didn't. I know I went to sleep on the airplane. And when I filled out the forms for the rent-a-car in Memphis, the [fol. 1064] woman behind the desk said, "They have already killed three people down there tonight," as she put it. It was early morning, of course.

So we were naturally more concentrated on that. But apart from that, my memory of it is that I didn't know General Walker was there.

Q. Who drove?

A. I did.

Q. What time did you get to Oxford?

A. I'm going to be a little vague about this but not purposely: I would think that it was about 7:00 o'clock. It might have been a little earlier.

Mr. Walker: A.M.?

A. A. M., Monday morning?

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right. I wish you would take it from there, to save my interrupting you and save some time, and give us a narrative statement of everything you did from there on, with whom you talked, who you saw.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What you did.

A. Well, the first thing was coming down the road—it isn't a highway after you turn off the main turnpike—you came to that section of the University campus where there are exits there and we saw, I believe it was, state troopers but I'm not too clear about that. I think it was state [fol. 1065] troopers who were stationed in front of that entrance. And we stopped and got out and questioned them there a little while.

They had very little to tell us because I believe they had been there all night. They weren't able to tell us very much or they didn't want to, I don't know which.

So we then went to the Ole Miss Motel where our people were and I believe Rogers and some of the Herald Tribune people were there and, in fact, the entire motel, as I recall, was at that time occupied by newspapermen.

Q. Now, you mentioned "our people." Whom did you see that you recognized as some of your people?

A. Ed LeBreton, primarily. He's an experienced man from Washington whom I knew best, in short. I don't recall that I knew any of the others except by name before that.

Van Savell was there. The man from Memphis who got shot, I think, was there. I was interested and curious about his wounds, and so on. He got shot in the back, you know, buckshot.

Q. Was that Bill Crider (phonetic)?

A. Crider, that's the name I was trying to recall. So the first thing I said, "I would like to go to the campus. Is that possible?" And they said, I think, it was.

[fol. 1066] So we piled into the car, LeBreton was driving, since I wasn't familiar with the town and what-not. I was in the front seat. Savell was in the back and there was a fourth but I don't remember who it was. It might have been a photographer.

We drove to the campus and parked up there outside and walked up through that area where the action had taken place the night before, noticed the debris and the smell of the tear gas, at the monument, empty tear gas cartridges and all that other detail.

Meanwhile, in the car coming up there, I asked these fellows details, details, details as rapidly as I could get them as to what happened on the night before.

Q. Now, let's get identified a little further. That was LeBreton and Savell and—

Q. The fourth person I just don't know. He might even have been a photographer. My memory of it is that the car was filled but I can't tell you who the fourth person was.

Mr. Watts: At this point I want to hold the remainder of Mr. Morin's deposition and read excerpts from the deposition of Van H. Savell.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I presume he can make that request, but I would rather go on with one.

[fol. 1067] The Court: Yes, sir, he has a right to stop and you may offer whatever you want on cross there.

Mr. Gooch: No.

Mr. Watts: Now, turn to page 2 of the deposition of Van H. Savell.

Mr. Andress: All right.

DEPOSITION OF VAN HENRY SAVELL

• • •

Mr. Watts: Line 18.

Q. Where did you have your college training?
A. Mississippi College, Clinton, Mississippi.
Q. What was the nature of that course?
A. It was for one year only.
Q. You are not then a graduate?
A. No, sir, I am not.
Q. What was the course of your studies?
A. I took basic course, that all freshmen take, on English and history and zoology and physical education, and that was it.
[fol. 1069] Q. Have you had any formal education in journalism?
A. No, I have not.
Q. What background then do you have, just on-the-job training?
A. On-the-job training.
Q. What is the nature and extent of that?
A. I wrote sports articles for a national weekly newspaper in Luke when I was in high school, and I was hired by the Clarion Ledger in Jackson, Mississippi, about Thanksgiving of 1960 I believe, and I worked continuously for that paper until Easter, 1961. At that time I was employed by the Associated Press in New Orleans until about the middle of October, 1961, at which time I resigned because I was only hired as a part-time placement, in the first place, and then I was hired by the Montgomery Advertiser in Montgomery, Alabama, and I worked for them until January 21, 1962, at which time I was again hired by the Associated Press, in Jackson, Mississippi, and I have been with the Associated Press ever since.

• • • • • • • •

Q. Have you ever had any experience of any kind in general reporting, prior to the time you went to work for the AP?

A. Some, yes.

Q. What was the nature and extent of it?

[fol. 1070] A. Some was with Clarion Ledger, but primarily in the sports department.

Q. Did you form an acquaintance while you were working with that paper with somebody connected with the AP?

A. Yes.

Q. With whom?

A. All three members of the Associated Press: Ben McCarthy, James Sigus, spelled S-i-g-u-s, and Doug Starr.

Q. Did you become acquainted with any of the other personnel of Associated Press who were outside of Jackson at that time?

A. Not to my knowledge, I don't think so, not until two weeks after I was hired by AP.

Q. Who hired you?

A. I was hired or interviewed by Mr. Davis, chief of the bureau in New Orleans, and he recommended by hiring, and as normally, it was approved by New York.

Q. Was he the only individual out of the New Orleans office with whom you had any contact before you went to work for them?

A. No, I had visited one of the other fellows the day I was interviewed by him.

Q. Who was he?

[fol. 1071] A. His name is Robert Rowand, an AP newsman in New York.

Mr. Watts: That must undoubtedly be a misprint, or a mistake; it was New Orleans.

Mr. Andress: It says New York here.

Mr. Watts: It was corrected to New Orleans.

• • •

Q. What was his official status?

A. Newsman like I was. Strictly a visit, nothing about business.

Q. What was your office set-up in Jackson, as you observed it between the Clarion Ledger and the AP office?

A. We were in the same building, second floor. During the day hours, our office was actually in the Jackson Daily newsroom, which is connected with the Clarion Ledger, and during the night hours, our office was connected with the newsroom of the Clarion Ledger.

Mr. Watts: Skip the rest of that. Just go to line 24.

Q. You went to New Orleans when?

A. I went to New Orleans about, I believe it was April 2nd.

[fol. 1072] No, not April 2nd, but it was around Easter time, if I am not mistaken, or right after Easter, and I believe this was in April.

Q. What year?

A. 1961.

Q. Did you receive any course of training for the increase in efficiency of your duties while you were in New Orleans?

A. The normal inside office training, yes. I was under observation of others, and I was kept under 'wraps' for a certain amount of time, until I felt I could take anything by myself without any help.

Mr. Watts: Now, to page 8.

Q. So we will all be instructed about the same thing, from your experience and contacts, you have been very familiar with the Walker case, have you not?

A. Well, fairly familiar, yes.

Q. Do you remember the 1st of October, or the 2nd and 3rd of October, 1962, after General Walker was ordered or committed to the prison hospital in Missouri?

A. I remember something like that happened, yes.

Q. From the vast headlines coming across the press of the nation, that came to your attention, that Walker had [fol. 1073] been arrested for insurrection, sedition and insulting public officers?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. You didn't read anything like that?

A. I didn't have time to read the papers.

Q. You say you were not familiar with it?

A. No, I didn't read the papers.

Q. Did you ever hear it on the radio or television or anything of that kind?

A. No.

Q. You were familiar with your reporting, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And set out considerable emphasis on the fact that Walker had led a charge and had been arrested, didn't you?

A. That is what I reported, yes, sir.

Q. That's right. Were you in the area on the 21st of November, 1962?

A. On the 21st of November—

Q. When they had a hearing in Oxford, with respect to Walker's mental capacity?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Did you attend that hearing?

A. No, I did not.

[fol. 1074] Q. Did you have any contact with any of the news releases after that hearing by Associated Press?

A. To my knowledge, I didn't read any of them, no, sir.

Mr. Watts: Now, then, skip over to page 111, line 10.

Q. Could you fix the time the tear gas was fired?
A. Of my own personal knowledge, no.
Q. From subsequently acquiring information?
A. About 7:50.
Q. About 7:50. All right. What occurred then?
A. I ran back to the phone and made my report, said that tear gas had been fired, and left immediately, and that's all I said.
Q. This is report number 5?
A. I guess.

Mr. Watts: Now, then, turn over to page 139, line 15.

Q. Go ahead.
A. Then I heard a comment behind me to the general effect, and I don't remember the exact wording, "Here is [fol. 1075] General Walker, here comes General Walker," and I turned and I saw striding fifteen yards behind me, General Walker.
Q. Describe that.
A. He was walking in very long strides.
Q. In what direction?
A. In a westerly direction, up toward the Confederate statue.
Q. Where was he at that time when you first saw him?
A. About fifteen yards east of the intersection, right there where the Circle meets University Avenue.
Q. On which side of the road?
A. More or less in the middle.
Q. Now at this point, let's put an X with a 2 after it,—

• • •

Mr. Watts: May we agree, Mr. Gooch, or Mr. Cravens, that I will go up and point out on the big board where it is?
Mr. Cravens: Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: I will point out to the Jury that at this point the witness, Van H. Savell, put an X at this point right here (indicating).

Mr. Andress: What is that point?

Mr. Watts: That X is the point where he first saw [fol. 1076] Walker.

Mr. Andress: Where is it located, please?

Mr. Watts: Located slightly westward of the monument.

Q. Now, at this point, let's put an X with a 2 after it, where you are. We will put this on Exhibit 7-A, put where Walker was with a W, with a ring around it.

All right. Was anyone with Walker?

A. I didn't recognize anyone with him. There were students and people beside him, mostly young people.

Q. How many?

A. About twenty-five or twenty, in the general area here, back like this (indicating).

Q. Did they appear to be walking with him, or standing, or moving at a definite pace?

A. They appeared to be walking with him. They were hollering "Here is General Walker," and so forth.

Q. Now, how was he dressed?

A. He had on a black suit, black shoes and a white tie, white shirt, I mean a black tie, and a white or light beige Texas hat.

Q. What did you see him do?

A. Walk up to this area, and just sort of stood around looking.

[fol. 1077] I was just to the north of—

Q. Roughly, then, you were due east of the monument?

A. Due east, yes, I was.

Q. I'm going to move this line here, which represents the south side of the University Avenue, for the reason that the monument, as I remember it, is just about in the center.

A. You will have to move me over a little bit then.

Q. All right.

A. I was standing right next to the curb, street, right over the curb, and I was standing right next to this curb.

• • •

Mr. Watts: Drop down to line 17.

Q. We will call this X-2, to distinguish it from the other position you occupied. Walker then was roughly in the center of the street approaching the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The monument is roughly square, isn't it, or rectangular?

A. The base is square.

Q. I have drawn here a square which represents the monument, and you say Walker passed to your right as you [fol. 1078] faced west?

A. He more or less stopped on my right, and I moved toward him.

Q. How far from you was he?

A. When he stopped, he was, oh, eight or ten or fifteen feet, ten or fifteen feet from me.

Q. Did you say anything to him?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did he say anything to you?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did you hear him say anything to anyone?

A. At that time, no, sir.

Q. What occurred then?

A. He stood there looking around and I moved closer, I was probably within five or six feet of him, and this same person with the Confederate flag and multi-colored shirt, mostly red, said "General, will you lead us to the steps," and Mr. Walker made no comment, he sort of scratched his head (indicating), or rubbed his head a little, like this (indicating), and moved his—his head went back a little, and he lowered his head, in my opinion he looked like somebody who might be thinking, and he was like that for several seconds, about forty or fifty seconds, just didn't say anything, was very quiet, in fact the students got restless behind and began to chant "Come on, let's go. There is [fol. 1079] General Walker, he is our moral support, let's go." And Mr. Walker raised his head and looked this fellow squarely in the face, and nodded his head. Up to this time Walker had said nothing. I hadn't heard him say a word.

Q. Go ahead.

A. About this time they appeared to—well, Mr. Walker took a couple of steps forward, and this boy was over to his left, and some of the group, sort of moved up behind, there was quite a large group behind, and they took several steps.

Q. At this time was there any personnel west of the monument?

A. West of the monument, I didn't see anyone. There might have been one or twenty, but I didn't see them.

Q. Had all the crowd then moved back into the street east of the monument?

A. Yes, that's my—.

Q. Any people at all north of the Circle or northwest of the Circle?

A. In that direction, I couldn't tell.

Q. How far could you see in that direction?

A. I couldn't see very far. There were no lights.

Q. How far could you see toward the Lyceum?

A. I could see the Lyceum Building.

[fol. 1080] Q. Could you still see people in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Outlines of people, yes.

Mr. Watts: This is line 3, page 144.

Q. You moved then about half the width of the street to the north then?

A. Yes. I was about the center, where General Walker was.

Q. Where was Walker from you?

A. Oh, four to six feet from me, just to the north of me.

Q. All right. Were there any people between him and the monument at that time?

A. This one fellow who made the comment to him.

Q. Were Walker then and this fellow alone out there, ahead of the main crowd?

A. Repeat that.

Q. Were Walker and this one fellow now alone and to the west of this main crowd?

A. No.

Q. Describe the location then.

A. The fellow was out alone, up ahead of the crowd, but the crowd had closed around Walker on all sides, except the [fol. 1081] one where this fellow was, and this fellow was standing about three or four feet away.

Q. From Walker?

A. West of Walker, he was.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And as I said, they took several steps forward, and then a portly, neatly dressed fellow of about forty-five walked up.

Q. Did he say anything?

A. He walked up to Mr. Walker and introduced himself.

Q. Could you remember what he said?

A. I didn't understand his name, no, sir.

Q. Did they shake hands?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. All right.

A. And this fellow, I noticed had on a deputy sheriff's badge. They talked for a moment, and then this boy sort of made a motion, and several people got around, and there was quite a hubbub in there, but I couldn't tell what was going on. I was still four or six feet away, and everybody talking at once there. This was only for several minutes.

[fol. 1082] Q. The portly gentleman with the sheriff's badge seemed to be involved in the charging?

A. In the charge, well, I hadn't seen him before.

Q. You had not seen him prior. Go ahead.

A. As I said, they were talking quite low, and then everyone was talking at the same time, and I just sort of kept an eye on him, and I didn't hear Walker say anything. I just keep watching his mouth, and I didn't see him say anything, and then they sort of opened up.

Q. Did he have his hat still on the back of his head, or did he put it back?

A. He did actually push it back, to the back of his head, but then sort of moved it when—

Mr. Cravens: Just a minute. "He did not. . . ."

Mr. Watts: "Did he have his hat still on the back of his head or did he put it back?"

Mr. Cravens: "He did not. . . ." Should be a "not" in there, he did not.

Mr. Watts: Go ahead then. Put a "not" in there.

A. He did not actually push it back, to the back of his head, but then sort of moved it when—

Q. In other words, he rubbed his brow?

A. Yes. He didn't put it on like a cowboy would.

Q. All right.

A. The group backed up or away from the front of Mr. [fol. 1083] Walker, and this boy took his right hand and grabbed hold of the general's left arm, and another person on the other side did the same thing.

Q. Was that the deputy sheriff or someone else?

A. I'm not certain whether it was or was not. I really don't know.

Q. All right.

A. But anyway, they started walking.

Q. Which direction?

A. At that time they were walking due west and they walked around the monument.

Q. Which direction?

A. To the north of the monument, and then they walked straight toward the Lyceum Building for 10 or 15 yards.

Q. Was that on the sidewalk or on the grass?

A. They were on the grass.

Q. North or south of the walk?

A. North of the walk.

Q. At what rate of speed were they walking?

A. Normal pace.

Q. Did Walker have any rocks or weapons or any missiles?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then what happened?

A. After Walker went ten or fifteen yards, they sort of veered to the right.

[fol. 1084] Q. That would be to the north?

A. Yes, sir. They were walking to more of a northwesterly direction.

Q. All right. Where were you at this time?

A. I was just to the right of Walker.

Q. Following them?

A. Almost abreast of him.

Q. From the time you saw Walker come up to this point, had you seen anyone else you knew?

A. No.

Q. Any other newsman?

A. No.

Q. Had you up to that time seen the UPI newsman Kettner anywhere?

A. No.

Q. Continue.

A. We walked for about ten or fifteen yards, and as I say, they were—then veered to the right and walked in a circular manner, more or less bordering on the Circle.

Q. How close to the curb of the Circle?

A. About 25 yards from the circle—

Mr. Gooch: Feet.

Mr. Watts: Feet?

Mr. Cravens: That's been changed from "yards," to "feet".

[fol. 1085] Mr. Andress: Mine isn't. Go ahead.

Mr. Watts: That should be about 25 feet.

A. About 25 feet from the circle but walked around until they were almost even with the flagpole.

Q. All right.

A. And then sort of veered back toward the center of the circle.

Q. Did they walk straight or—

A. They came, just went toward the sidewalk.

Q. Due south?

A. No, not due south, just more or less going southwest or south-southwest.

But they went toward the sidewalk, didn't reach it, and then turned directly toward the marshals, and at this time Walker and the two fellows that had hold of his arms were between the sidewalk or almost even with the sidewalk and street.

Q. And by that you mean the east-west sidewalk from the flagpole to the monument? Well, I will draw a line from the flagpole to the monument, which will represent the sidewalk. Now, where were they at this point?

A. Right in here.

Q. Would you put a W and circle it? All right. And we will put a 2 to the side of it.

Mr. Watts: And may we agree that the W with the 2 [fol. 1086] around it that the witness put is along in this area here (indicating)?

Mr. Gooch: In that area.

Mr. Watts: In the northwest quadrant?

Mr. Andress: And about the center of it.

Q. Would you say that was a third of the distance from the flagpole to the Lyceum Building?

A. No.

Q. Would you say the distance would be a fourth?

A. I doubt if it was that far. They were still about forty or fifty yards away from the Lyceum Building.

Q. Then what happened?

A. They walked in this direction, like this (indicating). They walked toward the Lyceum building in a westerly direction.

Q. Now did this young man who took hold of Walker's arm take a position just east of the monument, or not releasing his arm until he reached the position of W-2?

A. He didn't release his arm.

Q. What about the man on the left, was he holding onto Walker's arm, too?

A. Yes.

Q. And the three of them went along there, as you have described?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1087] Q. Were they in step?

A. I didn't notice if they were in step.

Q. Was anything said by anybody?

A. Mr. Walker walked straight ahead, with his head straight. I didn't see him look to either side, I didn't hear him say a word. As far as I know, he had not said anything.

Q. He said nothing that you heard?

A. Nothing.

Q. Go ahead.

A. They walked about 10 or 15 yards in this direction, in a westerly direction.

Q. At that time had there been any tear gas fired?

A. No.

Q. From the time you saw Walker start from the monument area to this point?

A. I didn't see any.

Q. You saw them walk 10 or 15 yards toward the Lyceum?

A. Yes.

Q. And then what happened?

A. Then when they were about 70 or 75 yards from the Lyceum Building, then this tremendous group that was behind them—

Q. Was this group bigger than the group the whole day?

A. Bigger group, that I saw.

[fol. 1088] Q. All right.

A. They threw all of their rocks, small bricks or broken bricks and glass and stakes, and so forth.

Q. Where was Walker and these two other men at the time these bricks and things were thrown?

A. At the very front of the group.

Q. How far was it from them to the nearest man to their rear or east?

A. Behind them, about two or three or four feet.

Q. Walker and the two men were out in front of the distance you mentioned?

A. By that distance, yes.

Q. Then what happened?

A. They threw all of their things, as I said, and turned, and the tear gas hit in the middle or else in behind us, and it was quite heavy.

Q. Before or after the rocks were thrown?

A. After the rocks were thrown.

Q. All right.

A. And I watched as both these fellows let loose of Mr. Walker and turned. Mr. Walker turned and sort of ducked down, like this (indicating), and took off running, and so did the other two fellows, and so did I, and so did everybody else.

Q. Which way was Walker running?

[fol. 1089] A. Directly to the east.

Q. That would be how far north of the sidewalk connecting the monument and flagpole?

A. About 125 yards.

Q. About 125 yards?

A. About a hundred and twenty-five yards from the monument to where he turned when he started running.

Q. No, I believe you misunderstood my question. You say he ran directly east. Now, how far was the line that he was following as he ran north of the sidewalk between the monument and the flagpole?

A. I didn't have time to estimate it, because I was running, too.

Q. Would you say half the distance to the street and circle, or a third?

A. I don't know.

Q. Would you say five yards or ten yards?

A. I couldn't say. I didn't see the sidewalk.

Q. Where were you with respect to Walker?

A. When he turned to run, I turned with him. I had a towel with me so the tear gas was not as bad for me.

Q. Did he out-run you or you out-run him?

A. He ran several steps and I ran, and I didn't see him again for about 10 or 15 seconds.

Q. When he started to run, what direction was he from [fol. 1090] you, east or west?

A. He was to the east, or west of me. No, he wasn't either.

Q. Where was he?

A. He was to the south of me.

Q. You were directly on his right then?

A. Directly on his right, yes.

Q. Were you on ahead of the crowd, then?

A. I was at the time he turned, yes.

Q. Did you ever see Walker throw a rock?

A. No, sir.

Q. You still didn't see any other newsmen involved in this incident, that you knew?

A. No.

Q. Did you see anyone you knew during this or during the last few minutes that you described?

A. No.

Q. Did Walker leave you as he started to run, or did you keep up with him?

A. I didn't see him after he ran three or four steps, until I was back down at the monument.

Q. What happened then?

A. I heard him make some remark about "Well, we'll get together and charge again," some comment or something about students, and "We will charge again, the group will [fol. 1091] charge again." I don't remember what the exact words were.

Q. Now this was down at the monument?

A. He was still running, or he wasn't running at this time, more or less walking fast or trotting, but out of breath, appeared to be, and I was out of breath, and he didn't make any comment to anyone in particular, just made the comment.

Q. Was anyone with him at all other than these two individuals concerned?

A. They were not with him. They let loose of his arm.

Q. You mentioned some individual who introduced you to Walker at the motel. Did you see him from the time Walker arrived until after the incident you described here?

A. I haven't seen him since the time at the motel.

Q. Would you say that he was not with Walker as Walker came on the campus?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Now where is this last location you are talking about, when Walker said, "We will charge again"?

A. We were in the general area of the monument, more or less to the northwest, about in here (indicating).

Mr. Watts: May we agree that that is a point apparently about, oh, I would say ten yards northwest of the monument?

Mr. Gooch: Yes.

[fol. 1092] Mr. Andress: I think it is northwest, yes.

Q. Put a 3 in there.

A. All right.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. As soon as he made the comment, I turned and ran to a phone.

Q. What direction did you follow?

A. A different one from any I had taken before. I ran directly north or a little to the northwest of the monument, and I ran between the YMCA and what I think is the Fine Arts Building, and I ran near the girls' dormitories, into the valley back there.

Q. North of the Fine Arts Building?

A. Yes, ran by Meek Hall, which is down the valley, and the tear gas was quite heavy down there, but I made it back up to the dormitory, which I pointed out earlier.

Q. And you made that, and did you make a telephone report there?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now this then would have been the fourth charge you witnessed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you make that report?

A. I really don't know.

Q. What was the time of that report?

[fol. 1093] A. Somewhere around 9:00 o'clock, I wouldn't know.

Q. What was the time you saw Walker arrive on the campus?

A. I would estimate it about 8:45.

Q. What period of time would you say it was between the time of 8:45 when he arrived and the time that he reached the furthest westward penetration toward the Marshals?

A. Well, at that time my idea was not to estimate time, but rather to keep my eye on him and see what was going on. I didn't pay any attention to the time whatsoever. It couldn't have been more than 15 minutes.

Q. Have you since talked to anybody anywhere at any time who purports to have seen the same thing you did?

A. No, sir, I have not.

Q. Have you made an effort to do so?

A. No.

Q. Have you been instructed by anyone connected with the Associated Press to endeavor to find some other person who also saw the same thing you reported?

A. No, sir.

Q. What was the text of the report you made on this occasion to the New Orleans office?

A. I said that General Walker had appeared on the campus, and I described, as I have to you, the chronological order in which he arrived, and the things that occurred, [fol. 1094] and then I described the fact that a wave of people, numbering in my estimation about 1,000, had made a charge or assault, I don't know what word I used, but they approached the Lyceum Building and got to within an estimated 75 yards, and that General Walker was in the forefront of this group, with these two other persons holding his arms, but Walker was a half step behind—

Mr. Gooch: Ahead.

Mr. Watts: That's been changed from "behind," to "ahead".

Mr. Andress: A little difference.

A. But Walker was a half step ahead and that rocks and bricks and stakes and glass bottles had been hurled toward the marshals, that we were repulsed by a barrage of tear gas, that General Walker had turned and run back toward the monument, and that then I turned and that he had made that comment about the fact that the students or the group would regroup and charge again.

Q. That is not exactly what you told us a moment ago.

A. I don't remember, because I never wrote that comment down. I was running, I didn't have time, with a big news story right there, to write any comment down, and I never gave a fact quote on that remark at any time. I said that he had said that the students or the people would regroup, and I don't at this moment remember the exact [fol. 1095] words that he used. I know he used the word "students".

Q. He said the students would regroup and charge again, is that your language now, that you think he used?

A. I don't know, but he said the students would regroup, and he used his own self in the same phrase. He gave me the impression that he said that he and the group would regroup and charge again, or the students would regroup and charge again, and used himself in the same type of sentence.

Q. What distance did you cover from the monument to the Perkins room to make that report?

A. More than an eighth of a mile, probably less than a quarter of a mile.

Q. What floor was Perkins's room on?

A. The second floor.

Q. You went up a flight of stairs?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you out of breath when you got there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the line open?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was someone waiting at the other end?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. No, sir, I do not.

[fol. 1096] Q. Did you ask them—

A. I knew at the time who it was, I could tell by the voice, but I don't remember.

Q. Could you fix that time?

A. Sometime around 9:00 o'clock, to the best of my knowledge, depending. I estimate there was probably a 15 minute lapse between the time I saw Walker and the time I got on the phone, so it was about 9:00 o'clock.

Q. Did you hear any part of the President's speech?

A. No.

Q. Do you know he had made a speech?

A. I knew he had planned to.

Q. When did you first learn that he had made one?

A. The next afternoon I was told he had made a speech.

Q. All right. You made that report. Now what did you do then?

A. I made the report and went back to the area.

Q. How long did it take you to make that report?

A. About three or four minutes, something in that area, I don't know.

Q. Now by my figures here, from following your testimony, that is the eighth phone call you made, that the fifth call you made from Perkins's room. What did you see when you came back to the area?

A. As I got to the area, I saw Mr. Walker standing on a [fol. 1097] ledge of the Confederate statue.

Q. What was he doing?

A. He was talking.

Q. Had you at any time prior to this seen a young preacher, Mr. Duncan Gray?

A. Many times I had seen him, yes.

Q. Had you seen him that evening on the campus?

A. No.

Q. Did you see him at all that evening on the campus?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then when you returned, Walker was on the base of the Confederate statue?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he alone?

A. There were students around.

Q. Was there anyone else up on the statue with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Could you hear anything he was saying?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?

A. As I saw him, I heard the word "Cuba," I heard him say "Cuba," and I continued running to the area, and he sort of lapsed for a moment, or a few seconds, didn't say anything.

Q. Wait a minute. From what direction were you approaching?

[fol. 1098] A. I was approaching from the northwest, or northeast, more northwest.

Mr. Gooch: That's been changed to "north".

Mr. Watts: —"more north"?

Mr. Gooch: "I was approaching from the northwest, or northeast, more north."

Mr. Watts: As a matter of information, who made these changes?

Mr. Gooch: Savell.

Mr. Cravens: The witness.

Mr. Gooch: Wasn't me because I wasn't there.

Q. What was the size of the group of people around him at that time?

A. Several hundred.

Q. How did it compare with the group that participated in the alleged charge that you have described, which was the fourth charge?

A. The people in the area of Walker were smaller, but there were more than that, a thousand people within a hundred fifty or two hundred yards of him.

Q. As you came back, where were you from this north curb of the oval, as you came eastward?

A. As I came eastward from the north curb, I was running on the grass, six or seven or ten yards from the curb.

Q. Where did you enter the oval?

[fol. 1099] A. At the street, where the YMCA is, the building here, that's the Fine Arts Building.

Q. Had you again come from behind the Fine Arts Building?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. And you entered somewhere roughly near the place that we have marked X-1?

A. Yes.

Q. As you approached on the scene, you heard Walker say something about Cuba?

A. I heard the word "Cuba".

Q. Did he have his hat on at that time?

A. I guess he did, yes, sir.

Q. What next did you hear him say?

A. I heard him say something about somebody, he made the comment about somebody had betrayed Mississippi.

Q. Somebody had betrayed—

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember who he said?

A. He didn't say who, he said, "Somebody has betrayed you!"

Q. In other words, he used the words "Somebody has betrayed you"?

A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead.

[fol. 1100] A. And immediately there were comments, "Who, who?" And he didn't at first make a comment, just "Governor Barnett".

Q. What comment?

A. He just said "Governor Barnett", but it was his voice, I was within ten feet of him at this time.

Q. Which direction were you from the statue?

A. To the northeast, in the road just off the curb.

Q. Where was he from the statue?

A. On the north side of the statue.

Q. Facing to the north?

A. No, facing to the east.

Q. But he was standing at the north side of the statue?

A. Yes.

Q. The statue then was on this right?

A. Yes, more or less.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And he stood there, he made this comment, almost inaudible, it was inaudible to most people, about Governor Barnett.

Q. What period of time—

A. He made this comment about Governor Barnett, in a low voice, and I heard it, and then he stopped and leaned over and talked to a fellow, I don't know who the fellow was, and there was a period of time when he was talking to this fellow, and leaning on this fellow's shoulder, and [fol. 1101] then he reared back up and said "Birdsong, Birdsong has betrayed you."

Q. Is that all?

A. No, that is not all. Then he made a comment about "We can win," or "You can win." If you don't think you can win, go home, leave the university. But we can win." Then he made a comment about "Keep protesting. You may not win, but you will be heard." And he said "This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now." When he made that comment, I immediately turned and left and ran for the phone.

Excerpts From Morin Deposition

Mr. Watts: All right. Now, if you will, return to the Morin deposition, Page 43, Line 15.

Q. Now let's get identified a little further. That was LeBreton Savell and—

A. The fourth person I just don't know. He might even have been a photographer. My memory of it is that the car was filled but I can't tell you who the fourth person was.

Q. All right, sir.

A. So during that ride there, they would tell me something and I would ask a question, and so on, and then when we got up to the campus, I don't think we drove on. I think we stayed, parked outside the gates and walked on up there, all the way to the Lyceum Building, the monument.

[fol. 1102] I tried to ascertain, for example, how far forward the students had gone that night in relation to the Marshals and, of course, in the dark I don't think that they were able to tell me with any exactness but we paced it off as well as we could and that was about the size of it.

Then we drove back from there. That took, I would think, a half to three quarters of an hour and we drove back from there to a lunch counter sort of on the outskirts of town.

We came to it before we actually got into town and we stopped there for breakfast.

Then I dictated that story that Little Rock was a skirmish, I believe it begins, and then we went out into the town again, into the streets, up to the square, saw—

Q. I wish you would outline to us everything that Savell told you from the time you first arrived until the time you are speaking of now, after you left the campus?

A. Well, I don't know that I can do that.

Q. Only with regard to Walker; I mean I would emphasize with regard to Walker.

A. Well, the first thing that I asked about was those two people who were killed, the circumstances of their deaths. That was the thing that—in fact, I remember saying, "Well, I have been told that there were three," and they said, "No, there were only two," or "there were two," or something [fol. 1103] like that.

And then to find out how many, if they knew, persons had been injured either with gunfire or flying objects. And that was the first part of it.

The next part was when we got to the scene and had to find out—oh, I, also, asked them if they could estimate, realizing it was dark and there was a good deal of confusion, how many students or other persons were involved.

And, of course, they weren't able to be very specific about that.

And I asked, as usual, "Were there many outsiders, out-of-towners here, adults," and so, "that you were able to recognize?"

And they said they saw a few and I believe that the first time that General Walker's name came into the conversation was at the monument when one of them—and I don't remember whether it was LeBreton or Savell—said, "General Walker stationed himself here last night and then the students," he said, "recognized him," and I think he said that, or Savell, rather said, "a cheer went up," or maybe it was LeBreton, I'm not sure, "a cheer went up," or something, that "the students rallied around him," or something like that, and that, "He then led them towards the Marshals."

I believe that was the substance of the conversation.

[fol. 1104] But the first thing I was concerned with, as I say, was the deaths and injuries because I thought, judging from what that woman had told me in Memphis, it was a good deal more severe—well, it was bad enough but....

[fol. 1105] Q. Now, then, Mr. Morin, under date of October 1, 1962, and under your by-line, there was an article written about Walker, is that right?

A. Yes, sir—well, not about Walker.

Q. Sir?

A. It was not only about General Walker.

Q. Well, the article included comments about Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. And I notice the Dallas paper there has headlined it as emphasizing Walker.

A. Yes, but that's the Dallas Times Herald.

Q. Yes.

A. That's not the substance of the story.

Q. I understand. You are not responsible for the headline that the local paper puts on it?

A. No.

Q. But the article does contain comments on Walker?

A. That's right. It doesn't—I wouldn't use the word "comments". It contains what our people down there, including the photographers, who were all over the place, told me was his part in the action; in other words, that's a report of what General Walker did. But "commenting" is the wrong word.

[fol. 1106] Q. Well, do you mean that photographers told you that Walker had led a charge?

A. I don't say the photographers told me this. I don't—in other words, you have got a lot of people talking there.

Q. Yes.

A. But out of the concensus of what they said was that the General had been there the night before and that he had played a role in the events of the night.

Q. Now reading down to the third paragraph, there are two paragraphs here, or three that we are interested in primarily, "Walker whipped up the students and others on the campus of the University of Mississippi Sunday night when it became known there Meredith, Negro, was on the campus."

A. Uh-huh.

Q. That was your concept of the general information that you had received from your AP personnel?

A. That's right, they told me, I mean the statements that they attributed to General Walker and his actions.

Q. Yes. So are we in agreement then that the entire source of facts upon which this article was based came from your conversations with the AP newsmen that you encountered after you arrived at Oxford?

A. No, they were not the only source. There were other [fol. 1107] newspapermen there from other newspapers who had been on the campus the night before.

Q. Did any other newspapermen other than Savell or someone else connected with the AP tell you that Walker had led a charge?

A. I don't know that they actually used that term but they described the action.

Mr. Watts: Skipping to the question on line 22, page 49.

Q. Yes. "However, at the time he was the crisp and professional soldier who gave no signs of his feeling. He set up his command post at the corner of Central School. The contrast is most marked by the size of the operations here. In Little Rock, it was largely quiet. If you were three or four blocks from the school. In Oxford, there is little quiet anywhere. On the contrary, there is a brooding sense of disaster. Several days ago, Walker said he planned to lead 'tens of thousands' of volunteers to aid the cause of Governor Barnett but his only troops Sunday night were a band of students and other persons whom he led in a charge on the position of the Federal marshals."

Now, you have in your article there and news release to the world made the statement that "Walker led a charge [fol. 1108] on the position of Federal marshals." Now, I wish you would tell us, to the best of your capability of memory, all sources of information that you had that Walker had led a charge on the position of the Federal marshals.

A. Well, I have tried to—as I say, these were reporters, they were photographers, they were men from other individual newspapers and what-not to whom I talked that morning.

Q. All, of course, was hearsay from other people and you personally hadn't observed it?

A. No, of course I didn't get there until long after the events were over.

Q. Could you give us a distinct recollection of any single individual that told you that Walker had actually led a charge?

A. No, no.

Q. You do have a recollection you went out to the campus in the automobile with LeBreton, Savell and one other individual, that someone pointed to the monument—

A. Well, we walked to the monument.

Q. Oh, you got out and walked?

A. As I told you, we parked outside the gates and we walked over that area.

Q. Now reconstructing and reliving that incident, to the very ultimate of your present capability of memory, I wish [fol. 1109] you would park your car and get out and go back over it and tell us just exactly what happened and what you saw and who said what to whom.

A. All right. First of all, I asked where the two people were killed. Nobody seemed to know that. And it later developed that the French correspondent—at least I believe—whether he was killed there or not but the French correspondent's body was found some distance from there. But in any case, we weren't able to establish that.

The next thing was to go and look at the debris, burned out cars and things of that nature around the side. And they showed me, my memory of it is, there was a bulldozer or some sort of—a piece of equipment, in any case, that had had been used but I believe had jammed or the motor quit or stopped against a tree, or something of that nature, so they showed me where that had come from, toward the lines of marshals.

I can't tell you exactly when we went to the monument. As I say, we were simply walking around the whole area, from the steps there of the Lyceum, on out to the gate, this having been the scene of the action the night before and that's about the best I can tell you about it.

[fol. 1110] Mr. Watts: Now, on page 54, line 7.

Q. And from your talking with these people—and as I understand, the only one you can specifically remember telling you about the charge is Savell?

A. That's the only one I can specifically remember.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 9:00 o'clock Monday morning. The Courthouse is closed tomorrow. They will not keep it open just for one Court, and the air conditioner on on the whole building just for one room.

Please bear in mind my instructions not to discuss this case with anyone, or permit it to be discussed in your presence. Have a pleasant week-end.

(Thereupon, at 5:00 o'clock, p. m., an adjournment was taken until Monday morning, at 9:00 o'clock, June 15, 1964.)

9:00 o'clock a. m.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, at this time I would like to read to the Jury the Plaintiff's Exhibit 13, which is an Associated Press release, and in lieu of digging it out of this stack of official wire service releases, I am going to read the same release from the Evening Star which was offered by the Defendant as the Defendant's Exhibit 2.

The Court: All right. But, you are offering Plaintiff's 13 out of the original group?

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

This, Ladies and Gentlemen of the Jury, is an Associated Press release by the witness Relman Morin, whose deposition we have read, and I know it's kind of hard to keep up with these depositions, but we read his deposition the last thing last Friday.

I will read to the Jury this news release by the Associated Press.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT 13

"By Relman Morin, Associated Press Staff Writer.

"Oxford, Mississippi, October 1:—

"Little Rock was a skirmish. Oxford is a war.

"The riots just five years ago in the capital of Arkansas were ugly and dangerous. In Oxford, the ugliness and [fol. 1114] danger, is magnified to a gigantic scale.

"And one of the ironies of the situation here today is that former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, who commanded the Federal troops that took over Little Rock, is on the opposite side of the fence here.

"Mr. Walker whipped up the students and others on the campus of the University of Mississippi last night, when it became known that James H. Meredith, was on the campus.

"After the Little Rock riots, Mr. Walker said that he found his duty there distasteful.

"However, at the time, he was the crisp and professional soldier who gave no sign of his feelings. He set up his command post at the corner of Central High School—the object of the riots.

"Contrasts in Size

"The contrast is most marked by the size of the operations here. In Little Rock, it was largely quiet three or four blocks from the school. In Oxford today, there is little quiet anywhere. On the contrary, there is a brooding sense of disaster.

"Several days ago Mr. Walker said he planned to lead 'tens of thousands' of volunteers to aid the cause of Gov. Ross Barnett.

"But his only troops last night were a band of students [fol. 1115] and other persons whom he led in a charge on the position of the Federal marshals.

"They got within 100 feet but the tear gas fumes repelled them.

"Gives Advice

"Later, Mr. Walker was giving demonstrators advice on how to counteract the acrid tear gas fumes.

"Mr. Walker, appeared on the Oxford town square during the disturbance here today.

"Mr. Walker marched ahead of a file of soldiers as though he were their inspecting officer.

"Finally, an Army officer asked him to move. He refused. The officer ordered several soldiers carrying rifles with bayonets alongside him.

"The soldiers held their bayonets within inches of the former general, but did not touch him. The officer said something to Mr. Walker and he walked off through the crowd."

Mr. Watts: Now, if Your Honor please, we will offer part of the deposition of Mr. Alan Gould, the Executive Editor and, unfortunately, we do not seem to have the other deposition. I will, I believe, just go ahead and put on a witness rather than doing that.

Mr. Charles May.

Mr. Gooch: Wait, if the Court please. Before he puts [fol. 1116] on this next witness, he was reading from the Van Savell and the Morin deposition. I believe I have a right—

Mr. Andress: He's got a right to cross-examine.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Watts: Did you want to offer some of that cross examination?

Mr. Gooch: Yes.

The Court: Hold up, Mr. May. You will have to wait back outside, Mr. May.

Mr. Andress: Do you want to read it, Tiny, or do you want me to. . . .

Mr. Gooch: I'll read it.

At the close of the day on Friday, Mr. Watts was reading from the deposition of Van Savell and Relman Morin, which was a deposition taken by Mr. Watts in this case and I would like to read excerpts from that deposition.

I refer you to page 7, line 5.

Q. Did you receive any course of training for the increase in efficiency of your duties while you were in New Orleans?

A. The normal inside office training, yes. I was under observation of others and I was kept under 'wraps' for a [fol. 1117] certain amount of time, until I felt I could take anything by myself without any help.

Q. Under whom were you mainly working?

A. Ken L. Davis. He was the Chief of the Bureau, of the superior, yes.

Q. How many employees were in that office?

A. I don't know exactly.

Q. Just roughly?

A. About seven or eight or nine newsmen.

Q. Did Kenneth Davis then give you any type of instruction that would better qualify you for performing your duties?

A. My copy was checked, edited, and I was attentioned as to the editing that was done, to show the things I could correct.

Q. Did they give you any Associated Press training manuals or directives, any written material at all?

A. Certainly, I was given copies of how the Associated Press was organized, and so forth, and copies of so-called fringe benefits that were available to me, hospitalization, pensions, insurance, and so forth, and that's about it.

Q. Mr. Savell, were you given any directives from the Associated Press as to editorial policy and as to procedure of their news-gathering personnel?

A. I was told that we report only facts. There is no [fol. 1118] editoralizing in the AP. I was explained to as to how the AP works, and I was told the reporter's opinion is nothing, I must forget the reporter's opinion.

Q. Were you given any briefing as to slanting of the news?

A. I was told there was no such thing, strict facts and nothing else.

Mr. Gooch: Page 22.

Mr. Watts: Just a moment, Tiny. If Your Honor please, I intend to offer this other stuff he left out. Would it be more convenient if I just asked Mr. Gooch the questions and let him give the answer?

The Court: I believe it would be better to let Mr. Gooch offer what he wants to offer.

Mr. Watts: Whatever he wants to do. I thought it would just save a little time.

Mr. Gooch: Page 22, line 25.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. When did you go to Oxford?

A. I believe it was in September, September 15th, on a Sunday in 1962.

Q. What caused you to go there?

A. I was assigned to go to Oxford because of the possibility that James Meredith would appear on the campus to register.

[fol. 1119] Q. Was the assignment oral or written?

A. Oral.

Q. By whom?

A. I think it was officially given to me by Mr. Sigus, but I know it was coming sometime beforehand.

Q. How did you know?

A. Mr. Davis had told me that I would be the newsman to go up there.

Q. When and where did that conversation occur?

A. I don't remember, in Jackson, on one of his visits to Jackson.

Q. Relate to us what he said, and what you said.

A. I don't remember.

Q. You have no recollection at all?

A. No, sir. It was just one of these conversations where —you drink coffee and talk about different things, and he just said, "By the way, you are going to Oxford," and that's it.

Q. What was your personal attitude toward the integration problem that existed in Mississippi?

A. My only attitude was that I had to report what was going on.

Mr. Gooch: Please turn to page 44, line 10, for continuity.

[fol. 1120] Q. Tell us what happened on the 15th? Anything else significant on the 15th?

A. Not to my knowledge, no, sir.

Q. What day of the week was it?

A. I feel certain it was on a Sunday. Well, it was a Sunday that I went, but it may not have been the 15th but the 14th or 16th.

Q. Anything significant the remainder of that week?

A. On Thursday, I believe, James Meredith made his first attempt to enroll at the University, if I am not mistaken. I believe it was a Thursday.

Q. Did you cover that?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

[fol. 1121] Q. Was that attempt unsuccessful?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Did you report it to your employers?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And the substance of that report?

A. The substance of the report was that James Meredith arrived at the University with Federal Marshals, including James McShane, and a Federal attorney by the name of—well, I can't think of it right now. I know him but—one of the civil rights attorneys in the Justice Department. They went to a building called the Alumni House or Alumni Extension Center, and I don't remember at this moment whether Governor Ross Barnett arrived before or after, but either he was there or he arrived shortly thereafter. None of the newsmen were allowed inside the building, no newsman was allowed within, well, a certain distance. The Highway Patrol had the streets blocked off so the people had to stand across the street from the building.

There was a large group of students there and I reported this. There were some jeers and cat-calls, and I reported this. Shortly thereafter, 15 or 20 minutes, Meredith came out with some people, the Marshal and Attorney, and they all got in a car and they drove off. When they drove all the student group, which was quite large, ran in the direction that they drove as they left from, or the direction [fol. 1122] from which they came, because they ran, and I ran in that direction, too, and keeping an eye on things. They got away okay, and I reported this. When I returned Governor Barnett was coming out, and Claude Powell was with me, and the Governor started to get in his car, and before he did, he reached out with his fingers, like that (indicating) and said the Winston Churchill style of the, and Claude Powell took a pretty good picture of that, and I reported this. After that everything was pretty quiet that day, and I think the rest of the week. Mainly, or for the most part, the whole business was to sit around and wait.

Q. To whom did you report?

A. I reported to New Orleans.

Q. By phone?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you make any written reports at all?
A. No, I didn't.

Mr. Gooch: Page 47, Line 13.

Q. What of any significance happened the following week?

A. I believe on a Thursday—let's see—well the next week we were—we were preparing for Meredith to come again to the University on Tuesday.

Q. How were you preparing for it?

[fol. 1123] A. Setting up the positions where we would be, because we didn't expect him to go to the same place again.

Q. And who is "we"?

A. The other newsmen and myself. We heard rumors that the Marshals would be there in much greater number, and we figured that they would try to go straight to the Administration Building, so we prepared on several fronts, and also the airport, to keep an eye on the plane he might have come in on, and the whole thing switched to Jackson.

On Wednesday it did occur in Oxford. Meredith came and was blocked this time by the Lt. Governor, and this occurred right at the edge of the university property, some 200 or 300 yards east of the Alumni Building, down the University Drive, University Avenue.

Mr. Gooch: Page 53, Line 7.

Q. Now did anything else significant or news worthy occur between the previous incident that you have outlined, on September 30th?

A. Well, yes, one news item on Saturday afternoon late, we received a report that Federal Marshals or troops, one or the other, were moving in. It proved to be false.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 12, on Page 53.
Page 56, Line 24.

[fol. 1124] Q. When was it you first knew that General Walker was coming?

A. I didn't know he was coming until he was there.

Q. Until he actually arrived in Oxford?

A. Until I saw him, I didn't know for a fact that he was coming.

Q. When did you first see him?

A. In the courtyard of the Ole Miss Hotel.

Q. When?

A. About 4:00 o'clock, or 5:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon, September 30th.

Q. What was he doing there?

A. He was preparing to have a press conference, sir.

Q. Did you see this press conference?

A. From a distance, yes.

Q. Had you ever seen General Walker before?

A. Yes.

Q. Where?

A. Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. When?

A. I believe it was in the winter or early spring of 1962, when he was there for a speech. I don't remember the exact time, or don't remember when it was, but it might have been after January 1, 1962, because I wasn't in Jackson before that time.

[fol. 1125] Q. Did you see him at that time?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where?

A. At the Municipal Auditorium, where he spoke.

Q. Did you hear his speech?

A. No, I did not.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 25, on Page 57. Now Page 59, Line 6.

Q. Did you at any time prior to the 15th of September know Walker's background?

A. All I knew was that he had been the general leader of the troops in Little Rock, and I knew that he had resigned from the Army, or—I don't know how it went—but I knew he was not in the Army any longer, and I knew he was in Texas, or thought he was in Texas, and I knew that he was making some speeches across the country.

Q. Did you have any concept at all the reason for his resignation?

A. No, I don't know whether I knew about him or not. I really don't know what they were, but I heard, but I haven't read anything.

Q. Did you talk with Barsch about Walker, after he had appeared, that he was coming to Oxford?

A. Barsch—well, no, not to my knowledge. In fact, no, [fol. 1126] no, I didn't.

Q. Had Barsch known Walker?

A. I don't know.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 24, Page 59.

Page 65, Line 9.

Q. When was Meredith brought onto the campus?

A. To fix the time, I don't know.

Q. When was it you first heard that he was coming on the campus?

A. I heard he was on the campus some time between 7:30 and 8:00 o'clock, I think, I wouldn't know exactly, but after dusk.

Q. And this news conference of Walker's was taking place around 5:00 o'clock?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did it last?

A. I don't know. I didn't stay around to the end.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 20 on Page 65.

Page 75, Line 4.

Q. Tell us everything that happened from the time you left the motel until you actually got on the campus.

A. I left the motel and drove down University Avenue and toward the east entrance of the campus. Upon reaching, [fol. 1127] well, actually I entered the campus property, but when I came to the bridge which crosses over the railroad tracks the Highway Patrol was there, and five or six persons stopped us, told us that newsmen, nor anyone else, were allowed on the campus. But he told us that possibly we could have an order shortly letting the newsmen on.

So Ed Lebreton whispered to me, "I'll stay here and you can go ahead and see if you can get on anyway you can."

So—

Q. You mean by deception or otherwise?

A. Any way. So I turned my car around and drove back to about the next street going toward town, drove about two blocks or three blocks, down back around the railroad tracks bordering the campus.

Q. Which direction did you go, north or south?

A. Well, I was going east as I was going to the campus, and I turned around and drove—well, west, rather—and when I came to the entrance I turned around and drove east for about two or three hundred yards, took the first street to the left going north, and then drove for about two or three blocks and then turned west, drove two or three blocks until I came to the railroad tracks, and when I parked my car and got out and stepped onto the railroad tracks, and a patrolman saw me from the railroad trestle [fol. 1128] that I had just left, or he saw someone, and he made some shout, and I paid no attention but went across. I went through the underbrush and I was on the campus.

Q. Alone?

A. Alone.

Mr. Gooch: Page 87. Mr. Watts, there has been a deletion there, I think. That was part of your question—

(Sotto voce conference of counsel.)

Mr. Gooch: Page 87, at Line 20.

Q. All right, you had arrived on the north side of the campus, saw the Highway Patrolman, and tell us what occurred then.

A. I walked further on the campus, I met a convoy of U. S. Marshals and army trucks, and I followed them to the Lyceum Building or Administration Building on the campus.

Q. Were you alone or with someone?

A. I was by myself.

Q. All right.

A. The Marshals got out of the truck and proceeded to ring the Lyceum Building. They had their backs to the building, and I counted and there was a hundred and forty-eight. They were dressed as we talked about earlier. They were facing a few small groups of persons standing across [fol. 1129] the street from the building.

Q. In what area?

A. In the area of the Fine Arts Building.

Q. Did the Marshals form a ring facing outward from the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you walk completely around the building?

A. Completely around, no, sir.

Q. When did you count them?

A. Shortly after I arrived.

Q. Was Meredith with the Marshals?

A. I didn't see him.

Q. When did you first see Meredith?

A. At 8:30 on Monday morning, October 1st.

Q. What time was it these Marshals arrived?

A. Shortly after 5:00 o'clock, to my best memory.

Q. How long after you had left the Walker press conference was this?

A. They were on the campus when I got there. It must have taken me 15 minutes, maybe, to get there from the Ole Miss Motel onto the campus, University Motel.

[fol. 1130] Q. Were you there when they de-trucked?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you 'phone your first report to the AP?

A. As soon as I got to the telephone.

Mr. Gooch: That's through line 8, page 89. Page 92, line 23:

Q. What next occurred that was significant.

A. The next thing that I can remember was that the crowd began getting a little larger and there were some snide remarks of some sort, anyway some remarks to the Marshals, and the Marshal were taunted about their tear gas guns that they were carrying and after quite a few remarks I went to the telephone and I called this in, along with the fact that the Marshals appeared to pay no attention to it.

Q. At first, were the students remarks of a somewhat humorous vein?

A. Some were, yes.

Q. Go ahead. Did you so report that at that time to the AP?

A. I did.

Q. Now, this is the second call you made?

A. Yes, second call, yes.

[fol. 1131] Q. Continue.

A. After that I just stood around, mainly being seen in the vicinity, I mean so that the AP newsmen would know I was there, and keeping an eye on things, and the crowd got larger and larger.

Q. And somewhere wandering around the area of the Lyceum Building?

A. North and northeast and eastern side, yes. I kept check on the other side, but nothing there but Marshals, and nobody was gathered. I stood around in the area and the crowd got larger and there were lighted cigarettes tossed into two or three Army convoy trucks parked immediately to the east or in front of the Lyceum Building and there were also some small rocks tossed toward the Marshals.

Q. Tossed or thrown?

A. Tossed, thrown.

Q. Sir?

A. Tossed or thrown.

Q. Could you see the individuals who were engaged in those activities?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they appear to be students or otherwise?

A. Yes, students.

Q. Where were they getting the rocks?

A. Off the road that had them, a few little small pieces [fol. 1132] of gravel on the side of the road.

Q. Did you see any Marshals hit?

A. I saw a few bounce off their helmets, yes.

Q. Was it dark yet?

A. No, it wasn't.

Mr. Gooch: That's through line 19, on page 94. No, it's continued. I'm sorry.

Q. Continue.

A. I went to the telephone and I reported this. I returned.

Q. Now, this is the third 'phone call?

A. Yes, I guess.

Q. All right.

A. And I come back and the crowd was getting bigger and it was getting dark at the same time and a helicopter flew over. I knew it was taking pictures. Somebody inside was taking pictures and there were some sort of pep rally remarks about the helicopter from the students but the rocks and the lighted cigarettes continued to be thrown toward the Marshals. After it got dark, why, the crowd got quite large on those two sides.

Q. About what time did it get dark?

A. I really don't know. I think it was probably between 6:45 and 7:15.

Q. Were the lights turned on then?

[fol. 1133] A. Yes, sir.

Q. What lights were there with respect to the Lyceum Building and Circle?

A. There were two lights. Well, strike that. There was a sidewalk going down through the Circle. As the sidewalk starts, at the Lyceum, in front of the Lyceum Building, there is a light on each side.

Q. Now, in this Circle, there is a flagpole about the center?

A. That is correct.

Q. I put an "O" where the flagpole would be. Is that approximately correct?

A. Oh, as close as could be, yes.

Q. Down at the very east end of this point of this circle I will put a dot, as representing the Confederate statue. Is that roughly in the same position?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Meanwhile, now, up north is the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes.

Q. How far could you see after it became dark?

A. About a hundred yards.

Q. Continue.

A. I watched as the crowd got larger and the Mississippi Highway Patrol had appeared in the meantime.

[fol. 1134] Q. By that time had you heard how the football game came out?

A. The football game was on Saturday.

Q. And you know how it came out?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you heard any students discuss it any?

A. No.

Q. Was the student body by that time pretty well back in school after the football game?

A. I don't know.

Q. Where are most of the dormitories from the Lyceum Building?

A. To the north are the women's dormitories, in an area here directly north from the Circle, and the men's dormitories on Rebel Drive and Dormitory Road.

Q. That's generally on the west side of the Circle?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Continue. Then what did you see after the crowd began to get large?

A. Well, the highway patrol came during the time that I was at the 'phone. When I came back, I went back to the 'phone again.

Q. Did they come in automobiles or what, or on foot?

A. I don't know. I just saw them standing in front of [fol. 1135] the Lyceum Building and somewhat to the northern side. By front, I mean east.

Q. Did they form anything approximating a line?

A. Yes, sir, a line.

Q. Where was this line with respect to the Marshals' line?

A. It was more or less across the street, pretty close to the curb, opposite from where the Marshals were.

Q. Did it conform in circling to the Marshals' line or was it different?

A. Pretty much so.

Q. About what interval between them?

A. About four or five feet, I don't know.

Q. Did you hear any conversation between the Marshals and the Highway Patrol?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what it was?

A. The Chief Marshal, James McShane, told the Highway Patrol, he called the captain, called him over, and he said, "Captain, come here." And the Patrolman came over and they talked a little bit and as the Patrolman walked away from him, after they talked, McShane hollered to have the students move back off the curb and off the grass.

Later he called the same man over again and asked for the same thing out loud. The man didn't go all the way to [fol. 1136] it and I believe there was a third time. He just talked generally to the Highway Patrol and told them to move the crowd back.

Q. What did the Highway Patrol do?

A. They attempted to move them back.

Q. And by this time, could you then estimate the crowd?

A. Larger than a thousand, I think.

Q. Were they all in one group or in separate isolated groups?

A. Actually, a solid group strung over a large area.

Q. Where were they concentrated with respect to the Lyceum Building?

A. Northeast, north and east, and eastern side.

Q. What occurred next?

A. The TV cameraman drove up and parked in the road just to the northeast of the Lyceum Building and started to get out of his car with his camera.

Q. This is on the so-called Circle?

A. Yes, it is on part of the Circle, right next to the Lyceum Building.

Q. All right.

A. And he got out, and the students converged on him, and there was a lot of talking, they got closer, and they were sort of shoving him around and then his TV camera [fol. 1137] was knocked to the ground and his wife was in the car, and the guy was able to get back in his car with the help of the Highway Patrolman. With the help of the Highway Patrolman, this fellow was able to get back in his car, but the students grabbed hold of the car and rocked it back and forth, rocks were thrown and the windshield was busted and another window busted and some dents were put in the car and finally he was able to drive away.

Mr. Gooch: That's line 12, page 99.

Mr. Gooch: Please turn to page 103, line 3.

Mr. Watts: Mr. Gooch, would you mind, saving me having to do it, go a couple of questions before and identify where this 'phone was? If you will, go to line 22, page 102. Save me having to go back and pick it up.

Q. I thought you said you kept this 'phone open all the time?

A. I kept this 'phone open all the time but they could switch it to any extension they wanted to.

Q. In New Orleans?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did the 'phone stay open in Perkin's room?

[fol. 1138] A. I think about 3:00 o'clock or 4:00 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Gooch: Is that what you are talking about?

Mr. Watts: Right, yes.

Q. What did you find when you went back from using the 'phone?

A. A crowd was there and it was getting quite large and hurling insults at the Marshals and throwing rocks and throwing cigarettes and the Marshals, through the Highway Patrol, ordered them to move back and at this time they didn't and they were standing in the middle of the road rather than getting back on the grass like the Marshals ordered them to, and the Chief Marshal, James McShane, ordered gas masks on, and the students were ordered to move back. They didn't.

Q. Did you at that time see any students you knew in the crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Name some names or all you know?

A. The only one I can remember is Joe K. Moore.

Q. Where was he?

A. He was standing there.

Q. Was he saying anything or doing anything?

A. He was working.

Q. Doing what kind of work?

[fol. 1139] A. Stringer for the Clarion Ledger in Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. Was he participating at all in the activities?

A. I didn't see him participate.

Q. Did you see any other students you knew?

A. I saw those I knew by face, and I can't remember right now, that I really know.

Q. Would you say, then, that as of now you don't know any student that was in that group, except John K. Moore, or Joe K. Moore?

A. To the best of my remembrance, I can't think of anyone else.

Q. Can you fix this time?

A. Between 7:30 and 7:50.

Q. All right, sir. Anything else of significance occur?

A. They were ordered to move back again, and they didn't.

Q. How long was this after the gas masks were put on by the Marshals?

A. A minute.

Q. Who was issuing the orders?

A. McShane.

Q. Could you hear his orders?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1140] Q. Were they in a loud voice, to all the Marshals?

A. They were so that the Marshals could hear it in front and they were to relay the orders around.

Q. You say they were to relay?

A. And they did relay the orders.

Q. But you don't know whether this was by order or pre-arrangement?

A. No, I do not.

Q. What was the order that McShane issued when they put on the gas masks?

A. He just said, "Gas masks."

Q. Then about a minute later the students were ordered to move back again, or the crowd was?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you at that time spot what you thought were individuals other than students?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anyone you knew?

A. Newsmen and professors.

[fol. 1141] Q. What professor?

A. Well, I don't remember any of the professors, in fact, I don't know but one by name, but I didn't see him.

Q. What about the newsmen?

A. I saw this fellow from Memphis, UPI newsman.

Q. Did you see his walkie-talkie?

A. I didn't see it at that time.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. When the students didn't move within 30 seconds or so, the guns were up and they fired.

Q. What was the order given to fire?

A. I didn't hear an order.

Q. How many weapons were fired?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did all the Marshals completely surrounding the Lyceum fire their weapons?

A. I don't know.

Q. What weapons did you see fired?

A. The ones on the east part of the northeast.

Q. For about what distance, assuming—

A. From, say, the southeast corner here, to a little place past the northeast corner.

Q. There was a barrage of tear gas fired by Marshals starting from the southeast corner of the Lyceum, clear around to, circling due north of the Lyceum?

[fol. 1142] A. I don't know whether due north, but as far as I could see, yes.

Q. Where were you at that time?

A. At that time I was standing just facing the Lyceum Building, standing just left of the center of the building.

Q. Were you behind or in front of the Marshals?

A. I was in front of the Marshals.

Q. Were they facing towards the flagpole?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. Where were the Highway Patrolmen with respect to—

A. The Highway Patrolmen were in a line, one directly in front of me was two feet in front of me.

Q. How far were you from the Marshals?

A. About eight feet.

Q. So there was about 10 feet then between the patrol and the Marshals?

A. No, sir, about six feet.

Q. About six feet. Did you hear the Patrol say anything before or immediately before the tear gas was fired?

A. They were telling the students to move back.

Q. Did you see anyone make any overt act, throw anything or make anything approximating a move toward the Marshals just before the tear gas was fired?

A. Overt act, yes. Rocks were thrown, large ones.

Q. From what area?

[fol. 1143] A. From the general area of all the students.

Q. Did it seem to be an organized effort by command, or was it spontaneous, or sporadic?

A. Spontaneous and sporadic. It was not organized, to my knowledge, it was not organized.

Q. How longer after the first rock was thrown, that you know about, was that before the tear gas was fired?

A. About five or six minutes, I think.

Q. What was the closest student to the Marshals at the time the tear gas was fired?

A. I don't know.

Q. What was your observation, your best estimate?

A. That I know of, those in the front line were as close as I was.

Q. Were there students then between the Highway Patrol and the Marshals?

A. No.

Q. Well, you were between the Highway Patrol and the Marshals?

A. No, a highway patrolman was between me and the Marshals.

Q. Then I misunderstood you a moment ago.

You then were to the east of the Marshals, were you, or Highway Patrol?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1144] Q. Were you among the students?

A. I was standing on the front line.

Q. How near were the closest to your left and right?

A. On my right, half a foot. On my left, I don't remember.

Q. How far back in depth did the crowd go?

A. About 10 or 15 feet, in my area.

Q. Did you see at that time any students that you recognized?

A. No.

Q. Or anyone else, other than just the newsman you recognized?

A. At that time I didn't see a newsman I recognized.

Q. Where did the tear gas pellets land?

A. Behind me and behind the front line, unless they hit someone.

Q. Were the weapons fired upward in an arc, or hip level?

A. Hip level.

Q. That you say?

A. Hip level.

Q. Were the barrels of the weapons parallel to the ground, roughly, when they were fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what range from the muzzle of the weapon did [fol. 1145] the pellets land?

A. I didn't notice.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 4, on Page 109.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And I went on into the area, and there was quite a group of people there. They sort of—once in a while a group of five or six or maybe 10, or sometimes as many as 20 people, would start running to the Lyceum Building with small parts or particles of bricks or rocks or sticks or glass in their hands, and they would get as far as they could without the tear gas affecting them, and throw this toward the Marshals.

Q. Where were these students starting from?

A. In the general area of the Confederate statue.

Most of them were a little—they were actually between the Confederate statue and the Lyceum Building, more or less half-way in between that and the flagpole.

Q. What would you estimate that distance?

A. From the Lyceum Building?

Q. No, from the Confederate statue to the Lyceum Building?

A. Roughly 200 yards.

Q. All right. And how far would the students run be- [fol. 1146] fore they would throw?

A. I would say a hundred yards.

Q. Would they throw from the east or west of the flagpole?

A. East or west, both.

Q. Where were they getting their missiles?

A. Their glass, I don't know. Their sticks and their broken brickbats were coming from the construction of a Science Building, I believe, that was directly east of where the Confederate statue is.

Q. On which side of the road?

A. South side of the road.

Q. Would that then be southeast of the Confederate statue?

A. More south than east. Actually it was straight down the road, right down the road, due east.

Q. Continue with your narration.

A. The group apparently got a leader. I don't know, but somehow or another, they gathered, and after many small assaults, they got a larger crowd, several hundred, probably as many as 500 in the group, and they made an assault towards the Marshals.

Q. What do you call an assault?

A. They were walking and running, some not really fast, towards the Lyceum Building, as far as they could go, and [fol. 1147] they would come to within throwing distance of the Marshals, and in respect to the tear gas, not going any further, where it was too thick, and they would throw this, and then the Marshals would race across the street and that would make them back up.

Q. What do you mean race?

A. The Marshals were on the sidewalk there in front of the Lyceum Building, and then they would run across the street, on the other side of the street, firing their tear gas quite high, and it was falling behind the students, and since the wind was blowing northwest, it was blowing right back in their faces. As far as the students, actually it was falling on the other side of them, and blowing back in the faces, towards the Marshals, so they had to leave and run back to their area.

Q. Were the Marshals wearing a gas mask?

A. Yes.

Q. You say it was rolling toward the north?

A. Northeast. (sic)

Q. And the students were approaching toward the west?

A. The students were going towards the west and the wind was blowing this way (indicating).

Q. By "this way," you mean directly northwest?

A. Yes. And the students would run to a certain area, within throwing distance, probably around 75 paces—yards [fol. 1148] from the group, and the Marshals, after being—when the stuff began hitting them, would run across the street, maybe 25 or 30 feet, maybe more, and shoot their gas again, and it would fall behind the students, and the wind brought it back across them as it blew northwesterly, and this group which was still mostly students at this time, fled backward.

Q. You say apparently they had a leader.

Were you able to identify the leader?

A. Yes, there was one person who appeared to be a spokesman, kind of tried to rally the group together.

Q. Can you describe him as best you can.

A. He was carrying a Confederate flag in his hand and he had on a shirt that was mostly red, but it was multi-colored. Blue jeans, and he had a jacket on his arm at one time.

Q. What age?

A. A student age, about 19 or 21. I don't remember.

Q. And his size?

A. About 150 to 170 pounds, about five, nine or ten.

Q. Blond or brunette?

A. I don't remember.

Q. How far could you see at that time?

A. I could see the Marshals from the Confederate statue, but I couldn't recognize anyone.

Q. Did you see them close enough to tell their general [fol. 1149] size and outline?

A. General outline, yes, but size, no.

Q. At this time were there any highway patrolmen in the area?

A. I saw none.

Q. When did the highway patrolmen leave?

A. I don't know, don't know when they left, but they were not back there when I got back from the first phone call, after the tear gas was fired.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 15 on Page 123. Now Page 127.

Q. By my figure, that is the seventh phone call you made, and the fourth one from the Perkins' boy's room. Now are those telephone calls timed when they come into the AP receiving area or Bureau?

A. No.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. Positive.

Mr. Gooch: Page 128, Line 22.

Q. Did you return then to the area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What area?

A. The grove area, right near the Confederate statue.

[fol. 1150] Q. Which side of the statue?

A. A little to the southwest or southeast.

Q. Did you see anyone you knew?
A. Slappy.
Q. That is twice you had seen him?
A. Yes.
Q. Any other AP personnel?
A. No.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 7 on Page 129.
Take up at Line 20, Page 129.

Q. Go ahead.
A. When I got to the area again, there were groups of people coming in from the railroad bridge, or what I call the east gate.
Q. Had the guard been taken off of that?
A. I don't know. I didn't go there.
Q. Go ahead.
A. And I kept noticing the crowd was getting larger and larger, and it appeared that lot of students were moving out of the area, because I moved on across, and I kept noticing there were large groups over to the north of the circle, on what used to be the old Library Area, I think it is now maybe the Fine Arts Building, and near the YMCA. And there were large groups of students standing, [fol. 1151] and I went over and recognized quite a few students whom I knew, and they were there, and I came back, and I kept noticing the crowd was getting larger, and less and less students in the crowd.
Q. Continue.
A. At this time there was another charge and—
Q. Wait a minute. You went or left the flagpole area and went over to near the YMCA area?
A. Yes, YMCA, and this other building, which is I think the Fine Arts Building.
Q. Did you see anything unusual there?
A. No, nothing, just this large group of students, standing on the steps on both buildings, and I just watched.
Q. By this time had you heard or seen any shooting?
A. No.

Q. Did you hear any shots at all that night?

A. Yes. I saw no shooting but I heard it.

Q. All right.

A. As I turned to leave that area and go back towards the grove a wave of people went towards the Marshals again. It was as large as the first group.

Q. Was the same individual leading them?

A. I didn't see.

Q. What was the conformation of that?

A. I don't understand.

[fol. 1152] Q. Was it a solid front, or was it in broken groups?

A. In solid front.

Q. What were the north and south boundaries of it?

A. Oh, the north boundary of it was pretty close to the street on the north, and south boundary was about halfway between the street and the flagpole.

Q. Now this is the second wave or charge you had seen?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you when you saw it start?

A. I was a little northeast of the flagpole walk, I was halfway between the Confederate statue and this building that I had been in front of.

Q. Now there are trees in the circle, called the Grove, or is the Grover somewhere else?

A. What we call the grove is not really the grove, no.

Q. What did you call the grove when you referred to it?

A. The circle. This circle actually is where this occurred.

Q. As I remember, some of the news reports referred to it as the grove?

A. Yes.

Q. Any of your reports refer to it as the grove?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Continue. You were in the grove and northwest of [fol. 1153] the Confederate monument when you saw the second charge?

A. No, I was not in the grove, but in the street, walking between this building and the Confederate statue.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 9, on Page 132. Go to 133, beginning at Line 22.

Q. All right, sir. What did you do then?

A. I ran into the area where the charge was.

Q. Past the flagpole?

A. Yes, past the flagpole, and I just watched what went on.

Q. What did go on?

A. There were rocks and brickbats and so forth thrown at the Marshals, and tear gas, as before, used to repulse the group, and we all left the area and went down to the general area of the monument.

Q. And by "we all", you mean the people that participated in the charge?

A. Yes.

Q. At this time there were people north of the circle?

A. North of the circle?

Q. Yes.

A. Other than a few scattered people who were in this group they were mostly students, in my opinion.

[fol. 1154] Q. Was there any activity against the Marshals emanating from that direction?

A. No, I didn't see any.

Q. All right, sir. How near to the Marshals did you get on this so-called charge?

A. About the same distance as the first, close to seventy-five yards.

Q. Did you see the Lyceum Building hit with rocks on that occasion?

A. I didn't notice.

Q. What did you notice?

A. I noticed that rocks, and so forth, did hit the Marshals again and bounced around and I knew they did behind, but whether they actually hit the building, I don't know.

Q. What else; anything else?

A. Tear gas reached us and we turned and ran to the monument.

Q. Did the tear gas reach you before or after the rocks were thrown?

A. After.

Mr. Gooch: That's through line 6, on page 135.

Mr. Gooch: Please turn to 136, line 7.

Q. Go ahead.

[fol. 1155] A. As soon as the group got to the other end, they almost immediately turned around and made a third charge or assault, or went toward the Lyceum Building again. By this time they had rocks and bricks and so forth, already down there, at the monument.

Q. Did you hear any command or order between the second and third charge?

A. Nothing, other than scattered comments of, 'Let's go,' and quite a few curse words.

Q. All right. Did you participate in the third charge?

A. Of the group, yes.

Q. What happened then?

A. The same as the two times before, the group went toward the Lyceum Building and we didn't get as far that time, because the Marshals ran out across the street in an apparent attempt to meet us or something, but we only got just a short distance past the flagpole because the tear gas was too heavy.

Q. Did you hear anything from the Marshals?

A. No.

Q. Then what?

A. Rocks and stuff were thrown. I couldn't see too well through the tear gas.

Q. Was the smoke getting pretty heavy at that time?

[fol. 1156] A. At the time of the charge it was, because it was fired before we could get very far.

Q. Was there a restriction of visibility?

A. At that time, yes.

Q. Prior to the time the tear gas was fired, could you see the Lyceum Building plainly from the monument?

A. Yes, I could see it.
Q. Could you see individuals walking in front of it?
A. I could see the outline of the Marshals.
Q. Go ahead.
A. I turned back and raced back to the monument.
Q. What happened then?
A. Everything got quiet for a while.
Q. For how long?
A. For about five minutes, maybe.

Mr. Gooch: That's through line 21, page 137.
Mr. Watts: Would you read the next two, and save me reading it?
Mr. Gooch: Be glad to.

Q. What would you say was the timing at the end of the third charge?
A. Between 8:30 and 8:45.

Mr. Watts: That's all I care about.
Mr. Gooch: Then, that would run down through line 24 [Tol. 1157] on page 137.

Mr. Gooch: Page 139, line 15.

Q. Go ahead.
A. Then I heard a comment behind me to the general effect, and I don't remember the exact wording, "Here is General Walker, here comes General Walker," and I turned and I saw striding fifteen yards behind me, General Walker.
Q. Decribe that.
A. He was walking in very long strides.
Q. In what direction?
A. In a westerly direction, up towards the Confederate statue.
Q. Where was he at that time when you first saw him?
A. About fifteen yards east of the intersection, right there where the Circle meets University Avenue.
Q. On which side of the road?
A. More or less in the middle.

Mr. Gooch: Then, going over—this next was read, about putting the marks on the chart. I'll omit that.

Mr. Gooch: Going over to page 142, line 1.

Q. How far from you was he?

[fol. 1158] A. When he stopped, he was, oh, eight or ten or fifteen feet, ten or fifteen feet from me.

Q. Did you say anything to him?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Did he say anything to you?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did you hear him say anything to anyone?

A. At that time, no, sir.

Q. What occurred then?

A. He stood there looking around and I moved closer, I was probably within five or six feet of him, and this same person with the Confederate flag and multi-colored shirt, mostly red, said, "General, will you lead us to the steps?" And Mr. Walker made no comment, he sort of scratched his head (indicating), or rubbed his head a little like this (indicating), and moved his—his head went back a little, and he lowered his head, in my opinion he looked like somebody who might be thinking, and he was like that for several seconds, about forty or fifty seconds, just didn't say anything, was very quiet, in fact, the students got restless behind and began to chant, "Come on, let's go. There is General Walker, he is our moral support, let's go."

And Mr. Walker raised his head and looked this fellow squarely in the eye and nodded his head. Up to this time [fol. 1159] Walker had said nothing. I hadn't heard him say a word.

Q. Go ahead.

A. About this time they appeared to—well, Mr. Walker took a couple of steps forward and this boy who was over to his left, and some of the group, sort of moved up behind, there was quite a large group behind and they took several steps.

Q. At this time was there any personnel west of the monument?

A. West of the monument, I didn't see anyone. There might have been one or twenty, but I didn't see them.

Q. Had all the crowd then moved back into the street east of the monument?

A. Yes, that's my—

Q. Any people at all north of the Circle or northwest of the Circle?

A. In that direction, I couldn't tell.

Q. How far could you see in that direction?

A. I couldn't see very far. There were no lights.

Q. How far could you see towards the Lyceum?

A. I could see the Lyceum Building.

Q. Could you still see people in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Outlines of people, yes.

[fol. 1160] Q. That is point where you moved, X-2?

A. I moved, now, about where my old X was.

Q. X-1, you mean?

A. No, the obliterated X.

Q. You moved then about half the width of the street to the north then?

A. Yes. I was about the center, where General Walker was.

Q. Where was Walker from you?

A. Oh, four to six feet from me, just to the north of me.

Q. All right. Were there any people between him and the monument at that time?

A. This one fellow who made the comment to him.

Q. Were Walker then and this fellow alone out there, ahead of the main crowd?

A. Repeat that.

Q. Were Walker and this one fellow now alone and to the west of this main crowd?

A. No.

Q. Describe the location then.

A. The fellow was out alone, up ahead of the crowd, but the crowd had closed around Walker on all sides, except the one where this fellow was, and this fellow was standing about three or four feet away.

[fol. 1161] Q. From Walker?

A. West of Walker, he was.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And as I said, they took several steps forward, and then a portly, neatly dressed fellow of about forty-five walked up.

Q. Did he say anything?

A. He walked up to Mr. Walker and introduced himself.

Q. Could you remember what he said?

A. I didn't understand his name, no, sir.

Q. Did they shake hands?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. All right.

A. And this fellow, I noticed had on a deputy sheriff's badge. They talked for a moment, and then this boy sort of made a motion, and several people got around, and there was quite a hubbub in there, but I couldn't tell what was going on. I was still four or six feet away, and everybody talking at once there. This was only for several minutes.

Q. The portly gentleman with the sheriff's badge seemed to be involved in the charging?

A. In the charge, well, I hadn't seen him before.

Q. You had not seen him prior. Go ahead.

A. As I said, they were talking quite low, and then every-

[fol. 1162] one was talking at the same time, and I just sort of kept an eye on him, and I didn't hear Walker say anything. I just kept watching his mouth, and I didn't see him say anything, and then they sort of opened up.

Q. Did he have his hat still on the back of his head, or did he put it back?

A. He did not actually push it back, to the back of his head, but then sort of moved it when—

Q. In other words, he rubbed his brow?

A. Yes. He didn't put it on like a cowboy would.

Q. All right.

A. And the group backed up or away from the front of Mr. Walker, and this boy took his right hand and grabbed hold of the general's left arm, and another person on the other side did the same thing.

Q. Was that the deputy sheriff, or someone else?

A. I am not certain whether it was or was not, I really don't know.

Q. All right.

A. But anyway, they started walking.

Q. Which direction?

A. At that time they were walking due west, and they walked around the monument.

Q. Which direction?

A. To the north of the monument, and then they walked [fol. 1163] straight toward the Lyceum Building for ten or fifteen yards.

Q. Was that on the sidewalk or on the grass?

A. They were on the grass.

Q. North or south of the walk?

A. North of the walk.

Q. At what rate of speed were they walking?

A. Normal pace.

Q. Did Walker have any rocks or weapons or any missiles?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then what happened?

A. After Walker went ten or fifteen yards, they sort of veered to the right.

Q. That would be to the north?

A. Yes, sir. They were walking in more of a northwesterly direction.

Q. All right. Where were you at this time?

A. I was just to the right of Walker.

Q. Following then?

A. Almost abreast of him.

Q. From the time you saw Walker come up to this point, had you seen anyone else you knew?

A. No.

Q. Any other newsman?

[fol. 1164] A. No.

Q. Had you up to that time seen the UPI newsman, Kettner anywhere?

A. No.

Q. Continue.

A. We walked for about ten or fifteen yards, and as I say, they then veered to the right and walked in a circular manner, more or less bordering on the Circle.

Q. How close to the curb of the Circle?

A. About twenty-five feet from the Circle, but walked around until they were almost even with the flagpole.

Q. All right.

A. And then sort of veered back toward the center of the Circle.

Q. Did they walk straight or—

A. They came, just went toward the sidewalk.

Q. Due south?

A. No, not due south, just more or less going southwest or south-southwest.

But they went toward the sidewalk, didn't reach it, and then turned directly toward the Marshals, and at this time Walker and the two fellows that had hold of his arms were between the sidewalk or almost even with the sidewalk and street.

Q. And by that you mean the east-west sidewalk from [fol. 1165] the flagpole to the monument? Well, I will draw a line from the flagpole to the monument, which will represent the sidewalk. Now, where were they at this point?

A. Right in here.

Q. Would you put a W and circle it? All right. And we will put a 2 on the side of it.

A. (Marking.)

Q. Would you say that was a third of the distance from the flagpole to the Lyceum Building?

A. No.

Q. Would you say the distance would be a fourth?

A. I doubt if it was that far. They were still about forty or fifty yards away from the Lyceum Building.

Q. What then happened?

A. They walked in this direction, like this (indicating).

They walked toward the Lyceum Building in a westerly direction.

Q. Now did this young man who took hold of Walker's arm take a position just east of the monument, or not releasing his arm until he reached the position of W-2?

A. He didn't release his arm.

Q. What about the man on the left, was he holding onto Walker's arm, too?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1166] Q. And the three of them went along there, as you have described?

A. Yes.

Q. Were they in step?

A. I didn't notice if they were in step.

Q. Was anything said by anybody?

A. Mr. Walker walked straight ahead, with his head straight. I didn't see him look to either side. I didn't hear him say a word. As far as I know, he had not said anything.

Q. He said nothing that you heard?

A. Nothing.

Q. Go ahead.

A. They walked about ten or fifteen yards in this direction (indicating).

About ten or fifteen yards in a westerly direction.

Q. At that time had there been any tear gas fired?

A. No.

Q. From the time you saw Walker start from the monument area to this point?

A. I didn't see any.

Q. You saw them walk ten or fifteen yards toward the Lyceum?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1167] Q. And then what happened?

A. Then when they were about seventy or seventy-five yards from the Lyceum Building, then this tremendous group that was behind them—

Q. Was this group bigger than the group the whole day?

A. Bigger group, that I saw.

Q. All right.

A. They threw all of their rocks, small bricks or broken bricks and glass and stakes, and so forth.

Q. Where was Walker and these two other men at the time these bricks and things were thrown?

A. At the very front of the group.

Q. How far was it from them to the nearest man to their rear or east?

A. Behind them, about two or three or four feet.

Q. Walker and the two men were out in front by the distance you mentioned?

A. By that distance, yes.

Q. Then what happened?

A. They threw all of their things, as I said, and turned, and the tear gas hit in the middle or else in behind us, and it was quite heavy.

Q. Before or after the rocks were thrown?

A. After the rocks were thrown.

[fol. 1168] Q. All right.

A. And I watched as both these fellows let loose of Mr. Walker and turned. Mr. Walker turned and sort of ducked down, like this (indicating), and took off running, and so did the other two fellows, and so did I, and so did everybody else.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: Please turn to page 153, line 22.

Q. What happened then?

A. I heard him make some remark about, "Well, we'll get together and charge again," some comment or something about students, and, "We will charge again, the group will charge again." I don't remember what the exact words were.

Mr. Gooch: Now, I will turn to 155, line 4.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. As soon as he made the comment, I turned and ran to a 'phone.

Mr. Gooch: Please turn to page 160, line 1.

Q. Then when you returned, Walker was on the base of the Confederate statue.

A. Yes.

Q. Was he alone?

A. There were students around.

[fol. 1169] Mr. Watts: Excuse me, Mr. Gooch, at this point, may we just stipulate, for continuity, that all of this previous testimony occurred before Walker's speech on the monument? I think it would simplify matters.

Mr. Gooch: Yes, yes.

Mr. Watts: Save me reading a great mess.

Mr. Gooch: Yes.

Mr. Watts: This is the testimony of Van Savell, the AP newsman.

Mr. Gooch: Who wrote the article complained of.

Mr. Watts: And up to now, everything that has happened was before the speech on the monument?

Mr. Gooch: That's correct.

Mr. Watts: That will save me reading a lot.

Mr. Gooch: All I am doing is reading the whole thing in continuity.

Mr. Watts: Yes, that's all right, but some has been omitted. Saves me going back and reading it.

Mr. Gooch: Well, I—yes.

Q. Then when you returned—

Mr. Watts: Mr. Gooch, if you wouldn't mind, it will save a lot of time if you will read one question and answer on page 159, line 11 through line 18.

[fol. 1170] Q. Now, by my figures here, from following your testimony, that is the eighth phone call you made, and the fifth call you made from Perkins' room. What did you see when you came back to the area?

A. As I got to the area, I saw Mr. Walker standing on a ledge of the Confederate statue.

Q. What was he doing?

A. He was talking.

Q. Had you at any time prior to this seen a young preacher, Mr. Duncan Gray?

A. Many times I have seen him, yes.

Q. Had you seen him that evening on the campus?

A. No.

Mr. Gooch: Beginning at line 1, page 160. Do you want to stop here or go on?

The Court: No, we can go ahead and stop. Let's recess until a quarter of eleven.

(20-minute recess.)

[fol. 1171] Mr. Gooch: Page 160, Line 1, is where we got to.

Q. Then when you returned Walker was on the base of the Confederate statue?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he alone?

A. There were students around.

Q. Was there anyone else up on the statue with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. Could you hear anything he was saying?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you say?

A. As I saw him, I heard the word "Cuba," I heard him say "Cuba," and I continued running to the area, and he sort of lapsed for a moment, or a few seconds, didn't say anything.

Q. Wait a minute. From what direction were you approaching?

A. I was approaching from the northwest, or northeast, more northwest.

Q. What was the size of the group of people around him at that time?

A. Several hundred.

Q. How did it compare with the group that participated in the alleged charge that you have described, which was the fourth charge?

[fol. 1172] A. The people in the area of Walker were smaller, but there were more than that; a thousand people within a hundred fifty or two hundred yards of him.

Mr. Gooch: Picking up—do you want me to read the rest of that? It is descriptive only.

Mr. Watts: No.

Mr. Gooch: Line 13, Page 161.

Q. As you approached on the scene, you heard Walker say something about Cuba?

A. I heard the word "Cuba".

Q. Did he have his hat on at that time?

A. I guess he did, yes, sir.

Q. What next did you hear him say?

A. I heard him say something about somebody, he made the comment about somebody had betrayed Mississippi.

Q. Somebody had betrayed—

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember who he said?

A. Didn't say who, he said, "Somebody has betrayed you."

Q. In other words he used the words, "Somebody has betrayed you"?

A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead.

A. And immediately there were comments, "Who, who?" [fol. 1173] And he didn't at first make a comment, just "Governor Barnett."

Q. What comment?

A. He just said, "Governor Barnett," but it was his voice. I was within 10 feet of him at this time.

Q. Which direction were you from the statue?
A. To the northeast, in the road just off the curb.
Q. Where was he from the statue?
A. He was on the north side of the statue.
Q. Facing toward the north?
A. No, facing to the east.
Q. But he was standing at the north side of the statue?
A. Yes.
Q. The statue then was on his right?
A. Yes, more or less.
Q. Go ahead.
A. And he stood there, he made this comment, almost inaudible, it was inaudible to most people, about Governor Barnett.
Q. What period of time—
A. He made this comment about Governor Barnett, in a low voice, and I heard it, and then he stopped and leaned over and talked to a fellow, I don't know who the fellow was, and there was a period of time when he was talking to this fellow, and leaning on this fellow's shoulder, and then [fol. 1174] he reared back up and said, "Birdsong, Birdsong has betrayed you."
Q. Is that all?
A. No, that is not all. Then he made a comment about, "We can win," or "You can win." "If you don't think you can win go home, leave the campus, but we can win."
Then he made a comment about "keep protesting. You may not win but you will be heard," and he said, "This is a dangerous situation. You must be prepared for possible death. If you are not, go home now."
When he made that comment I immediately turned and left and ran for the phone.
Q. Now is the outline you have given us in chronological sequence?
A. I am not certain of that, no, sir. Well, there were many other things he said.
Q. Tell us everything.

A. That's all I remember, this is all that I—just at the present time that is all that I—well, he said other things, which were practically the same thing, meant the same thing, but were said in different words.

Q. How long did you hear him speak?

A. Four minutes or five minutes at the most.

Q. Did you on that occasion see anyone that you knew?

A. No one but Walker.

[fol. 1175] Q. Have you heard since or talked to anyone who heard substantially the same things you heard?

A. No, sir.

Q. Then as I understand, you raced back to the telephone?

A. Yes.

Q. And reported Walker's speech?

A. Yes.

* * *

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 8, on Page—Line 10 on Page 164.

Page 166, Line 6.

Q. You made notes on Walker's speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do with those notes?

A. Those notes, the last time I saw them, were at the hotel on yellow legal paper, that's what I typed the story on.

Q. Do you know where they are at this time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Could you give us as near verbatim as possible what your notes were about?

A. The notes said that "Somebody has betrayed you." And the students asked, "Who, who, who?"

And Mr. Walker said almost inaudibly, "Governor Bar-[fol. 1176] nett," and then he leaned down and talked, as I said before, and he got back up and said, "Birdsong, Birdsong has betrayed you."

Q. Did you have that in your notes?

A. I did not put that in my notes, because I could remember it. I had Governor Barnett down, and I did write a B down there, I know that, and later used it, and then, that he said, "If you don't think you can win—" or something like that, "If you don't think you can win go home, leave the University, but we can win." Then he made some other comments, as I remember it, and then there were remarks almost along the same line, pepping the students up, and then he made the comment about "You may not be able to win, but you will have been heard."

And he said that, "This is a dangerous thing." Then he said, "If you are not prepared for possible death, go home now."

He paused and immediately started talking about the Kennedys, and I left and went to the phone.

Q. Then he was not through with his speech when you left?

A. No, he wasn't.

Mr. Gooch: Turn now to Page 168, Line 2.

Q. The Marshals were still firing at the time Walker [fol. 1177] was speaking?

A. Yes, sporadically.

Q. Were there any charges, or rocks being thrown at that time, any rock throwing going on at that time?

A. I didn't notice any that impressed me enough to stick in my memory. There were no large charges that I saw again that night.

Q. Did you hear Walker at any time mention the word, "Violence"?

A. I believe that when he was talking he made a comment about violence.

Q. What was the comment?

A. I can't remember exactly, but something about that—I don't think it was the word "violence". I think the words were something like, "This is violence,—"

The comment is familiar to me, but I didn't take it down as a note, that I remember, didn't use it, anyway.

Q. Did you hear him say anything like, "avoiding violence"?

A. Not at this time, that I remember, no.

Q. Did you at any time hear anything about avoiding violence?

A. Later when talking to students, when I was talking to students, yes.

Q. You mean later that night?

[fol. 1178] A. Yes.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 25, on Page 168. Page 170, Line 22.

Q. What was the attitude of the crowd as he spoke?

A. Their attitude was, I think there were several cheers for him, and in addition they appeared to be restless, they kept saying, "Come on, let's go, let's go."

But there were quite a few cheers when he said, "If you are not prepared for possible death, go home now."

Q. And that brought cheers?

A. That brought cheers, yes.

Mr. Gooch: Then on Page 171, Line 12.

Q. I wish you would relate to me in chronological detail everything else you heard or saw Walker say or do.

A. I kept an eye on Walker from a distance. I went back and I was talking to Sterling Slappy again, I met him, and we talked a little bit and he said, "Have you seen Walker?"

And I said, "Yes, I have," and he said, "Well, I haven't. Where is he?"

And I said, "He is over there," and pointed to the group and he was still there, and then Sterling left me and went towards the group. I don't know whether he actually went [fol. 1179] to the group or not. Then I went on, and by that time they had brought up a fire engine, up into the grove area of the campus, and so I kept an eye on them as they were charging the Marshals with the fire engine, and also using that to try and put out the tear gas bombs.

Q. Was Walker participating in that in any way?

A. He didn't seem to. He was still down in the area where he was talking to this group, and I kept watching this group, and finally one of the boys in the group—I felt like they were students, they were young, very young—one of them had on an "Ole Miss" jacket and they made a charge, fire engine, and they were busy themselves at this time, and they went right on up to the sidewalk and across the street, and they were right next to the Marshals, the Marshals had to jump out of the way, and at the same time a couple more were hanging out and swinging with their stakes, and then turned around.

Q. You mean the students or the Marshals?

A. The students had stakes in their hands, and were swinging at the Marshals, and went to turn up, went back around, and they were going about 25 yards in front of the Lyceum Building, and started to turn around to, began to back-up, but the Marshals had charged on them, and the Marshals captured the fire engine and the five people involved, and that quieted the fire engine for that time. [fol. 1180] In between the time I saw Walker there and the next time I saw him, they brought out a bulldozer. They tried to get it started to go by itself, and go after the Marshals.

Q. Did Walker have any participation in that?

A. No, sir. They had the fire engine, I mean the Marshals finally captured the bulldozer. About that time I saw a huge fire ball flash in explosion, just a fire over the side there in the street, and I heard somebody comment about Molotov cocktails, and I ran into the area where I was told they were making them.

Mr. Gooch: Skipping down to Line 17, on the same page.

Q. All right.

A. And I went over there and there was a big gasoline can there and bottles they had.

Q. Who was "they"?

A. People, ten or twelve or fifteen of them.

Q. How many?

A. There were quite a few, quite a group of students standing at the Fine Arts Building, many of them I knew, and I went over and I asked them something, asked how long they had been there, and they told me, and I think I was there five minutes and I came back, and they were making or had tried two more, and both of them just flared [fol. 1181] into fire, didn't reach the Marshals and didn't explode, and it made them quite mad, and about that time, why, somebody hollered "We will get Mr. Walker to tell us how to make them." And I paid no attention to that. In a matter of a minute or so, here was Mr. Walker, walking this way.

Q. Where they were making the Molotov cocktails?

A. Yes. And he listened, one of the students asked "Will you help us make some Molotov cocktails, or show us how? Ours are not working." And he made no comment but nodded his head, and didn't do anything. Then finally one student said, "Well, we are having trouble with these damn tear gas bombs. How can we put these things out? Water doesn't help?" And he suggested using sand.

Q. This was still in the area north of the oval, where they were making the cocktails?

A. Right in that area.

Q. And he suggested the use of sand?

A. He suggested the use of sand, but he said, "Where can you find it?"

Q. Who is "he," Walker or the boy?

A. Mr. Walker said, "Where you—can you find it", or "Where can they find it," and one of the students said, "Oh, we can find it," and that's all the comment of Mr. Walker, and he turned around with a couple of students and walked back into the general area of the monument. I [fol. 1182] walked back, and I saw him down there talking to some people, and I saw no reason to stick around, and I went to a telephone.

Mr. Gooch: That is through Line 7.

Mr. Watts: Would you mind reading just the next two questions and answers?

Mr. Gooch: Not at all.

"Question: Same phone?
"Answer: Same."

Mr. Watts: May we agree, in order to save reading a lot of this deposition, that that phone is in Lebuve, in this building?

Mr. Gooch: It is in Lebuve Hall.

Mr. Watts: Well, this says Lebuve Hall.

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: May we also agree that this scale here is applicable to this map.

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir, so far as I know. How many more do you want me to read?

Mr. Watts: Just the next two.

Q. Now this would be, by my record of your telephone calls, Number 10. What did you report at that time?

A. The fact that they were throwing Molotov cocktails [fol. 1183] and I said three of them had been unsuccessful and there had been no explosion, and I said they had asked General Walker how to make them and that he had made no comment, and then nodded his head as if to say, "No,"—

Mr. Watts: That is as far as I am interested in. The rest of it is repetition.

Q. You say he nodded his head no or yes?

A. Like that (indicating). Shaking it sideways as if to say no.

Mr. Gooch: And that is through Line 18, on Page 175. I believe that is all we have to offer at this time from the Savell deposition.

Mr. Watts: Would you mind reading two questions, or I will read the questions and you read the answers?

Mr. Gooch: Sure. What page?

Mr. Watts: Page 176, Line 4.

Q. Still up to this time had you seen anyone connected with the AP?

A. No.

Q. Any other newsmen except the one individual with U.S. News?

A. Not to my knowledge, no, I hadn't.

Q. You had seen no one connected with the UPI?

[fol. 1184] A. No, no, not with the UPI . . . I went back to the area, the route I was taking the first time.

Q. That would be around to the south?

A. Yes. This time I got back there and I couldn't find Mr. Walker.

Q. Wait. First you went back to the phone and reported in this incident about Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. Telling them about the sand?

A. Yes.

Q. Then when you went back there, you went this way, and did you take the north or south route?

A. No.

Q. When you went to the phone?

A. I started to take the north route, but when I got there I found tear gas, so I couldn't stand it.

Q. Where?

A. There is a valley between the Fine Arts and the Math Building. I had used it before, but the gas, tear gas was so thick in that area that I couldn't stand it even with a wet towel around my face, so I turned around and went back this way, went back to the south, to the phone, made my report and went back to the area of the monument by way of the southern route.

[fol. 1185] Mr. Watts: May we agree the southern route would be roughly starting at Lebuve Hall, and roughly in this direction (indicating).

Mr. Gooch: Whatever the map shows.

Mr. Watts: All right, that is all.

[fol. 1186] Mr. Watts: Mr. Gooch, I have one other short one on page 8 I would like to read if you don't mind reading the answer. Page 8, line 14.

Mr. Gooch: Be glad to.

Mr. Watts: On the previous line, to tie it into continuity.

I had asked the question: "Were you given any briefing as to the slanting of the news?"

The answers was: "I was told there was no such thing, strict facts and nothing else.

Question: "What did you understand to be slanting of the news?"

Answer: "Slanting of the news, possibly reporting the facts, but at the same time reporting it for only one side."

Question: "Over-emphasis on one side?"

Answer: "Certainly."

Mr. Watts: That's all. Any more deposition, Tiny?

Mr. Gooch: Not this witness.

Mr. Watts: Are you going to offer any more depositions now or shall I offer a witness?

Mr. Gooch: No, you can go ahead.

Mr. Watts: Mr. Dornblaser.

[fol. 1187] JOSEPH DORNBLASER, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Your name, please, sir?

A. Joseph Dornblaser.

Q. Have you been in the Court room at any time since this trial has been going on?

A. I have not.

Q. All right, sir. What is your—briefly—your background?

A. I entered the Army in 1917 and retired with the grade of Colonel in 1948.

Q. Were you in a combat branch or support branch?

A. Mostly support branch.

Q. Did you have occasion to become acquainted with General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. First when?

A. About 1930.

Q. Did you have a specialty in your Military duties?

A. I was used largely for the purchase of horses and [fol. 1188] mules for the calvary and the artillery.

Q. To shorten it and lead you a little, was that what was known as the "remount service"?

A. Remount service, yes, sir.

Q. Did you buy horses and mules all over the ranch country of Texas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. While you were out there on these assignments, did you ever read any newspapers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What newspaper did you find to be the primary news organ in that area?

A. Well, it was definitely the Star Telegram. That would seem to be the Bible of all the ranch people.

Q. And what was your connection with Walker in those —in the 30's?

A. Well, we were both interested in horses and they had a ranch at Center Point and that was one of my favorite stops, so I could stay all night there.

Q. And did he stay active in connection with the horse. . . . ?

A. Yes, he did. He was. . . .

Q. Did you have any contact with him after World War II?

A. Yes, sir, I was—while I was commanding officer of [fol. 1189] the Southwestern Remount Station at San Angelo, Texas, he came up and many times to visit me and also to take part in the horse shows there and, in addition, I was stationed for about a year at Fort Sill with General Walker.

Q. Prior to October 1, 1962, what was General Walker's reputation as a capable and competent Army officer?

Don't answer this until I finish the question.

Mr. Gooch: To which we object.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Capable and competent Army officer as you knew it generally.

Mr. Gooch: I object.

The Court: I would have to sustain that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. All right. Now, then, did you have—where did you live in September and October of 1962?

A. Forth Worth, Texas.

Q. Were you retired?

A. I was retired.

Q. Did you read the Forth Worth Star Telegram?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have occasion to read these articles that we have outlined that said Walker led a charge of students on the Ole Miss campus on the night of September 30th, 1962?

[fol. 1190] A. I did.

Q. What impression did that have on you concerning General Walker after you read those articles?

Just a minute.

The Court: Just a minute, please. Ladies and Gentlemen, will you step into the Jury room for a moment, please?

[fol. 1197] (Jury returns to the Court room.)

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What was your rank when you retired?

A. Colonel.

Q. Now, then, Colonel, did you know—answer this yes or no—the reputation of General Walker in the Fort Worth community and in the ranching area to the south and southwest served by the Fort Worth Star Telegram prior to September 30, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his reputation as a peaceable, law-abiding citizen prior to that publicity that I have outlined? By the Fort Worth Star Telegram, as taken from the Associated Press publication? Was that reputation good or bad?

A. It was good.

Q. All right, sir. Now, then, you were familiar, as I understand, with these articles in the Fort Worth Star Telegram as published from the Associated Press sources [fol. 1198] that said he was leading a charge against U. S. Marshals, were you familiar with those articles?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after those articles were circulated in this same area, was his reputation good or bad?

A. Bad.

Mr. Watts: That's all.

Mr. Gooch: No questions.

The Court: You may step down, sir. I will release this witness.

CHARLES MAY, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. You haven't been in the Court room during the course of this trial, have you?

A. No, sir.

Q. State your name, please?

A. Charles Joseph May, III.

Q. Where do you live?

A. Pascagoula, Mississippi.

Q. What is your age?

A. I am twenty-three years old.

[fol. 1199] Q. Are you a student at Mississippi University?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since when?

A. Since 1958.

Q. What school?

A. I am now in the School of Law.

Q. What class?

A. I am in the senior class.

Q. What class were you in in September of 1962?

A. I was in my second semester.

Q. Sir?

A. I was in my second semester. I had gone to one summer session.

Q. Of Law School?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you on the campus that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where the so-called Circle is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you arrive in the Circle area before or after the Marshals fired tear gas?

A. I was there before.

Q. Would you outline to the Court and Jury, please, sir, exactly what happened immediately before this tear gas was fired?

[fol. 1200] A. Well, immediately before the tear gas was fired, there were the Marshals, around three or four hundred of them, had surrounded the Lyceum Building and were standing on the steps.

In front of the Lyceum, there were several huge troop trucks in which the Marshals had come. The students were gathered in front of these trucks.

The trucks were between the Marshals and the students. Between the students and the trucks were the Mississippi Highway Patrol, trying to keep the students away from the trucks and the Marshals away from the students, I guess.

Q. Now, immediately before the firing of gas, what was the distance of the closest student to the closest Marshal, as you saw it?

A. I would say about twenty or thirty feet, at the most, because they had these trucks and they, also, had the Highway Patrol in between the trucks and the students.

Q. All right, sir. What was going on?

A. Well, the students were jeering and they had rebel flags, waving the flags and cheering. And I think some cigarettes—some cigarette butts were flicked over toward the Marshals, out in the street toward the trucks.

And groups of students were standing around talking to the Highway Patrol, asking them what their orders were. [fol. 1201] And the Highway Patrol were trying, were pushing the students back.

At one time the students had moved up toward the trucks and the Highway Patrol then pushed students all the way back across the road into the Circle.

And around that time I was over near the Fine Arts Building.

Q. Is that to the northeast of the Lyceum?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. I was standing, I would say, mid-way between the Fine Arts Building in the road and the Lyceum. And all of a sudden, I heard these explosions and I thought they were cherry bombs or firecrackers or something.

And then I saw one Highway Patrolman fell and this gas started coming up in the crowd.

And so several of us pulled the Highway Patrolman over across the street and we didn't know whether he had been shot. And then we ran—I ran into a girl's dormitory, which is about two blocks, it's behind the Fine Arts Building. I don't know the name of it. But we ran into the lobby there because I had that gas in my eyes.

Q. Which direction?

A. It was behind the Fine Arts Building. I don't know the name of the dormitory there.

[fol. 1202] Q. Noting the scale on this map, and this distance here as 500 feet, are you aware of the approximate distance from the monument around north of the Fine Arts Building over to LaBuve Hall?

A. LaBuve?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir, I don't know.

Q. Well, is this LaBuve Hall way over here northwest of the Fine Arts—of the Lyceum?

A. Yes, sir, yes.

Q. Over in here. All right. Now, I wish you would take this pointer and from there on to the best of the capability of your memory, explain to this Court and Jury exactly what you saw, where it was and what happened.

A. Well, when the tear gas was fired, I was standing, I would say, in this area (indicating), and after we drug the Highway Patrolman—he was shot in the back with a tear gas shell or something of that sort—and we ran around the, let me see, around—around this side of the Fine Arts Building and into Ward Dormitory here.

And at that time there had already been a crowd in there watching the President's speech on television.

And so I tried,—I got some water to wash out my eyes. And then I came back out of Ward Dormitory and came over here to this street (indicating); I would say I was [fol. 1203] right in here, between the "Y" Building and the Fine Arts Center, with a view of the Circle.

Here I met Dr. James Silver, who was standing there. He was a professor at the University of Mississippi in history.

And I stood there and we talked and watched all of the commotion out here in the Circle, stood there, I guess, from about 8:15 until 9:00 o'clock, somewhere around in that area.

Q. Now, in that period of time, was there any large mass of students—well, we will skip that—say, from a period of about ten or fifteen minutes after the riot first started, with the firing of tear gas, from that time on until you met Silver, was there any large movement of a great mass of people across that Circle area?

A. Yes, sir, right after the tear gas had been fired, there was not. There was a movement away from it, of course. Nobody knew what was going on.

And so I would say in about five minutes, by the time I came out of Ward Dormitory and down here, you could see little groups of people run across toward the Lyceum and some of the Marshals, at first they lined up like this (indicating), and would march across the Circle here like this and then crowds of students would come from this way or behind them or this way and sometimes the Mar- [fol. 1204] shals even ran down here and into the Grove and I know, because we were standing there, Dr. Silver and I, and students would run by, "Here come the Marshals," and we would both have to run to get away because . . .

[fol. 1205] Q. Now from the time this first movement until you left Dr. Silver, was there a movement of the students, or was it a sporadic activity by little groups?

A. It was just sporadic activity. I would say we had activity from over here around the Chemistry Building, and from behind it, where the—here at Carrier Hall, from behind any of these buildings. You would have small groups of people.

Q. If within that period of time there had been a charge started en masse down here east of the Confederate monument with three leaders in front of it, and a line of a thousand people, and had moved within about 25 feet of this north curb, and had then moved down toward the Marshals and gotten almost to them, and at which time the tear gas—the missiles were discharged and thrown at the Marshals, the tear gas was fired, and all that group of people raced back to the monument, would you have been in a position where you would or would not have seen such an activity? Yes or no?

A. Yes, I would have seen it.

Q. Did such an activity occur at any time from the time this riot first broke until you were up there talking to Dr. Silver? Yes or no?

A. With 1,000 people?

Q. Yes.

[fol. 1206] A. No, sir.

Q. All right, have you outlined to us as best you can what did happen before you went up there and talked to Dr. Silver?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, tell us then from that time on in details, relive in your memory, and tell this jury exactly what you saw.

A. Well, at about, I would say 9:00 o'clock, I saw there was a crowd of people over here toward the monument. And so I came around through the grove, behind the "Y" Building, and behind the Geology Building, into the street, and then I came up and I stood, I would say, right around here (indicating on map).

There was a pile of construction material—no, it was right about here. They had piles of brick and lumber stacked here.

Q. Was there a street immediately to the north of you?

A. Yes, sir, this—well, it was this junction right here (indicating).

Q. Did any vehicles come out of that street about that time?

A. Yes, sir, after I had been there two or three minutes I noticed that all the highway patrolmen were leaving, [fol. 1207] and some of them came up in here, and others came around through here, and through here (indicating on chart), and all the students started yelling, "Why are you all leaving?"

And they said—

Mr. Gooch: I object to that.

Mr. Watts: You can't say—

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Take your seat.

A. Sir?

Q. You may take your seat. Don't tell what the highway patrolman said, but what were the comments when the highway patrol left?

A. The students were all yelling, "Why are you going; why are you leaving us?" And I can't tell you what they said?

Q. You can tell what the students said but not what the highway patrol said.

A. Well, they were all yelling that, "Why are you all leaving, why don't you all stay?"

Q. Go ahead.

A. And about this time all the highway patrolmen were moving out, and I guess there were—I don't know, 40 or 50 cars, may be more, and, anyway, they all pulled out and all the students were out there waving at them, and asking them to please stay, and then I heard someone say, "Well, [fol. 1208] here comes General Walker." Somebody in the crowd. It started as murmuring, you could hear a little murmur through the crowd, so I stood there on this pile of lumber and General Walker was in the—when I first saw him he was just in the general vicinity—can I show you?

Q. Sure.

A. I was in this general vicinity here (indicating on chart), and he walked around here. I stood on this pile of lumber right here and I believe there was a light, a vapor light there, and General Walker walked around back and forth, and people would come up to him and shake his hand, and—in groups of two or three—and stand around there, and he stood around there in the crowd, and people would go up to him, and I think he gave some autographs or something, and anyway, he just stood there talking to people, and walking around, and he just walked back and forth in front there of the statue.

He might have gone up behind it. I didn't notice, but anyway for a while he just did that, for a while, and after a while went—when all the highway patrolmen had left they kept hollering, "General Walker, will you give us a speech; speech, speech."

You could hear it, all the yelling out in the crowd, so finally General Walker moved over toward the monument, and he stood around talking to the people at the monument a [fol. 1209] couple of minutes, and I think some—two boys boosted him up on the monument.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. I moved up as close as I could to the monument.

Q. About how closer were you?

A. I was, I would say, in the middle—in the middle, halfway towards the front.

Q. Could you estimate in distances in the room here something that is an equivalent distance?

A. I would say I was as far as from here to the last juror over here, the lady in the corner (indicating).

Q. And did you hear what General Walker said from the monument?

A. Yes.

Q. Prior to that speech had you heard any comment by the students about Governor Barnett?

A. Yes, they kept asking the highway patrolmen, "Why are you all leaving, has Ross sold us out?"

Everybody calls him "Ross", in Mississippi.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And the highway patrol wouldn't say anything. They said, "We don't know, we haven't—all we have is orders to leave."

Q. Now then did you hear General Walker's speech?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol: 1210] Q. Tell the jury as nearly as you can remember what was said.

A. Well, the students asked General Walker the same thing they had asked the Highway Patrol, they kept yelling, "Has Ross sold us out, has Ross sold us out?"

And General Walker stood up there on the statue and he said, "I can assure you. . . ." He said, "Your Governor has not let you down. I just returned from a meeting downtown in Oxford and I can assure you it is not your Governor."

And at this time we had some—there were people applauding and everything, and then he said, "What are these troops doing here? Cuba is that way."

And he pointed toward the south.

And he said, "This isn't the way to Cuba."

He said, "Under the Constitution you have a right to protest but if there is any blood shed, let it be on the hands of the Federal Government."

He said, "We must stop this, we must stop this riot."

And the people booed and jeered, and a lot of people left then.

And I heard people say, "He is no good; he ought to be out here leading."

And I would say about one-quarter of the people left [fol. 1211] when he said that.

And people kept yelling, "Who sold us out if it wasn't Ross?"

And he said, "I can't tell you now. I cannot divulge that. I have learned at a meeting downtown in the courthouse . . ." I believe he said that, "But I can't divulge it now."

And they kept yelling, "Who was it; who was it?"

And the people were booing and jeering and everything, and General Walker leaned over and talked to a couple of men standing there and he stood up and he said, "It was Col. Birdsong."

At this time a lot of people didn't know who Col. Birdsong was, and they would yell, "Who is he," you know, and he said, "He is your Highway Director."

And about this time the Episcopal priest there, Duncan Gray, Reverend Duncan Gray walked over. He came from the "Y" Building, from the vicinity of the "Y" Building, and moved over towards the statue.

And he walked up towards the statue and I couldn't hear what he said to General Walker, but I saw a fellow who, I later found out was a Sheriff, grab him, grab Duncan Gray, and two students, and pulled him back through the crowd. Because the crowd was surging in on him, and General Walker said, "This man makes me ashamed I am an [fol. 1212] Episcopalian."

And after that time they took Reverend Gray back into the "Y" Building, the Sheriff and these other two men.

And I stood there for a while and that was about all I can remember about the speech.

Q. Were you there when General Walker got down off the monument?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he do, where did he go?

A. Well, he stood around in front of the monument for about—well, I couldn't estimate the time, really. Probably upward to 15 minutes, and I wanted to go—that was the first time that I had ever seen him and I wanted to go shake his hand.

And so I—

Q. He stood in the vicinity of the monument for 15 minutes?

A. Yes, sir, I would say 10 or 15 minutes.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. And, well, I walked over toward him. There was a group of people around him talking to him and shaking his hand and everything, and I would say I don't know how many, but it wasn't but, maybe, 15 or 20 in his general area.

Q. Did you go over and shake hands with him?

A. Yes, sir, I got up—

[fol. 1213] Q. Did you talk to him?

A. Yes, sir, and people were asking him questions. Can I tell you some of the questions?

Q. Well, I don't believe you'd better say what they told him. You can say anything you heard General Walker say.

A. I asked him, I said, "General Walker, do you think if you were in charge here you could stop the riot?"

And he said, "Hell, if I had been in charge here we wouldn't have had a riot."

And then other people were asking him things like that, and—let's see.

Well, anyway, he was moving around at this time, sort of moseying back and forth in front of the statue there, the Confederate statue, so after I had talked to him a few minutes I went back and stood on that pile of lumber back there, you know, where I could see pretty good, and he wandered around the statue there and most of the people had gone home—well, I don't know where they went, but most of the people had left the area, and had either gone back behind the Chemistry Building there, or behind the Fine Arts Center back there, or over towards that.

Because they were burning some cars over there and—

Q. And what did you do then?

A. I stood there about, I would say, five or six more minutes on top of that brick, and nothing was happening, [fol. 1214] so I went downtown—I went out on University Avenue and caught a ride downtown with a Sheriff.

Q. Did you see General Walker anymore?

A. I didn't see him any more that night.

Mr. Watts: That's all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Mays, directing your attention to the period of time after the tear gas was fired, I believe you stated generally, and correct me if I am wrong, that there was quite a bit of surging towards the Marshals by groups of some size after the gas was fired, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir. Not immediately after.

Q. Well, at any time after?

A. Yes, sir, after—well, that goes into the next day.

Q. And that was happening prior to the time that General Walker got to the campus?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it happening during and at the time General Walker got there?

A. No, sir, I would say that was the quietest time during the riot.

Q. All right. Now, where was the—what would the students throw at the Marshals?

[fol. 1215] A. In the vicinity of the Science Building they had stacks of bricks, and I believe they threw bricks, mostly. I didn't ever go up in the circle myself.

Q. I take it you didn't participate in any of the rioting?

A. No, sir.

Q. How would these groups form? Would it just be spontaneous, and go forward and some of them throw their rocks, bricks and so on?

A. Yes, sir, I would say in groups of maybe five or ten.

Q. Well, now where would they detach themselves from? Would you say that the people were scattered completely out, or was there any grouping? You mentioned a crowd a time or two in your statement.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would they detach themselves from the crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To run up and throw the brick?

A. Yes, sir. Right after the riot I would say you had your biggest crowd. Up until about, maybe about four or five minutes right after they shot the tear gas. You had your biggest crowd, but the Marshals kept firing this tear gas and it kept building up and so most people left. Or the larger majority of the people had left after about 45 minutes, it [fol. 1216] was so gassy around there.

Q. Well, I understood you to say that there was a crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Around the monument at the time General Walker came on the campus?

A. Yes, sir, but it wasn't as big as the crowd that had been there when they fired the tear gas.

Q. Well, most everything is relative, isn't it, Mr. Mays?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had that crowd that had come down around the monument, had some of them detached theirselves from the crowd prior to the time he got there and gone up and thrown something at the Marshals?

A. I couldn't say whether they did or not.

Q. The source of supply of the brick, at least, was about where you were standing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I guess you were able to observe quite a few of those brick and stone was being hauled from your vantage point over to the students doing the tossing, is that correct?

A. No, by the time I had gotten there, you see, that was one of the quietest times during the riot. I wouldn't have [fol. 1217] ever come around there if—if they would have been charging.

Q. That wasn't the question I asked you.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you as close to the source of supply of the bricks and stones and sticks from the new construction—

A. Yes, sir, I would say so.

Q. Did you see any students coming in and around that construction where you were standing and picking up sticks, stones and whatever they could get to be used as missiles toward the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that almost continuous throughout the night?

A. No, sir. Not the time—it was not continuous the time I was there.

Q. You say it was continuous?

A. You—no, sir, it was not.

Q. When did it stop?

A. Well, when I first got there there were a few people milling around in the streets. By the time General Walker had started talking on the statue there was no rioting at all then. There was no charges.

In fact, the Marshals were still firing tear gas, and they fired some of these rockets that would reach all the way from the Lyceum back toward us.

[fol. 1218] Q. By the way, you say, "Those charges". Now, what do you describe as a charge?

A. A group of maybe—well, I don't know, in talking about this, talking about the riot. I would say maybe eight or ten people running toward the Lyceum throwing brick.

Q. That would be your definition of a charge? You have used that several times.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now you say when you first saw General Walker coming on the campus he was greeted by "Here is Walker." Did you hear them say anything about, "Here is our leader"?

A. No, sir.

Q. Had you heard any previous word prior to this night that General Walker might be coming ten thousand strong?

A. I think I might have read it in the newspaper.

Q. Did you hear the expression, "Bring your flag, your tent and your skillet?"

A. I couldn't swear to it. I might have, yes, sir.

Q. But you had heard that General Walker was reported to be on his way to Mississippi with 10,000 strong. Did you hear that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, did anybody ask him where his volunteers were when he came on the campus?

[fol. 1219] A. I didn't hear it.

Q. You didn't hear it?

A. No, sir.

Q. But did you hear a number of them say, "Here is General Walker."?

A. Yes.

Q. Anything said about "Here is the moral support we need, here is our leader"?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear that.

Q. Now prior to the time that this gas was fired up around the Lyceum Building, did you see anything being tossed at the Marshals by the students, or thrown?

A. Yes, sir, they were flipping some cigarettes, and that is all I saw myself.

Q. Any pebbles, stones or rock or anything of that sort?

A. Yes, sir, could have been. I did not see it. I have read about that in the newspaper.

Q. Well, now when General Walker first came on the campus and you say some of them, at least, "Here is Walker," and shook his hand, then what did General Walker do?

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, I object to that as not within the evidence. This man said he didn't see Walker come on the campus. That when he came back and found him, he was down at the monument; after he was down at [fol. 1220] the building. That is a misstatement.

The Court: After you saw General Walker.

Q. Let me—I misunderstood you.

Mr. Watts: Yeah, I think you misunderstood.

Q. Do you know when General Walker first came on the campus?

A. No, sir.

Q. I misunderstood you. I thought you said you saw him as he came towards the monument. But you don't attempt to say now as to what time General Walker came on the campus?

A. No, sir.

Q. Well, I beg your pardon, I misunderstood your testimony completely. Then you don't know what General Walker could have been doing on the campus prior to the time you saw him, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know whether he had walked up with a group toward the flagpole or not, prior to that time, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. I believe you said if there had been as many as 1,000 you would have seen it, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, we will go back then, and I do apologize [fol. 1221] to you because I thought you said you saw him come on the campus. It now develops he had been there for some time, or according to you some time?

A. Well, I never said some time.

Q. Well, you don't know how long he had been on there?

A. No, sir.

Q. At any rate when you observed General Walker the first time you saw him, was when they were urging him to make the speech?

A. Yes, sir. When I first saw General Walker the last of the Highway Patrolmen were leaving.

Q. All right.

A. And they kept asking why, they kept asking the Highway Patrol, "Why are you leaving?". And then they were finding General Walker and saying, "Why are they leaving, General"?.

Q. Incidentally at the time the Highway patrolmen left that caused quite a group of people to run over to the highway patrolmen, watching them leave?

A. I don't know, sir.

[fol. 1222] Q. Well, you spoke of a number of people yelling to them—

A. Yes.

Q. —as to why they were leaving?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I assume that the people had gone over to watch them leave, or had they?

A. Yes, sir. See, well, a lot of people had lined—there were a line of cars all down University Avenue down to the bridge.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. And just—not many of them were students. But there were just a lot of—I saw, talked to a cab driver and two or three sheriffs out there.

Q. All right. At any rate, when General Walker—when they yelled, "Speech, speech, speech,"—and I think I quote you exactly on that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he agree to make a speech, or did he just start up to the monument?

A. Well, he didn't agree at first to make a speech. They kept—

Q. I guess he finally consented—did he say so or just impliedly walk over there?

A. Well, from—they—it took a while, I believe. I don't [fol. 1223] remember him going right up there immediately.

Q. I think I quote you when you said that two people boosted him up on the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who those two people were?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did they boost him up there?

A. Just sort of took him by the arms and helped him up.

Q. And you don't know who those people were?

A. No, sir. There might have been two or three, I'm sorry about that.

Q. All right. And you heard him say something about, "What are the troops doing here?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there any troops on the campus there at that time?

A. Yes, sir, I believe so.

Q. Do you know what time the troops came in?

A. Well, there were some Negro troops driving those trucks that brought the Marshals.

Q. I'm talking about the Marshals around the Lyceum, had you seen the troops come in with bayonets at that time?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1224] Q. What—did that occur later? You don't know when they came in, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When?

A. I think. They came in around 12:00 midnight.

Q. You were a long way from the campus at that time, as I understand your testimony?

A. When?

When the troops finally came in?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir, I was over by the—I think I had gone back and talked to Dr. Silver again after that. See, I went—

Q. I understood you to say that shortly after Walker, within twenty minutes after Walker's speech, you left and went back to town?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you come back?

A. Yes, sir. I was trying to call home.

Q. Oh. Then the first you heard of any troops being on the campus was around 12:00 midnight?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Then all your conversation with General Walker occurred before that time, did they not?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1225] Q. All right. Then all your conversation with General Walker occurred before that time, did they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the speech on the monument was about what time? Would you estimate that?

A. No, sir, I couldn't. Maybe 9:30 or 10:00, right in there somewhere.

Q. 9:30 or 10:00?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you don't know, of course, what time General Walker got on the campus that night, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. Now, I believe you stated that you heard him say something about Cuba?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?

A. He said, "What are these troops doing here? Cuba is this way (indicating)," or, "That's the way to Cuba," one. It was something like that.

Q. He said, "What are those troops doing here?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any troops at that time?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. And I believe you said that you have a right to protest?

[fol. 1226] A. Yes, sir—he said, "I remember he said, "Under the Constitution, you have a right to protest."

Q. All right. Now, what sort of protest had been occurring prior to that time?

A. Well, just the riot, I guess.

Q. Throwing rocks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Sticks and bottles?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And stones at the Marshals, hadn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. You didn't finish the statement there, though, sir. That wasn't the whole statement he made. That wasn't the whole sentence. You have taken part of it there.

Q. I thought you said, "You have a right to protest under the Constitution"?

A. Yes, sir, but, he said, "But, if there is any bloodshed, let it be on the hands of the Federal Government."

Q. "But if there is any bloodshed—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —let it be on the hands of the Federal Government"?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1227] Q. Well, I was going to get down to that next but I'm glad you brought that in.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because the rioting had occurred and everybody knew about that at that time, didn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he was saying, "You have a right to protest but if there is going to be any bloodshed, let it be on the hands of the Federal Government"?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that what he said?

A. Yes, sir, he said, "There must be an end to this rioting."

Q. Yes, sir. Did he say, "Violence is not the answer?"

A. I don't remember that, I'm sorry.

Q. Did he say, "Nobody intended violence?"

A. He might have. I don't remember all—that's all I remember of—

Q. Did he say, "Neither Governor Barnett and myself have told you use violence;" did he make those, did he make that statement?

A. I couldn't swear to it, sir.

Q. Well, what did he say about a peaceful protest?

A. All I remember is, he said that, "Under the Constitu-

[fol. 1228] tion, you have a right to protest. But if there is any bloodshed, let it be on the hands of the Federal Government."

And he said, "There must be an end to this violence," or, "We must stop this violence." Or, "We must stop this riot," or it was something to that effect.

Q. Well, now, which did he say, "The rioting" or "The violence"?

A. I couldn't swear to it, sir.

Q. All right. Then he was asked if—or at some time, at least, he was asked if Ross had sold them out?

A. Yeah, the crowd asked him.

Q. Now, you knew at that time, did you not, that Governor Ross Barnett was still protesting the entrance of Meredith into the University, didn't you?

A. No, sir, I didn't know. I had heard Governor Barnett's speech on the radio about, I think it was, 7:30, and he made the statement, "Our heads are bowed, but let's try to be honorable," or something like that, and I didn't know what that meant.

Q. I see. What—but, at any rate, he told the students there that Governor Barnett had not sold them out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that prior to that speech, which you say [fol. 1229] you heard, that Governor Barnett was still standing on his original position of keeping Meredith off of that campus, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir, before that speech.

Q. All right, sir. Then I believe you said that when they kept asking him who it was that sold them out, that he said he wasn't at liberty to disclose it, is that what you said?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just how did he put that? Did he say, "I am not at liberty—

A. He said, "I cannot divulge that at this time." He said, "I have just returned from a meeting at the Courthouse and I cannot divulge that at this time."

Q. Did that mean by you (sic) that he was holding something back on an implied promise or something?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But he finally, at the insistence of the crowd, said it was Col. Birdsong?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I assume that he meant that the Governor, Barnett, was standing steadfast but that Birdsong was the one that sold them out; is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, I would . . .

Q. After General Walker came down off the monument, [fol. 1230] what did you say he did?

A. Well, he walked around and I would call it moseying, I don't know how to, any other word to explain it.

Q. That's a good word.

A. But he walked back and forth and groups of people would come over and shake his hand and talk to him, and that's when I went up and shook his hand and talked to him.

Q. Did he at any time after he came off the monument go toward the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir, I—yes, sir.

Q. How far did he go toward the flagpole?

A. I couldn't—I couldn't really say, sir.

Q. Was there any group around him or beside him as he went toward that flagpole?

A. It was not a group in itself. There were—he would just walk around, just . . . and walk—

Q. And everywhere he went—

Mr. Watts: Let him finish, please, sir.

The Court: Have you finished your answer, Mr. May?

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Go ahead.

A. He was just, he would walk around and whenever he [fol. 1231] would walk, there would be four or five people come up and shake his hands, "Glad to meet you, General Walker," and then they would talk a minute and then they would leave. And wherever he went, it was that way—even days after the riot, all over the campus.

Q. Well, I am talking now, directing your attention—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To after the speech on the monument?

A. Yes.

Q. Wherever General Walker went, there was a crowd around him, wasn't there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you say that he did not walk up towards the monument?

A. Yes, sir, he did walk up, up toward the monument.

Q. Do you know how far he walked up toward the monument—I mean the flagpole, excuse me. Did he walk toward the flagpole?

A. Yes, he walked on the other side of the monument, towards the Lyceum.

Q. Do you know how far or what distance he walked from the monument to the flagpole?

A. No, sir, I wouldn't—if I can explain, see, I was standing there on that group of bricks and lumber there and he [fol. 1232] would just sort of walk up toward this way and then he would maybe move around and just walk around in circles, I would say, and he walked up there a little bit and then he would walk, and then maybe he would walk up there again. And after about ten minutes I thought nothing was going to happen and so I left.

Q. Was any tear gas fired any time you were in the presence of General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?

A. Before, during and after the speech.

Mr. Gooch: That's all, thank you, sir.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, this lad has a summer job at the University of Mississippi and may he be excused? He has to get back.

The Court: Spell the name for the reporter, the city in which you live.

The Witness: Pascagoula, P-a-s-c-a-g-o-u-l-a (spelling).

The Court: Is your name May or Mays?

The Witness: M-a-y.

The Court: No "s" on it?

The Witness: No, sir.

The Court: All right. Ladies and Gentlemen, we will recess until 2:00 o'clock.

[fol. 1233] (Whereupon, the Court was recessed at this point until 2:00 o'clock of the same day.)

(2:00 o'clock, p.m.)

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, we will read now part of the testimony of Alan Gould, who is Executive Editor of the Associated Press. The deposition was taken in Fort Worth on March 25, 1964.

Mr. Gooch: Taken by you.

Mr. Watts: Taken by me. I propounded the questions, yes, sir, starting on Page 4.

ALAN GOULD, testified by deposition as follows:

Direct examination.

Q. Will you state your name, please?

A. Alan Gould.

Q. Your residence?

A. Residence, Greenwich, Connecticut. You want the street address?

Q. Your profession?

A. I am retired now, and I am a Consultant with the Associated Press.

Q. For what period of time did you work for or with the Associated Press?

A. Since March, 1922 until—

Q. What was your background?

A. Until I retired at the end of January, 1963.

[fol. 1235] • • •

Mr. Watts: Now turn to Page 6, the question at Line 6.

Q. What was your position?

A. My position was Executive Editor.

Q. And they left the post vacant when you retired?

A. Yes, for the time being. The responsibilities have been taken over by the General Manager of the Associated Press.

Q. What is his name?

A. Wes Gallinger.

Q. As far as you know has that position, as such, ever been filled?

A. No, sir.

Q. Describe for us, please, sir, your duties as Executive Editor.

A. I was in general charge of administering the news service of the Associated Press, including its various branches throughout the world.

Q. Now we have taken Mr. Relman Morin's deposition, and I understood from him that at each day at approximately 11:00 o'clock they had a meeting of the various heads of Departments in the Associated Press Headquarters in New York to consider various items in connection with your responsibilities. Is that an accurate statement of what occurred?

[fol. 1236] A. I am not familiar with what is occurring now.

Q. No, I mean what occurred when you were there? Did you have some type of executive meeting or Department Head Meeting every day to accomplish any particular purpose?

A. We would have meetings among the Department Heads to consider the current news situation daily. These meetings, as far as I was concerned, did not occur at any particular time, but were related to our activities, the news development, whatever planning and organizing we needed to do to cover that day's news. This is a continuing process.

Mr. Watts: Now Page 8, Line 2.

Q. As of the first part of October, 1962, who were those individuals, and what were their assignments?

A. Generally, the men who would get together included the General News Editor.

Q. Who was he?

A. The Foreign News Editor.

Q. Who was he at that time?

A. Sam Blackman.

Mr. Watts: Line 14.

Q. Foreign News Editor?

A. Foreign News Editor.

Q. Name?

[fol. 1237] A. Ben Bassett.

Q. Who else?

A. The General News Photo Editor, Al Resch, R-e-s-c-h, and such others as from time to time might have any particular reason for being included in these conferences, too.

Q. Who controlled or supervised that meeting?

A. I would from time to time, and Mr. Blackman, the General News Editor might.

Q. How long had you been Executive News Editor prior to the first of October, 1962?

A. I had the responsibility from December, 1941, about 10 days after Pearl Harbor, until I retired.

Q. I wish you would describe for us briefly, but in some adequate detail the organization and setup of the Associated Press.

A. You mean the news organization for which I was responsible?

Q. First, the corporate structure and the ownership, the operation, high level management.

A. There is no ownership of the Associated Press.

Q. I understand. It is a membership corporation?

A. It is a membership group. The members of the Associated Press elect a Board of Directors. The Board of Directors, in turn, selects the General Management.

[fol. 1238] • • •

Mr. Watts: Now over to Page 10, Line 11.

Q. I wish you would describe to us the events that actually took place in this meeting; as a typical example of what occurred, that led you to send personnel into the Oxford, Mississippi, area in connection with the Meredith enrollment. Just give us a thumbnail of what occurred and who said what to whom. You can just pick a date of your own choice.

A. Well, actually, to clear up the matter of these meetings, you have asked a number of questions, and I am inclined to think that it might be useful to particularize more with regard to the question you have asked about these meetings, Executive Staff Meetings.

Q. All right.

A. The daily meetings, which were not any fixed time, but depended upon events, and which were attended by people directly concerned with the particular developments in the AP, were held as and when required for operational purposes during the day.

In addition to that, and perhaps this may bear on what you were asking about earlier, there would be weekly meetings of all executives in charge of the various departments and branches of the AP, which was designed chiefly to communicate departmental activities, and to exchange [fol. 1239] ideas and to discuss planning in the broader sense as it involved the general news operation of the AP.

I mention these distinctions chiefly so there will be no confusion about what time the get-together you are asking about, when we discussed these meetings.

Mr. Watts: Page 14, Line 2.

Q. Go ahead and tell us then briefly, on the weekly meeting—I think you have covered the daily meeting fairly well, give us an example—start with the weekly meeting just prior to the Oxford incident, and just tell us or give us a blow by blow account of what occurred. Who said what to whom in the weekly meeting?

A. I couldn't attempt now to recollect a blow by blow description of the weekly meeting, Mr. Watts, but in general, each department would report what it was doing, what it thought was of general interest. Ideas might be advanced for particular stories or features.

Q. Give us an example of that. What do you mean?

A. Well, the development of the news situation. A particular example might be in a political year, which this is. We would know in general what the chief figures in the political campaign intended to do. We might discuss the assignments and the arrangements that would be needed in order to produce the news coverage for a given segment [fol. 1240] of the campaign. It might deal with various aspects of covering missile firing, particularly, of course, the orbiting of astronauts from Cape Canaveral.

Many of these great stories are immensely complex. They cross departmental lines. They involve arrangements and planning in a number of areas, as well as departments, so that the purpose there would be to discuss the various possibilities for both coverage, and for the assignment of staff people, and other aspects of the story of that kind.

Q. Now what personnel would attend these weekly meetings, and this time we are talking about immediately before or immediately after?

A. All available departmental chiefs of the AP.

Q. All right, in addition to Blackman—excuse me.

A. Some specialist would be there from time to time, such as Mr. Morin, who was a special correspondent of the AP, as you know, and covers a variety of news assignments.

Mr. Watts: Over to Page 22.

[fol. 1241] Q. Now, that news is the composite result of individuals who observe the news?

A. That's right.

Q. Did the Associated Press, in organizing and arranging its coverage of the Oxford incident, select the individuals, the particular individuals, who would go to Oxford and make the report?

A. At various echelons, we did, yes.

Q. Who selected them?

A. Well, you have the staff in New Orleans and Mississippi to begin with. Then reinforcements are sent in as developments warrant by request of the Chief of Bureau in charge of our field forces, in consultation with other Chiefs of Bureau, who may have or may not have men available, in consultation with the New York control center, the general desk, so that in the aggregate of our operations, we select men who are available, who are qualified to go in and handle various aspects of a story of multiple angles.

Q. Who did you send from New York to Oxford?

A. From New York, my recollection is we sent Sam Blackman.

Q. Who is "we"?

A. I did.

Q. All right, sir.

A. The General News Editor.

[fol. 1242] Q. In other words, it was your sole responsibility as to who would go?

A. No, it was my ultimate responsibility but I did not select or decide a lot of assignments. It was not my function to do so.

Q. Who did?

A. It was the function primarily of the Chief of Bureau. Then when you go beyond that, it can come to New York and the general desk can cooperate in providing the manpower or whatever additionally was needed.

In the particular case you asked about, who did we send from New York, the answer is that I directed Sam Blackman and Pat Morin to go.

Q. To Oxford?

A. Morin to Oxford and Blackman to New Orleans.

Mr. Watts: Now, if you will, turn to the deposition of Alfred Kuettner. We are about through.

Do you want to ask any questions from the deposition, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: Not at this moment.

ALFRED KUETTNER, testified by deposition as follows:

By Mr. Watts:

Q. State your name, please, sir.

[fol. 1243] A. My name is Al Kuettner.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, this deposition of Al Kuettner, we have stipulated, to save having to read a lot of preliminaries here, that Mr. Kuettner was a news reporter for the United Press International; that he was present on the Ole Mississippi campus that night and saw the things that he testified to and reported to his news service, the United Press International.

Mr. Gooch: The deposition was taken by Mr. Watts. It's Mr. Watts' witness.

Mr. Watts: Yes, the deposition was taken by—as you were. I wasn't there. I took one and then they re-took it.

Present at the taking of this deposition was Mr. John A. Dunnaway of New Orleans, or, as you were, Atlanta. And Mr. Carlisle Cravens, the gentleman sitting here, and Mr. Fred D. Smith, the gentleman that usually sits there. I don't know what happened to him.

Mr. Gooch: The deposition was taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, is what I am trying to arrive at.

Mr. Watts: That's right, taken on behalf of the Plaintiff, but not by me.

The Court: Do you stipulate to the facts which Mr.

[fol. 1244] Watts said the two of you had agreed upon?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, that's all right.

Mr. Watts: Starting on page 16, at line 14, or 12. He will need to know where to start reading.

I will start over. My question is at line 12. Your answer is line 14.

Q. Now, what time did you get on the campus Sunday afternoon or evening?

A. Well, it was after dark.

Q. Did you see General Walker when he came on the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you, Mr. Kuettner?

A. On University Avenue.

Q. Doing what?

A. Going to the telephone.

Mr. Watts: I would like to point on the chart at this point where this location is. On University Avenue is this Avenue right here (indicating).

Q. In other words, you were headed east?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far from the monument were you headed back towards where your telephone was?

A. Oh, I would say more than a couple hundred feet.

[fol. 1245] Q. Where did you see General Walker?

A. He was on the sidewalk on University Avenue.

Q. Which one, north or the south?

A. Well, as I recall, there was only one sidewalk on University Avenue right there.

Q. Which side of the street is it on?

A. He was on the left side of the street going toward the west, in a westerly direction.

Q. In other words, he would be on the south side of University Avenue, assuming it runs east and west?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the same side of the building you were using?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were headed back toward your building and he was meeting you, you were meeting each other?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall what time it was?

A. No, I don't recall.

Q. Approximately.

A. Oh, I would say it was probably after 9:00.

Mr. Watts: Over now to page 18.

Q. Did you speak to General Walker?

A. I said, "Good evening."

Q. And was the street lighted?

[fol. 1246] A. It was lighted enough to see him.

Q. Sir?

A. It was lighted enough to see him.

Q. You had enough light to identify and recognize one another?

A. Yes.

Q. Anybody you knew?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't stop and have any conversation with him?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Watts: Then skip over to the top of page 19.

Q. But you didn't talk to him?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you didn't talk to him as he came on the campus that night about 9:00 o'clock or a little after?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where was the building located where the 'phone was you were using?

A. It was the Journalism Building.

Q. How far was that from the monument?

A. Oh, I would say about, maybe 500 feet or so.

Mr. Watts: (Indicating on map.)

Q. Where were you going at the time you met General [fol. 1247] Walker?

A. To the Journalism Building.

Q. To report what?

A. The increasing activity on the campus.

Q. And did you go ahead then and make your report?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you report General Walker was on the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you immediately get a 'phone call through?

A. To the best of my knowledge.

Q. And when you finished it, you did what?

A. Went back to the campus.

Q. And when you got back to the campus, did you see General Walker?

A. I saw General Walker again, yes.

Q. Where was he?

A. Standing on the monument.

Q. On which side?

A. On the east side.

Q. Facing the direction you were coming from?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how close to General Walker did you get?

A. Oh, within, I guess, one hundred feet or so, one hundred, one hundred fifty feet.

[fol. 1248] Q. You never got any closer to him than that?

A. To the best of my knowledge, that was about it.

Q. Did you hear him say anything?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?

A. Well, again, not directly quoting him at this point, but he said something to the effect that, "You have every right to demonstrate, but this is not the way to Cuba." That, in general, is what I heard him say.

Q. Did you hear the crowd jeer him?

A. Yes, at one or two points.

Q. You reported, I believe, that the crowd gave him a massive jeer?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, describe what that information was the result of? Well, state whether there was jeering?

A. I heard some jeering.

Q. And can you state the occasion of it?

A. By something that he said, and I don't recall specifically at this point in response to what particular remark it was that the jeering came.

Q. Look at this copy of Plaintiff's Exhibit 3-G that was identified at the taking of the deposition on January 17th of this year.

Mr. Watts: Do we have that available? Do you have it, [fol. 1249] Carlisle?

Mr. Gooch: I don't have it.

Mr. Watts: I guess it's not here.

Q. Look at this message, UPI A144 N AJ and see if that refreshes your memory?

A. Yes, I will abide by this because this was given to our people here as a chronology of the events that were happening.

Q. Now, state for the record, the basis of the report that you made that he was jeered.

A. When he made some reference to a desire that peace be restored, he was jeered.

Q. Will you state for the record whether or not as you reported in this statement that this is true, that during a lull in the rioting General Edwin A. Walker mounted a Confederate statue on the campus and begged the students to cease their violence?

A. Yes.

Q. That is true?

A. That is true.

Q. And was the massive jeer that is reported something that took place chronologically after that occurrence?

A. As I recall, it was.

Q. How much, and I don't mean percentage-wise, did [fol. 1250] you hear General Walker say while he was in that position of speaking to his audience?

A. Only what is reported in the dispatch that you have just shown me.

Q. Now, there were other dispatches, were any merely repetitious?

A. In general, we may have expanded some on what I said.

Mr. Watts: I believe that's all.

Mr. Gooch: I didn't have a chance to check this. I have to be a little slow in reading.

Page 23.

Q. Let me ask you the question, what did you report that you heard him say?

A. At one point I reported him saying, "I want to compliment you all on the protest you make here tonight. You have a right to protest under the Constitution."

Q. Now, is that what you heard him say?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you ever see General Walker, or did you see him on the monument with anyone else?

A. I don't recall whether anyone else was on the monument or not. There was quite a crowd of people around the monument. I don't know exactly the physical characteristics of this monument, but I think it has got a base [fol. 1251] and then a recess up above that and then the shaft goes on up, and there could have been somebody on there with him.

Q. You recall no occurrence that involved anyone else being on the monument with him?

A. I would not be able to say positively that there was or wasn't.

Q. And now did you continue on into the campus or did you go back to your telephone after you heard that portion of his remarks?

A. As I recall, I went back to the 'phone.

Q. And you reported them while they were fresh in your memory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this is a report that you have just read?

A. Yes, sir, you see, if I could just—could I explain something there?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. At the height of something like this, you don't have time to stop and write down things in notebooks. You have to commit them to memory and get back to your telephone and report that and to a large extent forget it because you just simply don't have time to commit a lot of things to writing at that point.

Q. Now, when you got through with that telephone call, [fol. 1252] did you then go immediately back to the Circle or Oval?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see General Walker?

A. I say immediately, I don't know. I don't recall whether that 'phone call took five minutes, fifteen minutes, twenty minutes, whether we had difficulty getting the call through, whether there were other things that I had to do before I got back, I just don't recall.

Q. My question was, when you did conclude it, did you go immediately back to the Oval?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you see General Walker any more?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see him that night at all?

A. I saw him when I left the campus.

Q. And that was about what time?

A. Well, it was late. Most of the real trouble had stopped by then.

Mr. Gooch: Line 20.

Q. When did the soldiers come in?

A. Well, it was, as I recall, pretty close to midnight, sir.

Q. When did the Marshals come?

A. They came in that afternoon.

[fol. 1253] Mr. Gooch: 13 on page 26.

Q. And now between the time you saw General Walker on the monument and the time you saw him leave, first, let me ask you where was he when you saw him leaving?

A. On University Avenue.

Q. He had already passed out beyond the Circle and east of the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he reached the building where your telephoning was being done?

A. No, sir, it was between the monument and the Journalism Building.

Q. Was he on the sidewalk or in the street?

A. On the sidewalk.

Q. When he came in, who was with him, if anyone?

A. When he came onto the campus?

Q. Yes.

A. There were two men with him.

Q. Was there anybody in uniform?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody with a badge that was with him?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did not see a badge, is that what you mean?

[fol. 1254] A. That is correct.

Q. Now, when he left, were those same two men with him?

A. There were two people with him when he left.

Q. Did they appear to be the same individuals?

A. Recalling this far back, I would say yes, but I am not positive.

Q. Now, between the time you saw him on the monument telling the students as you have indicated in this report and you reported that to your company and the time you saw him leaving, what did you do; where were you? Were you in and out of the crowd on the Oval?

A. Yes, sir. I say in and out of the crowd, this is true to this extent, that I mingled with this crowd around the perimeter, around the south perimeter of the Oval. Now, I didn't go straight up through the Grove to the Lyceum.

Q. What is in the middle of the Grove Street up?

A. Trees, flagpole.

Q. With reference to the center of the Oval, where is the flagpole located?

A. It is about in the middle.

Q. Is there a paved walkway from the monument by the flagpole to the Lyceum?

A. I believe so.

[fol. 1255] Q. Are there any cross pavements?

A. I think so.

Mr. Gooch: At line 24.

Q. And you could see what went on within the Oval and in front of the Lyceum Building as it faced east?

A. Mr. Dunaway, I could see what I could see. I don't mean to be ambiguous.

Q. I understand.

A. But this is a pretty big area. There was a tremendous crowd of people and I could see a good deal of what was going on. I could not see everything that was going on.

Mr. Watts: Would you read the next question, to save me coming back?

Q. You did not see General Walker lead a charge?

A. I did not.

Mr. Watts: Correction, Mr. Gooch, "You did not see Mr. Walker lead 'any' charge?"

Mr. Gooch: That's what I said.

Mr. Watts: No, you said, "A". Makes a lot of difference.

Mr. Gooch: Excuse me, "You did not see General Walker lead any charge?"

Answer: "I did not."

Q. Did you see or hear anything that would indicate [fol. 1256] to you that he was leading a charge?

A. I did not personally, no, sir.

Q. Now, as you walked and worked the south side of that Oval, was there a building under construction south of the monument on the south side there at the end of the Oval, a new building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And just west of that building there is a building there with some either fir trees or evergreens of some sort, two or three trees? You did not, as you worked the south side of the monument, at any time see General Walker standing over there in the neighborhood of those trees for a long period of time?

A. No, sir.

Q. You missed that?

A. I missed it.

Mr. Gooch: On page 30, line 10.

Q. What was the first contact that you observed between the students and the Marshals?

A. Jeers, some rock throwing, throwing of pebbles, that type of activity.

Q. Were you present when the first tear gas was thrown?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were you at that time?

[fol. 1257] A. In the vicinity of the Lyceum.

Q. Well, on the south side of the perimeter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far from the entrance of the Lyceum?

A. About one hundred feet.

Q. Were you in the crowd or in the street?

A. The crowd was in the street. It was all over the place. I don't remember whether I was standing on the street or not.

Q. How soon after the tear gas was thrown did you make a report by telephone to Atlanta?

A. Just as quick as I could get to a telephone.

Q. Did you run or walk?

A. Ran.

Q. Then, when you reported that, what did you do?

A. Went back.

Q. How near the other position were you at this time when you went back?

A. I don't recall at this point. There was a good deal of tear gas. They laid down a blanket of tear gas to disperse the crowd that was near the Marshals and I don't recall now how close I was able to get, but in the vicinity, well up in the Grove.

[fol. 1258] Q. Were you able to identify anybody that was leading any charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Or was there a charge? Was there any organized charge?

A. No, sir, not at that point.

Q. Did you ever see an organized charge?

A. Yes, sir, but I don't recall. I couldn't tell you who was leading. I say an organized charge, do you mean this, that you could see a column of people rushing in one direction together? This happened numerous times.

Q. Did you see any weapons on any of the persons that were engaged in the charge, firearms, is what I mean by weapons?

A. No, sir.

Q. What were they using?

A. Molotov cocktails—now I did not know—I am referring to those weapons as weapons that I saw in the hands of people going into the campus, into the crowd.

Q. Were they students?

A. I couldn't tell, sir, whether they were students or not. They were young people. Some of them had student-type, you know, sweaters and so forth. I saw numerous weapons in the hands of the people, stakes, Molotov cocktails, large rocks, broken brick, broken concrete, broken bottles, that [fol. 1259] type of thing.

Q. But you saw no firearms?

A. Not at that time, not that night. I did not see any firearms.

Q. Were the Marshals armed with firearms?

A. The Marshals were armed with firearms.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir, as far as I know they were.

Q. And did you see any pistols in holders on the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they have any other type of gun?

A. Tear gas.

Q. Just pistols and tear gas guns?

A. So far as I know those are the only ones that I saw.

Mr. Gooch: Down to Line 15, on Page 33.

Q. In any of these surges that you talked about did you ever see a flag?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What sort of a flag?

A. A Confederate flag.

Q. Was it in the crowd or was it leading?

A. I saw several times a Confederate flag toward the [fol. 1260] front of some of these surges.

Q. Could you see who was carrying the flag?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: On Page 34, Line 10.

Q. Did you ever see any of these groups in there, surging people, having physical contact with the Marshals? Did they ever cross the street?

A. I didn't see this, no.

Q. Did you have any reports that that had occurred?

A. Yes.

Q. What time of day? Early in the evening or late, or when?

A. Well, it was after the riot had started.

Q. Well, that started while Kennedy was talking, didn't it?

A. Well, Kennedy was talking what? About 8:00 o'clock? It was a good deal later than that.

Q. Was this before General Walker appeared on the campus?

A. I just don't recall whether it was before or after.

Mr. Gooch: On Page 35, Line 11.

Q. And where was the motion at that time? From out of the oval, or the edge of the street next to the Lyceum?

[fol. 1261] A. Could I just explain this thing?

Q. Yes.

A. The Marshals were standing in an arc around the front of the Lyceum, on the Lyceum side of the street. The demonstrators were standing both in the grove, along the street and some in the street, and this thing was quite spontaneous. There was jeering, there was taunts.

The Marshals were standing their ground, not doing anything, and there was this increase in taunts, then rocks, and later on, I don't recall at what point, this car was wrecked and that is the way the thing started.

But there was an increasing activity and motion.

Q. When the tear gas was fired the State Patrol was there, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the tear gas was when the Patrol left?

A. Yes, sir.

• • •

Mr. Gooch: That concludes at Line 4, Page 36.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Cravens: (Line 22, Page 36)

Q. Mr. Kuettner, when were you first acquainted with General Walker as a public figure? I mean more than personally, but when you had knowledge that there was such a man?

[fol. 1262] A. When he was still in the service.

Q. Was that at Little Rock, or prior to Little Rock?

A. At Little Rock.

Q. Were you at Little Rock covering that story for UPI?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you observe his activities at Little Rock?

A. No, sir. My assignment at Little Rock was writing the story and I did not—I was not ever at Central High School during that time.

Q. But you did know that there was a person called and known as General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that time he was a public figure and news worthy throughout the State and elsewhere?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you also, or I will ask you whether or not if that image, that public image has continued to this time, to a newsman?

A. Yes, sir.

* * *

Mr. Gooch: Skipping down now—that ends at Line 19.

Q. Now I believe you mentioned the fact that you were [fol. 1263] in Oxford some few days before September 30th. Did you happen to be in Jackson, Mississippi when Meredith attempted to register in the office of the Trustees in Jackson?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were not present at that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You actually saw, as I understand your testimony, what you called a confrontation of the Lt. Governor of Meredith on the campus of Ole Miss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us in your own words just what you saw and the approximate time and date, as you recall, concerning that confrontation.

A. Well, it was several days prior to September 30th, after Meredith had been ordered registered in the University. And the incident that I witnessed was on the date, and I don't remember what date it was, when they had the consultation at the—what corresponds to the center for continuing education there at Ole Miss.

Q. You mentioned "they". Who do you refer to when you say "they"?

A. Did I testify about this before?

Q. You did not.

A. I would have to refresh my memory from the file on this. As I recall now it was the Lt. Governor and the school [fol. 1264] officials.

Q. Were you present when that meeting took place?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear what was said?

A. No, sir, it took place inside the building.

Q. Did you see Meredith actually, on campus to attempt to register on that occasion?

A. I don't recall exactly the circumstances. As I recall now he was brought in in a car, and taken in at that time.

Q. Now the Lt. Governor you referred to was Paul D. Johnson, now Governor of Mississippi?

A. Correct.

Mr. Gooch: Line 16.

Q. What I am really asking you about is the actual confrontation when the Lt. Governor, Paul B. Johnson, actually impeded and obstructed physically the entrance of Meredith to the University. Did you see that?

A. I don't believe that I was the one who covered that. I think Leon Daniel was the man that covered that. This is the best of my recollection now.

Q. At what time did you also know that it was common knowledge from the newspapers, the UPI dispatches and other sources of news, that Federal Courts, both the Dis- [fol. 1265] trict Court in Mississippi and the Fifth Circuit Court in New Orleans, had existing then, injunctions and court orders requiring the registration of Meredith at the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the occasion of the one confrontation that you referred to, in either the Continuing Education Building or the entrance to the campus when he was physically refused admittance?

A. Correct. There was a lot of back and forth there. As I recall they tried to get him on two or three times.

Q. And he was physically obstructed, as far as his entry to register was concerned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated that you knew of the existence of the Court Orders and Injunctions requiring that he be registered at the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore the activities of the school and state officials, as you understand it, were in defiance of the court order, is that correct or not?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that was the situation that was in existence there at Oxford on that Sunday, or Saturday night, September 29-September 30, or September 30th when you arrived at Oxford?

[fol. 1266] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now you referred in your direct testimony that things were building up very fast when you were talking about what was happening there some time in the morning and in the afternoon of Sunday.

What did you mean when you said, "Things were building up very fast," as to what those things were?

A. There was a great deal of talk in the town about that they are not going to let him come on the campus. There was the interview with the Sheriff. I based my supposition about the building of tension a great deal on what Sheriff Ford told me, and there were a number of—well, there were a lot of people in town. Well, it was just a thing you can pretty much feel; tension building up.

Q. In other words you base it on what Sheriff Ford told you and just through observing the ordinary townspeople?

A. Correct.

Q. And the other people that were crowding into the town?

A. Correct. There were out-of-state cars, there were out-of-county cars, that type of thing.

• • • •

Mr. Watts: Excuse me, I am going to just object to this next, just to shorten it. It is obviously hearsay.

[fol. 1267] Mr. Gooch: Cross examination.

Mr. Watts: In other words, this is not part of the res gestae. This is several days before.

The Court: What line are you on?

Mr. Watts: Line 23, Page 41.

The Court: I will permit it, if it was out there.

• • •

Q. There was talk of obstruction of the Court Orders at that time?

A. Correct.

Q. To prevent Meredith by any means from registering at the University of Mississippi, is that an accurate statement?

A. I would say, yes.

Q. And that is what you are referring to, was that feeling, or that sense of tension and animosity and element of revolt being built up against the Federal Court Order that was then in existence, is that correct?

A. Correct, and I also based it on what had happened previously; that there had been this confrontation, there had been tension, there had been physical evidence that they were not going to let this fellow on the campus, and this is the reason we put our telephone where we did.

Mr. Gooch: Down to the question on Page 18—I mean [fol. 1268] Line 19, Page 42.

Q. What I would like to ask you was, what, in substance, was it that Sheriff Ford told you there in the interview on that Sunday morning?

Mr. Watts: Your Honor, I object to this. It is hours and hours, a day before this event took place.

Mr. Gooch: Sunday morning.

The Court: What is the line and page?

Mr. Watts: Line 18, through 20. In other words, this is what the Sheriff told this reporter the morning of the riot. At least 10 or 12 hours before the thing happened.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Gooch: May I be heard?

The Court: Do you want to make a Bill on it?

Mr. Gooch: I want to say this, General Walker testified what the Sheriff's conversation was.

Mr. Watts: Oh, no, I don't believe he has. The Court sustained your objection.

Mr. Gooch: He did testify on cross examination what the Sheriff told him?

The Court: I am not going to permit that.

Mr. Andress: Cross examination? That was invited, Judge.

[fol. 1269] Mr. Gooch: Shall I go on down?

Mr. Watts: This is all the—what the Sheriff told him. It would save a lot of time if you would skip over to Page 45. It is all hearsay down through Line 19, on Page 45, it looks to me like.

The Court: I am going to permit him to read Line 25, Page 43, through Line 13, Page 44; or Line 14.

Mr. Watts: Is that on 44 or 43?

Mr. Gooch: Well—

The Court: Bottom of Page 43.

Mr. Watts: Oh, I see. Yes, sir. At line—

The Court: Line 25.

Mr. Watts: 25. Yes, sir, I think that is all right.

The Court: Through Line 14 on 44.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I think that is right, because that is his own observation.

Mr. Gooch: Line 14?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I see. Beginning with Line 14, Page 43.

Q. Had you yourself seen or heard of some of these news dispatches or statements that General Walker had made while over in Texas about coming to Mississippi ten thou-
[fol. 1270] sand strong and bring your flags—

A. I heard these reports. They were being relayed to me second-handed from our people here.

Q. And that was in your mind when you realized that this tension was building up, as well as these other things that you saw there on the campus and in town at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Included in his statements, I believe, was this, "To come and bring your flag, your tent, your skillet and stand shoulder to shoulder with Governor Barnett." Did you know he made that statement?

A. I remember something to that effect.

Mr. Gooch: Now it goes ahead and talks about Ford. I guess we will leave that out?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Now Line 20, Page 44.

Q. I believe you have described the initial or the first part of the action of the group just before the tear gas was fired. I believe you said there was a tremendous crowd of people there in front of the Lyceum and in the circle or the oval as we call it?

A. Yes.

Q. And that crowd of people, did it increase or decrease during the course of the night?

[fol. 1271] A. I am sure some people left, but it was a good crowd of people there. I have a suspicion that it was somewhat decreased from what it was earlier in the evening. Because when the violence really got started, the tenderhearted I am sure left.

Q. Now, what actually started out there to be a demonstration of what you say was a throwing of rocks, and I believe you said some lighted cigarettes—

A. There was some lighted cigarettes thrown because a canvas top on one of the vehicles was set fire to.

Q. That was just before the Marshals fired the tear gas, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Mr. Gooch: I am trying to read this so I won't get in trouble with you.

Mr. Watts: I think that part is all right. I am kind of reading ahead of you. I will scream when—

Mr. Gooch: Okay.

Q. Did you see actually the immediate movement, action, on the part of the crowd that brought on the firing of the tear gas; was it the throwing of any particular missile?

A. I would say it was, to me it was sort of the brink of the explosion from a demonstration into something uncontrollable. In other words, there was the sound of the [fol. 1272] crowd—the sound of the crowd changed from a jeer to a, well, I would call it a snarl. There were more rocks thrown and there was a sort of a surge forward.

Q. Towards the Marshals?

A. In the direction of the Marshals.

Q. And did it appear that the state police were going to be able to control the situation or did they try?

A. I did not see them try.

Q. And at that point, when that surge occurred and the tenor of the noise turned from maybe jeers and other things, to a snarl, was when the tear gas was fired?

A. Correct.

Q. And that had the effect, I will ask you, did that have the effect of moving the crowd back from the Marshals?

A. Temporarily.

Q. Now, when you first saw General Walker, I believe you said it was about nine o'clock, was he walking toward the Lyceum when you saw him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you said two men were with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were they walking, single file?

A. One on each side of him.

Q. Walking three abreast?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1273] Q. Was there any other group there with him, with General Walker at that time?

A. Not just with him, there were people, you know, walking along.

Q. Behind him?

A. Some behind, some in front.

Q. All moving toward the Lyceum?

A. Yes.

Q. Did these two men, were they holding his arms or anything of that kind when you saw them?

A. As I recall, they were.

Q. They were?

A. Yes.

Q. Then, I believe in your prior testimony you said that you were running in the opposite direction from which he was going?

A. Correct.

Q. In order to make a telephone call?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you lost your telephone connection there on the post, then you had to make these runs at periodic intervals to make your reports, is that correct?

A. No, sir, after we established some kind of a headquarters in the Journalism Building, I quit using the telephone pole position because the Journalism Building was [fol. 1274] considerably closer to the scene of action. I did use the telephone pole phone earlier in the evening and then I went back to it later that night and it was at that point that I discovered that the wires had been pulled out.

Q. Was there some antagonism toward the photographers and the press on the campus that night of September 30?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there considerable?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent did that sometimes show itself?

A. Well, one of the things that happened near the Lyceum was that a television cameraman's car was wrecked.

Q. Did you see that?

A. See the actual wrecking of the car?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see any antagonism—

A. I was on the opposite side of the crowd from, in other words, the crowd obscured my vision then.

Q. Did I understand your testimony that there was evident antagonism of the, by the crowd towards newspaper photographers and news reporters that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt that and knew that as far as you were concerned?

[fol. 1275] A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt that and knew that as far as you were concerned?

A. Well, I will tell you, the first thing we did was to take off our coats, take off our ties, and pull our shirttails out and try to be as near like one of the demonstrators as we could.

Q. Make yourself as less conspicuous as you could?

A. As inconspicuous as we could.

Q. Now, at the time you saw General Walker coming on the campus at about nine o'clock, had there already been violence that had erupted?

A. Yes, sir, and I don't recall at what stage it was at that time.

Q. Now, I believe in your prior testimony you said that the temper of the crowd, the action of the crowd, its anger and its resentment increased during the night just before it finally subsided, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was before and after General Walker's speech, the part of it you heard at the monument?

A. Correct.

Q. Were these people that had these weapons that you call it, the wooden staves, the broken bottles, parts of bricks and other missiles, were they making any evident effort to [fol. 1276] hide them or were they just holding them in their own hands?

A. They had them in their open hands.

Q. Anyone on that campus could see that they were armed with dangerous weapons, that is by throwing within fifty or seventy feet of the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mentioned that you saw no weapons, and by that I understand you to say guns. You mention you saw no guns in the hands of the demonstrators?

A. I did not see any.

Q. At any time during the night, did you hear any guns fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From what direction was it apparently coming?

A. From the east side of the grove.

Q. Away from, in other words, it was not coming from the Marshals, it was coming from someplace other than where the Marshals were, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell whether that was a .22 fire or shotgun fire or what?

A. It was rifle fire.

[fol. 1277] Q. Sounded like rifle fire?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about what time of the night did that occur, if you recall?

A. Oh, as I recall, it was around about eleven o'clock.

Q. Now, the next time after you saw General Walker coming on the campus, I believe you said that he was making a speech at the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how many speeches General Walker may have made at the monument that night?

A. No, sir.

Q. I believe you said when you got there he was already speaking?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as soon as you saw that it was General Walker, you immediately left to report that he was there?

A. As soon as I got the gist of his conversation that I have in my report.

Q. Now, in your prior testimony I think you said you listened to him from two to three minutes?

A. I would say about that long.

Q. Did you see the Reverend Duncan Gray attempt to talk to General Walker at the monument?

[fol. 1278] A. I have tried to refresh my memory about that and I just can't say that my memory is clear that I actually saw Gray.

Q. Did you hear General Walker say that he, Duncan Gray, made him ashamed to be an Episcopalian?

A. If that is in our news report, I would say yes. I will just have to rely on that from this distance in time.

Q. At any rate, that night on September 30, 1962, from the time you got there until the time you left—incidentally, when did you leave the campus?

A. The next morning.

Q. You stayed over there all night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That thing developed from what at first was a demonstration to a full scale riot?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is your language?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is your best way to explain it?

A. Yes, sir, it was a riot.

Q. And it was a dangerous situation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For anyone to have been in that circle or in that immediate area, with the rifle fire and the temper of the crowd [fol. 1279] such as it was?

A. Very much so.

Q. I believe in one of your statements you said disorder broke out all over the place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the riot broke out, it went fast?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, describe as best you can again these, the charges that you said were, had the appearance of a generalized movement toward the marshals. Was it a large group with small factions breaking off and going up further or was it moving in solid front or how did it operate?

A. Well, I would say that the clearest way I could explain it would be that somebody, and I don't know who, would get up a fairly small segment of the whole crowd and charge toward the area from whence the tear gas was coming and at one point, from whence the fire hose water was coming at another point, and there were these groups, one of them would go this way and another one would go from another direction.

Q. All at approximately the same time?

A. Right. No, this went on for a period of time. Then the marshals would fire more gas and the whole crowd would come swarming down and then presently another group would go up.

[fol. 1280] Q. You said swarming down, you mean making a movement toward the marshals, is that what you mean?

A. No, I mean when the marshals would fire their gas, it would disperse the whole crowd temporarily.

Q. They would fall back?

A. Fall back. And then a group would—the only thing I could recall, it would be reorganized, and then somebody would get up courage enough to start back and some would follow them back.

Q. And they would all come in behind and move up toward the marshals?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you see them actually throwing missiles toward the marshals when they got close enough?

A. No, not at that point, no.

Q. Did you at any point see them throw missiles?

A. That was earlier. When you say missiles, you mean rocks and so forth?

Q. That's right.

A. There was a lot of it that went on. Of course, it got a lot worse than rocks before it was over.

Q. Was it noisy on the campus there after this riot was gotten underway?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it difficult for you to hear General Walker com- [fol. 1281] pletely at the monument when he was making his speech?

A. No, I was close enough to hear the part of it that he said while I was in his vicinity.

Q. Now, I believe in some of your prior testimony, you said that there would be a group of people headed in a certain direction and in front of the group would be a flag, a Confederate flag?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that your description of some of these charges that you have referred to?

A. Yes, sir, there were flags in the forefront of some of these charges?

Q. And to you the word "charge", as I understand it, means a group of people headed in a certain direction?

A. Well, it was a group of people headed with determination toward, in the direction of the marshals.

Q. Toward an objective which was the marshals, is that your statement?

A. That's right.

Q. And that is a fair statement of what it was going on there that night, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you said you never saw General Walker actually be in the forefront or included in any of these charges toward the marshals?

[fol. 1282] A. I did not.

Q. Did you see him at any time move with any group of people toward the Marshals?

A. I did not.

Q. Of course, I will you ask you whether or not it could have occurred and you have missed it?

A. Absolutely.

Q. I believe on your direct testimony you said you didn't know how long it was from the time you left while General Walker was speaking at the monument until you returned to the monument?

A. That's right.

Q. And it covered, you said, as much as twenty-five minutes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, of course—

A. I doubt if it was that long, but it covered more than five or ten minutes.

Q. It covered more than twenty-five?

A. Yes, sir. I know at some points during the night we had difficulty getting phone connections. At some points I had to confer with the people on the desk here, that type thing.

Q. In other words, General Walker could have moved up in a generalized movement toward the marshals on one [fol. 1283] of several occasions while you were at the phone making your calls and you not seen him, is that correct or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that could have occurred when you passed him when you first saw him, if he had moved on up toward the marshals at that time, that could have occurred and you not seen it as I understand it?

A. Yes, sir, because as I said earlier, I was on the way to the phone.

Q. Then it could have occurred, as I understand your testimony, immediately after he completed his speech and while you were making your report, is that correct?

A. You mean by "it," his moving—

Q. His generalized moving with the group toward the marshals.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Top of page 57, for continuity.

Q. Now, I believe you mentioned the fire truck. Tell us about the fire truck and the hose incident, if you will, and about what time it occurred.

A. Well, it was, I would guess that this too was around, oh, certainly after ten or 10:30 and I have a notion it was between—about eleven o'clock probably. But this fire truck was captured by the mob at some point and then they have just drove the fire truck up and down the street there [fol. 1284] in front of the Lyceum.

Q. You actually saw that then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they have the hose connected up and were spraying water at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the demonstrators or the members of the mob?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were they spraying the water, in what direction?

A. In the direction of the marshals. Actually, I think their main objective was to try to disperse this gas with the water, so they could get back in the vicinity of the marshals.

Q. How long was that after General Walker's speech?

A. It was sometime after Walker's speech, certainly more than thirty or forty minutes after his speech.

Q. Now, what became of the fire truck, was it seized back by the marshals or did you see it disappear or what?

A. I think that fire truck changed hands three or four times that night.

Q. Now, you mentioned something about the bulldozer incident, what happened on that, tell us about that.

[fol. 1285] A. The crowd commandeered a bulldozer. It was a front-end loader type of equipment, and they tried to use this as an assault weapon and it finally stalled at the curb there and they couldn't get it to going again.

Q. Now how do you mean they tried to use it as an assault weapon, tell us what you mean?

A. I don't want to go into too much detail on that particular thing because I didn't see too much of it, except that I did see the bulldozer moving in the direction of the marshals.

Q. I just want you to tell what you actually saw. That is all you saw was the bulldozer moving in the direction of the marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it, on Circle Drive or in the Grove?

A. On the drive.

Q. And you didn't see the termination of that incident?

A. No, sir, I saw where the bulldozer stalled.

Q. You mentioned also, I believe, tying down an accelerator on an automobile, did you see that incident?

A. I saw the car headed in the direction of the marshals.

Q. Did it have anyone in it?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1286] Q. Any driver?

A. No, sir.

Q. Apparently then, it was then driverless and just had been turned loose toward the marshals, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happened to it, do you know?

A. I believe it hit a tree.

Q. Before it got to the marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in your prior testimony, starting at Line 2 on Page 33—

A. All right.

Q. Now, you tell there about Walker's statement in the speech. "I want to compliment you all on the protest you make here tonight." He did make that statement as you have testified about before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at that time did the students jeer when that statement was made by General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, they jeered when General Walker mentioned that long route to Cuba—

A. That's right. The point where I recall the jeers coming was when he made some reference to settling the thing peacefully.

[fol. 1287] Q. Then the cheers came when he told them he wanted to compliment them on the protest they were making here tonight, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any shouts at that time that the students made incident to that statement, "I want to compliment you."

A. What do you mean by shouts?

Q. Well, you have got, before I think you said the students shouted, "Let's go, Rebels." Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir. There were shouts and cheers intermingled.

Q. Did you hear the statements made by the crowd there, "Let's go, Rebels"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the crowd surged forward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You heard that statement then and you remember it now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did you hear anything about who had let the crowd down as far as letting the marshals on the campus?

A. The Federal Government.

[fol. 1288] Q. Did he say anything about Colonel Birdsong?

A. I believe, yes, Walker said that Colonel Birdsong had sold out the students.

Q. You heard that statement at the monument?

A. He said Birdsong had violated Burnett's orders in letting the Marshals on the campus.

Q. You heard that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that have the effect of infuriating the crowd when he made those statements, General Walker?

A. As I recall, it did.

Q. Now, when General Walker, when you first saw him coming on the campus with the two men abreast holding his arms, as best you recall, he was walking at what type of a gait?

A. Fast.

Q. Fast gait?

A. Yes.

Q. Was his eyes fixed ahead or was he looking right ahead or what was his appearance?

A. Fixed ahead. I would say he was—being I had my own observation—

Q. Yes, that's what I want.

A. I would say he was walking on toward the campus like a man with a mission.

[fol. 1289] Q. Did he appear to be in an emotional state at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What type of emotion would you say, tense or wrought up?

A. Tense, I would say he was in a state of considerable emotional upheaval.

Q. Did he appear to have the same upheaval when he was leaving the campus, if you noticed?

A. Not the same type.

Q. About the same type?

A. I said not the same type.

Q. What difference did you observe?

A. I don't want to get put into the position of rendering expert opinion about what I feel a man looks like, but he was bone-weary, he was still in a state of great tension, great terrific tension, I would say, than when he came on the campus. But, well, let's just say he was bone-weary.

Q. Then I believe that you have at one time said that General Walker was more than an interested observer when he came on the Ole Miss Campus on the night of September 30, 1962, is that right or not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You still subscribe to that?

[fol. 1290] A. I still subscribe to that.

Mr. Gooch: Question, line 11. The last one is line 3.

"Question: Could you estimate the greatest number you saw in any single group?

"Answer: I just wouldn't. I tell you what this thing reminds me of more than anything, was a bunch of stampeding cattle in that the rider goes over here and runs them around this way and pretty soon they are going off in another direction and another rider pulls them back. So it was ebb-and-flow type of thing. At times there were maybe fifty in a group and at other times there would be three hundred in a group, so, you know, it moved that way."

Q. Now, is that your best description of the way that crowd looked in the circle that night?

A. Yes, sir, it was an ebb-and-flow type of surging thing.

Q. And as I understand it, cursing and making loud noises?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taunting?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Rebel yells?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it in the neighborhood of a roar, would you [fol. 1291] call it a roar of voices?

A. At times. The roar came like this. The marshals would fire their gas, the crowd would fall back, then the crowd would begin to surge back toward the marshals and at that point there would be a tremendous roar, pretty much like a footfall crowd roar, as they moved back.

Q. And at the time of those surges and with the crowd roaring like it did, was that best described as a charge toward the marshals or not?

A. I would say yes.

Mr. Gooch: I don't believe the rest of it is admissible. On page 66, at line 13.

Q. Now, I believe at one time you described General Walker's appearance on the campus because he became a focal point of student activity, is that right?

A. I would say he was the focal point of some student activity, yes.

Q. And by student activity, you mean the mob, whether it included students or outsiders that may have come in, is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. Was the crowd drawn to him or not?

A. Some people in the crowd were drawn to him. He was easily recognized.

[fol. 1292] Q. And he was talking in a forceful manner when you heard him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he talking like a leader at that time?

A. He was, yes, he was giving advice.

Mr. Watts: Go ahead and read the next two while you are at it, next two questions or next question and answer.

Q. Did you hear him give any advice about how to handle the tear gas with sand?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Line 23 on page 67.

Q. Now, I believe you said you left during the time that General Walker was making his speech and before he completed it, is that correct?

A. That is to the best of my memory.

Q. Now, after you got back from the Journalism Building, where you made your report immediately after you left the presence of General Walker making his speech, did you sense anything about the nature or tempo of the riot as being changed or different?

A. It had increased.

Q. Now, describe how it had increased.

A. The noise was much louder. I don't recall if the fire hoses had come out at that point, but there was just a gen- [fol. 1293] eral increase in the ferocity of the demonstration.

Q. Was there anything that you noticed about outsiders apparently coming on the campus in greater numbers? What did you notice about that?

A. There were adults who came on the campus, there were other young people with, I saw some Mississippi State sweaters there. You see, what happened was this, that when this trouble started, the radio was full of it, television was full of it, and people from distant points who heard these reports just flocked to the campus, and it took some of them some time to get there.

Q. Now, was the mood of the crowd any different from the time before, just before you heard General Walker make his speech, as to whether it was ugly or what?

A. I can't say whether Walker's speech had anything to do with the mood of the crowd or not, but the mood of the crowd became very ugly as the night wore on.

Q. And General Walker's speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you notice anything about any additional weapons and the size of the weapons after his speech or not that was being used?

A. As the riot progressed, the weapons became more plentiful. You saw more of these pointed staves. You saw [fol. 1294] people scrounging around in the underbrush and over by this new building that was going up, collecting big pieces of rock. As I recall, it was about then that I began to see the Molotov cocktails.

Q. Describe what you saw with reference to the Molotov cocktails and where?

A. These were bottles. Some of them were Coke bottles, some of them were beer bottles filled with some inflammable liquid with a rag stuck down in them. Some of them had newspapers stuck down in them. And to ignite these things, you just lit the fuse and threw them.

Q. Were they being thrown toward the marshals?

A. I didn't see any of these being thrown at marshals.

Q. Where were they being thrown when you saw them?

A. I saw some flashes of light going up, up toward the upper end of the Grove.

Q. Toward the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see any of these Molotov cocktails being actually made, that is, the bottles being filled with this fluid that you mentioned?

A. No, sir, the only thing I could say is that at one point I saw some individuals siphoning gasoline out of an automobile parked on University Avenue and the siphon hose [fol. 1295] was in a bottle.

Q. Now, were you on the campus the next morning after daylight?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At Old Miss?

Mr. Watts: I would like to enter an objection to this, just primarily for the purpose of shortening this thing, all this transaction after on the next day. I don't think it proves or disproves anything in this case.

Mr. Gooch: Well, it has to do with what happened the night before.

The Court: What page and line number?

Mr. Andress: 70, line 10.

Mr. Watts: Primarily to shorten it, we will be here . . .

The Court: I think it's admissible.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Line 10, page 70.

Q. Now, were you on the campus the next morning after daylight?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At Old Miss?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the appearance of the campus?

[fol. 1296] A. It was a military camp.

Q. What was the appearance in the Circle as far as whether or not there was debris?

A. There was debris, there was the wreck, I mean the stalled bulldozer. There were bullet holes in the Lyceum front door casing. There was a heavy odor of tear gas everywhere. The flowers were trampled down, the grass was trampled. Trees had nicks in them, that type of thing.

Q. Were there remnants of concrete benches broken up there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some of the iron, was it still laying around?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I am going to again object to the statements here, if there were weapons noticed in the Lyceum Building, way away from any place that—

Mr. Andress: Page 71, line 3.

Mr. Watts: He goes on to say a lot of things were taken, confiscated from dormitories down at line 20 and 21, which has no bearing on this lawsuit at all.

The Court: I will overrule you.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

Mr. Andress: May it go to the whole line there, Judge?

[fol. 1297] The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Andress: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I will have to go back for the continuity.

Q. Some of the iron, was it still laying around?

A. Yes, sir. And inside the Lyceum Building, of course, there was an arsenal that had been collected on the campus that night, including some of the ugliest weapons I have seen in my life.

Q. Now, you mean that had been collected by whom?

A. By officers of some description.

Q. These weapons had been taken away from the mob?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In general, what were those weapons?

A. Chains, clubs, there was one thing that was a home-made spear that was made by taking what I would think would be about a one-inch auger bit and welding it onto a long piece of pipe which made a spear.

Q. Were there any guns or firearms that you saw?

A. Yes, sir, there was quite a collection of firearms.

Q. Rifles, shotguns or what?

A. Rifles, shotguns, pistols. Now, I might add this parenthetically, that some of these weapons were confiscated from [fol. 1298] dormitories. I know of one case where a student tried to turn in his hunting gun and he was apprehended.

Q. Now, did you see any of the burning cars or automobiles there that night on the campus?

A. I saw, yes, I saw one car that was burning. I can't remember now whether it was the canvas top vehicle. I believe that was it.

Q. Did you see any remnants of burned automobiles the next morning at or near the campus?

A. Yes.

Q. How many, if you could estimate?

A. I think it was only one that I can remember.

Q. Now, the report was that there, that two people were killed that night, is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Was that your understanding?

A. That's correct.

Q. And a good many people were injured?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, going back to your method of reporting that you told us about, that you didn't have time to keep notes, you had to remember the best you could.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Memorize what was said and then at various intervals [fol. 1299] made a break for your line of communication. Is that a customary way to report news items under the situation you were working under there?

A. Under that kind of situation, it is. I have covered lots of them and that is about the only way you can do it.

Q. Now, did you have occasion to be at or present at an interview with General Walker after the Oxford riots that you have described?

A. I interviewed him here.

Q. At about what time, if you remember?

A. Oh, it was, it seemed to me sometime last year.

Q. That was in the year 1963?

Mr. Andress: We think that would be objectionable, all this discussion here some months or years later.

The Court: What is the ground of your objection?

Mr. Andress: That it has nothing to do with the case.

The Court: Not relevant?

Mr. Andress: Not relevant, no, sir. Page 73, line 6.

The Court: Let's recess until about ten minutes until 4:00.

(20-minute recess.)

[fol. 1300] The Court: Mr. Nuss, have the record show the objection made by the Plaintiff's Counsel, made prior to the recess, is overruled.

Mr. Andress: May it go to this entire line about this later matter?

The Court: Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Deposition of Kuettner, of the Associated Press, Plaintiff's witness.

Mr. Cravens: United Press.

Mr. Gooch: United Press, excuse me.

Q. Now, did you have occasion to be at or present at an interview with General Walker after the Oxford riots that you have described?

A. I interviewed him here.

Q. At about what time, if you remember?

A. Oh, it was, it seemed to me sometime last year.

Q. That was in the year 1963?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the substance of that interview if you recall?

A. As I recall, this was an interview, a press conference that was called on the occasion of Billy James Hargis, who is the head of the, I believe he called it Christian Crusade, and General Walker was making some speeches for Hargis [fol. 1301] at that time and they were here to do one of the speeches and they had a news conference and I covered that just in the role of a newsman.

Q. Now, did you read or see any news from Jacksonville, that General Walker had made a statement down there that it wasn't any riot on the campus on the night of September 30, just a bunch of college boys having a lot of fun?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read that statement that he made?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ask him about that statement when he was here in Atlanta?

A. He repeated it at this news conference.

Q. What did he say, the best you recall, at this news conference about that?

A. To the best of my knowledge, I said, he was asked about the occurrences on the night of September 30 and he said, "This was just, this wasn't a riot, it was just a bunch of college boys blowing off steam, having a good time."

Q. He made that statement?

A. Yes, sir.

* * *

Mr. Watts: I would like to read my own redirect, if possible.

Mr. Gooch: Oh, sure, you can read anything you want to.

[fol. 1302] Mr. Watts: Do you want to sit there and answer the questions?

Mr. Gooch: Don't matter to me.

Redirect examination.

By Mr. Dunaway:

Q. Mr. Kuettner, going back to the first question that Mr. Cravens asked you, when this recess terminated just now, that General Walker was still on the monument speaking when you turned to go back to report to Atlanta. That is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir, the best of my knowledge, it is.

Q. And it was, he asked you about somebody saying, "Let's go, Rebels," was that something that occurred when he admonished them to have no violence and they jeered him, was it after that?

A. I think so. It seems to me that this, "Let's go, Rebels," this was sort of a shout from one or more of these guys while Walker was still speaking.

Q. And did you see any group then leave where Walker was speaking when they had that shout, "Let's go, Rebels"? Did you see any crowd begin to leave the monument and go toward the Lyceum?

A. I couldn't say now that I remember that.

[fol. 1303] Q. Was there more than one person that said, "Let's go, Rebels"?

A. I think it was a single voice.

Q. A single voice?

A. Yes.

Q. And were you ever able to identify them or did you see the individual?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he near you?

A. Within hearing distance.

Q. I mean physical proximity, was he across the crowd from you or somewhere near you?

A. It was within the crowd.

Q. Within the crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But after that statement was made, Walker continued to talk and you left?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when General Walker came on the campus and you first saw him with these two men abreast, three of them abreast, did he speak to you, did you speak to him?

A. I spoke to him. I just said, "Good Evening."

Q. Did you speak to him when he left?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said good evening to you then, didn't he?

[fol. 1304] A. That's right.

Q. Do you know whether or not he knew you?

A. I don't think he did at that time.

Q. When you told Mr. Cravens that, something about nothing in these reports as being untrue, these reports, as I understand it, were originated here in this office in Atlanta, based on the information that you and Leon Daniel phoned in?

A. They were written from here, yes.

Mr. Watts: Now go, please to Page 81.

Mr. Gooch: Wait just a minute.

Q. And when you say persons were ahead of him and behind him when he first went on the campus, are you saying they were in his party or just persons?

A. They did not appear to be in his party.

Mr. Watts: The Plaintiff rests.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen, will you step into the jury room, please.

Mr. Gooch: I had one thing in connection with the Kuettner deposition.

The Court: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Watts: May I inquire if Counsel has the original [fol. 1305] UPI new release?

Mr. Cravens: Yes, sir.

Mr. Watts: Why don't we identify and offer it?

(Sotto voce conference of counsel outside the hearing of reporter.)

Mr. Watts: We'd better have a conference on this.

Mr. Watts: If the Court please, the court reporter has previously identified Associated Press dispatches that were furnished by counsel for the Defendant. There is a great mass of dispatches here that would take probably the rest of the week to read. We have numbered and identified the specific releases for the court reporter's record here, and at this time I would like to offer in evidence Exhibit 1 through 9-J; and 3, inclusive, of 3-M, and each one of these have various letters. I guess I'd better offer them.

Exhibit 1-A and B. Exhibit 2-A. Exhibit 3-A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, J, K, L, M.

Exhibit 4-A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K,—down through S; down rather not to but through S.

Now Exhibit 5-A through J.

Exhibit 6-A through I.

[fol. 1306] Exhibit 7-A and B.

Exhibit 8 and Exhibit 9.

Also, we have Exhibit 10. 11 is the plat. Then I do not know if we formerly offered Exhibit 11, which is the plat.

The Court: What about 10?

Mr. Watts: 10 is a news report which we do offer. There is no letters with 10.

Exhibit 12, I think we have offered that. Let's see. And we have 13.

The Court: 13 is in. I admitted those.

Mr. Gooch: We do object to them, if the Court please. I haven't checked through them, but I assume my objection—at least I move an objection unless the matters he has introduced have been encompassed within the Pleadings.

The Court: I will admit them with the understanding that they must have been encompassed within the Pleadings.

Mr. Watts: Incidentally, if Your Honor please, I do not in these releases find copies of the releases furnished to me which include news reports of November 21 and January 21 and 22nd, 1963. Are they in this stack?

Mr. Andress: They are not in these.

[fol. 1307] Mr. Watts: They are not?

Mr. Andress: No, sir.

Mr. Watts: I will need to identify them and offer them separately.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Watts: I have them right here in my briefcase. If Your Honor please, might we take about a five-minute recess?

The Court: Do you have anything to offer after Mr. Watts rests, when he gets through with this?

Mr. Gooch: I don't know. I am waiting to see what he offers on November 21st and 22nd.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Watts: The last one was 13. Here is 14 and 14-A.

(Plaintiff's Exhibits 14 and 14-A, were marked for identification.)

Mr. Watts: If it please the Court, Exhibits 14 are the Associated Press news releases under date of November 21, 1962. And Exhibit 14-A is the release under date November 22, 1962.

Exhibit 15 will be the Associated Press releases under—I am unable to tell the exact date, but these are the releases that include the Stubblefield report, that have the Associated Press identification on them which I, at this [fol. 1308] period in the lawsuit still don't understand. So we will just mark that as Exhibit 15.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 15, was marked for identification.)

The Court: Is 15 in several parts?

Mr. Watts: Well, there are several pages. Really ought to be stapled together.

Mr. Cravens: 15 is the Stubblefield report?

Mr. Watts: As far as I know. At least that is what you gave me.

Exhibit 16 is the Associated Press release under date of January 21, 1963. 1-21-63.

Exhibit 16-A is the AP release under date of January 22, 1963.

Mr. Gooch: The objection will still be the same, although I don't know for sure. My protective objection is, only if they are encompassed within the pleadings.

The Court: All right, I will admit Plaintiff's 14, 14-A, 15 and 16, if they are within the pleadings.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. The Plaintiff, with that rests.

The Court: All right.

The Plaintiff has rested.

Mr. Gooch: I would like to take up a matter with the [fol. 1309] Court.

The Court: All right, Ladies and Gentlemen, I have some matters which will probably take 30 minutes anyway, so I think I will just go ahead and let you go home this afternoon rather than have you wait in the jury room, so as far as you are concerned at this time we will be recessed until 9:00 o'clock, tomorow morning. At that time be back in the jury room.

(Jury out.)

(Following proceedings were had outside of the presence and hearing of the jury.)

The Court: I believe I will take this up in chambers.

(Thereupon, at 4:20 o'clock, p.m., an adjournment was taken until Tuesday morning, at 9:00 o'clock, a.m., June 16, 1964.)

[fol. 1312] Proceedings

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, we have a witness here who is a member of the Mississippi Highway Patrol. I had expected to hold him over here and use him on rebuttal, but he tells me that conditions are such that he cannot possibly stay, and I would like to ask the indulgence of the Court to use him very shortly this morning.

The Court: I will let you re-open. Just one witness, now.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, just this one witness, and I will cut him as short as I possibly can.

Let the record show, please, sir, that the Plaintiff requests leave to re-open, to offer the testimony of a witness, Gwinn Cole.

(Jury enters the Jury Box.)

The Court: Good morning, Ladies and Gentlemen. I have permitted the Plaintiff to re-open his case, to offer one witness, so this is the Plaintiff's witness.

Gwinn Cole, called as a witness by the Plaintiff, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

[fol. 1313] Direct Examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Will you state your name, please?
A. My name is Gwinn Cole.
Q. Mr. Cole, where do you live?
A. Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. Do you hold or have you held any official position with the State of Mississippi?

A. I have.

Q. What is that position?

A. I am assistant director, Bureau of Identification, Mississippi Highway Patrol.

Q. And for how long have you worked with the Highway Patrol?

A. Eighteen years.

Q. Mr. Cole, did you have any training to qualify you for the duties you perform?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, are you a regularly appointed and acting officer in the Highway Patrol?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the brief nature and extent of this training that you acquired to be an officer?

A. Well, I am a graduate of the FBI National Academy in Washington and I am a qualified ballistic expert and [fol. 1314] I am a qualified fingerprint expert.

Q. And have you had practical experience in performing those duties?

A. Yes, sir, I have.

Q. Over what period of time?

A. Over the past eighteen years.

Q. Were you on the Mississippi University campus on the night of September 30th, 1962?

A. I was.

The Court: Pardon me just a moment. Pull microphone over in front of you, please, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. In what capacity were you there?

A. I was there as an official and an assistant to Col. T. B. Birdsong.

Q. Was he the Chief of the Highway Patrol?

A. He was Commissioner of Public Safety and, of course, he's got a chief directly under him.

Q. Was he on campus that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who else was there when the Highway Patrol—

A. Well, the Chief of the Highway Patrol was there and about sixty uniformed men and about twelve plainclothes investigators, including myself.

[fol. 1315] Q. Did the Highway Patrol have a briefing by its officials that night and receive orders?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. From that briefing and those orders, what did you learn as to the situation and what your directive was?

A. Well, we had—

Mr. Gooch: We object to that. It would be hearsay on the part—

The Court: Sustained. It would.

Mr. Watts: The briefing itself was.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did you have a mission that night to perform as a member of the Highway Patrol?

A. I did, sir.

Q. What was that mission?

A. We had information that there was about forty thousand Federal troops—

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as hearsay.

The Court: He asked you as to your mission.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir.

The Court: What you were required to do.

A. My mission was—

Mr. Gooch: Just a minute. We move that answer be stricken from consideration of the Jury.

[fol. 1316] The Court: It's stricken and the Jury is instructed not to consider it.

A. My mission were there to keep down any violence that might occur on the campus that night.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did you have occasion to be out north of town, north of Oxford?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. And was there any type of military installation out there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see that installation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know what it was for?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know the nature and extent of the preparations incident to that installation?

A. Well—

Q. Well, within limits. I know you didn't know the details of them.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that a Federal or State installation?

A. It was a Federal.

Q. And what was your knowledge as to the purpose of it?

Mr. Gooch: Object to that, if the Court please.

[fol. 1317] It would have to be hearsay.

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Watts: Well, all right, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What relation did your mission have with the use of these troops or the projected use of troops?

A. Well, our mission then was to keep down any violence, to not—so that the Federal Government wouldn't have any excuse by bringing the troops on the University campus.

Q. And did you organize your group and prepare to perform that mission?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what place on the campus was that done?

A. That was in front of the Lyceum Building, at the University.

Q. At what time?

A. That was about 6:00 p. m. in the afternoon.

Q. And pursuant to that directive, what was done?

A. Well, the Marshals, United States Marshals, lined up in a circle around the Lyceum Building and we stationed our patrolmen on the other side of the street, between the Marshals and the crowd of students who had gathered on the grass beyond the street—on the other side of the street from the Marshals. And we had them lined up there. [fol. 1318] Now, were the Marshals—to shorten this a little, were the Marshals east of the Lyceum and forming a ring around it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were your Highway Patrolmen in a line to the east of the Marshals?

A. They were.

Q. And where were the students with respect to the Highway Patrol?

A. They were east of the Patrolmen.

Q. Roughly, how many Patrolmen were there?

A. Well, at that time there was approximately sixty Patrolmen and we had them coming in from all over the State; thereafter, they come in . . .

Q. Now, explain to the Jury, please, Officer, just what the activities of this group of students was or were before tear gas was fired.

A. This bunch of students had ganged up there on the grass in front of the Lyceum Building across the street, and, of course, they were heckling the Marshals, thumping cigarette butts and about the biggest thing that I saw thrown was an egg up aside of one of the GI trucks—just general student misbehaviour, I would call it.

Q. Now, Officer, are you trained in the use of or in anti[fol. 1319] mob tactics?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And riot tactics?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as a part of that training, do you understand the purpose and the nature of employment of tear gas in such a situation?

A. I do, sir.

Q. Will you tell to the Jury what is the proper way of employing tear gas under those circumstances?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as wholly irrelevant and immaterial—

The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Gooch: —to any issue in this case.

The Court: I am not going to permit him to testify to that kind of an opinion.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. With the students out there as you stated, was there any physical contact at all between students and Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right, sir. Will you tell the Court and Jury what occurred and just endeavor to re-live this situation, Officer, and project to this Jury just what you saw.

[fol. 1320] A. Well, about, somewhere just before, say, from 6:00 p. m. in the afternoon, the Marshals lined up there and we officers, like all officers do, chatting with the Marshals. There were some from Texas and Oklahoma and all over the United States and naturally we were talking to them. They were friendly towards us.

James P. McShane, the Chief United States Marshal, at about 8:00 p. m., I was talking to him in front of the Lyceum Building and, of course, the students would begin to come in from the week-end, from the ballgame, and they was all gathering up there more or less to sight seeing, I would call it.

And Mr. McShane, after we had, some of them would keep pushing, want to get down in the street and our Patrolmen would keep pushing them back on the grass.

So, just all out of a blue sky, Mr. McShane walked out in the street by the side of me—

Mr. Gooch: We object to what Mr. McShane may have done or what he may have said, if the Court please.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Gooch: Note our exception.

The Court: You may proceed.

Mr. Gooch: It's hearsay and—

A. Mr. McShane says, "Let's 'em have it, gas." And the [fol. 1321] Marshals fired directly into the group of Highway Patrolmen, in the back, wounded some, and directly into the students. And the gas was fired directly into the wind, which, in our opinion, is the wrong way to use it.

And all the students had to do is run back out of the gas into the wind and they would come back. Some of them disbursed and some of them would come back, two or three, and they just kept firing gas into them and finally broke them up into small groups.

Q. Now, for what period of time after the gas was fired did the students stay dispersed?

A. What period of time after the first volley was fired?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Well, they would, I would say, five to ten minutes, they was going to their dormitories. We was telling them to get to their dormitories and somebody was going to get hurt, and, of course, the majority of them did go to their dormitories, but a few would group over on the right and a few over on the left and come back and throw rocks and brick at the Marshals.

Q. How far were you from McShane when he gave that order?

A. I wasn't but about two or three feet.

Q. And in what manner did the Highway Patrolmen [fol. 1322] employ their tear gas weapons? Were they on a curved or flat projectory—

As you were, strike that.

Mr. Gooch: This is wholly irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this case.

The Court: How is it material?

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, the counsel at great length on cross examination—I'm sure he will on his, in his evidence—and I'm laying out the true facts to show just what happened precipitated this riot; that Walker had nothing to do with it whatsoever; that the entire build-up and the cause, proximate cause of the entire violence and riot was the wrongful act of firing—

The Court: Mr. Watts, I don't see that it is material at all.

Mr. Watts: All right, sir.

Mr. Andress: They have gone into it rather at some length on cross examination, Judge.

Mr. Watts: We appreciate the opportunity of being able to put on the witness at all, sir, so I will try to hold it just to the facts.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Now, then, Mr. Cole, you say for a period of five or ten minutes, the students were out of contact with the Highway Patrolmen?

[fol. 1323] A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1324] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did I understand you to say then, did they follow the gas back?

A. Yes, sir, they would follow the gas back up. After the first volley was fired, they would run out of the gas and then they would come back and, of course, after the first volley was fired the majority of them—we kept hollering telling them to get to their dormitories and get out of the way, and the majority of them left and would go to their dormitories, but there were a few that kept staying there, and they would run out in different parts of the campus and on top of buildings, and around behind bushes, and what have you, and run back, and they would get a chance to throw rocks, and take off again.

Q. Was there ever—do you know what a charge is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there ever after that point, and within 10 or 15 minutes, a large charge of all the students?

A. No, sir.

Q. As they came back and this gas would dissipate, what size crowd would build up?

A. Oh, four or five, maybe six in a group, run up and throw rocks, and then take off to the bushes again.

Q. What size did the entire crowd build up to that was there across from the Marshals?

[fol. 1325] A. Well, there never was any large crowd after that first volley of gas.

Q. Where would they go, where did the big crowd go?

A. A lot of them went to their dormitories.

Q. Now were you out in the street at all times after this first volley?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there rocks and missiles being hurled after the gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a helmet or anything on?

A. No, sir.

Q. How were you able to avoid the missiles?

A. Well, I would just try to get behind one of the Marshals that had on a helmet.

Q. And did any of the rocks or missiles fall close to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How close?

A. Well, two or three feet, and they would hit our cars. We would get behind the cars, too.

Q. Mr. Cole, tell the jury just what the visibility was from the time they—the first mass of tear gas was fired?

A. Well, I would say after it was fired, the first volley, [fol. 1326] it was fired, and the wind was blowing and the gas would rise off the ground, and of course it would look like a fog underneath this gas.

And you could see approximately 100 to 110 feet underneath the gas.

Q. Do you know where the flagpole was?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you from time to time see the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see a single individual who was close enough to the Marshals to throw a rock?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Could you see him in the actual throwing?

A. Yes.

Q. And what would the Marshals do when those lads would run up there and throw things?

A. Well, they would fire another round of tear gas at him, if they couldn't get ahold of some—some of them had their guns in their hands to try to scare them off.

Q. Now at this point where were you with respect to the front steps of the Lyceum Building?

A. Right in front of the steps, just off the sidewalk in the street.

Q. And could you at all times except when the tear gas had just been fired make out the outline of the Lyceum [fol. 1327] Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, sir. Now had you known General Walker prior to this incident?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you first—where did you meet him?

A. Well, I had read about General Walker a lot and I had saw him on television, his pictures in magazines, and and then I had met him one time at Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. How long did you visit with him when you met him?

A. Well it was just a short while, in a group there that was talking to him.

Q. Was there anything distinctive about his headgear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you step over here to the chart, please, sir, and bring that little pointer there with you.

To orientate the area here, this street is University Boulevard, this is the circle, here is the Confederate monument, the flagpole and the Lyceum Building (indicating).

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you take the pointer and point out to the jury where you were at the time the tear gas was fired?

A. Right there (indicating).

Q. What was the furtherest you got away from that [fol. 1328] point for the next—strike that.

How long were you in that area?

A. I was in that area until approximately 9:50 or 9:55.

Q. All right, sir. Did the Highway Patrol pull out from this area in front of the Marshals immediately after tear gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did they go?

A. They went off the campus—I mean down to the bowling—to the gymnasium, right over here (indicating).

Q. I see. The gymnasium?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they later get in their cars and pull clear off the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did that occur?

A. About 9:30.

Q. Where were you when that happened?

A. In front of the Lyceum Building on the porch, or steps.

Q. From your testimony then, you stayed in that area until about 9:50 or 9:55?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Take the stand, please, sir. At any time from the [fol. 1329] time gas was first fired until the Highway Patrol left were you out of the area for any period of time?

A. No, sir. After 9:50 or 9:55, I got on my radio to see where the officers went, and so they told me—

The Court: Just a minute.

Q. Oh, yes, don't say what they told you.

The Court: Just describe what you saw.

Q. Did you go in the Lyceum Building at any time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When and how often?

A. I went in there about two minutes after the gas was fired, and I come right back out about a minute after I went in there, and saw that my commanding officer wasn't wounded any way, and then I came right back out.

Q. Who did you see inside the Lyceum?

A. I saw Mr. Katzenbach and Mr. McShane, who fired the gas.

Q. Was Katzenbach the lawyer from the Department of Justice?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, sir. As you stood out there in front of the Lyceum was your visibility such that you could see an individual moving across the north side of the circle from a point approximately at this sidewalk, and approaching the Lyceum? Could you see a man?

[fol. 1330] A. Yes, sir.

Q. That far away?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see a man well enough to where you could identify him as to what type clothes, and particularly what kind of hat he had on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If a six foot man with a big white hat had appeared in this area here (indicating), could he have escaped your observation?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We object to that as a conclusion on the part of the witness, and move that the answer be stricken.

The Court: Sustained. The jury is instructed not to consider it.

Q. Tell us what the visibility was with respect to being able to identify a man six feet tall who had on a big white hat, from the position you were, and that man being in a position just east—as you were—just west of the north-south sidewalk? Tell us what you could have seen?

A. I could have seen well enough to identify him.

Q. What do you mean? Could you have seen him well enough to tell if he had somebody ahold of him by each arm?

A. I sure could.

[fol. 1331] Q. And could you have seen to this point well enough to where you could have identified, we will say, as many as 100 men behind him, if that had occurred?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as a conclusion on the part of the witness.

Mr. Watts: That is not a conclusion.

Mr. Gooch: I have a right to object.

Mr. Watts: I have a right to answer.

The Court: Overruled.

Let me do the ruling, Counsel.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Yes, sir, I am sorry.

Now, Mr. Cole, I wish you would brief the court and jury, please, as to exactly what you saw in this area in front of you from the time the gas was first fired until 9:30.

Mr. Andress: 9:50.

A. Yes, 9:30. Well, directly in front of it I could see two or three students run up ever once in a while out of the bushes, like I say, and throw rocks at the Marshals, and I could see a few over here on this side run out. They were hollering and carrying on, and, of course, every time some would run out from behind the buildings, the Marshals would shoot at them with tear gas, and they would run back, and—but I never saw over six or eight in one bunch [fol. 1332] at any time run up and throw rocks at them.

Q. Did, at any time from 9:30—from 8:00 o'clock until 9:30—from 8:00 o'clock until 9:30 did any group of people approach the Marshals with three men out in front of them, one with a big white hat on, and the other two on each side holding him by the arm, and as many as 50 people behind, immediately behind them?

A. No, sir, never did.

Q. Was there at any time a charge—strike that.

Was there at any time ever a movement toward the Marshals from that direction of as many as 1,000 people, any time all night?

A. No, sir, never was.

Q. Now are you familiar with the time that the Highway Patrol pulled out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did they pull out?

A. In their automobiles.

Q. Did some of them go to the top of the circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from and after the time they pulled out until you left there at 9:50 or 9:55, was there any large movement of the crowd from the direction of the circle toward the Marshals that resulted in the throwing of a large number of rocks, bricks or missiles?

[fol. 1333] A. There were not.

Q. Prior to the time they moved out, what was the biggest group that ever approached the Marshals and threw rocks?

A. I would say not more than seven or eight.

Q. Now was that an organized activity, or was it sporadic?

A. It was not organized. No organization whatsoever.

Q. From and after the Highway Patrol left until you left at 9:50, what was the biggest single group that came out and threw missiles towards the Marshals?

A. Not more than seven or eight.

[fol. 1334] Mr. Watts: I believe that is all.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Mr. Cole, you said that you knew what "a charge" was. These people that come out there, the six, seven and eight, and would throw at the Marshals, is that a charge?

A. A charge?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I wouldn't call that a charge, no, sir.

Q. In other words, the group that came forward and threw the rocks, they weren't charging?

A. No, sir, I wouldn't call that a charge. I would just call it a disorganized group of students.

Q. Doing what?

A. Throwing rocks.

Q. But that wouldn't be a charge?

A. No, sir, I wouldn't call that a charge.

Mr. Gooch: That's all. Thank you, sir.

The Court: All right, I am going to excuse this officer.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, I would like to have him excused. He has to return to Mississippi. Thank you, Officer.

Mr. Andress: We rest, now, Judge.

Mr. Watts: Plaintiff rests.

[fol. 1335] Mr. Andress: Thank you.

(Sotto voce conference at the Bench, wherein Defendant renewed its motion made at the close of Plaintiff's prima facie case, the record to be completed later.)

Mr. Gooch: Could you give us about five minutes?

The Court: Yes, sir. Ladies and Gentlemen, step into the Jury room. The defense will start in a few minutes. We will give you about a 5-minute break now.

(Short recess.)

Mr. Gooch: Dean Love, will you come around, please, sir?

LESTON L. LOVE, called as a witness by the Defendant, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Please state your name?
A. Leston L. Love.
Q. Where do you live?
A. At the University of Mississippi.
Q. Are you connected with the University of Mississippi?
[fol. 1336] A. Yes, sir.
Q. In what capacity?
A. Dean of the Division of Student Personnel and Professor of Education.
Q. How long have you been connected with the University of Mississippi?
A. Since October, 1949.
Q. What is your educational background, Dean?
A. I hold the Bachelor's and Master's Degrees from Oregon State and the PhD. from Ohio State.
Q. On September 30th, 1962, were you an official in the same capacity you have testified about with the University of Mississippi?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you recall prior, the times, any times prior, briefly, to the 30th of September, 1962? Of a Court battle over the admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Prior to September 30th, 1962, had the Courts ruled, the Federal Courts, the Circuit Court ruled or not that Meredith was to be entered on the campus of the University of Mississippi?
A. Yes, sir.
[fol. 1337] Q. Prior to September 30th, 1962, had Gov. Ross Barnett or anyone acting in concert with him effectively blocked the entrance of Meredith to the University of Mississippi?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how had that been accomplished, Dean?

A. Through the—the last one was that—through that doctrine of inter position and then Gov. Barnett barred entrance to the campus at one time and barred entrance to the Board of Trustees at another time and the Lt. Governor barred his entrance at one time, as I understand it.

Q. Was that physically barred?

A. I don't know what you mean by "physically barred."

Q. Well, were they present, these men that you are talking about—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —present and refused to allow him to come on the campus, is that correct?

A. That's my understanding.

Q. Now, there has been much said about the September 30th, 1962, and I don't want to go into a lot of repetition. Were you present at any time on the campus on the University of Mississippi on September the 30th, 1962, when Federal Marshals were there?

[fol. 1338] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about what time the Federal Marshals got on campus that afternoon?

A. Approximately 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon.

Q. Did you go to the campus—I believe you lived on the campus. Did you go in the area where the Marshals were located?

A. Immediately after they arrived.

Q. And where is your office on the campus of Ole Miss?

A. In the Lyceum Building, first floor.

Q. Would you describe, as best you can, to the Jury the scene you saw when you arrived at the Lyceum Building somewhat after or around 4:00 o'clock p. m. on September the 30th?

A. The Lyceum Building, which is a large building, was surrounded by Federal Marshals standing shoulder to shoulder, completely surrounding the building.

A large number of Highway Patrol were also on the campus near where the Marshals were at that particular time. When I got there I went through that group immediately into the building.

Q. All right. Did you observe at that time whether or not there were any students or persons other than Marshals and Highway Patrolmen in the area of the Lyceum [fol. 1339] Building?

A. Very few at that time.

Q. All right. Now, describe generally what occurred after the time you got to the Lyceum Building that afternoon?

A. In the building at the time I got there, there were several Federal officials, officials of the Justice Department, in the building.

The Director of the State Highway Patrol was there, the Chief Marshal was there. I would say half a dozen Justice Department officials.

I was there. And Mr. Hugh Claik (phonetic), the director of development, came about the same time I did.

Q. All right. Now, did you have occasion to go back out in front of the Lyceum Building after your first entrance into the building?

A. Many times during the—in the next several hours.

Q. Now, you observed a moment ago that when you got there, there was a small group of students in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Not even in front. Sort of off to one side at that particular time.

Q. All right.

[fol. 1340] A. Just a very few, as I recall it.

Q. Now, as time went on, what happened to the crowd? Did it increase or decrease?

A. It increased pretty rapidly.

Q. Now, getting down to somewhere around 7:00 or 7:30, in that vicinity, did you have occasion to be back out in front of the Lyceum Building where you could observe the crowd?

A. Yes, I went out and into the crowd at various times, surrounding there, trying to talk the students in the group into leaving and going to their dormitories, getting away from there.

Q. What was your response, Dean?

A. I wasn't very effective.

Q. All right. Do you recall the event of gas being fired that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where you were when the gas was fired?

A. I was in my office at that time—or in the office adjacent to it, rather.

Q. Prior to the time that gas was fired on that evening, detail as best you can what you observed the students, or whoever they were out in this area, doing with respect to the Marshals.

[fol. 1341] Mr. Andress: We would like to have the time fixed, Your Honor.

The Witness: I'll do the best I can on time because I didn't keep a log of it.

A. Perhaps the best way would be to start with this: That in the early stages there were relatively few students. Then there was a sort of a pep rally-type of yelling, and so on, waving of some flags. That's the best way I know how to describe that.

It was, I would say, relatively good-natured; that was the sound of it.

And as time went on, the crowd got louder and the character of the sounds they made, they sounded more—"vicious" isn't quite the word, perhaps—

Mr. Andress: I believe this is calling for opinion, Your Honor.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: All right.

The Court: You may proceed, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Go ahead.

Mr. Andress: May it go to the entire line, Your Honor?

The Court: No, sir. You make the objection.

Mr. Andress: As to what it sounded like?

The Court: You make the objection whenever you think [fol. 1342] it is necessary.

A. The noises became louder and there were some more people out there and the—gradually, as time went on, the crowd was getting up closer to the Marshals, sort of crowding out into the street, so they were getting up not very far from them.

And there was, as I went out there at various times, I would hear remarks that were rather obscene made.

And eventually, there began to be little things thrown, not much, and began to be more up along to the time of the firing of the gas. And it was getting pretty rough before the gas was fired.

Q. All right. Now, I believe you stated that you were not in, out in front when the gas was actually fired. Could you see from your office window the front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, prior to the time that the gas was actually fired, do you know whether or not there had been any casualties to the Marshals?

A. A few came into the building. There was no one, as far as I recall, no one seriously hurt before that time but I did see, oh, two or three or four or five people with abrasions, apparently had been hit with something. And I heard that they had been—

[fol. 1343] Q. Were they Marshals?

A. I think so.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I would say yes, they were.

Q. All right. Now, after the gas was fired, can you give a description of what happened out there in the Circle?

A. Well, the gas was fired over a long period of time.

Q. I am talking about right after the gas was fired.

A. I was not out there immediately after the gas was fired, but that drove the crowd back a ways, and then they would surge back up about to the edge of the street there, the width of the street in front of the Marshals.

And the crowd was increasing. And it was becoming pretty loud, pretty boisterous and pretty angry.

Q. At the last time you were out in the front of the Lyceum Building immediately prior to the time gas was fired, would you be able to then estimate the number of persons that were not Marshals or Highway Patrolmen that were in that Circle?

A. It's difficult to do and if you think about around the whole building and if you think about those who were back a little ways, without being too sure of myself at all, of [fol. 1344] course, I would say that maybe 1500 people.

Q. All right, sir. Now, after the gas was fired, did you observe the crowd after that as it would come in back toward the—you said surging forward toward the Lyceum?

A. Yes, I was out not just once but many times after that gas was fired, in and out of the building and watching that.

Q. Would you say, based on your best judgment, that the crowd decreased or increased after the gas was fired?

A. I would say for a time that it probably increased.

Q. All right. Would you say for how long a period of time or would that be just an estimate?

A. It would certainly be just an estimate and I hesitate to answer because I'm not certain.

Q. All right. Now, this crowd that was out there, were they all participating in these throwing of things at the Marshals or was there a lesser group that was participating in that?

A. I would say there was sort of three rings out there: One was a front line group that was pretty active and pretty angry and participating very much in the riot—very, very actively participating.

[fol. 1345] There was a group back of them that seemed not to be participating, more just wanting to be up to see what was going on. They were up pretty close.

And then farther back, I think there were just spectators, pretty largely spectators farther back in many of the areas.

I went through that group at one time, talking to that hard-corps group, trying to get them to disperse, went into that second group, got some of them to leave. And I never did move on back to those that I thought were just spectators.

[fol. 1346] Q. Now the situation as you have described it, was that before the gas was fired?

A. Before and after.

Q. Now after the gas was fired did you have occasion to go out there in the—in front of the Lyceum Building?

A. Several times.

Q. What did you observe there that was happening in that circle, Dean Love?

A. Well, of course, there was movement going on out there. I could see—a couple of times I saw small groups moving up from further away toward the center, more toward the center of activity, and the gas would be fired, and the crowd would move back. Sort of back and forth movement, part of the time.

Q. Did you observe anything being thrown at the Marshals by any of this crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Dean, how long did that situation exist, where some of them would break away from the crowd and come up and throw at the Marshals?

A. I really don't know because I was occupied inside the building so much, and my concern was with the group immediately up there, rather than those back. Anything I observed back there was more or less casual. I saw some movement but paid no particular attention to it.

[fol. 1347] Q. Did you make every effort, any effort, Dean, in your capacity as Dean, to try to stop the riot?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do? Was it successful or not?

A. I didn't have—I tried to get ahold of a loud speaker so I could talk to them, but I was unable to get one.

Q. All right. Now, how long did you remain in the Lyceum Building that night, Dean?

A. I left there one time to go to the Union Building to meet with the student body president and the cabinet, and the leaders in the student government, who were having a meeting. That was about 8:30 at night, and I was gone about 20 or 30 minutes at that particular time.

Q. Was a meeting of the student cabinet held at about 8:30 that night?

A. The time was set for exactly 8:30. I remember that very clearly.

Q. Did you attend that meeting?

A. I attended that meeting.

Q. It would be hearsay and not admissible as to what went on at that meeting, but as a result of that meeting, did the student leaders do anything that you know of?

A. The public address system that is available there at the student union building was manned constantly trying [fol. 1348] to get the students not to come down in the area. It was located in a position that it couldn't reach those out in front of the Lyceum Building. They wouldn't be able to hear it. It was to keep others away.

Then after that some of the student leaders went out into the crowd and tried to talk people away.

Q. Did they have any success?

A. I don't know.

Q. All right. Now during the—I believe I asked you what time you left the Lyceum Building that night, or the next morning. Do you remember?

A. It was about 2:00 o'clock in the morning.

Q. Now during the time you were in the Lyceum Building there—strike that question.

At the time that you went outside the Lyceum Building and observed this crowd were you able to discern whether or not the group was composed entirely of students, or were there some outsiders there?

A. There were outsiders.

Q. Dean Love, you have worked with college age and college looking students for a long time, haven't you, Dean?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And having been in that business are you pretty well able to tell what is a student and what is not?

[fol. 1349] A. If the extremes are great enough you can tell.

Q. Now during the time you remained at that Lyceum Building that night, were there any casualties brought into the Lyceum Building?

A. A good many.

Q. About how many?

A. There were a few real serious ones. The first one we thought was going to die on the floor right there. One Marshal.

And then there was one with a broken leg, and then somebody with a shot in the back that wasn't serious. Somebody that had been hit in the head, and then I would say they ranged down from those.

The number was pretty large. I don't know how many.

Q. Would you estimate about how many people were brought in there suffering from some sort of casualty?

A. You mean just anything?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I would have to say I am not sure of my answer but I would say 50.

Q. All right, do you know whether or not any person was brought in there under arrest?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any idea of the number of those persons?

[fol. 1350] A. There were one hundred—about 160 people arrested. Not all of them were brought into the Lyceum

Building, I think the number brought into the Lyceum Building must have been 75 or 80 or 90.

Q. Of the number who were arrested did you make any check to determine what percentage of those arrested were students as compared to outsiders?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?

A. About 25 of this 160 who were placed under arrest were University of Mississippi students.

Q. The rest of them, I assume, were outsiders?

A. Some college students from other places.

Q. All right. Now, Dean, how had you gone over to the Lyceum Building that evening?

A. I was at the Chancellor's house, which is on the campus at the time the Marshals came, and I drove over in my car from his house.

Q. Where did you park your car there, Dean?

A. Almost directly in front of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Did anything happen to your car that night?

A. Certainly did.

Q. What?

A. It was hit with tear gas cannisters and all the glass knocked out, and burned some on the inside; I mean from [fol. 1351] the tear gas. And the chrome was torn off.

Q. All right, did you go home in your car, or walk home?

A. Neither. I was taken out the back way by one of the men who was there in the Lyceum Building who knew a way that he could get out.

Where my car was parked I didn't choose to drive through what I would have had to have driven through.

Q. Was the rioting still going on, when you left there that morning?

A. Seriously.

Q. Did you ever hear that General Walker was on the campus that night?

Mr. Andress: I object to what he heard, Your Honor.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: Hearsay.

The Court: You may answer.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember about what time it was?

A. I would say it was in the neighborhood of 9:00 o'clock, something like that.

Q. Dean Love, did you keep up with the—or was there any way to determine the comparison of the tempo of the crowd that night?

[fol. 1352] A. I am not sure that I know quite what you mean.

Q. I am talking about the violence and the intensity of the violence.

A. It became much greater as time went on.

Q. Directing your attention to somewhere around 9:00 o'clock, would you be able to state whether or not the intensity of the violence increased after that?

A. Yes, I thought it did. I know that it did. Though the students gradually began to disappear. It was not too long after that.

Q. You say the students began to disappear. Did anybody take their places?

A. More people—more people came in. The total size of the crowd dropped, but it began to be—it was not so much of a student crowd, but there were—I would say by 10:00 or 10:30, that a pretty large share of the students who had been out there were gone.

Q. But there were others?

A. Yes.

Q. Now did you hear any reports of firearms, or firearms reports that night?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Will you describe that to the jury, please.

A. Well, when I stepped out of the Lyceum Building I heard a bullet whistle by my ear. That was imbedded in [fol. 1353] the front of the building there.

There were several bullets in the course of the night that were imbedded in the front of the Lyceum Building.

Q. Would you be able to fix the time at about what time this bullet whistled past your ear?

A. I am not certain. It was not early. It was along 10:00, 11:00, 11:30 or 12:00, something like that.

Q. It didn't make too much difference to you about time at that moment, did it, Dean?

A. That was my least concern.

Q. Now were you able the next day to determine how many bullet holes or bullets, evidence of bullets coming into that Lyceum Building were visible?

A. I would say that on the front of the Lyceum in the woodwork there, oh, seven or eight or ten bullet holes, and then one went through a window and then two windows were cracked, apparently from spent shotgun pellets.

Q. There is some water there if you care to wet your throat, Dean.

You retired from the Lyceum Building to—at 2:00 a.m. Did you return there the next morning?

A. At 8:00 o'clock.

Q. Now can you describe generally the state of the campus, and particularly from in front of the Lyceum Building eastward toward the monument, when you got there the [fol. 1354] next morning?

A. I walked through the campus the next morning from my home, which I suppose is half a mile from the Lyceum Building. And as I reached what we call the grove, which I suppose would be the far side of the grove, oh, 300, 350 or 400 yards from the Lyceum Building—

Q. Can you stop right there just a moment. The grove has been used interchangeably by the witnesses in this case. They have used the word grove, and circle. Will you step down here with me just a moment.

On Plaintiff's Exhibit 11—it is a scaled map of the University of Mississippi, and I see up here to what I would say would be the northeast of the Lyceum Building a large place entitled "the grove," is that what you refer to as the grove?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is not what we have been referring to as the circle where the monument and the flagpole is?

A. That is correct.

Q. I say are they synonymous?

A. No.

Q. In other words this is the grove up here to the northeast?

A. Two entirely different things.

Q. You are talking now about the grove?

[fol. 1355] A. Yes.

Q. Have your seat, please, sir. You had gotten from your home on the way to school to the grove?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you see there?

A. One of the things I happened to observe was that quite a few—I guess cement seats out in the grove, and those were all broken up and most of them were missing, apparently been broken up to use for ammunition.

Mr. Andress: That is a conclusion, purely, Judge.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Just say what you saw, Dean. The benches were broken up?

A. I am sorry. Those seats—most of them had been pretty well broken up in there. Then as I got up nearer the circle the—of course there was lots of tear gas around there still, but I was still able to see through some of that, and the whole place—the first thing I saw was several burned cars around the circle. And I don't know, six, maybe. And they were badly burned, and I saw my own sitting over there and saw that it was damaged, and one of my staff member's car was right by mine and it was damaged and around in the circle there there was, oh, kind of debris, I guess you would call it, broken up bricks and glass and many things like that, and tear gas cannisters [fol. 1356] there. It was really a very badly cluttered up place.

Mr. Gooch: Please mark this as a Defendant's exhibit. I don't know what it is. I believe it is 18. Defendant's Exhibit 20.

(Thereupon, Defendant's Exhibit No. 20, was marked for identification.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what has been marked Defendant's Exhibit 20, and can you recognize any of the items you see in that picture?

A. Of course the building is the Lyceum Building, the main one in the background. And this picture must have been taken the next morning.

Mr. Andress: Now just a minute, Your Honor.

Mr. Gooch: He can tell what it is.

Mr. Andress: He says, "Must have been taken the next morning." Either it was or wasn't.

The Court: Ask him if he saw it.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. To get out of this, Dean Love, does that picture depict the scene in front of the Lyceum Building that you saw around 8:00 o'clock on the morning of October 1, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Gooch: We offer it in evidence, if the Court please.

The Court: Defendant's Exhibit 20, is admitted.

[fol. 1357] Mr. Gooch: Mark this Defendant's Exhibit 21.

(Thereupon, a photograph was marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 21 for identification.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 21. Can you or not identify this as a scene that you observed in the early morning of October 1, 1962?

Mr. Watts: If we can be looking at the others, it will save a lot of time.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Andress: This hasn't been identified, Your Honor, as to where it is. It is a scene the following morning.

The Court: I am going to overrule that, if he is offering it.

Mr. Gooch: I am offering it in evidence, if the Court please.

The Court: It is admitted.

Mr. Gooch: Will you mark this as Defendant's Exhibit 22.

(Thereupon, a photograph was marked Defendant's Exhibit No. 22 for identification.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 22, and ask you if you recognize any of the elements shown in that picture?

[fol. 1358] A. They look like, very much like—

Mr. Andress: Now if the Court please, we think the answer to that is yes or no.

The Court: Mr. Andress, the proper time to object is after the exhibit is offered, not while he is trying to identify it, so you are overruled at this time.

Mr. Andress: All right, sir.

A. This is a picture of the scene along in the late afternoon of September 30th.

Q. 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you observe the Lyceum Building in that picture?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you observe the Marshals?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you observe the students or onlookers in that picture?

A. I would say students and onlookers.

Mr. Gooch: We now offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 22.

Mr. Andress: We object to it because it has not been properly identified, Your Honor.

The Court: Overruled. It is admitted.

[fol. 1359] (Thereupon, photographs were marked Defendant's Exhibit Nos. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 28, inclusive, for identification.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I now hand you what has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 23, and ask you if the items portrayed in this picture are familiar to you?

A. Yes, sir, they are.

Q. And when did you see the scene such as is depicted in that picture, Dean?

A. The first time on the morning of October 1st, in the neighborhood of 8:00 o'clock.

Mr. Gooch: We offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit No. 23.

Mr. Andress: We object to it because it has not been properly identified.

The Court: Mr. Gooch, the witness hasn't testified as to where the picture was.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right, can you identify it as to the location of the items as depicted in Exhibit 23? Was it on the campus of the University of Mississippi?

A. It was on the campus of the University of Mississippi and on the circle, in the circle.

The Court: Defendant's Exhibit 23, is admitted.

[fol. 1360] Q. Dean Love, I hand you what's been marked as the Defendant's Exhibit 24, and ask you if you can identify the content of that picture as to location and time, if you observed the pictorial matters that are depicted in that picture?

A. This is on the Circle again and I observed this and the other cars on the morning of October the 1st at approximately 8:00 o'clock for the first time.

Mr. Gooch: We offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit No. 24.

Mr. Andress: We object, as it has not been properly proven.

The Court: Overruled. Defendant's 24 is admitted.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what's been marked for identification as Defendant's Exhibit 25. I'll ask you to look at that photograph and tell me whether or not you can identify the building and the scene as it is depicted in that picture?

A. The building in the picture is the Lyceum Building and the scene there is as it appeared when I went to the building early in the morning of October the 1st, about 8:00 o'clock.

Mr. Gooch: We offer Exhibit No. 25 in evidence.

Mr. Andress: We object to it as not being properly [fol. 1361] proven and not being relevant.

The Court: Overruled. Defendant's 25 is admitted.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what's been marked as Defendant's Exhibit 26, and ask you if you can identify the matters depicted in that picture, as to time and location?

A. That would be after dark. It's a picture of the Lyceum Building taken from north of it and this would have been after dark on the night of September 30th or even conceivably early in the morning of October the 1st.

Mr. Gooch: All right. We offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit No. 26.

Mr. Andress: No objection.
The Court: Defendant's 26 is admitted.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what's been marked Defendant's Exhibit 27 and ask you if you can identify the matters as shown in that picture, as to time and location?

A. This is the front of the Lyceum Building and, of course, it's a picture that was taken after dark. There isn't enough detail here that I would know how to estimate the time.

Q. Would you say it was a picture taken after dark on the evening of September the 30th, 1962?

[fol. 1362] A. Yes, or, again, I would say it could conceivably have been real early on the morning of October the 1st.

Q. Was it during the darkness?

A. During the darkness.

Q. All right.

Mr. Andress: No objection—have you offered it?

Mr. Gooch: Oh, no. I now offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 27.

The Court: It's admitted.

Mr. Andress: No objection.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Dean Love, I hand you what's been marked Defendant's Exhibit 28, and I'm not sure as to whether or not it is a duplicate of one issued earlier.

Will you look at that and see if that's a duplicate of a picture that has been introduced prior?

A. This one has not been introduced prior, I feel positive. This is in front of Carrier Hall.

Q. All right, sir. And what does that depict?

A. It's on the Circle.

Q. And did you observe a scene such as that when you arrived there on the early morning of October the 1st, 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that scene identify any permanent campus ob-
[fol. 1363] ject?

A. The principal object is Carrier Hall, the Engineering Building, which faces the Circle—well, south of the Circle.

Q. Does the Carrier Building face north toward the Circle?

A. Yes.

Q. And in about what distance from the, shall we say, crosswalk that intersects the campus in a north and south direction?

A. Fifty-seventy-five yards, perhaps.

Q. Will you step down a moment to the map just to identify Carrier Hall? On the map here, I believe that Carrier Hall is depicted as almost straight away with the north and south walk that intersects the Circle on the south of the circle, facing north, is that correct?

A. Correct.

Mr. Gooch: We now offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 28.

Mr. Andress: It's not been properly proven and we object to it on that ground, that it's not properly proven and not relevant.

The Court: Overruled. Defendant's 28 is admitted.

Mr. Gooch: I will pass the witness for cross examina-
[fol. 1364] tion.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Dr. Love, were you personally present at the time that Meredith was barred from the campus?

A. No, sir, I wasn't.

Q. All you know about it, then, was what you heard?

A. That's right.

Q. Where were you on the campus when the Marshals arrived?

A. At the home of the chancellor of the University.

Q. How did you know the Marshals were arriving?

A. I saw them drive past—we saw them drive past his residence.

Q. You mean you had no advance notice that Marshals were going to arrive on the campus?

A. No, I didn't mean that. We knew maybe an hour before.

Q. How did you receive the information that the Marshals were going to arrive on the campus?

A. Mr. Hugh Cleeg, the Director of Development, was also at the Chancellor's home and was in telephone communication with some member of the Justice Department; I'm not sure who it was.

[fol. 1365] Q. Were you having a conference of the top University brass over there at the Chancellor's house, because of this situation at this time?

A. Yes.

Q And the Chancellor, of course, Chancellor Williams, is his name, isn't it?

A. (Witness nods "yes".)

Q. He's the head of the University?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And who would be second in command?

A. The Provost of the University would be second in command.

Q. Who was the Provost?

A. At that time it was Dr. C. H. Haywood.

Q. He was there?

A. No.

Q. Where would you rank in the chain of command, Dr. Love?

A. There is the Chancellor and three major divisions—four major divisions of the University: The Business, the Academic, the Development, and the Student Personnel. I am head of the Student Personnel Division.

Q. So you would be one of the next echelon, just below the Provost, is that right?

A. Yes.

[fol. 1366] Q. And were the heads of all these other divisions there at this conference that Chancellor Williams had when the Marshals arrived?

A. No.

Q. So you had Mr. Cleeg and Chancellor Williams and yourself, and who else was there?

A. That's all.

Q. Now, I wonder if you would mind taking your pointer there and showing where Chancellor Williams lived? Up on Faculty Row, is it, that I believe is over here?

A. Sorority . . . I have to get—

Q. Here is Sorority.

A. Here is the Chancellor's residence (indicating).

Q. That's the Chancellor's residence down there just north of the Grove.

A. Yes.

Q. And where do you live, please, sir?

A. I live right there (indicating).

Q. You live at the one that is marked number 25, up on Sorority Row, farther north; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did the Marshals, when they came in, come up off of old Highway 6 and down Sorority Row?

A. That is new Highway 6.

Q. Oh, new Highway 6? I thought the by-pass was south [fol. 1367] of town here. That is new Highway 6. They came off of new Highway 6, then, and—pardon me—they came off of new Highway 6 and down Sorority Row and around the Grove, Loop and University Circle, until they got in front of the Lyceum, is that correct?

A. I don't know the de—it would just have to be that way. I didn't actually see them.

Q. But, at any rate, they did come past the Chancellor's house here in Sorority Row, close to the Grove?

A. That's correct.

Q. Did you hear the rumble of the truck—thank you, if you will sit down again—did you hear the rumble of the trucks as you were there?

A. I don't know whether I heard the rumble of the trucks or just happened to be looking out of the window.

Q. Were you watching for the trucks?

A. No, I wasn't. We were in a little study that faces out onto the road there.

Q. Well, all three of you knew that the Marshals were coming?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know where they were coming from?

A. No.

Q. Now, that evening or right after they arrived on the [fol. 1368] campus—what time did you say they arrived?

A. About 4:00 o'clock.

Q. And you, then, went over to the Lyceum after they arrived?

A. Within a very few minutes afterwards.

Q. You drove over, I believe you said?

A. Correct.

Q. And had the trucks, the transport trucks, the personnel carriers, left the area or were they still in front of the Lyceum?

A. There were some still in front of the Lyceum. I'm not sure how many.

Q. About how many Marshals were there at that time?

A. I would say several hundred. At least they were standing shoulder to shoulder essentially around the, completely around the Lyceum Building.

Q. At that time did you know Mr. McShane?

A. You mean before they came?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I did not.

Q. And had you been in conference with him?

A. No.

Q. Did you know Mr. what's-his-name? Katzenbach.

A. Katzenbach?

Q. Katzenbach.

[fol. 1369] A. I did not.

Q. What is his first name, do you know?

A. Nicholas, d-e, capital B.

Q. Nicholas B. Katzenbach?

A. Small d-e, capital B. I don't know what it stands for.

Q. He's an American citizen?

A. As far as I know.

Q. Now, when you went into the Lyceum, besides Nicholas de Katzenbach, what other Federal officials were in there?

A. Mr. McShane, the Chief Deputy Marshal was in there. A man by the name of Guthman.

Q. Gutman?

A. Guthman, G-u-t-h-m-a-n (spelling), I believe is the way it is spelled. He was a public relations officer for the Justice Department.

Q. Public Relations Officer? All right, go ahead.

A. There was a Mr. Shlei.

Q. Shly?

A. S-h-l-e-i (spelling). And Mr. Dorr, I believe, was in there.

Q. D-o-r-r (spelling)?

A. I think that's the way it is spelled. I'm not certain.

[fol. 1370] Q. Is that the crop?

A. As far as I recall it, for the Federal officials.

Q. That's five men. You have said there were six of them.

A. Well, I may have been wrong in saying six and there have been another one whom I don't recall.

Q. Who was in charge?

A. Mr. Katzenbach.

Q. And Mr. Nicholas de Katzenbach is a what? Assistant Attorney General of the United States?

A. I believe his title is Deputy Attorney General, Deputy United States Attorney General.

Q. All right. Now, I believe you stated that at the beginning of the evening, this was pretty much a pep rally-type of thing?

A. That's the way it sort of sounded to start out with.

Q. And later on, you said that it became more vicious. Would you say that it eventually turned into a mob?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at what point did it cease to be a pep rally or Halloween-type thing and become a mob?

A. It was a continual—I wouldn't know when to say it was one or the other.

[fol. 1371] Q. Well, with reference to the firing of the first volley of tear gas into the crowd, when would you say that the change from pep rally into mob occurred?

A. It had occurred before that.

Q. It had occurred before that?

A. I would say so.

Q. Would you say that the firing of the volley of tear gas into the group accentuated its unhappiness?

A. Nobody was happy.

Q. The firing of the tear gas, however, do you know whether the public relations officer of the Justice Department had anything to do with the firing of the tear gas?

A. I wouldn't know.

Q. You don't know whether or not that was considered part of the public relations duties?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, did it improve the public relations as between the students of the University of Mississippi and the Federal Marshals?

A. The whole situation was deteriorating steadily and I don't know how to say what did what, really.

Q. But you didn't see anything more of the pep rally-type thing after the tear gas was fired, did you?

A. That's correct.

[fol. 1372] Q. And do you know approximately when that tear gas was fired?

A. Somewhere around 8:00 o'clock or a few minutes after.

Q. Were you inside at that time listening to the President's speech or looking at the President's speech?

A. I was doing—I was inside and I was doing neither. I don't remember exactly what I was doing, but I just simply heard it fired and didn't know what it was at first.

Q. Did you hear the President's speech?

A. No.

Q. You didn't look at it?

A. No.

Q. Would you say that the tear gas was fired before any effect, before the President's speech could have had any effect on the people that were around?

A. The people who were around certainly were in no position to hear the President's speech or to see it on TV, those who were around the building. I don't even know what time the speech was given.

Q. Do you know whether there were the usual bunch of portable transistor radios that the students had with them?

A. I really don't know.

[fol. 1373] Q. Now, when was it that you made an attempt to get a large loud speaker for the crowd?

A. I tried two or three times and we even tried to get one of our own brought in, which we were unable to do. But they couldn't get in there.

And it was along, I would hate to say when, 8:00 o'clock, 9:00 o'clock, some such time; I am just not clear about the time.

Q. Would you say that it was before that first volley of tear gas was fired?

A. I know we talked about it before that time, if we could get one, and couldn't.

Q. Well, now, why couldn't you get one, Dr. Love?

A. Well, we thought we would be able to get one from the people who were there. They thought they had one there and they didn't. And we were on—we were not expecting this and we, they said we didn't have any equipment in the building at all of that sort.

Q. The Marshals didn't have any loud speaker or communication system there?

A. They had none that I could get. They used none.

Q. Well, did they have one there?

A. I didn't see one.

Q. Did you ask them if you could use one to try and quiet the crowd?

[fol. 1374] A. Yes, yes.

Q. Did they refuse to let you have one?

A. It wasn't a case of refusal. There was some comment to the effect that it was not operational at the time.

Q. There was, however, a loud speaker that the Marshals had there with them; is that right?

A. I had never saw it.

Q. Did they tell you that there was one but it was not operational?

A. Yes, something to that effect.

Q. Who told you that?

A. I have no idea which one it was.

Q. Well, was it—you don't know whether it was Mr. Nicholas de Katzenbach or not?

A. I feel it was not he, but I don't know who it was.

Q. And if you had had an operational loud speaker there prior to the time the tear gas was fired, do you believe that perhaps you could have some influence on the crowd?

The Court: Just a minute.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as improper cross examination.

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 1375] Mr. Gooch: Calling for an opinion and conclusion.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Now, Dr. Love, you are in charge of student personnel?

A. Yes.

Q. And as the man in charge of student personnel, the relations between the University authorities for the maintenance of discipline of students are in your charge?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is your responsibility to quiet and calm students from causing any trouble on the campus?

A. If I can.

Q. And did you want to attempt to do that that night and in pursuance of your duties?

A. Oh, of course.

Q. And was it your opinion that you could do something about it?

A. I was completely uncertain. I wanted to try anything that I thought might work.

Q. And did you, in the said pursuit of your duties, feel that if you had had a loud speaker system—

The Court: I just sustained an objection to that, counsel. It's not coming in.

Mr. Andress: I have laid a predicate for it.

The Court: No, you haven't. You may proceed.

Mr. Andress: All right, sir. We would like it for the [fol. 1376] Bill subsequently.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Now, are there loud speaker systems on the campus of the University of Mississippi?

A. That's correct.

Q. Did you make any attempt to get one of those?

A. Yes.

Q. And what prevented that?

A. That was after the tear gas was fired and things were so very rough and we simply couldn't get it in.

Q. Did you receive any assistance from the Marshals or these five Federal officials there about getting a loud speaker in from anywhere else on the campus?

A. I don't think we asked them; that we tried to get on the telephone and see if we could get one brought in that was available on the campus at some distance off.

Q. Tell me, is the Lyceum Building the general offices of the administrative officers of the University?

A. Yes, sir, the major officials have their office there.

Q. What other major officials were present in the Lyceum that night, Dr. Love?

A. Mr. Cleeg was there for a period of time and then he had to leave to get with the Chancellor and try to do some other things. And then I called in three or four of my men to come in to help.

[fol. 1377] Q. By "three or four of your men," you mean your assistants in the Department of Student Personnel?

A. Correct.

Q. Were there any State officials there other than as distinguished from University officials?

A. The Director of the Highway Patrol was in there for a period of time.

Q. That would be Col. Birdsong?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you see his assistant, Officer Cole, that was here this morning?

A. Not as far as I can recall.

Q. Did you know him before?

A. I am not sure. The name was very familiar, but I am not sure whether I know him personally or not.

Q. Now, you were, then, the highest official of the University that was present in the Lyceum after—well, even before Mr. Cleeg left, weren't you?

A. Well, I wouldn't say I was higher than Mr. Cleeg.

Q. No. Well, all right. After Mr. Cleeg left, you surely were?

A. I guess that's correct.

[fol. 1378] Q. And then as far as the University was concerned in that situation there, you were Senior in command?

A. Within that particular segment, with the Chancellor and others working in other areas.

Q. Well, now were you issuing as—being in command, were you issuing instructions as to people working there with you, or were you completely under the control of the Federal Officials?

A. Not under the control of the Federal Officials at all. We were trying to telephone and get communications and figure out what we could do.

Q. Now—now when you left about 2:00 o'clock, you said 2:00 o'clock in the morning, any particular reason why you left at that time?

A. Well, sort of a personal reason. I had the flu that day, and I was utterly exhausted. And I knew I had to be there at 8:00 o'clock the next morning.

Q. You certainly had a fine cure for the flu that night. There was still, I believe you said, serious rioting going on?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you leave some of your assisting personnel there in charge?

A. I did.

Q. I believe you stated there were about 160 people [fol. 1379] arrested that night. Do you know how many of those people were ever prosecuted?

A. No, I don't, it—except that it wasn't very many.

Q. Wasn't very many. Do you know how many had charges filed against them?

A. I don't know.

Q. You say there were about 25 students. Were any of them prosecuted through University channels?

A. Yes.

Q. How many of them?

A. About eight or ten.

Q. And how many of them were disciplined?

A. All of them were disciplined.

Q. To what extent?

A. Some were placed on disciplinary probation, which was just the strongest warning that could be given that if they ever did anything again, they would be gone.

Q. How long were they placed on this disciplinary probation?

about 1500, were mostly students, weren't they?

A. I am not at all sure that they were.

Q. And eight or ten were placed on probation and told not to do it again?

A. These were turned over by the—out of those who were taken into custody the Justice Department turned over statements about them, and those where they were able to substantiate them, were.

Q. Now there is one thing I want to get straight in my mind. About 8:30, you met with the student counsellor, is that right?

A. With the president of the student body and his cabinet, and other student leaders.

Q. Cabinet. Pardon me.

Cabinet. That about 20 or 30—

The Court: Is that a good stopping point?

Mr. Andress: As good as any.

(A 15-minute recess was had.)

Q. Dr. Love, you say it was about 8:30, when you met with the student cabinet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that lasted about 20 or 30 minutes?

[fol. 1381] A. Something like that.

Q. And then was it the understanding that the members of the student cabinet were going to get out and mill in the crowd?

A. Some of the boys were going to go out. There was no agreement that everybody go. Some of them said they were going to go.

Q. Some of them were going to go out and mix and mingle with the crowd?

A. To try to get them to disperse.

Q. That would be about 9:00 o'clock?

A. Approximately that.

Q. And you testified that the intensity of the crowd increased right after 9:00 o'clock?

A. It was certainly increasing along through there.

Q. Of course you have no personal knowledge of what the leaders of the student council actually did when they got out there among the students, do you?

A. If you mean did I actually hear them, I would have to say I don't know.

Q. You don't know whether they actually calmed them or incited them?

A. Well—

Q. You were not there?

A. I wasn't there.

[fol. 1382] Q. But immediately after 9:00 o'clock, after this meeting broke up and the student leaders were going out among the crowd, you did testify there was an increase in the intensity of the crowd?

A. That's right.

Q. Now may I see the pictures in evidence. I believe they are up here.

In this Defendant's Exhibit 20, what were the buses doing on campus at 8:00 o'clock in the morning, Dr. Love?

A. I have no idea.

Q. You did see them there yourself when you first went on the campus at 8:00 o'clock?

A. I wasn't conscious of them. I don't know now whether the buses were there then or not.

Q. In other words you don't know whether at 8:00 o'clock those buses actually were there?

A. I don't know about the buses, no.

Q. Now, sir, Carrier Hall that is shown in Defendant's Exhibit 28, that is off at a fair distance from the Lyceum, isn't it? A quarter of the way around the circle?

A. Which isn't very far.

Q. Uh-huh, but it is quarter of the way around the circle?

A. Just about.

[fol. 1383] Q. There had been no Marshals there, had there?

A. Not as far as I know.

Q. By the way, had Chancellor Williams been out there on the campus with the students during this—the events of the night?

A. It is my understanding that he was. I didn't see him.

Q. Had he been out there in the afternoon about the time the Marshals came?

A. I don't know what time he came up, but he was out late during the evening some. He was on what you might call the back side of the crowd and I was in the front side, primarily at the Lyceum Building.

Q. Defendant's Exhibit 22, can you place approximately what time of day that was taken, please, sir?

A. Well, because of the size of the crowd I would say that it would have to be sometime after 5:00 o'clock, and of course, before dark. I wouldn't be able to pinpoint it exactly.

Q. Was there ever a rope or anything of that sort put up to separate the crowd from the Marshals, or the Highway Patrol?

A. Not to the best of my knowledge.

Q. The Highway Patrol is present in this picture, is it not? You see some of the Highway Patrolmen, don't you? [fol. 1384] A. Those (indicating) may be, right in there. I couldn't tell for sure.

Q. You mean there where there is sort of an open space between the Marshals and the crowd, that may be the Highway Patrol, is that right?

A. I am looking at the backs and I am thinking they may be.

Q. Were you present in the Lyceum Building after the tear gas was fired when there was quite a hassle between the Highway Patrol, Col. Birdsong, and the Marshals about their firing tear gas into the backs of the Highway Patrol?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, we object to that as an unfair question based on facts not shown to exist. Not proper cross examination.

The Court: Sustained.

Q. Was there an argument between the Highway Patrol's representative, Col. Birdsong, and the Marshals about the firing of the tear gas?

A. I did not hear it.

Q. You didn't hear it. I am going to hand you the Defendant's Exhibit 27, and ask you—that is a Marshal there in the picture, isn't it, a Deputy Marshal?

A. I suppose. It is difficult for me to tell on this one. This is one it is hard for me to tell just what it is.

[fol. 1385] Q. What has he got around his neck? Can you tell?

A. I just really don't know. I looked at this and I can't tell.

Q. Is that typical of the visibility and the identifiability of people there after dark that night?

A. The front of the Lyceum Building was very well lighted.

Q. Was there anything else in the circle area that was very well lighted after dark that night?

A. That was the most well lighted area, was in the front of the Lyceum. There were lights around the other buildings, but not as bright.

Q. I hand you Defendant's Exhibit 26, which also shows the lighted front of the Lyceum Building. Is that picture fairly typical of the visibility and the identifiability of people there that night?

A. I would say it is not. There was much more identifiability than this. This is a very dark print.

Q. More identifiability in the dark areas than they were in the light areas by the Lyceum?

A. Now what is that question?

Q. They are not identifiable—more identifiability in the dark areas than in the light areas around the Lyceum?

A. It was lighter than this picture would indicate out away from the Lyceum, is what I am trying to say.

[fol. 1386] Q. Have you seen these pictures before today?

A. Yes.

Q. When have you seen them?

A. Day before yesterday.

Q. Who is Black Starr? Do you know?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know who took these pictures?

A. No.

Q. Was there anybody taking pictures for the University out there that night?

A. I don't think there was on that particular night.

Q. Do you know whether the Public Relations Department section of the Department of Justice was taking any public relations pictures out there that night?

A. They weren't that I know about.

(Thereupon, a photograph was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 17, for identification.)

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Dr. Love, I hand you what has been marked for identification as Plaintiff's Exhibit 17, and ask you to take a look at that, please, sir. Now would you say that that is the way the Lyceum and the Marshals looked there in the afternoon of the 30th, before it got dark?

A. In the very early stages, yes.

Q. You would say that is a correct representation, of [fol. 1387] the scene?

A. Oh, around in the neighborhood of 4:00 o'clock, or not too long thereafter.

Mr. Gooch: No objections.

Mr. Andress: We offer in evidence the Plaintiff's Exhibit 17.

The Court: It is admitted.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. The Plaintiff's Exhibit 17, was before the Highway Patrol got there, wasn't it?

A. I don't know. I would say probably not. The Highway Patrol was there very early.

Mr. Andress: Mark this 18.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. I hand you what has been marked for identification as the Plaintiff's Exhibit 18, and ask you to take a look at that. Was that the way the Highway Patrol was employed in front of the Marshals, between the Marshals and the crowd?

A. I would say not after—not after a period of time. There were more than that, and they tended to be across the street.

Q. But in the early stages would you say that was a correct representation?

A. This—I just don't know about that.

[fol. 1388] Mr. Andress: We offer in evidence the Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 18.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Of course you would recognize Chancellor Williams if you saw him, would you not?

A. I believe I would.

(Thereupon, a photograph was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 19, for identification.)

By Mr. Andress:

Q. I hand you Plaintiff's Exhibit 19, and ask you whether that is a picture of Chancellor Williams some place out there on the campus talking to some of the students, probably students, I would say?

A. Well, I don't know whether it is on the campus or not because there is nothing I can identify. That is Chancellor Williams talking to these—I suppose them to be students.

Q. You can't tell from the walk and the trees and so on whether that is in the circle?

A. No, sir, I just can't. I don't think there is enough there for me to tell.

Q. Could be but you are not sure?
A. Could be: I just don't know.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I think it would be proper to try to fix some period of time as to the picture. [fol. 1389] The Court: If you are objecting to it I will sustain it.

Mr. Gooch: I will object to it unless they show what time it was.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Do you know—is this a daylight picture?
A. It is a daylight picture.
Q. And did you know whether Chancellor Williams was out there in the afternoon of the 30th, among the students at the same time you were?
A. I think he got out there later.
Q. But it was still daylight?
A. Yes.

Mr. Andress: We re-offer it.

A. Yes, but I don't know, I don't know that it was even taken that day.

Mr. Andress: We re-offer it.
The Court: Is the only objection as to time?
Mr. Gooch: Yes.
The Court: All right, I will overrule the objection and admit it.
Mr. Gooch: What I am talking about, the time the picture was taken, whether on that day or some other day, or what is the picture.
The Court: I thought you meant the time of that day. [fol. 1390] Mr. Gooch: No, sir, the time the picture was taken I don't know whether it was a week before or a week after.
The Court: All right. I will sustain the objection.

(Thereupon, a photograph was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 20, for identification.)

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Now Mr.—Dr. Love, I hand you what has been marked for identification as Plaintiff's Exhibit 20, and ask you whether that is a correct representation of the way the Marshals appeared there on the steps of the Lyceum, on the afternoon of the 30th of September?

A. That is the way they appeared—at first I wasn't sure that was the steps of the Lyceum, but I would say that it is now, yes.

Mr. Gooch: No objection.

Mr. Andress: We offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 20.

The Court: You mean Plaintiff's Exhibit.

Mr. Andress: Yes, Plaintiff's Exhibit 20.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Now as far as those two pictures taken during darkness were concerned, Dr. Love, you said you couldn't estimate what time of night they were taken, but it was after dark and before the following morning?

[fol. 1391] A. Yes.

Q. Sometime during the night of the 30th of September—1st of October?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who took those pictures?

A. No, I do not.

Q. How long did it take the tear gas to clear off of the circle?

A. Days and days and days.

Q. Did it remain as a cloud that interfered with visibility, or did it just get to the point you could smell it as you passed through?

A. Just smell it. It cleared off as far as the cloud was concerned very quickly.

Q. Still there the following morning?

A. No, the cloud, as I recall it was gone, but certainly the smell was there.

Q. Now the Lyceum Building, tell me, is that the center—the headquarters of the whole university?

A. I would say it is, yes.

Q. It have any particular meaning to the student body, traditional, anything of that sort?

A. It is sort of a symbol of the University.

Q. And of the State?

A. I wouldn't go that far.

[fol. 1392] Q. What is the name by which the football team of the students of Ole Miss is known, just like we have our Texas Longhorns, what is the name by which Ole Miss is known?

A. We have the Ole Miss Rebels.

Q. Known as the Ole Miss Rebels?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Andress: I believe that is all.

Mr. Gooch: No further questions.

The Court: I am going to release Dr. Love.

Mr. Andress: Do you have any further questions?

Mr. Gooch: No.

Mr. Andress: I do have one more.

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Dr. Love, did you know a newspaperman named Van Savell?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Do you now?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Never made his acquaintance at all?

A. Never.

Mr. Andress: That is all.

Mr. Gooch: No further questions, thank you, Dean.

The Court: All right. I will release you.

JOHN E. KING, called as a witness by the Defendant, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

[fol. 1393] Direct examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Please state your name to the Court and jury.
A. My name is John Edmond King, Jr.
Q. Where do you live?
A. I live in West Point, Mississippi; known as Jack King.
Q. How old are you Mr. King?
A. I will be 42, August 6th.
Q. Do you have an occupation?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is it, please, sir?
A. I am manager of two radio stations, WROB in West Point, Mississippi, and WAMY in Amory, Mississippi.
Q. Are those towns close together?
A. Yes, sir, about 30 miles apart.
Q. Where is West Point, Mississippi from Oxford?
A. It is approximately 90 miles southeast.
Q. How long have you been manager of these radio stations?
A. I have worked for them—WROB since it went on the air in '47. I have been manager since—I was made manager in 1950. I was called back into service two years, and resumed managership in 1952.
Q. Do you have an educational background?
[fol. 1394] A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is it, please, sir?
A. I am a graduate of the Electrical Engineering School at Mississippi State.
Q. All right, now, what do you do—what are your duties generally, or specifically, in these radio stations?
A. I am station manager of WROB, in that I direct all its operations. I am general manager of WAMY. I have a local manager on the scene, but I am over him.

Q. Do you do any news gathering yourself?

A. In the course of normal operations I have done and continue to do all phases of broadcast. I started out there as an announcer. I have a First Class radio and telephone license with the FCC. I am the chief engineer.

On special events coverage, I have done quite a bit during my time, though basically I am not a reporter.

Q. How long have you lived in West Point?

A. Since I was six years old.

Q. Do you belong to any organizations there?

A. Yes, sir, I am a member of and Past President of the local Rotary Club. I am a member of the local Episcopalian Church, and Past Senior Warden.

Outside of local organizations, I am a member of the Mississippi Broadcasting Association, and was Secretary for this past year.

[fol. 1395] Q. All right, sir, directing your attention to September 30, 1962, do you recall that date in your mind?

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Do you know where you were on that date?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you please give us a chronological account of your activities, say, beginning at noon, September 30, 1962.

A. Of course, most of the time leading up to that, as well as I recall, I first went to the campus at the University of Mississippi on the day that they were expecting the confrontation between the Highway Patrol and the Federal Marshals.

Q. Would that have been—

A. Which never did come off.

This was, I believe, the previous day.

Q. All right.

A. When that did not come off I went back to West Point, Mississippi, and got some additional equipment which I thought I might need, and returned to the campus of the University.

It is very difficult to tell exactly what time that I did get on the campus. I have been told—

Mr. Andress: Now we will object.

Mr. Gooch: Don't say what you have been told.

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 1396] A. I am sorry.

Q. Just tell the best you can what you did on September 30th. Did you go to the campus?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any estimate of about what time you arrived there, based on the sequence of events?

A. Based on the sequence of events, I would say that I arrived at the Oxford Radio Station about 7:00 o'clock.

[fol. 1397] Q. All right.

A. And must have gotten on the campus, oh, sometime between 7:30 and 7:45 p. m.

Q. All right. What did you do when you first went on the campus, Mr. King?

A. I drove on the campus and went to what I believe they call University Circle, which is where the Lyceum Building is at one end of it. I drove around the right hand part of the Circle and got as close as I could with my automobile and parked it on the Circle itself, and I estimate that I was able to drive somewhere between seventy-five and one hundred yards within to—within that distance of the Lyceum Building, and parked my car.

I left my car—

Q. Did you see anything significant when you got there?

A. Of course, the—at that point, the focal point of everything that was taking place was the Lyceum Building.

Q. What did you see there, Mr. King?

A. And you could even see from my automobile the fact that the Marshals were ringing it and that a large crowd had gathered in front of them.

Q. Did you go into that crowd?

A. I left my car and followed the road. At that time the Federal Marshals were ringing the Lyceum Building itself. [fol. 1398] The students were—I say "students"—the people that were there. At that time most of the gates were closed and it was probably students on hand.

But the crowd was separated from the Marshals by almost the width of the street itself. But it did leave a cleared area for the whole length of the Lyceum Building, between the Marshals and the crowd.

Q. All right.

A. So, I traveled the length of the Lyceum Building between the two groups.

At the time I went through there, the Highway Patrol was in position, keeping the two separated and was in process of trying to move the crowd back out of the street and up onto the curb itself.

But I was able to make my way the length of the Lyceum Building between the two groups.

Q. Did you observe any activity there between the group out on the grass and the Marshals?

A. I observed students using a can of spray paint on one of the Army trucks which had brought the Marshals to the scene.

There was a great deal of shouting going on. I did not see any violence, I did not see anything being thrown or any physical contact between the two groups.

Q. All right. Did you proceed on, then, in some direction? [fol. 1399] A. Yes, I continued on around the Circle to the next building, past the Lyceum Building, which I understand is the Chemistry Building, and I went into this building, going in the front door, looking for a telephone so that I could call back to my radio station and give them a report of what I had seen.

Q. The Chemistry Building is south of the Lyceum Building, is it not?

A. It continues—I started around the right hand side of the Circle and as you face the Lyceum Building, the Chemistry Building is to the left of it.

Q. All right. Did you go in the Chemistry Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what purpose?

A. I was looking for a telephone to call back to my radio station.

Q. Were you successful in getting a 'phone call through?

A. No, sir, there was a telephone in that building but another reporter was using it and indicated that he had no intentions of giving it up.

Q. All right. How long did you remain in the Chemistry Building?

A. Just guessing, I would say maybe fifteen minutes. [fol. 1400] The only reason that I—I continued to look to see if there was another telephone. I found none. And it was while I was in this building that the tear gas barrage was fired by the Federal Marshals.

Q. Did you actually see the barrage fired?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. After you were unsuccessful in your 'phone call, where did you go then?

A. I continued on around, I went out the back entrance of the Chemistry Building, continuing in the same direction around the left hand side of the Circle and came to the next building, which I understand is the Carrier Building, or the Engineering Building.

Q. That building, I believe, is almost due south of about the center of the Circle, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, it's to the left of the center of the Circle, yes, sir.

Q. All right. Then, did you enter that building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did you do there?

A. Again I entered it by a back entrance. In the hallway I met some gentleman who evidently was on the faculty and asked him if he could tell me where I could get a telephone and he let me in one of the offices on the front side of the building.

[fol. 1401] Q. All right. Were you able to use the telephone then?

A. Yes, there was a telephone there. I was able to get an operator and call back my initial report to my radio station from that point.

Q. Do you have any estimate of how long you were there at that time?

A. Again, here, I would guess in the neighborhood of fifteen to twenty minutes. It took me some few minutes to get my telephone circuits, to make my call, make my report.

The room in which I was in was on the front side of the building and I stayed in that room and was able to look out the window and observe some of the action that was taking place.

Q. What did you see as you looked out the window there, Mr. King?

A. At this time during this period, it seems that there was intermittent tear gas barrage—barrages which were being fired. Each time it was done, the crowd would move back or with the gas and getting out of range and as the wind would blow the gas back in toward the Marshals, then the crowds would generally come in behind it and so there was this ebb and flow of people as the gas was released by the Marshals.

[fol. 1402] Q. Did you see any activity on the part of the crowd toward the Marshals?

A. Only the fact that they would follow in behind the tear gas. At this point, I don't believe that any of them were able to get close enough for the throwing of objects—which took place later—because the tear gas was quite thick.

Q. Did you see any objects in their hands?

A. Not at this time, no, sir.

Q. All right. After you had completed your call in the Carrier Building, what did you do then?

A. It had been expected that there would be tear gas used and so I had brought with me a gas mask and I was at that time, thought it would be a good idea to get back to my car, if I could, and get the gas mask because tear gas was very concentrated at that point.

Q. All right, sir.

A. So, I again went out the back of the Carrier Building and continued around behind—

Q. Could you step down here to this large, enlarged map on the wall, which is Plaintiff's Exhibit 11, and show the Jury the route you took when you left the area of the Carrier Hall?

A. I came out the Carrier Building, I believe, at this entrance here (indicating), continued around behind the [fol. 1403] Chemistry Building, continued behind the Lyceum Building.

Q. May I stop you there for a moment? Had you felt the sensation of any gas at the time you—

A. I had been quite severely gassed, I guess you would call it. Of course, no personal damage, but certainly plenty of tears, all the sensation—

Q. Trace your movement from the Carrier Building?

A. And continued on past, from the Carrier Building, behind the Chemistry Building, circled the Lyceum Building and tried to—my car was parked along here (indicating), and I tried to come between these two buildings, reaching my automobile.

Now, the wind, as I recall, was generally blowing at this direction and, of course, the greatest concentration of tear gas seemed to be in this area (indicating), and it was impossible to reach my car. I could not get through the tear gas.

I went as far as I could and finally had to go back.

Getting out of the tear gas, I continued to go with the wind at that time until I wound up here at the Student Union Building.

Q. Now, the Student Union Building on that map is west and a little bit north of the centerline of the Circle; sir, is that correct?

[fol. 1404] A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Did you go in the Student Union Building?

A. Yes, sir, I went in the Student Union Building and stayed there some few minutes. I cannot estimate—it must have been fifteen minutes or possibly longer. I tried to use a telephone there, but at that point I never could raise an operator and so I did not make a call, but I was in there a long enough period to at least try.

Q. All right. After you left the—did you leave the Student Union Building?

A. Yes.

Q. And where did you go then?

A. At that time, since the tear gas was blowing at this general direction (indicating), I thought it was—would be best to get upwind of it, hoping that as the tear gas would move, that eventually I could get back to my car.

And so as I came out of the Student Union Building I retraced basically the same route I had taken getting there and came behind the Chemistry Building, behind Carrier Hall and eventually wound up at this end of the Circle (indicating).

Q. "This end of the Circle," are you referring now to the monument on the east end of the Circle?

A. On the east end of the Circle, yes, sir.

[fol. 1405] Q. Take your sheet, Mr. King. What did you observe as you approached the monument there on the east end of the Circle?

A. The first thing that I observed that caught my attention was a man appealing to General Walker. I later learned that it was Duncan Gray. I did not know him personally at the time.

And he was making an appeal to General Walker to stop —he says, "General Walker," he says, "They will listen to you. Please make them stop what they are doing."

And in reply to this, General Walker turned to him and said, "I am sad for you. Go make your spiel somewhere else."

Q. Did you recognize General Walker at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you seen him before?

A. I had seen him on television, I had seen pictures.

Q. All right. Now, have you detailed as best you can the dissertation between Rev. Duncan Gray and General Walker at that time?

A. There was additional conversation between the two. It was taking place at the time I walked up. And evidently it seems that I must have gotten there near the end of it because this last comment by General Walker, I believe, [fol. 1406] was the last comment that I heard. With that, he turned and walked away.

Q. Where did he go?

A. He walked off. I could not tell you what direction it was. He walked off in some direction in the same general area, I mean, he did not walk a long ways off. He just moved off from the point at which Duncan Gray was.

Q. Was anybody around him at that time?

A. Yes, sir, there were groups that were gathering whenever he would be recognized. It would be those who would come up to where he was standing and at this point he was watching the action which was between us and the Lyceum Building.

Those who were gathering around him were telling him stories of injuries that had been reported taking place, Highway Patrolmen that had been gassed and struck by the tear gas shells.

It was reported that there was a girl that had been severely gassed and they were telling him about the various things that had been taking place.

Q. All right, what did he do then?

A. He listened, listened very quietly to what they were saying and finally he turned to them and says, "You are doing all right." He said, "Riot, riot. You are getting news [fol. 1407] all over the country." He says, "Now you have got casualties," sir.

Q. All right. Did you see him do anything thereafter?

A. Several of them who were in the vicinity called to him to make a speech and he first said, "This is not the time nor the place," but there were continued calls for him to make a speech and finally he agreed to do so.

A. All right. Did you listen to his speech or any portion of it?

A. Yes, sir. I was there during the duration of his speech. I moved with him. I recognized the importance of his being there and as he moved in these different points, I stayed very close. I was never more than just a very few feet from him.

Q. Did you know at that time that he was a former Major General of the United States?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now, did he get—did he make a speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from what position?

A. Standing at the base of the statue. There was a slightly raised portion of the—as well as I remember, there was a curbing built around the statue and it was filled, [fol. 1408] giving him a slightly raised position to the rest of the crowd.

Q. Did you listen to ~~his~~ speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you able to recollect now what you heard him say in that speech at that time?

A. Yes, sir, I took notes on his speech. I had a small note pad which I was able to hold on the side of my leg and I was writing on it without actually looking at what I was writing.

I was not holding a pad up in front of me writing, but I was taking down key phrases, as best I could, during his speech.

Tuesday following, I took these notes and sat down and typed up a compilation of the content of my notes, plus the bare memories that I still had of what took place, and I do have his speech typed up as best I can.

Q. Do you have those notes with you that you took that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you produce them, please, sir?

You have made available to me some slips of paper that look about two by, say, three inches?

A. Approximately, yes, sir.

Q. Or maybe one and three quarters. With some writing

[fol. 1409] on it. And there are a series of these notes, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir, those are the actual notes that I took that night.

Q. Were these notes that you took that night, were they actually taken by you at the time you were listening to General Walker's speech on the monument?

A. At the actual time he was talking, yes, sir.

Q. Then later on, did you type up those notes into the form of a statement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who has seen those notes and that statement since the time you typed them up?

A. Yes, sir, I have made a copy of these notes for a Mr. Sullivan. I have his full name here somewhere, I believe. Mr. Sullivan is the private investigator who identified himself to me—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, if Your Honor please. I object to hearsay statements between this man and Sullivan.

The Witness: I am just stating that I gave—

The Court: Just a minute. Don't interrupt when there are objections made.

The Witness: I'm sorry.

The Court: I will sustain it.

[fol. 1410] By Mr. Gooch:

Q. I want to ask this question, and don't answer it until the Court has ruled:

Did Mr. Sullivan identify himself to you—

Mr. Watts: Just a minute, Mr. Gooch. Come forward.

The Court: Wait, let him finish his question.

Mr. Andress: The question is going to be pretty identifiable as hearsay.

Mr. Watts: If the question is a statement, the war is over anyway. Mr. Gooch will be testifying.

(Conference at the Bench.)

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right. You stated that you have made these notes available to a Mr. Sullivan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Anybody else?

A. I have made these notes available to Mr. Lynn Smith, who is an FBI investigator.

I have made these notes available to Mr. Fred Smith, an attorney from Ripley, Mississippi.

I have made these notes available to Mr. Tom Tubb, who is an attorney in West Point, is on the Board of Trustees of the Institutions of Higher Learning in Mississippi, or was at this time.

And I have made these notes available to Mr. W. F. Miner, a representative of the Times Picayune who is in [fol. 1411] Jackson, Mississippi.

Q. All right. Now, using your notes to refresh your memory, can you tell the Court and Jury what you heard General Walker say on the monument that night?

Mr. Andress: If the Court please, we would like to see the notes that he's using to refresh his memory before he testifies from them.

The Court: He isn't offering them.

Mr. Andress: No, sir, but if he uses them to refresh his memory, we are entitled to look at them before he uses them for that purpose.

The Court: I think you might be—

Mr. Gooch: Have a look.

The Court: Do you have any objection to them looking at the entire file?

Mr. Gooch: Not at all.

The Court: These notes.

[fol. 1412] Q. Thank you. I don't remember what the last question was. I believe I asked if he would take his notes and refresh his memory and tell as to what he heard

General Walker say on the monument on the night of September 30th, 1962.

I believe that is the question. Do you understand the question?

Mr. Andress: If the Court please, he is not taking his notes, he is taking a letter which he wrote some 60 days or more later.

A. I beg your pardon.

The Court: Just a minute. Let him make his objection.

Mr. Andress: The yellow pages are a letter written December 10, 1962. They are not his type-up notes he made two days later, but a self-serving letter, and we object to his using that letter written 70 days after the occurrence to refresh his memory. The notes made at the time, we have no objections to, but we do object to his using the letter.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: Note our exception.

The Court: You may proceed to answer the question.

A. What I am reading is a letter, we have photostatic copies. Each time I would write—

[fol. 1413] Mr. Andress: Now—

A. —I am sorry. I will just answer the question.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Take your notes and testify if you can as to what you heard General Walker say on the monument.

A. From the notes that I have?

Q. Yes.

A. General Walker state, "I want to compliment you on your protest. You have a right under the Constitution. I did not come to see violence but any blood you see tonight is on the hands of the Federal Government and the Agencies thereof."

Mr. Andress: If the Court please, he is not testifying, he is reading a letter not in evidence. The letter, if it is admissible in evidence, would be the best evidence. He was asked to testify, using notes to refresh his memory, not to read a letter that he wrote sometime later.

The Court: Overruled.

Mr. Andress: Thank you. Note our exception.

The Court: You may proceed.

A. He continued, "I have just been informed by a representative of the Governor that the fact that these people are on the campus is due to a sell-out; that there were definite orders that the Marshals not be allowed on the campus, but were allowed on the order of a certain official." [fol. 1414] In response to cries of "Who sold us out, General?" General Walker said, "Birdsong."

The General went on to say, "I am only telling you what has been reported by an official representative of the Governor."

General Walker then said, "Do not expect violence, but you can continue to protest until Meredith is not admitted. This is a long route to Cuba."

At this point the Reverend Duncan Gray again approached the General. Then this is his speech, and said, "General, stop it, you can."

And someone moved in and Duncan Gray was almost pulled into the crowd. Someone moved in from the opposite side of the crowd from where I was standing and escorted Duncan Gray off to one side.

At this time it is not in my notes but—

Mr. Andress: He has answered the question, Your Honor. There is no question before the house.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Go forward, please.

Mr. Andress: Wait.

A. Continuing—

Mr. Andress: Wait. "Go forward, please, sir," is not proper examination of his own witness, and we object to it.

If he wants to ask a specific question—

[fol. 1415] The Court: Then did General Walker say anything else on the monument?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

The Court: You may relate what he said.

A. General Walker made the statement that, to the best of my recollection, that, "That man is an Episcopalian priest. I am a member of the Episcopalian Church and I am ashamed of it."

I do not have that in my notes.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right, now, does that conclude, as far as you recollect—

A. No, sir.

Q. Go ahead. Or maybe that is wrong. Did he say anything else?

A. General Walker continued, "You can continue protesting as you are. There is no stopping point. There are many heading toward Oxford, both Mississippians and non-Mississippians, to help you."

This was the end of his speech.

Q. At the conclusion of his speech, what did you do?

A. I went looking for a telephone. I realized that I had a story of great interest, and so I immediately left the area to try to find a telephone, to try to call in another report.

Q. Do you know where you went looking for a phone?

[fol. 1416] A. I have tried to retrace myself exactly, not until recently, and I cannot state positively, but to the best of my recollection I believe that I retraced my steps behind the Carrier Building, and behind the Engineering Building, again looking—and eventually was able to work my way to my car and went to the Oxford Radio Station in order to get a telephone.

Q. In other words your best recollection is that you came back around the Carrier Building, the Engineering Building, behind the Lyceum Building, and back around to the north side of the circle for your car?

A. I believe so.

Q. Did you get a telephone call through on the campus, or did you go to some other place?

A. I had—I had to leave the campus and go to the local radio station in Oxford to get a telephone.

Q. Was that the extent of your—did you return to the campus that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall about what time?

A. Some time after 10:00 o'clock.

Q. Did you see General Walker any more that night?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Gooch: I believe that is all for the present.

Cross examination.

[fol. 1417] By Mr. Andress:

Q. Mr. King, where is the Oxford Radio Station located?

A. I don't recall the number of the highway, but it is on the highway that runs east from Oxford.

Q. Which side of the town of Oxford is it? The University side or the other side?

A. Actually there is no residential area that you—the radio station is located on the edge of town, immediately on the highway.

Q. On the highway or bypass?

A. It is on the highway. I have not been to Oxford recently, you understand. There may be a bypass. It is on the highway from Oxford to Pontotoc.

Q. And what time did you arrive there?

A. I cannot say exactly. It was—I believe shortly before 10:00 o'clock, but that is just a guess, sir.

Q. Now of course in your business where there is split-second timing, you are accustomed to keeping your eye pretty closely on your watch, are you?

A. I don't own a watch.

Q. You don't own a watch?

A. No, sir.

Q. How do you keep your programs from running over?

A. We have clocks in the station, and we have to watch them very closely, sir.

[fol. 1418] Q. You don't own a watch?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now as I understand it during the interval of time that you went into the Chemistry Building to make the first telephone call was when the first salvo of tear gas took place?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you had, just immediately before going into the Chemistry Building, walked down the area between the Marshals and the Highway Patrol, you saw no violence, you saw nothing thrown and you saw no physical contact between the students and the Marshals?

A. No, sir.

Q. But at that time you were expecting tear gas to be used?

A. I was aware of the possibility that tear gas might be used. Even on the previous day when I was there all of the Highway Patrolmen did have gas masks and I did not know on which side it might be used, but I expected the possibility enough that I carried a gas mask with me.

Q. Did the Highway Patrol have gas masks here on the afternoon of the 30th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they use gas masks?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1419] Q. And at the time that you passed through there the Highway Patrol was engaged in moving the crowd back part of the way from the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the atmosphere, would you say, of the students as they were being moved back? More of a pep rally type thing, or Halloween type thing?

A. The atmosphere was quite charged, intense. They were responding to the Highway Patrol. The Highway Patrol was controlling them at that point. They were moving back on orders.

Q. The Highway Patrol was moving them back all right, and was controlling the group when you went into the Chemistry Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By the time you came out there had been this salvo of tear gas?

A. Yes.

Q. Which of course carried out what you had expected?

A. It carried out the possibility that I had expected.

Q. Now I am quite interested in the notes, Mr. King. How did you take these notes?

A. Holding the pad on the side of my thigh, sir.

Q. I wonder if you would mind standing up there and playing like this was the pad, and show us—is that about [fol. 1420] the size of it.

A. Approximately, yes. Now as I took my notes, I was holding my pad approximately like this, sir, and writing. (Demonstrating)

Q. And you were just writing without looking?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was a fountain pen, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Ball point pen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You mind if I take this staple out of these so I can hand you these one by one?

A. All right, sir, if you communicate some way of keeping order.

Q. Yes, sir, I will put a paper clip on them and put them up here in plain view, just as quick as I get this out, where everybody can see them.

Now this first page, what does that say?

A. "I am sad for you. Go make your spiel somewhere else."

Q. What are the initials down there at the bottom?

A. Evidently a radio station. I am not sure. It means nothing to me.

Q. And what have you got on the back here?

A. A map, I believe, of the place where I was staying [fol. 1421] that night. Someone was telling me how I could find a place to stay.

Q. So you started taking notes then before the General started making the speech from the monument?

A. Now that map, I do not believe was made before that. That map was made later. It could have been added and I didn't know where I was going to stay until later that night. And evidently I used the back page of that pad later.

Q. I did understand you to say when the General said, "I am sad for you, go make your spiel somewhere else," that was sometime before he got up on the monument?

That was when he was down there talking to Gray?

A. Yes.

Q. So you started taking notes right then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This note two, was taken there on the side of your leg?

A. No, sir.

Q. Oh, it wasn't?

A. The letters down at the bottom, I don't know when that was mentioned.

Q. What is this second page?

A. "It says, "You are doing all right."

Q. Does it say, "You are," or "You doing"?

A. "You are doing all right." As in my statement— [fol. 1422] Q. No, no, I am just interested in this.

A. In other words, now—may I finish this now?

Now these notes admittedly are key phrases. The statement which read was typed up two days later.

Q. Well, the statement you read was typed up on December 19th?

A. The letter—the letter was. The statement that I originally typed was two days later.

Q. Have you got that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got it with you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let's see the one you typed two days later.

A. I am not sure that I have it with me, sir.

It is not dated, sir.

Q. Not dated. Neither are these notes, are they?

A. No, sir.

Q. So we have nothing except your memory and your statement that any time prior to December 10th, these had ever actually been made or typed up?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without—all right, now, you can put those papers back in your pocket.

Without putting anything else in except what is right here on this paper, what does that say, that key phrase? [fol. 1423] That is what I want, the key phrase.

PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT NO. 21 READ INTO RECORD

A. "You are doing all right. Riot, riot. You are getting news all over the country. You got casualties."

Q. This is on the third line?

A. R-i-o-t. R-i-o-t.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You don't read that as "not," and "no"?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right, after this word that is supposed to be "country," what does it say there?

A. "You got casualties."

Q. Now the third page of this says what?

A. "I want to compliment you all on your protest."

Q. And the fourth page it says what?

A. "You have a right, did not come to see violence."

Q. And—

A. "Any blood you see tonight is on the hands of the Federal Government."

Q. What is that "w-d-," and "g"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now these are all here together and there is no distinction between when these occurred. And this one says?

A. "And the Agencies thereof." "I have just been informed by representatives of Governor of the fact that [fol. 1424] these people are on campus due to sell-out. Definite orders that Marshals not be allowed on campus; at order of certain officials. Birdsong. I am only telling you what has been reported by an official representative of Governor. Do not expect violence and protest until Meredith not admitted. This is a long route to Cuba. Sorry an Episcopal Church. Duncan Gray says 'Stop it, you can'. Escorted off. You can continue protesting as you are. There is no stopping point. Many headed toward Oxford."

Q. And those are the notes which you say you took that night?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Andress: We would like as part of the cross examination of this witness, we would like to have these notes offered in evidence, Your Honor.

Mr. Gooch: I have no objection.

The Court: Plaintiff's 21. Mark them all as one exhibit.

Mr. Andress: Yes, sir, I have stapled them together again, Your Honor.

(Thereupon, said notes were marked Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 21, for identification.)

The Court: I will admit Plaintiff's 21, and recess until 2:00 o'clock.

[fol. 1425] (Thereupon, at 11:55 a.m., a recess was taken until 2:00 o'clock, p.m., of the same day.)

[fol. 1426] AFTERNOON SESSION

2:00 P. M.

JOHN EDMUND KING, resumed his testimony on cross examination as follows:

By Mr. Andress:

Q. Mr. King, you stated that right after General Walker had made his speech up there on the statue, that you realized that you had a story of great interest and you then went looking for a telephone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that what you did was to reverse your procedure and go from the monument back around Carrier Hall and behind the Lyceum and back behind Peabody Hall until you could get to your car, is that right?

A. Sir, I believe that I stated I did not immediately intend to go back to my car. I went looking for a telephone. I did not make notes of this. I have not—did not make notes at any time in—when it took place and I cannot exactly say, say exactly what route I took.

I know that I did not make a telephone call anywhere on the campus, that I had to go back to the radio station to make it.

Now, I cannot in my mind any longer retrace my road [fol. 1427] to my automobile.

Q. Well, you didn't go riot across the Circle to your car, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the last time you had used the telephone—well, the second time—the first time you used the telephone had been in Carrier Hall, hadn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go riot back to Carrier Hall then?

A. I cannot say, sir. It's possible I did, but I cannot state a fact, that I did.

Q. Well, when you went into Carrier Hall and used the telephone—no—you didn't use the telephone in the Student Union, did you?

A. No, sir, I tried to but I never got a call through.

Q. All right. Now, when you went into the Chemistry Building and made your first telephone call, was there any particular news or were you just saying that the Marshals were on the campus and the Patrol—

A. Sir, basically, it was a color story, in which I was reporting what I had observed, the scene as it was with the Marshals, where they were, where the crowd was, what they were doing.

And then, of course, at that time, the fact that tear gas [fol. 1428] had been fired. I had—

Q. That was fired while you were in the building, wasn't it?

A. Now, that was fired while I was in the first building, in the Chemistry Building.

Q. Yes.

A. My call—I did not get my call in until I got to the Carrier Building and so the tear gas had already been fired before I made my telephone call.

Q. Oh, well, then, you went into the Chemistry Building?

A. Looking for a telephone.

Q. Looking for a telephone. You were there about fifteen minutes but you didn't use the telephone?

A. No, sir.

Q. And it was while you were in there that the gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you came out of there and realized the gas had been fired, or you saw it from inside; you went out the rear of that building and into Carrier from the back?

A. Yes, sir, I—I heard the explosions of the tear gas being fired. Some people started coming into the building where I was, and, of course, some of them had been caught [fol. 1429] in tear gas and they were making the statements, you know, that the tear gas barrage had been fired, and so I knew that it had been fired.

Q. And then that was what you reported when you went into Carrier Hall and used the telephone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The background story and the firing of the tear gas?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was nothing else of outstanding importance?

A. No, sir, I had not been there very long at the time and that was all there was to report, as far as I knew.

Q. Then after you had been there some fifteen or twenty minutes, you went around by the Student Union Building. How long did it take you to get there from Carrier?

A. It's very difficult to say, sir.

Q. Ten or fifteen minutes?

A. Possibly.

Q. Then you stayed there about fifteen minutes and couldn't get to your car, stayed there in the Student Union for about fifteen minutes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the meantime, had there been anything in par- [fol. 1430] ticular newsworthy that occurred?

A. I had just rumors, you could—everyone, of course, was talking about it. And students would be telling where they were when the tear gas went off, that they had been gassed, that they had seen people gassed, and, of course, there were a million stories, as far as conversations.

Q. There wasn't anything that you knew at that particular time that made it particularly necessary to get to a 'phone, though, so you started back on around?

A. No, sir, I attempted—I mean, of course, there were —on something like that, if you could get a telephone every five minutes, you would have something new to report, but, of course, it was nothing urgent at that point.

Q. Then you went back around all the buildings, around the Lyceum, Carrier Hall, and so on, until you came to the monument and you went to the south to do that, or from the Student Union you go to the north?

A. I went back around the Chemistry, to Carrier, to the monument.

Q. Around the south side of the Circle, then?

A. Yes, sir. I assume so. I am not sure of north and south on the campus.

Q. And it was right after that that you saw General [fol. 1431] Walker walking around and talking to Gray and that you heard him say, "Riot, riot, you have got news all over," and so on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was before he got up on the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in the course of—did you hear him and see him talking with various groups of students?

A. Yes, sir, from the time I saw him until the completion of his speech, I stayed very close.

Q. And did you ever hear him say, "Rite, rite (phonetic)" to anybody else?

A. At the time he said it, he was talking to individuals who were nearby to him and telling him the stories. That's the only time I heard him make that statement.

Q. What did they do?

A. Oh, nothing in particular. It was soon after that, almost immediately after that that they started calling for a speech, as I recall.

Q. But this group that he was talking with at that time just stayed around there with him or just milled around like they had been doing?

A. Oh, yes, sir, the group at that time was observing what was going on.

[fol. 1432] Q. And they were just milling around?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then after he made this talk on the monument, why, that was the story that you realized was of great interest, that you went to 'phone in?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that the only story of great interest that you had to 'phone in at that particular time?

A. With the exception of a rehash of what I had already reported. That, along with the overall picture of the scene as it was taking place.

Q. Uh-huh. And then because the telephone communications were pretty bad, that's when you cut back around or, at any rate, got back to your car, regardless of which way you went—

A. Yes.

Q. —you got back to your car, drove it off the campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your car hadn't been damaged?

A. No, sir.

Q. It was standing right there on the Circle Drive, by, in front of Peabody Hall?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you have any recollection of whether you [fol. 1433] drove in front of the Lyceum or whether you drove out—

A. No, sir, I wouldn't have any. It would have been impossible to have driven in front. I turned around and went back out the way that I had come in.

Q. You turned around there in the street?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You didn't have any trouble turning around?

A. I turned around on the lawn itself. Actually, my car was not parked on the pavement but there was a rolling curb there and my car was right up on the edge of the street there.

Q. Didn't have any trouble turning around, then?

A. No, sir.

Q. And went on off to the radio station and that's the last you know of the circumstances?

A. Concerning this, yes, sir. I was on the campus again but it was, of course, it was an hour or so later and as far as General Walker's presence there, I know nothing more.

Q. Were you in on the Circle there too?
A. Later that evening?
Q. Yes.
A. Oh, yes.
Q. And the same thing still going on?
A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1434] Mr. Andress: I think that's all. Wait a minute. Mr. King, did you—do you know what kind of stories your radio stations ran in connection with your reports?

The Witness: No, sir, I don't. Practically everything that I called back was tape recorded and what they used of the calls I made—several radio stations were exchanging stories, what they got from other stations, what we got from various sources, I don't know because, I mean—

By Mr. Andress:

Q. In other words, the way things were going on that night—

A. I know less about what was actually broadcast during that particular time than most of my listeners because when I came back, I found out and had people tell me the coverage that we had, but I was not at the station and I cannot vouch for what they did.

Q. You didn't have a portable radio with you?

A. In my car I had a tape recorder, which I was able to use later in the evening; I mean, it was not—it was not portable to the extent that I could take it out of my car. It had to be operated off of the automobile's battery.

The next day, eventually, we rigged up radio communications from my car back to the local radio station, but [fol. 1435] I did not have it that night.

Q. Were there students around on the campus carrying transistors and little portable radios in their shirt pockets, and so on?

A. I saw none.

Q. You didn't hear any?

A. No, sir.

Q. It wasn't like being at a football game and hearing another football game in your neighbor's pocket?

A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. Now, when you were reporting back there to your radio station, did you ever report anything about a mass charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you made no report to your station about General Walker having led a charge?

A. No, sir.

Q. You saw nothing of that sort?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Andress: That's all.

Mr. Gooch: Stand aside. Thank you very much, Mr. King.

[fol. 1436] CRAIG ELLIS, called as a witness by the Defendant, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Please state your name.

A. Craig Ellis.

Q. And where do you live, please, sir?

A. Nashville, Tennessee.

Q. How long have you lived in Nashville, Tennessee?

A. All my life.

Q. How old are you, Mr. Ellis?

A. Twenty-six.

Q. Are you employed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is your employer?

A. United Press International.

Q. How long have you been with United Press International?

A. Approximately six months.

Q. Were you employed prior to that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom?

A. Nashville Banner.

Q. How long were you employed by the Nashville Banner?

[fol. 1437] A. Approximately three years.

Q. Did you attend a college?

A. I took courses from several schools up there in the Nashville area but not—I did not graduate.

Q. All right, was your first newspaper experience with the Nashville Banner?

A. As far as a daily is concerned, yes, sir.

Q. What other news experience had you had prior to that time?

A. We have a small weekly paper in our home town, or in the suburb, and I had done some work for them, but, you know, just casual type writing.

Q. All right, are you married?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have any children?

A. One child.

Q. Now I guess then in September, 1962, you were employed by the Nashville Banner?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have occasion to go to Oxford, Mississippi, along during the latter part of September of 1962?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you tell us when it was you went over to Oxford during that period?

A. I left late Saturday night. I am not sure what date. [fol. 1438] Saturday night prior to Sunday night when the trouble on the campus was. I left Saturday night and got there early Sunday morning, into Oxford.

Q. Were you sent over there by your newspaper?

A. No, sir, I was not.

Q. What was the occasion of your going over, Mr. Ellis?

A. I have a close friend who is a photographer for United Press. He had been down there several days and had run out of film and some other supplies. Since Nashville is not too far from Oxford an associate of mine and myself wanted to take these supplies to him, so we drove down.

Q. All right, and you got in there, you say, in the early morning on the 30th, Sunday morning?

A. Sunday morning, yes, sir.

Q. About how far is Oxford from Nashville?

A. I would say it is about, maybe, 300 miles, something in that range.

Q. Did you go to a motel or hotel when you got there?

A. We went to—I believe it is the Colonial Hotel, downtown, where my friend was staying.

Q. All right, now, did you go out to the campus of Ole Miss any time on Sunday?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember about what time?

A. The first time was about mid-morning. I drove—I [fol. 1439] rode out with this photographer and we just drove around the campus.

Q. All right, did you ever go back to the campus that day?

A. Yes, sir, I think we went back, or attempted—I will say attempted to go back in that mid-afternoon, and we got as far as the bridge on University Avenue and the State Police stopped us and said no one but faculty, students and students' families were being admitted to the campus.

Q. All right, after that incident did you finally get on the campus that evening?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about what time, Mr. Ellis?

A. It was shortly after dark. I would say approximately somewhere around 6:00 or 6:30, maybe.

Q. All right, can you tell us generally what you observed that you saw when you got to the campus on this last try?

A. We entered through one of the rear entrances, entrance to the campus, and as far as that entrance was concerned, we were about maybe the second or third car admitted by the State Police.

We drove up along the road that is leading up to the circle area near the Lyceum, and turned onto this drive. I am not sure just the name, what the road is there, and [fol. 1440] pulled on around to the rear and over to the side of the Lyceum Building.

At that time there was, oh, I guess maybe 150 students that were just in the area over to the side of the sidewalk, across the street up from the Lyceum Building.

The Federal Marshals had—were ringing or had set up a line, a complete circle of the Lyceum Building. The State Police were over on the edge of the sidewalk, you might say holding back the students, by keeping them from going out into the street. In other words, here (indicating) were the Marshals, the street, the State Police and the students.

Q. All right. Now did you mingle with that crowd of students you saw there around the Lyceum Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long did you remain in that area?

A. I would say approximately maybe 30 or 40 minutes, or something.

Q. All right, did you at any time see any activity between the group that was east of the Marshals and the Marshals themselves relative to throwing anything, or anything of note?

A. Are you referring to the students that were on the other side of the State Police?

Q. Well, I understood you to say you saw about 150 people around there. Where were they?

[fol. 1441] A. Well, the majority—the majority of them were over on the sidewalk. However, there were some maybe, say, 50 of them were over—over—they were sort of—like here is the Lyceum Building (indicating), and here is the—several of the students were here, which would actually have been to the front of the building.

Q. All right.

A. However, of course the police, the State Police had circled around that area, too, and they were behind the police.

Q. Now were you there when the tear gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now prior to the tear gas being fired, was there any activity between the students and the Marshals?

A. Yes, sir, it seems like that when I first got on the campus and first went up there it was not too much activity. There was some shouting or jeers, or that type of noise. There was no action of any kind that would, you might say, prompt something.

Q. All right.

A. However, as the evening progressed more people seemed to filter into that area around the Lyceum Building, and it seemed like the more people came in the louder the people got and the confusion began—it seemed like it began getting confused.

[fol. 1442] Q. All right.

A. Yes, sir, I saw some—there was of course rocks laying in the area surrounding the other building. I believe there was some construction going on. And I saw some rocks thrown in the direction of the Marshals. Also some cigarettes sort of flipped type at them.

However, I did not see them actually land. In other words I saw them when they left the hands of these people, but as far as watching them until they landed on someone, I didn't. I didn't follow them out.

Of course that—that was at the time that it seemed to be getting louder and more confused and, you might say, unruly.

Q. All right, where were you when this tear gas was first fired?

A. I had moved down into the circle area but over to the side near the drive. Actually almost—the way I recall I was probably in the drive area, coming around on this—that would be the—I'm a little confused on the directions.

Q. Would you like to get down there and look at that map? And see if you can orient yourself, Mr. Ellis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the center of the map is the center—to orient you a little bit, the Lyceum Building is here on the east, the—[fol. 1443] in—I mean on the west; the monument on the east, the flagpole in the center and the various buildings around. Were you generally familiar with the campus when you got to it?

A. No, sir, that morning had been the first time I had ever been on the campus.

Q. All right, sir. Can you orient yourself somewhat with that map?

A. Yes, sir. We had moved, or I had moved from up here next to the Lyceum Building down the drive and I would say maybe half-way down the drive, University Circle here.

Q. Is that where the gas was fired?

A. Well, as I said, I moved into that area and mingled some there for several minutes. Then all of a sudden we heard some noise and I looked that way and could see the tear gas shells.

Q. Resume your seat, please, sir.

A. All right.

Q. Did the gas at that time have any effect on you, or were you far enough away—

A. Well, it seemed like at first—you couldn't call it a volley because there were several. The first one is the one that they fired—didn't seem like they were fired too far. In other words, apparently just in the immediate area from the Lyceum Building.

[fol. 1444] Q. All right.

A. But the more that was fired, it was fired further down towards the flagpole, back down toward the monument and by that time it did, yes, sir. It had. The wind was blowing.

[fol. 1445] Q. All right. Now, after the tear gas was fired, can you describe generally the activity of the students that were out there in the Circle and the vicinity?

A. Well, of course, when the tear gas was fired, it enraged them, the people that were out there.

Q. All right.

A. It—up to that time, they had been, you know, quite loud and, of course, like I said, throwing things. But when the tear gas was fired, it seemed to increase the, their feeling or their emotions and it seemed to get more loud and—it—I guess it had grown into a crowd-type deal by that time.

Of course, the crowd had increased and it caused a lot of confusion and running around.

Q. Did you see the students do anything toward the Marshals after the tear gas was fired?

A. Yes, sir, there was another building over to, over near the monument that is under construction. It would be the Science Building, maybe, and there were concrete blocks and that type of debris laying around the building and they, the people, or the students—I assume they were students—I couldn't swear to that—but they, several of them went to that area, picked up some of the rocks or bricks or whatever they were and came back and went as far as they could up in the Circle and heaved them at the Mar- [fol. 1446] shals.

Q. Could you attempt to fix an estimate of how many people were out there in that Circle, say, along about that time, in groups or scattered about?

A. The groups—that is, to me, it was more of a group situation at that time because not—there were not large groups throwing these. In other—it was just like several here, several there, several somewhere else, and like one group would run forward and throw what they had and then they would fall back and then—that's how it would go.

I would say that in the Circle and down near the monument, I imagine it would run somewhere, three or four hundred at least.

Q. All right. For—some time later in the afternoon or evening, excuse me, did you have an occasion to be down in the area of the flagpole, of the monument?

A. Well, sir, yes, back and forth type.

Q. Did you ever see General Edwin A. Walker?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And where was he at the first time you saw him?

A. The first time I saw him in the area of the monument?

Q. Anywhere in the campus. The first time you saw him at or near the campus.

[fol. 1447] A. Well, let me go back a little bit. The first time that I saw him that evening or Sunday afternoon was down at the bridge where—the same place that we attempted to get on the campus.

Q. Oh, I see.

A. And he came up in a car and I was not near enough to tell whether he was asking to get on or not, but anyway, the car was turned around and they drove off, he and a man that was driving him.

And that was the first time.

Q. Did you recognize him as General Walker?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Had you seen him before?

A. Not personally. I had seen him—his features in the newspapers and in the newsreels before.

Q. All right. Now, after that and after you had gotten on the campus, did you at any time see General Walker at or near the campus?

A. At or near the . . .?

Q. Campus itself?

A. Following that, yes, sir, I saw him in the area near the monument, later that evening.

Q. All right. Now, describe as best you can what happened pertaining to General Walker from the first time you saw him at or near the campus until we ask some [fol. 1448] further questions. Would that be all right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go ahead.

A. I was over on University Circle there, about halfway down the street or the Circle.

I saw some activity of the students down near the monument and I wanted to see what they were doing, so I walked down that way.

As I neared that area, I saw a man in a white hat and the nearer I got, I recognized him to be General Walker.

Q. And where was General Walker at that time?

A. He was in—away from the monument in—here is the monument here. He would be out in the street area, actually.

Q. East of the monument?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Go ahead. Continue with your narration.

A. He, at the time I saw him, it was—the reason I couldn't recognize him at first, because, the way I recall, he was turned away from me,

As I neared him, however, he turned around and was just walking in that immediate area for a very short time and then moved up near the monument.

[fol. 1449] Q. All right. Did you hear any conversation between him and anybody else?

A. Not direct conversation, no.

Q. All right. Did you hear anything that was said to General Walker by anybody that was around there?

A. I heard several of the students, as I neared where he and the students were, I heard several of the people say, "Here is the General. Here is our leader."

Q. All right. Then, what happened?

A. A very short time after that, apparently the students were, had asked him—before—

Mr. Watts: Excuse me.

The Witness: I am sorry.

The Court: You may not testify as to what you thought the students may have asked him.

Mr. Gooch: Just what you saw.

The Court: Just what you saw.

A. Well, anyway, he moved to the base of the monument and then a short time after that stepped up on the monument where he would be up above the group.

Then the crowd, the people, had begun gathering at the base of the monument.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Would you estimate how many people finally gathered there around the base of the monument at about the time [fol. 1450] General Walker got on the monument?

A. I would say that it began, it ranged, say, close to two hundred at first because not every one knew that, or—I don't know how to explain—

Q. You can't say what everyone knew.

A. Well, that's true. In other words, it was small at first but it grew, the crowd grew.

Q. All right.

A. As the General was there.

Q. All right. Will you tell us everything you heard General Walker say there at that time?

A. Yes, sir. May I refer to some notes I have?

Q. Did you make notes of what occurred there that night?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Do you have those notes with you?

A. I do, sir.

Q. Did you make them at the time you were listening to General Walker?

A. I did, sir.

Q. Yes, I would say so, unless the Court objects.

The Court: No objection from me.

Mr. Andress: May we see them first, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes, you can look at them if you want to. [fol. 1451] The Witness: If I can—may I say this, sir—

The Court: Well, he wants to look at them and then you can go ahead.

The Witness: All right, sir.

(Instruments handed to Mr. Andress.)

Mr. Watts: Can't read them.

Mr. Andress: Thank you.

The Witness: May I say something, sir?

The Court: Yes.

The Witness: These notes, what I attempted to was to take—in other words, something would be said and then I would put it down. It's possible that I—well, I know for a fact that I missed some of the things that were said. But I tried to take down things—now, if something would be said, I would put it down and, in other words, I could not listen to all the things that were being said, but I tried to take the key phrase or the key things that I could remember or that I heard him say.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. All right, go ahead now and tell us what your recollection of what you heard the General say there on the monument was.

A. The first note that I have, the General said, "I want [fol. 1452] to compliment you all on the protest you are making."

Now, the—some of these words are misspelled because I was doing this in the dark and it was just—wasn't too easy to write and listen and everything at the same time, so that's why. . . . "Protest" made. . . .

Q. Go ahead.

A. Or made here tonight. "You have a right to protest under the Constitution."

Q. All right.

A. "Bloodshed. . . . " Let's see, "any bloodshed here tonight is on the hands of the Federal Government and the agencies thereof."

Q. All right.

A. The next, there was some mention of a sell-out.

Q. All right.

A. Now, I haven't got the complete notes on this and it's just part of it. I don't know whether I can follow it directly or not.

Q. Just the best you can.

A. Something concerning the fact that people—people in the middle of the campus had been talking or conferring or something concerning a sell-out.

Q. All right.

A. I remember the word "sell-out". And then some- [fol. 1453] thing to the effect, "Definite orders not to let Federal men on the campus at orders of a certain official." And about this time there were shouts, "Who is this official? Who is this person?"

Q. All right.

A. And my next recollection is that General Walker said, "Birdsong." And who, I—I did not know at the time, but I later learned to be the head of the State Police or the State Highway Patrol or something or other.

Q. All right.

A. Then, he then said, "This has been reported to me by representatives of the Governor."

Q. All right.

A. The next note, "There is . . . . there is . . . . " Now, I believe from reading the notes that I should have said, "This is," but I have got written now, "And there is a long route to get to Cuba."

Q. All right.

A. The next thing, about this time there was some commotion near the base of the monument and a man who I later learned to be Father Gray, Duncan Gray, Episcopal Priest there in Oxford, came there near the base of the monument.

The thing I recall from General Walker is him saying, "We have an Episcopal minister here," and there was some [fol. 1454] commotion. I did not get what was said at that time.

The next thing that I recall him saying is that, "I am sorry that I am in the Episcopal Church."

Q. All right.

A. About this time Rev. Gray was grabbed by two or three of the people that were near him. I think he fell to one knee or sort of toppled somewhat, but a couple of the students or people near him grabbed him up and hustled him away or moved him away from the area.

Q. All right.

A. The next thing that I recall and have notes, that the General said, is, "There is no stopping point. You can continue. Many people from out of State are heading toward Oxford."

Q. All right. Anything else?

A. Well, the next note that I have here is an observation.

Q. Well, that wouldn't be admissible.

A. But it was not what the General said.

Q. All right. Now, were you there at the conclusion of the General's speech?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1455] Q. Would you describe the action of the General after he left the monument.

A. Yes, sir, he—at the completion of the talk he stood at the, where he was for a short period of time, as I recall, turned to his left, stepped down from the monument and turned where he would be facing the Lyceum Building.

He took several steps up the walk by himself. I recall that there might have been one or maybe two men that came up with him, not came up with him, but caught up with him, I will say, and this group, or these two or three, including General Walker, moved up maybe 10 or 12 feet up the sidewalk.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Well, about that time the people that were listening to the General moved in behind him and followed him for a short ways, maybe just a very short ways, and then a solid line was formed across the campus with the General and these two men in the middle of the line.

Q. Which way did they go?

A. Toward the Lyceum Building.

Q. How far did they get?

A. I did not follow this group. However, I lost sight of them as they neared the flagpole.

Q. All right.

A. Or in that immediate—I mean—immediate vicinity. [fol. 1456] Q. What happened? Do you know of anything that happened at about the time the group got to the flagpole?

A. Either at that time or shortly thereafter, shortly—in other words shortly after I lost sight of the General and these people, there were several volleys of tear gas fired.

Q. And then what? Did you see General Walker there after—

A. No, sir.

Q. Would you estimate the number of people that fell in behind the General as he started up towards the flagpole?

A. I would say it would range from four to five hundred people.

Q. All right. Now, did you see anybody near General—the General, did you see anybody with their hands on the General as they went up there?

A. These two—one or two people that got to him first, or came up with him, I could not tell whether they were actually arm-in-arm, or not. I don't know.

Q. All right. Were they close to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of walk or what kind of movement did they make as they started up there?

A. At first when the General was by himself it was slow, sort of a slow walk, and then it increased to sort of a brisk [fol. 1457] walk. The further it went.

Q. You said you lost sight of the General about the time they got to the flagpole?

A. Near the flagpole, yes, sir.

Q. What was the movement of the crowd at the time you lost sight of the General?

A. My best recollection the further they got the faster they got.

Q. All right, where did you go?

A. Well, when the tear gas was fired it was a large volley and it was fired directly—well, it was fired where some of the shells landed near the monument, and, of course, I was near that, or near that area, and I just tried to get out of the way because it was all over the place.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. I believe that I went into one of the nearby buildings, or near one of the buildings to try to find water, a water hydrant or water faucet of some kind to wash my eyes out because they were filled up with gas.

Q. Incidentally during the time that crowd was listening to General Walker's speech, did you see any evidence of rocks or missiles in their hands?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. All right, you don't know if they were throwing anything or not. Just what you know is what we are trying [fol. 1458] to get.

So after you went in somewhere to try to get the water (sic) out of your eyes, the gas out of your eyes—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the General any more that night?

A. No more that night, no, sir.

Q. All right, and did you make any report of what you had seen and observed and jotted down, to your newspaper?

A. Yes, sir. If I may drop back a little bit, that afternoon I was at the Oxford Airport when the Federal Marshals were brought in by plane. At that time I called the Executive Editor of the paper and told him I was down there. He then directed or instructed me to stay in Oxford and try to keep tab on any local people or students or older people, or just whoever was down there from the Nashville, Memphis, Tennessee Area, which I attempted to do.

Q. Did you know whether or not there were any United States Marshals that might be from Nashville?

A. Yes, sir, two of the Marshals—while in Nashville I was the Federal reporter.

Q. What do you mean, Federal reporter?

A. I cover all Federal activities, Federal Court, anything having to do with the United States Government there in Nashville.

Q. All right.

[fol. 1459] A. And two of the Deputy United States Marshals from Nashville who I met since I have been on the —covering the courthouse, I had—or I had information that they were—had left Nashville and I presumed, just from the activity that—in some of the other cities—that they might be heading toward Mississippi.

Q. All right. Now, was the Nashville Banner at that time a morning paper or afternoon paper?

A. Afternoon paper.

Q. Did you at any time after you left the campus or while you were on it or after you left the campus communicate what you heard General Walker say and this activity of moving with the crowd toward the Lyceum Building—did you communicate that to your newspaper?

A. There were very few long distance lines out of Oxford at the time and I attempted for several hours, somewhere between four or five hours to get a line out, but the best—my best recollection, I don't believe I did.

Q. All right, did you the next day?

A. Yes, sir, the next morning I finally got a line.

Q. All right, do you know whether or not your notes and your quotes were used by the Nashville Banner?

A. The information I gave them the next morning concerning the Federal Marshals from Nashville that I saw getting off one of the planes that Sunday afternoon, I told [fol. 1460] them about that. I began to tell them concerning the—that night before, and what had happened, and they said, "Don't worry about that, we have got both wire services and we will get our story from that.

Q. What wire service is—did that allude to?

A. Associated Press and United Press International.

Q. Have you described as best you can everything that occurred on the campus with particular reference to General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I believe I have.

Mr. Gooch: Your witness.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. You say when you tried to tell them the next morning about what happened, the night before, your superiors said, "Don't worry, we take both wire services, the AP and the UPI, and we will get what happened from that?"

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long had they taken the UP? Do you know?

A. Since before I went with the paper. But I don't know.

Q. Where did this conversation with your superior take place? After you got home to Nashville?

A. No, sir. I—by over long distance telephone from the hotel there in Oxford.

[fol. 1461] Q. With whom?

A. Sir, I don't recall. We have people that answer the phone and just takes the notes down. I probably spoke with one of my—either the City Editor or Assistant City Editor. Then he referred me to someone to give the notes to, but I don't recall who I gave the notes to.

Q. When did you get back to Nashville?

A. I had some difficulty getting out because of the airport, it was being used by the military, and I don't believe I got out of there until—I believe it was Tuesday afternoon.

Q. That would have been the 2nd?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went directly to Nashville?

A. I went to Memphis and to Nashville.

Q. Did you report in then to your paper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom did you talk?

A. Well, I would—of course the City Editor is my—my immediate superior.

Q. Well, who is he?

A. He is now the Managing Editor of the Banner. His name is Bob Battle.

Q. Was this conversation you testified to a while ago when you called in and talked to your paper and endeavored [fol. 1462] to tell them what you had seen concerning General Walker and they told you that they took both of the wire services, both the AP and the UPI, was that with your City Editor or someone else?

A. That I don't recall. However, if I can say this, if—if it—if that came from one of the persons I was giving the notes to, why I'd—he would have been instructed to say that, I'm sure, because we take these wire services and we were just actually interested in local people.

Q. Prior to seeing Walker, you had walked from the northeast corner of Park Hill over to the monument, had you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had a lull taken place in the rioting about that time, as you made that tour back to the monument?

A. It was more of a—it seemed—well, to me, there would be scattered rocks being thrown, and things like that from groups, maybe all the time, but then again there wasn't a lot of movement or a lot of activity in the very early evening.

Q. No, sir, you must have misunderstood my question. My question to you, sir, was as you left the northwest part of the oval and walked over to the monument had there been somewhat of a temporary lull in the rioting about that time? You know what a lull is, don't you?

[fol. 1463] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, yes or no, was there a lull?

A. Well, may I answer—let me answer like this.

Q. You can answer any way you want to.

A. I don't believe you would call it a riot until after the tear gas.

Q. Oh, yes, this is way after the tear gas.

A. I know it, but—

Q. There was activity after you left the northwest corner of the circle?

A. Yes.

Q. And went towards the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some small activity by small groups of people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nothing large like what you testified you saw General Walker participate in after the speech?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Nothing like that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You would—you were in a position where you could have seen it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now my question is: Immediately before you went to the monument had there been a lull in the scattered activity [fol. 1464] that you witnessed before you went to the monument?

A. Well, the activity continued, but not—not as—up and down type thing.

Q. That's right, exactly, but now the question I am trying to get over from you or get out of you, and all I want is try to relive this thing, son, and see it and tell us what you saw.

Now the question is: When you decided to leave the northwest part of the circle and come to the monument the crescendo was down rather than up, wasn't it?

A. Sir, I just—I just can't recall.

Q. Why did you leave that area and go to the monument?

A. Because I wanted to move around and just get it from different angles.

Q. Now then when you got back to your paper in Nashville on the evening of the 2nd, were you the only one there that had just come from Oxford?

A. The—one of the photographers for the Banner had drove me down there, he came back Sunday night before all this; came back late Sunday afternoon before anything happened.

Q. Were you the only one around your paper office there, or whatever you call it?

A. As far as the Banner is concerned, yes, sir.

Q. And they were somewhat interested in what you had [fol. 1465] seen, weren't they?

A. Somewhat, yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a lot of conversation with the people there about what you had seen, and what you knew about the situation?

A. Yes, sir. Some. It was more individual type rather than a lot of people gathered around.

Q. I will ask you if this didn't occur when you got back to your office that—perhaps it was the City Editor or some of those people or some of those people told you, "Now we got two reports out of Oxford, one was the UPI report that said that during a lull in the riot General Edwin A. Walker mounted the Confederate statue on the campus and begged the students to cease the violence, and the other report was the Associated Press report that General Walker arrived on the campus, was immediately recognized by the crowd, was requested by the leaders of the riot, or the leaders of the mob to "lead us to the steps; that Walker had assumed command of the crowd and lined up with men on either side by each of his arms, and with 1,000 people behind him led a charge towards the Marshals, after which tear gas was fired, and he fell back to the monument and made his speech."

Now did you learn those two conflicting reports were existing in your paper at the time you first got back?

[fol. 1466] A. No, sir, I don't believe I did.

Q. When did you first hear the UPI report that Walker had begged the students to cease their violence and was met by one massive jeer?

A. I would believe it was much later because at the time of course I was still with the newspaper, and other than just a casual interest in what the wire services had, I was more interested in our local type thing, and I just didn't pay that much attention to what was said.

Q. Did your paper print the AP version that Walker had led a charge before he made the speech on the monument, or the UPI version that during a lull in the riot he begged the students to stop their riot and was met by one massive jeer? Which of those two conflicting reports did your paper print?

A. Sir, I do not recall what the front page—what the dateline was. Our paper, because they take both services, they sometimes take the wire dispatches and use parts of both stories. I do not know who edited—which service they used for the lead story that next morning.

Q. As a matter of fact, to refresh your recollection, try to think back and see if this didn't happen, that these two conflicting reports came in, and the AP report was printed by the paper? Isn't that what happened?

A. Well, I didn't see it until Wednesday—until Tuesday [fol. 1467] afternoon.

Q. I know that, but when you saw it on Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday or whenever it was, wasn't it the AP report?

A. I can't recall.

Q. You just have no recollection about that at all?

A. No.

Q. Well you have a good memory on other things.

A. Well—

Q. Is your memory as hazy on that as these other things?

A. No, sir, these other things, that is something that is in my memory that I will never forget.

Q. Well, to a newspaperman, was it significant to you that there would be such a diametrically opposite report between the wire services and releases of the two biggest wire services in the world? Didn't that strike you as being significant?

A. To tell you the truth I don't—when I first got back I don't recall that there was—that anyone said anything about this, what you call conflicting reports.

Q. Do you know Mr. Al Kuettner, the UPI reporter who was present on the campus and wrote that UPI release?

A. I believe I have spoke to him on the phone. I never met him personally because I haven't been with the service [fol. 1468] that long.

Q. Are you a newsman or a reporter? Or what is the terminology?

A. I was a reporter with the Banner for approximately three years. I am the—have the position of a newsman with United Press.

Q. You are now in the position of a newsman?

A. With United Press, yes, sir.

Q. Now at this time you were 24, I guess, weren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you classified as an experienced reporter, or what? Or what in local terms is called a cub reporter?

A. No, sir, I had been a cub since I started with the Banner in July of 1960, and got out of the Navy. Four months later I was put on the Federal beat, so I had been on the Federal beat, or the Federal Courthouse, reporting for two years, and, believe, me, they don't put cub reporters on there.

Q. So you were a cub for only about four months?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Now then as I understand when you first got to the Ole Miss area shortly before the time, before the tear gas was fired, you went to the area of the Lyceum?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw Marshals ringed around the Lyceum [fol. 1469] Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the pictures that were presented in court this morning?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. Here directing your attention to the Plaintiff's Exhibit 18, is that referrable to the way it looked, and the same with respect to Plaintiff's Exhibit 17?

A. Yes, sir. Let me say this also. This seems to be before dark.

Q. That's right.

A. And, actually, I did not get on the campus until after the sun had went down, so it was becoming dark—it was actually dark at the time we got there. However, this—yes, sir.

Q. Well, how, if any—after that explanation, how if any, did the positions of the reporters (sic) differ from what is in this picture?

A. Position of what?

Q. The Marshals.

A. That is the same.

Q. The same?

A. Yes, sir, that is the same.

Q. Anyone have the pointer?

Mr. Andress: Over by the chart.

[fol. 1470] Q. Son, would you walk over to the board, please, and pick up the pointer. You see the pointer before you there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now then would you put your pointer on the flagpole and the circle. You see an intersection in the middle of the circle?

A. Right here (indicating).

Q. The top of this map is north, the left is west, the right is east. Would you put your pointer on the position where you were when tear gas was first fired?

A. I was in the area—this area here.

[fol. 1471] Q. You are pointing right southwest of the Lyceum Building—as you were—of the YMCA Building?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. Then, where did you go from that point—

A. I moved further down.

Q. Further towards the monument?

A. Yes, sir, or further down in this grassy area next to the Y Building.

Q. All right. And how long did you stay there?

A. Just a short period of time.

Q. Now, assuming the tear gas was fired at 8:00, about what time would you say you moved into the area west—east of the YMCA?

A. Well, let's see, now east would be—

Q. Where you put your finger or your pointer?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Five minutes, ten minutes, twenty?

A. You mean following the firing of the tear gas, how long did I stay here at the building before I moved further down in the area?

Q. Right.

A. Maybe ten or fifteen minutes.

Q. All right. And where did you go from there? Put your pointer on the next place you went?

[fol. 1472] A. Well, from there, as I recall, I moved down the avenue, University Avenue, past the monument.

Q. Past the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was there a vast crowd at that point when you arrived?

A. Well, I wouldn't describe it as vast. It was a lot—several people but it was scattered, I mean, in other words, there would be so many here, so many here, that type.

Q. More or less than a hundred within a radius of a hundred feet from the monument?

A. I would say in all, approximately a hundred.

Q. All right, sir. Now, then, before you left that position up by the YMCA, describe the activity out in the Circle toward the Marshals?

A. There was scattered throwing of the missiles or rocks, firing the gas.

Q. Well, five, ten, maybe, people, something like that?

A. No, sir, I would say that there were more than that.

Q. Well, I am talking about in each little group that would throw.

A. Oh, well, yes, they would range in groups, I guess, [fol. 1473] maybe ten to fifteen apiece.

Q. All right. But in the whole area you, as I remember, I think you said there were some two or three hundred people out there in the general Circle area at that time, is that right?

A. Well, that's covering the entire Circle, sir.

Q. That's what I am talking about.

A. Yes, sir; uh-huh.

Q. Now, as I get your timing, you left that position about 8:15—8:10 or 8:15 and went back past the monument?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. How long did you stay in that area?

A. Just a matter of minutes. I couldn't give you an exact time.

Q. And what did you see?

A. There was—

Q. Would you put your pointer on the area so we can keep up with you?

A. I had moved down past the monument, down University Avenue. As I recall, the—one of the reasons that I moved down there was because the photographer, UPI photographer, that I had came to see, his car was parked that way and I went to check on his car.

Q. Now, as a matter of information, you had some lad along with you, didn't you, that had come from—

[fol. 1474] A. This photographer at first had been with me when we first got on the campus. However, he left me just shortly after we got on the campus and I don't know where he went from there. I did not see him until much later in the evening.

Q. Well, now, were you with the photographer at this time?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you by yourself then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. No one that you knew anywhere around you?

A. I might have seen some other newsmen but I did not know them by name—just by sight, from being around the press headquarters.

Q. All right. Would you estimate as a fair time that you arrived at this point near the monument about 8:15?

A. Would I estimate the time? I didn't understand you, sir.

Mr. Watts: Read the question.

(Record read.)

A. Yes, sir, I think so.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. And how long, then, did you stay in that area?

A. Well, let me ask you—

[fol. 1475] Q. No, please—

A. I'm sorry. Well, I—

Q. Go ahead and answer the question first, son, and then you can ask me.

A. If you mean down here for the car.

Q. Wherever you went, yes.

A. Just a short period of time. This is before I went back up in this other area.

Q. I understand.

A. And then back down.

Q. I understand. I am trying to trace your route. You went to the YMCA and down toward the car and you stayed at the car a short period of time?

A. Just a short period of time.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. Well, made my way back up the Circle.

Q. Along the north side of University Avenue?

A. Yes, University Circle.

Q. And taking time out for your trip to the car, what time would you assume you arrived along again in front of the YMCA?

A. Maybe 8:30 or maybe a little bit later.

Q. All right, sir. Then where did you go? Oh, incidentally, as you arrived back in front of the YMCA again, describe to us the activity of the people out in the circle [fol. 1476] when you were there?

A. I would say that it was, as before, some scattered throwing, but nothing—

Q. Nothing massed?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. Would you call it sporadic activity?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long did you stand there in front of the YMCA as you were going back northwestward and observe into the Circle?

A. Again it would just be a short time. The time is something that I am—I can't—

Q. Did you have a watch?

A. I believe I had left it back at the hotel.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. The way I remember. And so,—I guess maybe 8:30, maybe a little bit later, I don't know, just everything seemed to happen between 8:00 and 9:00, the moving back and around.

Q. Would a fair bracket be between 8:30 and 8:45 that you got back in front of the YMCA?

A. Yes, sir, I believe so.

Q. And that was when you looked out toward the southwestward and saw this sporadic activity in the Circle?

A. Uh-huh; yes, sir.

[fol. 1477] Q. All right, sir. How long did you stay there in front of the YMCA?

A. Five, ten, fifteen minutes, somewhere in that area, but I couldn't give you it exact.

Q. Well, where did you go then from there?

A. I tried—I just moved back and forth. Right around in that area of the building. In other words, it just seemed to me it was the safest place, it was not close enough where you could get the gas and it wasn't—but it was close enough where you could see what was going on. I tried to stay in that immediate area.

Q. But still, as a newsman, you were very interested in what was going on down in the Circle, weren't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you have anyone with you yet or were you still alone?

A. I might have run into someone, but I can't recall. There was certain times I did and certain times that I was alone.

Q. And about how long, then, did you mill around in that area and look down toward the Lyceum?

A. As I recall, I stayed in that immediate area until the time that I saw the activity near the monument.

Q. That is when you reported, you walked back down there and saw General Walker?

[fol. 1478] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Near the monument. Now, as you stood there in that position or in that area, could you see the Lyceum Building or make the outline?

A. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you see the flagpole?

A. As I recall, the most of the lights were still working at that time. Later they were all, rocks were, had broken them out, later in the evening, but I believe at that time I could still see the flagpole, yes, sir.

Q. You certainly could have seen, if someone had led a massed charge across the north side of that Circle towards the Marshals, starting from the vicinity of the monument, couldn't you?

A. Well, sir, I believe you described it as sporadic. Now, there was times—

Q. Wait a minute, son. I don't believe you understand my question.

A. Well, I'm sorry.

Q. My question was: You could have seen if a massed charge of a thousand people had gone across there. I didn't say it did. I said if a massed charge of a thousand people had gone across the north side of the Circle, you undoubtedly would, and must have, seen it from that point, couldn't you?

[fol. 1479] A. If there was a thousand people, I'm sure I would have seen it.

Q. As a matter of fact, you couldn't have possibly missed as many as a hundred people?

Mr. Gooch: I object to that as a conclusion, if the Court please.

Mr. Watts: If your Honor please, this is cross examination.

The Court: Well, go ahead and ask him your question. I will permit that.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Mr. Witness, from your position there, if as many as a hundred people had moved across the north side of that Circle, you couldn't have helped from seeing it, could you?

A. Certain—that was—like I have said, there was more of that in these scattered groups. Some of these groups would join together at times and go as one.

Q. Sure. But they were just milling around, weren't they?

A. Well, sometimes, sometimes, like I said, they were joined together and run up together, throw their rocks and come back and then they would break, break—break away from each other and then they would join and go back up.

Q. Now, at any time—let me borrow your pointer—while [fol. 1480] you were standing in this position, right here by the YMCA, were you out as far as the sidewalk?

A. The sidewalk, actually at the Circle?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir, I think—the best I recall, I stayed on the other side of the street itself, on that sidewalk and looked across.

Q. Now, then, you say down in this area there was sporadic activity of small groups of people?

A. Well, all over, actually.

Q. Yes, all over the Circle?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Now, you never did see any substantial group of people form up down here in this area, march across here and then get up in here before they attacked the Marshals, did you?

A. They actually formed in different parts of the Circle. I recall some of them formed over in here (indicating) and went up; some maybe in this area would venture as far as this area before they would form up and then they would go up—I—yes, sir, I believe I recall some forming over here.

Q. Here (indicating)?

A. Yes, sir, they seemed to have got as close as they could to the Marshals before they threw, evidently to make [fol. 1481] sure their missiles would get up there.

Q. Would you say as many as one hundred people formed up in this area here and marched on the Marshals? Think it over now. Yes or no.

A. I don't believe I can answer yes or not.

Q. Well, how can you answer it?

A. Now, it is possible—I am—since some of the groups formed here—

Q. Yes.

A. —now some of them would, say, so many would form here and then maybe some of these would see these going up and would join them at different or various parts of the Circle.

Q. All right.

A. Maybe by the time they got up past the flagpole, there would be a hundred, but now whether—I can't—I couldn't estimate them actually being that many at that time.

Q. Let's see, a man is about eighteen inches wide or two feet, maybe.

A. All right.

Q. A hundred people would be at least one hundred fifty feet wide, wouldn't it?

A. If they went like that, I mean, if they lined up. Now, a lot of times they would just all run in a group, [fol. 1482] I mean just all scattered out and then run forward.

Q. Well, now, as I remember your testimony, when General Walker finally finished his speech on the monument, you saw people lining—

A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Now, was that the first lining up you saw all night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, prior to Walker's speech on the monument, you saw nobody line up and move toward the Marshals, as I understand; is that right?

A. Not as such, no, sir.

Q. All right. Now, certainly, then, before the speech on the monument, while you were standing here, if a hundred people had lined up and marched across this area here in a charge and cast their missiles at the Marshals, you undoubtedly would have seen it, wouldn't you?

A. If they had of lined up.

Q. Yes, sir. And if a thousand people lined up, you couldn't keep from seeing it, could you?

A. That's true, sir.

Q. And that actually didn't happen before the Walker speech on the monument, did it, anything like that, did it? [fol. 1483] A. The hundred or the thousand?

Q. Either. Let's say, take first, the thousand. Did a thousand people line up and march across here before the speech on the monument?

A. I don't believe there was ever a thousand people in that circle when I was there.

Q. All right. Now, from the time you were here, assuming that someone down here in the vicinity of the flagpole had walked on the campus, conferred with the leaders of the mob, permitted two leaders, one to get him by the arm on each side—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —with a thousand people behind him, and had gone across the Circle in a charge on the Marshals, you couldn't conceivably have missed that, could you?

A. No, sir, I really couldn't.

Q. Did you ever at any time before the Walker speech on the monument see a charge with three people out in front leading it? And I'll restrict that a little more: A charge coming to the north side of the flagpole?

A. The fact that there was confusion of these people and that there was scattered groups and these groups joined from time to time, I don't honestly believe that you could have been able to determine whether there was two or three out in front or not, because sometimes there would be some [fol. 1484] that had actually got this far up in the Circle in front of these people, maybe that started out from here, see (indicating).

Q. Yeah.

A. So, now, as a matter of fact, at this time there was no leadership of this operation at all, there were just sporadic little groups, wasn't it?

A. I don't believe there was just any one major person that was doing it, no, sir, not that I—

Q. At least if it happened like I have outlined from where you were standing, you certainly didn't see it, did you?

A. One or two people leading everybody?

Q. Yes, sir, well, say three people leading a mass of other people across this area where I have marked. If that happened, you certainly didn't see this, did you?

A. No, sir, I didn't.

Q. And with you standing right there roughly 120 feet from the center of this right quadrant, if it had happened, you would have had to have seen it, wouldn't you?

A. I believe so.

Q. All right, sir. Take your seat. From what you saw of that crowd out there prior to the Walker speech on the monument, it wasn't possible for anyone to assume com-[fol. 1485] mand of that crowd, was there?

Mr. Gooch: I believe I object to that as calling for an opinion and conclusion.

The Court: Sustained.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Did anyone try to assume command of you?

A. No, I think everybody—we were all trying to assume command of ourselves.

Q. That was just about the extent of one man's capability there that night, was to retain command of himself, wasn't it?

A. Well, I would....

Mr. Gooch: Go ahead and answer.

A. I didn't understand your question.

[fol. 1486] Q. I said about all anyone could command that night, with all the confusion there was, was himself, is that right?

A. Sir, I believe it is according to who it was.

Q. Did you ever see General Walker run at any time that night?

A. No, sir, I don't believe I did.

Q. Did you ever know a young lad, 21-year-old reporter for the Associated Press, named Van Savell, or Savell, I think he so calls himself?

A. No, sir, I don't believe I have met him. I stayed with the United Press people the entire time I was there, and I don't believe I ever met him.

Q. Do you know where Van Savell is now?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heard?

A. No.

Q. Son, with whom all have you discussed this lawsuit?

A. Prior to my appearance here?

Q. Right, prior to right now? Just working backward tell us who you have discussed it with.

A. With the attorneys for—
Q. Mr. Gooch?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Anyone else?
[fol. 1487] A. These three here.
Q. Any other attorneys?
A. Yes, sir, Mr. Smith.
Q. The gentleman with his hand on his face?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who else?
A. Let's see. I believe that is all. I mean as far as the attorneys are concerned.
Q. Was that since you got here?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you subpoenaed to come here?
A. I was.
Q. All right, and where? At Nashville? Were you subpoenaed at Nashville, or after you got here?
A. I received it after I was—arrived here.
Q. All right, sir.
A. Excuse me. Do you want to know the other people I have talked with?
Q. If you can remember anyone else?
A. Yes, sir, I gave a statement to the FBI, I testified before the Grand Jury in Oxford.
Q. Do you mean when they tried to indict General Walker?
A. Well, I don't know who they were trying to indict, but during that particular investigation that they had there, [fol. 1488] I was—I testified, yes, sir.
Q. Did you testify concerning General Walker at Oxford?
A. Sir, I am not allowed to say what I testified.
Q. Well, that's right. Yes, sir. But now have you told us everybody else you talked to?
A. I believe that is it.
Q. When did you last talk with anyone with the FBI about this? Before or after the Grand Jury?
A. Before.

Q. All right. Now then you say you saw General Walker, come up University Boulevard, or did I misunderstand you?

A. That is the one leading across the bridge and up to the monument area?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he walking slowly or striding?

A. Well, now, as I said, at the time I first saw him his back was to me and he was just standing in the area in front of the monument, out in the street area.

Q. You didn't then see him actually come up University Boulevard, or did you?

A. No, sir, I really didn't.

Q. Was he stationary or moving when you first saw him?

A. When I first saw him he was stationary.

Q. How close to the monument?

[fol. 1489] A. It would have been—oh, it was several feet. It was not a long distance. Just a short distance away.

Q. In terms of the walls of this room, could you pick an appropriate distance?

A. From the monument, from General Walker to the monument when I first saw him? That is the question, right?

Q. (Nods head affirmatively.)

A. I would say from here to—just a short ways further than this door here (indicating).

Q. Well, in terms of this wall back here (indicating) how about it?

A. I don't believe it was that far.

Q. Somewhere between those two distances?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now what attracted you to General Walker?

A. Well, the thing that attracted me, not so much to General Walker, but just attracted me to the area, it just seemed to me some commotion or some activity down there that I hadn't witnessed before. I hadn't noticed it before.

Q. Now you were in front of the YMCA you saw that commotion?

A. Yes, sir, over in that area.

Q. In the YMCA area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you take this pointer, please, and step up [fol. 1490] there and estimate from the Lyceum how far it is? Do I understand you have had some naval training?

A. Yes.

Q. Navy training?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You know how to read maps, don't you?

A. Well, I don't know, it has been a long time. I don't know whether I can read this or not.

Q. Let me help you a little. Always start at zero, and get your first measurement. Put your finger on here and see how far it is to the YMCA. Just use your finger. Look out now you will have it on the floor if you are not careful.

From the monument. Here is the YMCA: Now put that down on the scale and let's check how far it is. Down on this scale.

A. About a hundred and thirty—

The Court: Talk out if you want this in the record.

Q. Did you say about a hundred and thirty feet?

A. Approximately a hundred and thirty feet.

Q. All right, take the stand. Now at that time all you could see at the monument was the commotion and you could not see Walker, is that correct?

A. That is true.

Q. You decided to walk over there?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1491] Q. What size crowd did it look to you, as you were approaching?

A. Maybe 100, 150 people.

Q. And something less than the width of this room before you could see General Walker?

A. No, sir, I said that was how far he was from the monument when I first saw him.

Q. Oh, I see.

A. When I first saw him.

Q. He was that far east of the monument?

A. East, yes, sir.

Q. And what was he doing?

A. First his back was to me and that was when I noticed the white hat, which I had—I had seen him wearing in newsreels and newspaper pictures, and the closer I got, and as I noticed him he turned around and that is when I realized who it was.

Q. What was he doing then?

A. Just talking with the people, apparently now.

Q. What was the size of the group in his immediate presence?

A. This group of 100 to 150 were sort of scattered right at first in that immediate area of the monument. It seemed like, or I won't say it seemed like—after he was there the group of—group sort of came nearer to him. I guess maybe [fol. 1492] 50.

Q. Did they surround him on all sides, or was there most of the group on one side than the other?

A. I don't believe it was a complete surrounding of him, no, sir. I am sure there was ways he could move out if he wanted to.

Q. Was there still sporadic activity up close to the Marshals?

A. Some.

Q. Were all the people back in the area of the monument, or were some to the westward?

A. That would be near the flagpole?

Q. Right. Right, no, strike that, let's start over. Were all the people near the area of the circle, near the monument, or were some of them further to the west beyond the flagpole?

A. Actually, let me say this. When I saw the activity down there at the monument I disregarded what was happening in the circle, or in the part near the Lyceum Building, and I just walked directly down there, and I did not look back up there to see what the action was. Other than when I first started out there was some sporadic, or some scattered movement, but I mean in other words my attention was drawn to the monument and to that area, and I just stayed with that.

Q. Well, the last activity you remember toward the Ly-
[fol. 1493] ceum was the same type of scattered or sporadic activity?

A. Yes, sir.

The Court: We will stop right there for our recess. We will recess until a quarter until 4:00.

(Short recess was had.)

[fol. 1493a] Q. Now, Mr. Ellis, do I understand that after General Walker got down from his talk on the monument, he walked a short distance toward the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What distance?

A. Is this without or with someone? Now, it would—I would say he, by himself, he walked near the eight or nine feet.

Q. That would be three steps?

A. I don't know—well, now—maybe I'm confused on the footage but—no, it was several steps.

Q. Would you say maybe eight or ten steps?

A. Yes, sir, that would be more like it.

Q. That would be somewhere between twenty-four and thirty feet?

A. All right, sir.

Q. Something approximating the width of this room perhaps?

A. No, sir, I don't believe he went that far before people caught up to him or before this line was formed.

Q. Well, now, did he stride off rapidly—

A. No, sir.

Q. Or did he stroll?

A. He left—when he got down from the monument, he [fol. 1494] was, it was just a slow type walk. His walk seemed to pick up, the more steps he took.

Q. Did anyone shake hands with him when he first got down off the monument?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Would you say they did or didn't? What is your best recollection?

A. The way I was standing, the crowd sort of went by me to catch up with him.

Q. Now, incidentally, where were you standing?

A. I was in the fourth row. They had made row type of affairs and I was about in the fourth row from him.

Q. In what direction? North, south, east or west?

A. I believe you said the top is north and—

Q. Right.

A. It would be on the south side—not directly south, but over—

Q. Was he making his speech then facing to the south?

A. Facing down the avenue, yes, sir.

Q. Well, that would be to the east, wouldn't it?

A. Well, the University—University Avenue, the one from the bridge, would be coming from the—well—I am confused. In other words, may I see the map?

[fol. 1495] Q. Find your pointer and take a look.

A. Yes, sir, I am looking—I see, I am sorry. I thought it was like this, but—uh-huh.

Let's see, that would be north, south, east, west? Is that the way it is?

Mr. Cravens: Yes.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. North is to the top?

A. Uh-huh. South, east, west?

Mr. Gooch: North is the top.

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. East is to your right.

A. All right. That's fine. That's right. It would be to the east.

Q. He was facing into the east?

A. Yes, sir, and so actually I was on the eastern side also.

Q. And you were in the fourth row facing him?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, where had the minister gotten on the statue? On which side of the statue with respect to where Walker was?

A. Oh, just right at the side of the statue which, I guess, would be on the, still on the eastern side or just right at the very side of the, sort of halfway on and halfway off, right at the corner.

[fol. 1496] Q. Was he on the same side that Walker was on?

A. My best recollection, Mr. Walker was right in the middle of it and the minister, when I noticed him, he was right at the edge of or at the base of the steps.

Q. Was he to Walker's left or right?

A. He was to his left.

Q. All right. Did you see the heavy set Sheriff take the minister down from the statue?

A. No, sir, that was when the people sort of surged forward and I did not see who, what actually happened then. It was—my view was covered for that split moment until I could move out and get a better vantage point.

Q. Was this surge forward that you are talking about a part of this charge you related?

A. You mean the surge for—or going towards the minister?

Q. Right.

A. No, sir.

Q. How long before Walker got down from the monument?

A. My best recollection, the minister was taken away from the immediate area of the monument and after the, you might say that particular area was cleared, that was when Mr. Walker got down.

[fol. 1497] Q. And when Mr. Walker got down, did he go to the north or the south of the monument? Do you know which way now the north of the monument is?

A. He went to the—be the north.

Q. That way is north, right?

A. Right, went to the north.

Q. Would you take your pointer and trace the direction that Mr. Walker went after he got down off the monument?

A. Yes, sir, he stepped down, turned to his north and went, oh, just right into this little area right here (indicating).

Mr. Nuss: Louder, please.

A. Stepped down, which would—and stepped to his north and then back around to his west, or walked west up towards the Lyceum Building.

Q. And do I understand, then, he walked on out ahead all by himself first?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. Without saying anything to anyone?

A. Following the speech, I did not hear him say anything.

Q. Well, you were close enough to where if he had said something—you were right in the fourth row?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1498] Q. If he had have stopped and talked to someone in this area, you would have certainly heard it, wouldn't you?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. And had somebody at this point said, if they had said, "General, lead us in a charge, will you lead us," you undoubtedly would have heard that, wouldn't you?

A. Well, there was a lot of hollering. I am not sure I would have heard it unless they hollered themselves, I don't know.

Q. Unless who hollered?

A. If anyone hollered.

Q. As I understood you to say, Walker walked off the statue and walked along here all by himself?

A. He did, yes, sir, when he first got down from the statue and walked some steps before he was caught up with.

Q. Perhaps some thirty feet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during that period of time nobody got up close to him and asked him anything, did they?

A. The people, as soon as he—as soon as he got down from the statue and just made maybe three or four steps, they started in behind him.

Q. Uh-huh.

[fol. 1499] A. First one or two men and then the other people followed.

Q. And had he gotten this so-called approximately thirty feet by the time they started catching up with him?

A. They were in the process of catching up to him when he got to that area.

Q. Where was he by the time this 500 people lined up behind him?

Mr. Andress: Beside him.

The Court: Let the witness testify, Mr. Andress, please.

Mr. Andress: I was correcting him.

The Court: Let Mr. Watts take care of it. One at a time.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir. Did you understand the question?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. I say, how far west had he gotten when this so-called 500 people lined up behind him?

A. There were, I would say, 250 or 300, maybe, maybe a little bit more, that listened.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. That when they determined who it was making the speech, they, the crowd, increased.

[fol. 1500] Q. Uh-huh.

A. Then I noticed that the further he walked, there were some people that had not, in this area over here, that had not been to the speech but came across this area and then joined the group that was going up.

Q. Did these people here walk or run?

A. Run.

Q. And what about the ones over here at the YMCA, did they walk or run?

A. I believe they were all trying to catch up with that group.

Q. And with General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as I understand, then, when Walker walked up the first thirty feet, he was relatively by himself?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then after he got about thirty feet, the crowd caught up with him?

A. Caught up with him.

Q. Did he wait for them to catch up, or did they just increase their gait and catch him?

A. It is my best recollection he kept walking and they caught up with him.

Q. Now, did you follow with the group?

A. No, sir.

[fol. 1501] Q. Weren't you interested in what Walker was going to do up to that point?

A. Yes, sir, I was interested, but I did not follow them. I stayed over, almost to the same place that I was. However, I moved out to the street and over to the sidewalk and moved up some way near the YMCA Building.

Q. And was that relatively deserted when you got back there after all these people had gone up there?

A. No, but there were still some people along the porch and right near the steps that were not entering into the—

Q. All right. What point were you when you estimated the numbers in this crowd?

A. The first number I estimated as I approached the monument, which was, like I say, I believe it was a couple hundred feet maybe. And then I looked around prior to the speech being made and I saw other people coming in, making the crowd larger.

And then the crowd went forward after the speech.

Q. Did the crowd dissipate any or any of the people listening to his speech scatter before they started toward the monument? I mean toward the Lyceum?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. So, to you, then, as you could see the crowd, rather [fol. 1502] than scattering and dissipating, actually increased?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As he started walking westward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. My point is, did I understand you to estimate, in answer to Mr. Gooch's question, that as Walker walked toward the flagpole, there were approximately a thousand people or—as you were, approximately five hundred people? Lined up behind him.

A. I think so—well, now, either 500 with him, near him, or beside of him.

Q. Well, certainly I would say within the confines of the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were pretty well lined up pretty straight behind him?

A. When they caught up with him, they got either beside him in this long line or in back of him.

Q. Was it a single file, a single rank?

A. The front rank was, but, however, there were other people behind this front rank.

Q. How many deep would you say they were? Two, three?

A. Well, sir, that was—there was a lot of them but I didn't—I really would hate to estimate because I would [fol. 1503] hate to get it wrong.

Q. Now, let's estimate how wide a person would be. There is a foot, there is another five inches. Now, let's get an average person here. There is a foot and there is another ten inches (measuring Mr. Gooch).

So, somewhere in between there, an average citizen would probably be around, we would say, conservatively, eighteen inches, wouldn't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Foot and a half. Take the stand, please.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So, if there were two hundred people, that would be less than—that would be two-fifths of this crowd—on the front line, that would be 325 feet in width, wouldn't it, or do you know?

A. Well—

Q. Do you want to get your pencil and paper?

A. I wasn't the best in mathematics, so I—

Q. Did you study Liberal Arts?

A. Yes, sir. Very liberal.

Q. All right. Do you want to get your pencil and paper and figure out how wide a company front would be with 200 people in it at a foot and a half apiece.

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I submit that's a matter of argument.

[fol. 1504] Mr. Watts: It's not argument.

The Court: It's a matter of mathematics, so I am not going to require the witness to do it. It's a matter of mathematics.

Mr. Watts: That's why I was getting him a pencil.

The Witness: Thank you, sir, I—

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Well, let's break it down to something simple. If there were 200 people in the line and they were a foot and a half wide, that would be 300 people wouldn't it—as you were, 300 feet.

A. All right.

Q. Now, then, I wish you would outline to use the rate of speed that this 500-man group took toward the Marshals?

A. At the beginning they were slow and the farther they got, they picked up speed.

Q. And did they ever get into a run?

A. Not while I was watching them.

Q. Where were you when you quit watching?

A. In approximately the area near the—near the Y Building but further down near the monument.

Q. Did it appear to you that Walker had command over this group?

A. Sir, I don't know whether he did or not.

[fol. 1505] Q. Did you hear him issue any orders?

A. I wasn't close enough to hear him speak while he was in the crowd. I did not follow him or stay with him where I could listen.

[fol. 1506] Q. Did you hear him confer with a group of about 15 persons who appeared to be riot leaders any time before he started to walk?

A. Before the walk or before the speech?

Q. First, before the walk, immediately before the walk.

A. Not that I recall.

Q. Did you see him confer with 15 people who appeared to be riot leaders before the speech?

A. Well, now, I don't know whether they were riot leaders. Like I said, he was talking to some people before the speech. I don't know whether they were riot leaders or not.

Q. As a newsman would there have been any way you could have told whether they were riot leaders or not?

A. No, sir. They looked like a group of students to me.

Q. Did you see anyone, a tall young man waving a big Confederate flag at that time?

A. I saw several flags. Very possible. I don't know whether it was in that area or not, but I saw several Confederate flags waving—waved that night.

Q. Well, now going back and reconstructing your memory on this, the very best you can, relive this instant when you first saw General Walker, you first saw him standing [fol. 1507] there by the monument, did you see any young man waving a big Confederate flag? Yes or no, or do you know?

A. I can't recall exactly.

Q. Now then, on the monument, back to the speech.

Did you hear General Walker beg the students to cease their violence, and he was met by one massive jeer?

A. I did not.

Q. Would you say that did not happen?

A. I don't know whether it happened or not. I did not personally hear this take place, but I don't know whether it happened or not.

Q. Could there—from where you were could there have been a massive jeer without you hearing it?

A. Well, no, sir, I don't believe that I ever heard any jeer during the speech, before or after.

Q. My question was could there have been a massive jeer during the speech without you hearing it from where you were in the fourth row?

A. I am sure I would have heard it.

Q. All right, and would you say there was not a massive jeer?

A. My best recollection, there was not.

Q. Did you hear General Walker tell the students that, "Violence is not the answer"?

A. I can't recall that, sir.

[fol. 1508] Q. Would you say he did not say that?

A. As I testified, some of these things I took down and some I did not. I did not hear all that was said.

Q. Well, now, in fairness, General Walker could have said, "If there is any blood shed let it be on the hands of the Federal Government. . . ."

A. Yes, sir, I recall that.

Q. " . . . violence is not the answer. Violence was not intended. Your real enemy is that way in Cuba"?

A. I recall some of that but I don't—I don't recall this part about the violence.

Q. Do you recall him saying something about Cuba?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say?

A. Well, this is in my notes.

Q. All right, give us verbatim what he said?

A. This is not verbatim, but this is as close to what I—I have got, "There is a long route yet to Cuba."

Like I said a while ago, I believe I meant to say, "this," but I have, "to Cuba". —"there".

Like I said, I wrote in the dark and under a bad situation.

Q. But you wrote down there everything that you could under the circumstances that impressed you as being significant?

[fol. 1509] A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you hear Governor (sic) Walker say, "Governor Barnett has betrayed the people of Mississippi?"

The Court: He means General Walker.

Q. Excuse me, I am sorry. Did Governor (sic) Walker say, "Governor Barnett has betrayed the people of Mississippi?"

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Would you say he did or didn't say that?

A. I did not hear him say that, but I am not saying he didn't because I don't know.

Like I said, I tried to write down what I could, and I might have missed that while I was writing it down.

Q. Did he say, "Don't let up now you may lose this battle but you will have been heard"?

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Did he say, "This is a dangerous situation"?

A. I don't recall that.

Q. Did he say, "You must be prepared for possible death?" Now that would have been rather a significant and challenging statement.

A. Yes, sir, it would, but I don't recall that.

Q. Did he say, "If you are not, go home now"?

A. I don't recall it.

Q. Did you hear any cheers?

[fol. 1510] A. Yes.

Q. Was it apparent to you that Walker had complete command over the group?

A. I am not sure what your definition of "command" is.

Q. By your definition.

A. My definition of command, where someone could say —tell a group of several, or a lot of people to do something, and they would listen to him. Is that—are the—or they would do what he said.

Q. Well that is a pretty good definition. Did you think he had such command over that group that they would do what he said?

A. They were being very respectful to him. I don't—if I—if he had said something, tell them to go on or something, what they were doing, I believe they would have listened to him.

Q. But he didn't tell them to go on, did he?

A. Well, now—

Q. Did you hear him give any commands of any kind?

A. If I can refer to my notes?

Q. All right, refer to your notes, please, sir, and if you find any command there let me know.

A. I believe when he got to the point, "There is no stopping point, you can continue," I consider that a command. "You can continue."

[fol. 1511] Q. Uh-huh. All right, that is the nearest, by your conception, that he got to a command?

A. Well, I don't really consider that a command, but when he said, "You have a right to protest," I think it was more of a statement, but I believe when he said, "You can continue," I consider that a command.

Q. He didn't say anything like, "Follow me, let's charge," or anything like that?

A. I didn't hear that.

Q. Did he or did he not use the word, "charge", anywhere?

A. I don't—I don't recall the word charge. I don't know that he did not say it but—

Q. Do you know Mr. John Edmond King, the gentleman that testified just before you?

A. With the radio station?

Q. Radio station, yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have discussed this matter with him, haven't you?

A. When you say, "Do I know him . . ." the only time that I met him was at Oxford. He and I both testified before the Grand Jury. I talked to him then and this is the first time I have seen him since that time.

Q. Well, you visited with him in Oxford, didn't you? [fol. 1512] A. Yes, sir, just a short period of time because I believe he came to town and testified and left. I don't believe we talked any long period of time.

And this morning is the first time I have seen him since I have been here.

Q. Where are you both staying?

A. I don't know where he is staying but I am staying at the Worth.

Q. Did you visit with him out in the hall? Didn't I see you visiting with him out in the hall?

A. Just spoke to him.

Q. Did you talk with him about the fact that your notes were almost verbatim with his, wherein it says, "There is no stopping place, continue"?

A. We did not go over each others' notes together, if that is what you are asking, no, sir.

I wasn't sure what he had in his notes, or he in mine.

Q. Then if the notes are similar it is certainly not any result of any coordination between you?

A. No, sir, it is certainly not.

Q. What is your newspaper?

A. I am not with a newspaper now.

Q. What was it?

A. The Nashville Banner.

[fol. 1513] Q. Did you have access to a copy of that Nashville Banner?

A. Sir.

Q. Do you have a copy or access to a copy of the Nashville Banner about the time the riot took place?

A. I believe I could.

Q. Would you produce it, sir?

A. I don't have it with me. I have a copy at—

Mr. Watts: Do you have a copy of it, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: Yes, sir. It is not the AP story, if that is what you want (producing newspaper).

Mr. Watts: Might I have just a minute to have a look at this, please, sir.

(Sotto voce discussion of attorneys not audible to court reporter.)

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I would like to mark as an exhibit on that this part marked in red. That is what I am offering in evidence.

The Court: All right, you will have to mark it.

Mr. Watts: I will have the reporter circle it. Mr. Reporter, will you please encircle this area right here, and mark that as an exhibit. Better circle it with the pen.

(Thereupon, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 22, was marked for identification.)

[fol. 1514] Mr. Gooch: Are you going to introduce the date-line?

Mr. Watts: Yes, or why don't we just stipulate to it.

Mr. Gooch: Well, I think the stipulation is that is October 1st.

Mr. Watts: October 1, 1962.

Mr. Gooch: It is an article without any credit to any news release.

Mr. Watts: We have stipulated, as I understand, that without the Nashville Banner giving any specific credit to AP, it has this language, which it is agreed, from the AP report?

Mr. Gooch: No, I said it just had some of the same language that was in the report.

Mr. Watts: This same language.

Mr. Gooch: It does not—the article itself does not give credit to AP, and I told you it had some of the same language that was in some of the AP stories.

Mr. Watts: And I will now offer in evidence this same material that is in some of the AP stories.

The Court: That will be out of Plaintiff's Exhibit 22.

Mr. Watts: Out of Plaintiff's Exhibit 22. Has a red circle.

[fol. 1515]

EXCERPT OF PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBIT NO. 22 READ INTO RECORD

"Dispatches from Oxford, Mississippi, said Walker sought to lead a charge by rioters, and quotes him to saying to students, 'If you can't win go on, don't stay at the University, but let's not quit, we can win.'"

Now as I understand, you did not hear that precise language that you have any recollection of, did you?

A. No, I did not.

Mr. Watts: That is all.

Mr. Gooch: We tender in evidence the notes taken and testified to by the witness.

Mr. Andress: I think that we can offer them as part of the cross examination, but we don't believe they can offer them on direct. We object to it.

Mr. Gooch: All right.

The Court: Are you through with this witness?

Mr. Gooch: I have no more questions.

The Court: You may be excused.

* * *

Mr. Gooch: We offer at this time the deposition taken in the Atlanta case by—well, I don't know who took it. I think Mr. Smith.

Mr. Watts: A reporter. And we don't care. It is a legitimate deposition.

Mr. Gooch: And the deposition is of William W. Brit[fol. 1516] tingham.

Mr. Watts: Is the Reverend Duncan Gray's deposition in that same deposition, Mr. Gooch?

Mr. Gooch: No, sir. Brittingham, Buckley and Tatum, in this volume.

Mr. Andress: Where was this taken?

Mr. Gooch: I don't know. I wasn't there.

Mr. Watts: At Oxford.

Mr. Gooch: It shows appearance of Watts, Smith, Gambrell, and Thomas.

Mr. Watts: I have found it.

Mr. Gooch: Taken by Mr. Gambrell, I believe, in the Atlanta Case.

Mr. Watts: Yes, sir, and myself.

Mr. Gooch: All right. Beginning at Page 3.

Q. Would you please state your name?
A. William W. Brittingham.
Q. What is your age?
A. I am 21.
Q. And where are you from?
A. Lewes, Delaware.
Q. Are you in school at this time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where?
[fol. 1517] A. At the University of Mississippi.
Q. How long have you been in the University of Mississippi?
A. This is my second year.
Q. Are you a sophomore?
A. No, sir, I am a Junior. I transferred from Jr. College.

* * *

Mr. Gooch: That is through line—about 4, on Page 4. Skipping the preliminaries, the 5th question on Page 4.

Q. You are familiar with that section of the campus known as the circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the Confederate monument at the east end and the Lyceum Building at the west end?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Mr. Brittingham, on the afternoon or evening of September 30, 1962, were you on the University of Mississippi campus?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you arrive on the University campus?

A. I arrived at approximately suppertime.

Q. Where had you been?

[fol. 1518] A. I had been to Jackson to the football game.

Q. When you arrived back on the campus at approximately suppertime where did you go first?

A. First I went to my room then I unpacked, changed clothes and a group of us went to the Lyceum.

Q. When you got to the Lyceum just describe what you saw and what was going on there.

A. When I arrived at the Lyceum the Marshals had surrounded the Lyceum Building and army trucks were parked in front of the Lyceum Building and there was quite a crowd down in that area there and there was a lot of name calling and cheers and yells of different types and remarks being made and Mississippi State Highway Patrol was holding the crowd back from the Marshals, not a great distance, but just about the width of the street there in front of the Lyceum, and cigarette butts were starting to be flipped on top of the trucks to try to set the canvas top that was on the trucks afire, and there was a bunch of students that were trying to get up close to let the air out of the tires and tried to do as much damage to the army trucks as they could. Then missiles or objects were being thrown by them at that time, and it was getting dark and these objects were starting to be thrown in much larger numbers.

Q. Who were they thrown at?

A. They were throwing at the Marshals and I'll tell you [fol. 1519] those Marshals took quite a beating, really, and then the crowd seemed to be getting a little more wild and a little more aroused as objects were being thrown in increasing numbers and the temper of the crowd was getting more violent. They were particularly aroused at the Marshals and the temper of that crowd reached its climax, when the Marshals fired the first tear gas into the crowd and the crowd receded to the east end of the circle down by the statue, and in the surrounding area.

[fol. 1520] Q. After that happened, just briefly tell us what occurred, then, up until the time you saw General Walker?

A. There were small groups, maybe just a handful of people who would sporadically surge up towards the Marshals and throw objects, bricks and rocks, stones and things like that, there was not a formal group, not organized, but they would just run up, a certain group, and throw and then run back.

That kept on for quite a little time. Along about then I just lost track of time there, but it went on, just kept up and the next thing was when General Walker stepped on the monument.

Q. Had you heard anything to the effect that he was on the campus before he stepped up on that marker, on the monument?

A. Yes, sir, I heard students say, "General Walker is here." They wanted to hear him then and they started crowding around the monument.

Q. How close did you get to the General when he was on the monument?

A. Well, you mean in feet?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, I would say in forty feet. I was in the area of the fountain east of the monument and on the left side of University Avenue. Do you have a map?

[fol. 1521] Q. Yes, here is a map.

A. Thank you, now I was in the area here of which we could call "Circle 2", now the monument is up here at the east end of it.

Q. At the east end of the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Approximately where would the fountain be?

A. In this area right here.

Q. Now, you have pointed out by a dot down the street known as University Avenue heading toward the bridge and across that street where the mob was gathered?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you estimate how far that was, approximately, in feet? Would you say it was forty feet?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, somewhere in that neighborhood, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you hear the General when he was making his speech where you could understand him?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear it clearly due to the fact that there was approximately three or four hundred students in that immediate area. I couldn't say how many or how long they had been there. But they were in that area and in the surrounding area. There was a lots of times that [fol. 1522] people were talking and yelling and laughing and some of them were cussing and coming down into the area on the monument and they were still riled up about the whole situation and because of the noise and confusion, all of General Walker's speech was not clear to me.

Q. You didn't hear and understand everything that was said?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recall anything that you heard him say?

A. Yes.

Q. What was it?

A. He made the statement that they had a constitutional right to a protest, that was when I came in from the crowd and I stood and listened and that is when he said the protest of these students would be heard all over the world or that what they said here tonight would be heard all over the world, now that last is not verbatim. At one time I heard him say something about Cuba, which wasn't clear to me, I just heard him use the word "Cuba".

Q. You didn't understand what else he said about Cuba, if anything?

A. No, it wasn't clear at all and I don't know what it was all about. I heard the term used but at the time I didn't know what he was talking about. When that was going on, I was not close enough to hear what was being said. I did [fol. 1523] not see or hear anything about that and I didn't think anything about that at the time.

Q. All you know about that is hearsay?

A. Yes, sir, just what I heard.

Q. Was anything else that you started to say?

A. No, except that was quite a while ago and I am trying to think of exactly what happened and what I saw and heard.

Q. Now, was there anything else that you heard or observed there right at that time?

A. Yes, before General Walker had been seen by the crowd and had stepped up on the monument, a photographer was getting up the side he was on, that is, just a few minutes later, and then a reporter, but I think he was a private reporter, possibly might have been working with the photographer, and they had come off of field work and the crowd just tore up his equipment there where they had thrown a road-block down below the new Science Building to keep people from coming in.

Q. Did you see any missiles or weapons of any kind in the hands of the people there that night?

A. Yes, sir. Such as rocks and bricks?

Q. Yes. Yes, and bottles, pipes or anything they could use for a weapon?

A. Students had rocks, broken bottles and anything they [fol. 1524] could pick up and they really were worked up and they got anything that they could throw and would charge down towards the Marshals and throw them at them.

Q. What about bricks?

A. Oh, yes, bricks and rocks, lots of them.

Q. Do you know where the bricks came from?

A. Yes, sir, most of them came from the new Science Building they were building there.

Q. Where was the Science Building relative to the monument, how far?

A. It was, I don't know the feet that it was, but I do know where it was and I would say it would be around ninety or maybe 100 feet. It might be more or it might be less.

Q. How did they get those bricks from the building up into the Circle for use?

A. Well, I saw one student who had a wheelbarrow and I saw another that had acquired burlap bags from some place and would load these up and pick them up and heave them to students and go back and load them up again.

Q. What were they doing with these bricks and rocks and bottles?

A. They were making an assault on these Federal Marshals surrounding the Lyceum.

Q. How were they assaulting them by throwing these [fol. 1525] missiles at them?

A. Yes, sir, they would throw anything they could get at them.

Q. Now, the time that General Walker was making his speech, state whether or not people were around there with those things in their hands?

Mr. Watts: Objected to as leading.

The Court: Overruled.

Q. Did you observe anything in the hands of any of these people at the time General Walker was making his speech?

A. Yes, sir, some people had objects in their hands, but I would say the majority did not.

Q. What objects was it that they would have?

A. Bricks and rocks.

Q. Tell us just what happened immediately after General Walker got through with his speech.

A. Well, he came down off of the statue and headed toward the Lyceum and on out, not on the sidewalk but on the grass, and the students then began to have a more sense of direction or feeling of security or to think as a unit of one and—

Mr. Watts: If Your Honor please, I believe I must object to this. This lad is trying to tell what all these students were thinking.

[fol. 1526] The Court: Sustained.

Mr. Watts: That's the type of—

The Court: That part of the answer in which he attempts to interpret the feeling of the crowd. I will permit the balance of the answer.

Mr. Watts: And they started, I think it starts again.

A. —and they started off toward the Lyceum and the crowd generally picked up. I did not see General Walker when he reached the flagpole, I didn't see him any more.

Q. Where was he the last time you saw him?

A. He was headed toward the Lyceum in the front of the crowd with the students.

[fol. 1527] A. Yes, sir, he was right up front with them.

Q. How far had he gone from the monument, I believe you said that was the last you saw of him, now where was that relative to the flagpole?

A. I would say he was about even with the flagpole but if he went to the back of the flagpole, I could not have seen him.

Q. But you saw him about the time he reached the flagpole but you didn't see him afterwards?

A. Yes, sir, that is correct, I didn't.

Mr. Gooch: There was an objection there to leading.

Q. State whether or not you saw him relative to the flagpole?

Mr. Gooch: Then some more objections.

A. He was approaching the flagpole directly but in the same direction he had been going when he left the statue.

Q. Where was he relative to the front of the crowd when you saw him last?

A. He was in or with the front of the crowd.

Q. Do you know whether anyone had ahold of his arms?

A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. You couldn't tell that?

A. No, sir.

Q. What were you doing?

A. What was I doing?

[fol. 1528] Q. Yes.

A. The same thing every other student was doing.

Q. Did you have rocks or bricks in your hand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you had them in your hand previously that night?

A. You mean before?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with them?

A. I threw them at the Marshals.

Mr. Watts: Cross examination. Go ahead and read the answers, if you will.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. What is the length of the regular football field?

A. About 100 yards.

Q. Could you throw a football 100 yards?

A. It could be done.

Q. All right. By the same scale, how far could you throw a rock?

A. Well, now first that depends on the size of the rock.

Q. Well the size that the kids were throwing that night at the Marshals?

A. Well, first I think I could state the distance that you [fol. 1529] could throw a rock as compared with a soft ball. I could throw a soft ball, I'd say 50 yards or more, and I think you could throw a rock that far.

Q. That is about half the distance of a football field?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you participate in athletics at the University of Mississippi?

A. No, but I played ball in high school.

Q. Football?

A. Basketball and baseball.

Q. Did you see General Walker with any rocks in his hands?

A. No, sir, I did not.

Q. Now as I understand, when he was speaking, you were in the area of the fountain there in the circle which is somewhere in the neighborhood of 50 feet south of the monument?

A. Yes, sir, I never measured the distance but that sounds about right.

Q. Well, from that point, were there people between you and them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a substantial crowd?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1530] Q. Could you estimate the size of that crowd?

A. Oh, I would say around 300 or 400.

Q. That is the area immediately around the monument?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well do you know how many was in the area surrounding, the surrounding area, in other words?

A. No, sir.

Q. When General Walker left the statue, did he proceed north or south of the statue or did he proceed west?

A. Well, he stepped down off of the monument and at the time that he stepped down, why, he passed on the left side, which would be the south side. Now I could be mistaken but he passed on this side, I can't be sure about that.

Q. You mean on the north side?

A. Yes, sir, I believe so but I could be mistaken. There was so much confusion going on.

Q. Were there quite a few students or people of some kind close to him and around him?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. When he joined the mob or crowd, as you said, after he got down off of the monument, did you see him again?

A. Yes, sir, when he reached the other side, he was headed towards the Lyceum Building.

Q. In what direction was he headed then?

A. He was headed towards the Lyceum Building almost [fol. 1531] in the direction of this stretch of road right here.

Q. According to this map, that would be slightly to the northwest, would it not?

A. Yes, sir. It was not a direct line between the monument and the Lyceum Building but he was headed in that direction.

Q. Now what was the form of that crowd as it moved forward? Were they drawn up in a formation with a straight line across the front or was it just ragged and sporadic movements?

A. They were not lined up, they didn't form any line or anything like that. They were just grouped up, quite a number would be in each group. They were headed towards the Lyceum Building and all the time they were going, there was more people coming down University Avenue and getting into the crowd, the general movement was toward the Lyceum.

Q. How close were you to the front of the crowd?

A. Oh, approximately the same distance I was when it began.

Q. You mean when what began?

A. Well, when General Walker was on the monument, I was about as close to the front of the crowd as I was to him there on the monument.

Q. That was 40 or 50 feet?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1532] Q. You were about that far from him?

A. Yes, sir, maybe a little more after he left the monument because there were a lot of people and I wasn't in any rush to get in there and mix up with that crowd of people. There were a lot of people passed me, they started off walking but they picked up speed.

Q. Did you go up to the flagpole?

A. No, sir, I didn't, it was just one or two feet, about then was when the Marshals started firing tear gas.

Q. Where was he with respect to the flagpole when you lost sight of him?

A. Headed in the direction of the Lyceum.

Q. But was he east or west of the flagpole?

A. I don't know whether he passed this sidewalk or not. I lost track of him in the crowd.

There was just a lot of people moving forward and were constantly adding to it and I just lost sight of him. In that crowd it was hard not to lose sight of somebody.

Q. Well, about how far north of the east-west sidewalk was he?

A. Oh, that would be hard to say there again because there were so many people moving back and forth, you couldn't say.

Q. Compared to the distance you were from him, was he as far north as you were behind him?

[fol. 1533] A. Yes, he could have been.

Q. You never did see him close to the north-south sidewalk that runs past the flagpole, did you?

A. No, sir, but the crowd there was pretty compact, it was a big crowd and they crossed the sidewalk but I didn't see General Walker cross it, no, sir.

Mr. Gooch: Are you offering the next?

Mr. Watts: I think the rest we will skip.

Mr. Gooch: I will offer it if you don't.

Mr. Watts: It's self-serving, if Your Honor please. Let's check it with the Court. It's entirely irrelevant and it's discovery matter.

The Court: Let's see now, what line are we talking about?

(Sotto voce conference at the bench.)

Mr. Gooch: The Court is omitting from the bottom question on Page 18.

Mr. Watts: I think that's the rest of the deposition. The last question and answer doesn't quite deal with that but I don't care about it unless you want it in.

Well, let's ask that last question on Page 20.

Q. Did you go to high school in Delaware?

A. Yes, sir.

[fol. 1534] Mr. Watts: That's all.

Mr. Gooch: Judge, I am out of witnesses. Could we adjourn a little early this afternoon?

The Court: All right. Ladies and Gentlemen, we have finished a little sooner with the available witnesses than we had anticipated so we will go ahead and recess this afternoon and start at 9:00 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(Thereupon, at 4:25 p.m., an adjournment was taken until the following morning, Wednesday, June 17, 1964, at 9:00 o'clock, a.m.)

[fol. 1537] PROCEEDINGS

REVEREND DUNCAN GRAY, JR. called as a witness by the Defendant, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows, to-wit:

Direct examination.

By Mr. Gooch:

Q. Please state your name.
A. Reverend Duncan Gray, Jr.
Q. Where do you live, Reverend?
A. Oxford, Mississippi.
Q. How long have you lived in Oxford?
A. Since September 1957.
Q. What is your vocation or occupation, please?
A. I am a priest in the Episcopal Church, presently serving as Rector of St. Peters Episcopal Church in Oxford.
Q. How old a man are you, Reverend?
A. Thirty-eight.
Q. Had you lived in Oxford before the time that you mentioned that you went there as a priest?
A. No, sir, I had never lived there before.
Q. Of what state are you a native of?
A. Mississippi.
Q. Where were you raised?
A. I was borned in Camden, Mississippi, raised there and at Columbus and Greenwood, Mississippi, and gradu-
[fol. 1538] ated from high school at Jackson, Mississippi.
Q. Who is your father?
A. Bishop Duncan M. Gray, Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Mississippi.
Q. What is your educational background, Reverend?
A. As I said, I graduated from high school at Central High in Jackson, Mississippi. I received a Bachelor of Engineering Degree in Electrical Engineering at Tulane University in New Orleans. And then later I went to Seminary at the School of Theology, the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee; received a BD Degree from there.

Q. BD, is that—a—Bachelor of—

A. Bachelor of Divinity.

Q. Now directing your attention to September 30, 1962, at Oxford, Mississippi, did you have occasion to go on the campus of Ole Miss University sometime on the 30th of September, 1962?

A. Yes, sir, I did, on two occasions.

Q. When was the first occasion, Reverend?

A. The first was around 6:00 p.m., when I received a telephone call, long distance call—

Q. I don't believe you can testify as to any long distance call.

Mr. Watts: That is all right, sir. He may.

Q. All right, go ahead.

[fol. 1539] A. As to the occasion of my going there, the mother of an Ole Miss coed had called. She had been hearing news on radio and television, and asked that I go and get her daughter off the campus and have her spend the night with me.

I went to the campus to Ward Hall, where the coed was living. She was not ready at the time and I went up to the Lyceum Building for some 15 minutes around 6:00—between 6:00 and 6:15.

Q. What did you observe at that time, Reverend?

A. Well, at that time the United States Marshals were already ringing the Lyceum Building, the Mississippi Highway Patrolmen, some of them were standing between the Marshals and the crowd that had gathered there. A crowd of predominantly students, as far as I could tell.

The crowd was out on the grass in the portion that is known as the circle. The Highway Patrolmen were in the street there between the crowd and the Lyceum, at that point.

Q. How long did you remain there on that trip, Reverend?

A. I would say about 15 minutes, before I returned to the dormitory and picked up the coed, who by then was ready, and took her back to my house for the evening.

Q. Now, did you later return to the campus on that date? [fol. 1540] A. Yes, sir, I was back on campus—I think—I crossed the east—the east bridge about 7:50 p.m., went to the home of a faculty member and watched the President's speech on television which I believe began at 8:00 o'clock.

Q. All right. Now, were you on the campus when the tear gas was fired?

A. Well, this home of the faculty member is actually on the campus but I was not down in the portion of the campus where the tear gas was fired, no, sir.

Q. Excuse me, were you out in the area of the circle when the tear gas was fired?

A. No, sir.

Q. About what time did you get on the campus, or get on the circle, if you did get on the circle that evening?

A. It must have been around 8:25, I would estimate, because it certainly was after the President's speech was completed, and it was a few minutes after that before I left the home.

I imagine about 8:25 when I got to the circle.

Q. For what purpose did you go to the circle, Reverend?

A. We had heard that on the—on the radio and television that violence had broken out on the campus. The Reverend Wofford Smith, assistant chaplain at the University and I were together, and we went down to the circle [fol. 1541] to see if we could go and do anything to calm the students down, or to get them to go back to their dormitories.

Q. All right. Now will you give us, as best you can, what you did or what you tried to do in that endeavor.

A. Well, when we first reached the circle the tear gas was fairly heavy at that point, and so Mr. Smith and I stepped into the "Y" Building first, the YMCA Building on the campus, and which is just on the edge of the circle. We stayed in there a very few minutes, and then came out and, as we did, there was a car moving down University Circle toward University Avenue, going away from the Lyceum. It had what appeared to be a deputy sheriff's insignia on it, and a Harrison County, Mississippi license plate. The car was moving rather slowly because of the people in the street, and we walked up to the car and Mr. Smith asked the man if he were not a law enforcement officer and he said he sure was.

And we asked him if he would help us to try to calm down the students and bring an end to what was going on, and try and bring some order out of the situation.

He said there was nothing he could do, and he drove on.

Q. And then what did you do?

A. After this we moved out into the circle, the part of the circle down toward the Y Building, and began to stop students who were coming down there carrying bricks and [fol. 1542] bottles and pieces of pipe and sticks and whatever. We would stop the students and ask them to give us their weapons, and ask them to return to their dormitories; try to explain to them that what they were doing was wrong, that they were hurting themselves and the University and the community.

Q. Did you seek to enlist the aid of anybody else in that crusade that night, Reverend?

A. Yes, sir, I asked General Edwin Walker to help us.

Q. Where did you first see General Edwin Walker?

A. I first saw him at a point somewhere between the Confederate monument and flagpole.

The Confederate monument is at the east end of the circle away from the Lyceum.

General Walker was there in the circle with a group of men, none of whom appeared to be students. They appeared to be 10 or 12, maybe 15, men with him.

Q. All right. Now had you known prior to that time, or had you heard that General Walker was on the campus?

A. Well, we had heard during the day that he was in Oxford. I understood that he was in the town. Just prior to seeing him I had heard a group of students saying, "Now we have a leader, now we have a leader."

And I had assumed that this was General Walker, although I had not heard his name mentioned.

[fol. 1543] Q. Had you known or heard of General Walker prior to this time?

A. Yes, sir, I had, of course, seen him on television, seen news photographs of him and had read about him certainly in the newspapers.

Q. All right. Now would you give us the gist of the conversation that you might have had with General Walker when you first encountered him there on the campus there that evening?

A. Well, when I first saw him, I walked up to him and asked him to help us try and calm the students down and to put an end to the violence, to ask the students to go back to their dormitories.

Q. Reverend, why did you think that—why did you seek out General Walker for that purpose?

A. Because I knew that he was something of a hero to the students that they identified him with their cause and that I thought a word from him would have a great deal of influence in bringing a stop to what was going on or, at least, moderating it to a considerable extent.

I felt that he could have great influence with many of the students in getting them to call it off and go home.

Q. All right. Now give us the gist of your conversation with General Walker there on that first encounter?

[fol. 1544] A. Well, when I first asked him to speak to the students and to help us bring the rioting to a halt, he said that he was not interested in putting a stop to what was going on.

He said he was there only as an observer and he, also, said that the students have every right to protest.

And I pled with him some more, pointing out to him just what I have said, that I thought he could have a great deal of influence with the students because they did identify him with their cause and he was something of a hero to them. And again he refused. He said he was not interested in stopping it; he was there only as an observer.

I believe at one point he said, "I couldn't stop it if I wanted to but I don't want to."

Q. Now prior to that time if I may interrupt, you stated that you had approached groups that were carrying these rocks, sticks and bottles, et cetera.

Had you had any measure of success in getting them to drop those articles and some of them leave?

A. Yes, we had had success with a great many of them as far as giving up their weapons were concerned.

The general pattern was, so many of these students seemed to be in something of a daze. We would stop them, [fol. 1545] or I would stop them—Mr. Smith was doing the same thing but we were not all in the same area—asked them for their weapons. Many times they would simply hand them over to us and we would throw them out of the way in the direction of the "Y" Building.

Other times they would simply drop them and respond and cooperate, for the most part, rather well at this point.

Now how many of them actually went back to their dormitories, I don't know, sir, but they did give up their weapons, most of them.

Now there were some who did not. I remember one student in particular with a shovel, he refused to and threatened me with a shovel.

At that point, there were a few in the crowd who did not appear to me to be students. Some of them were young, seemed to be perhaps teen-agers but not dressed as students, and I am certain they are not students. Now these did not respond. They would simply brush on by and we had very little luck with them.

But we did have any number of students give us their weapons or drop them when we asked them to.

Q. All right. Now you have detailed as best you can your first encounter with General Walker. Did you thereafter have an encounter with General Walker?

A. Yes, sir. I didn't finish the first encounter.

[fol. 1546] Q. I'm sorry. Go ahead, sir.

A. After I had asked him twice, I believe it was, to help, he finally asked me, "Who are you?"

"What are you doing out here anyway?"

Q. Yes, sir?

A. And I told him that I—I gave him my name and I said that I was Rector of the local Episcopal Church; that this was my home, my community; that I was deeply concerned about the damage being done to it and I was out there to put a stop to it, do anything I could to halt the violence and to get as many students as I could to go back to their dormitories.

And at that point he said, "You are the kind of an Episcopal minister that makes me ashamed to be an Episcopalian."

Q. All right. Now thereafter—did you finish?

A. Well, as far as I can tell. As I can recall, that was the last direct exchange with General Walker. I had some further exchanges with the members of the group that was with him at that time.

General Walker walked away soon after that and I started to follow him but several members of the group stopped me and began to argue with me and say that the students had a right to protest; that the Federal Government was violating their liberties and their rights.

[fol. 1547] And there was one man in particular who seemed to be talking more than the others, a young man, perhaps around 30 years of age, dressed in a suit and tie but he had his tie pulled down at this point.

I remember his making reference to his courses in Constitutional Law and to Judicial Procedures and I assumed at the point that he was a lawyer—I certainly couldn't be sure of that, and by the time this conversation had ended, General Walker had disappeared, or at least to my sight, in the direction of the Confederate monument.

Q. All right. Now, did you thereafter have an encounter with General Walker?

A. Yes, sir, I had gone back to the "Y" Building, standing at the top of the step, when my attention was directed to a crowd that was gathering at the Confederate monument, just to the east of the Confederate monument, and looking in that direction I saw a man who appeared to be General Walker standing at the base of the monument or on the base of the monument, at least at a point where he could be seen above the crowd and I went back—I went to the monument at that point and I think I got there just as he began his speech or address to the students.

Q. Do you recall anything that he might have said in that address, Reverend?

A. The first thing I heard him say was, "I want to con- [fol. 1548] gratulate you on what you are doing here this evening."

He went on to say, "You have every right to protest." He said, "Stand fast, firm. There are thousands behind you. You will win in the end."

He continued with criticism of the Federal Authorities. I remember particularly—

Mr. Andress: We don't have any objection to repeating what was said but when he says, "criticism, of the Federal Authorities," I think that's a conclusion.

The Court: Do you remember what he said? If you do, state that as near as you can remember?

A. I beg your pardon. Yes, sir.

He said something about, "This is a long way around to Cuba;" that the Marshals and troops should be in Cuba and not where they were.

I was moving through the crowd at this point, toward the monument. But this was the substance or the essence of what he was saying at that point.

Now once I did get to the monument, the base of the monument, I was much closer to him. I remember very clearly another thing he said. He said, "I have just come from a conference with the representative of your Governor and he said to tell you that you had been sold out, sold out by the man who led the Marshals onto the campus."

At this point there were cries from the crowd, "Who? [fol. 1549] Who?" And one or two voices said, "The Chancellor, the Chancellor."

General Walker paused at some length at this point and it was my impression that he bent over and spoke to somebody standing beside him but when he did raise up again, he said, "The man who sold you out was Col. Birdsong."

Q. All right.

A. By this time I was on the base of the monument, very close to General Walker, addressing him and asking him once again to try and quiet the students, to ask them to stop the rioting and what they were doing and to go back to their dormitories.

And he turned and looked at me and said to the crowd, "Here is an Episcopal minister that makes me ashamed to be an Episcopalian."

And I started to speak to the crowd at this point. I was at the base of the mon—at the base of the monument, started to speak to the crowd myself but was pulled down before I had spoken more than a very few words, pulled down by members of the crowd.

I hit the ground on one knee and was then picked up and pushed and shoved and moved through the crowd and out to the edge of it.

By the time I got to the edge of the crowd, I felt that those who were with me then who were pulling me along [fol. 1550] at that point were not hostile but friendly, were trying to protect me.

Q. Then where did you go?

A. Well, at this point, I became aware, first of all, of a man whom I had seen previously with General Walker on our first encounter. A man who appeared to be a law enforcement officer who was one of the ones pulling me away from the crowd at that point, and he spoke to me, identified himself as a law enforcement officer, and he said, "I am a law enforcement officer and I can't do anything about this. You'd better get on home or you are going to get hurt."

It was, also, at this time that a man came up to me and shook my hand and said that he was a Methodist minister. He said, "I want to thank you for what you are trying to do here tonight."

After this, I moved back toward the "Y", back into the steps at the southern end of the "Y".

Just about the time I got there, two or—two other students, two students—two people who appeared to be students came up to me and asked me to go back to address the crowd again at the monument. They said that they thought the crowd would listen to me.

So I turned around to go back to the monument but by the time we got there, the crowd was breaking up and moving toward the Lyceum, moving around both sides of [fol. 1551] the monument and moving in a general movement of what you might call a charge toward the Lyceum.

Q. Were you able to discern whether or not, who was leading that charge?

A. No, sir, I was not able to tell.

Mr. Gooch: I believe that—

A. I moved into the circle itself, trying to talk to the students that I could reach. The crowd was much, much bigger at this point and I would stop as many as I could and try and ask them to stop and to go back but at this point I had very little success.

The few that would stop at all would stop to argue and curse and many of them with tears in their eyes, were comparing themselves to the Hungarian Freedom Fighters and, in general, though, there was—we had—I had very little luck at this point.

Q. That was now after you had left the monument?

A. Yes, sir, it was after the crowd had moved away from the monument and started toward the Lyceum, into the circle.

Q. I see.

A. And I had moved out into the circle and was giving ground with the crowd, going—trying to stop as many as I could and turn them back. I gave ground, I suppose, and ended up as close as a point about midway between the flag-
[fol. 1552] pole and Lyceum, doing this same sort of thing, until the tear gas got so bad that I had to come back to the "Y".

Q. That was my next question. As that crowd moved toward the Lyceum Building, what, if anything, happened in the way of a tear gas burst?

A. Well, of course, once they got in the vicinity of the Lyceum, close enough to it, well, tear gas was fired in great quantities. That was the reason finally that I turned and came back myself: The tear gas got too heavy for any of us to take it.

[fol. 1553] Q. How long did you remain on the campus, Reverend?

A. The next time—in fact, the only time after the President's speech that I saw a clock and remember registering what time it was was when I had gone back in the Y Building at about five minutes after 10:00. I made a telephone call to my home at that point. And I know I was standing in front of Dr. Willis' house at 11:15 p. m. I would imagine I left the Circle a little before 11:00 o'clock, perhaps a quarter of 11:00, and left the campus itself just after that.

Q. Did you see General Walker anywhere after you had had this meeting with him on the monument?

A. No, sir, I didn't see him again.

Mr. Gooch: Pass the witness.

Cross examination.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. Rev. Gray, will you please pick up the pointer there and walk over to this chart. I am sure you probably will recognize that chart, but just to start you off, the top of the chart is north, the right is to the east, and of course the left is the west. Here is the so-called Circle, the monument, the Lyceum, the YMCA Building and University Avenue (indicating).

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, as I remember your testimony, you testified that [fol. 1554] you arrived about 7:50?

A. I crossed the east bridge, which is right here (indicating) about 7:50, yes, sir.

Q. Since you are definite on the time, you must have checked?

A. Yes, I looked at my watch at that point, because I was afraid we would miss the President's speech.

Q. Were you walking?

A. No, sir, I was in an automobile.

Q. And would you trace your course, please, sir?

A. We turned right here by the Alumni House, we moved along Rose Loop, then moved by Faculty Row, then down Faculty Circle to this point right here (indicating).

Q. Now, what is that point?

A. This is the home of Dr.—Mr. and Mrs. James Silver.

Q. Dr. Silver?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, to identify Dr. Silver, Dr. Silver, whether it be right or wrong, we are not involved in that, but he had taken a very active part in an effort to advance the cause of integration, hadn't he?

Mr. Gooch: If the Court please, I object to that.

The Court: Sustained.

[fol. 1555] Mr. Gooch: I ask the Court to instruct the Jury not to consider it. That is not part of the case.

The Court: Ladies and Gentlemen you are so instructed. We are not trying an integration case.

By Mr. Watts:

Q. That's right. Well, you then did go to Dr. Silver's house?

A. Yes, sir, I had gone to Dr. Willis' house, who was a member of my congregation. We were to watch the President's speech on TV there, but when we found their television set broken, then we went over to Dr. Silver's house. The Silvers were not there.

Q. And what time did you leave there, Reverend?

A. It was shortly after the President's speech was over. I would say fifteen or so. I imagine the speech didn't last more than seven or eight minutes.

Q. Then, were you afoot when you left, or did you go in a car?

A. I started out on foot, along with Rev. Wofford Smith, Dr. Willis, and one other faculty member, Dr. Fortenberry. We were picked up somewhere near around this intersection of Faculty Row and Faculty Circle, picked up in a car, and were driven to a point approximately along about the law school here, Lamar Hall.

Q. All right, sir. Trace your course from there on.

[fol. 1556] A. From there on we moved down Grove Loop, the Rev. Wofford Smith and I going together. The two faculty members dropped behind a bit. We came down Grove Loop to the edge of the Circle here, then, as I said a moment ago, we stepped into the Y.

Q. All right, sir. And how long were you in the Y?

A. Just a very few minutes at that point.

Q. Say five minutes?

A. I doubt if it was that long. Three, maybe.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. I started out this door of the Y, and it was right about in here that the automobile with the Deputy Sheriff was passing, and we encountered him at this point (indicating).

Q. All right, sir. That is when you talked to him seeking his aid as an officer in quieting down what you were seeing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Incidentally, at that point and by that time, what were you seeing? What was going on out in front of you?

A. Well, of course, by then around this part of the Circle—

[fol. 1557] Q. By "this part of the Circle" you are pointing to the northeast quadrant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, that Circle, by sidewalks, is divided roughly into four quadrants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Northeast, southeast, northwest and southwest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the two on the west are somewhat larger than the two on the east—

A. No.

Q. As you were, the two on the east are somewhat larger than the two on the west?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I was looking at it backwards?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then when you are saying, "This area," you mean the northeast quadrant?

A. Of course, this was the point that was most visible to us at this point and I remember that many students were running up, or many members of the crowd—

Q. Yes.

A. I don't want to use that term too loosely.

Q. All right.

A. But people, anyway, were moving back and forth [fol. 1558] most of them carrying weapons of some sort, I mean bricks or bottles, coke bottles, pieces of pipe, concrete and things such as that. A number of them were moving toward the Lyceum. They were moving in all directions at this particular point when we first moved out there.

We concentrated on those that ran in this area, right at that time, those who had weapons, and were running in a general northwest direction, trying to stop them and take their weapons away from them and ask them to go back to their dormitories.

Q. And I believe you said that the lads would frequently look somewhat dazed?

A. Yes, sir, as we would stop them the ones who seemed to be students did—they more or less were cooperative and they would give their weapons, drop them where they were, and, as I say, I don't know how many went home.

Q. At least they would drop their weapons and took off?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at that point you seemed to be having some effect on some of them?

A. With some. Of course, we were catching a very small portion of the crowd.

Q. These lads had obviously been through a lot of tear [fol. 1559] gas, hadn't they? Weren't their eyes inflamed?

A. I couldn't notice their eyes at that point. I imagine they were, like I was.

Q. Well, your eyes were a little smarty, too, weren't they?

A. Yes, sir, they were smarting.

Q. Now, about what period of time would you say you remained there in the northeast quadrant?

A. Right in the northeast quadrant?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I don't know the exact length of time. We were moving during this period, after we moved into the circle, we moved out into here, generally. At the beginning we were in here.

Q. By "here" you mean closer to the flagpole?

A. Still in this northeast part.

Q. Now, this right here (indicating) is the flagpole?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If I get your picture right, you started out in the northeast part, the northeast quadrant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You remonstrated there a while with the students?

A. Right.

Q. And gradually worked your way down southwest-
[fol. 1560] ward, somewhat closer to the flagpole?

A. No, sir, I didn't go—at this point I was close to the flagpole. I worked my way more in this direction.

Q. Right.

A. In the southeast part of the Circle. I remember, for example, sometime I was right about here (indicating) and watching the Highway Patrol pull out. At least the Highway Patrol cars; seemed to be about fifteen cars at that point pulling out here.

Q. Now, let's get the time of the action absolutely straight because we are getting down to the critical part of the operation.

A. I understand.

Q. As I understand, about 8:20 or 8:30 when you appeared at the YMCA Building you moved down into the northeast quadrant of the Circle and spent some little time there remonstrating with students, gradually worked your way down so that you worked on across this sidewalk, and as of about this time the Highway Patrol pulled out and you were down in the southeast quadrant?

A. Yes, sir. Well, I had been in the southeast quadrant once earlier too, because I believe a light standard was there, when I had tried to get some students to quit breaking out the lights there.

[fol. 1561] Q. All right, sir.

A. Now, I was down in the east end most of this time, not close to the flagpole at this point. And at one point I was back in the Y during this period of time.

Q. For what period of time?

A. Again it is hard for me to say exactly, sir. But several minutes.

Q. All right.

A. And in one instance I remember specifically in connection with that visit, was stopping some students inside the Y Building who—well, one student particularly, who had bricks in his hand, and speaking to him and taking the bricks from him and dropping them in the wastebasket in the Y. I was in the Y that time several minutes. How long, I wouldn't be able to say.

Q. Would you say more or less five, or approximately five?

A. I would say probably five, somewhere around in there.

Q. Now, then, Rev. Gray, you had met General Walker in the Circle?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you put your pointer as nearly as you can to where you met General Walker?

A. Well, as best—as best I can remember, it was between [fol. 1562] the flagpole and the monument.

Q. All right.

A. I think it was perhaps closer to midway between, right about in here (indicating). The Grove—the Circle was fairly clear at this point. The tear gas was heavy up towards the Lyceum. Most of the crowd had backed away. There was considerable concentration back down in here, and General Walker and his group of perhaps ten or twelve or fifteen men stood out rather clearly at that point.

Q. Now, then, let's endeavor as the very best your recollection will permit to fix the time when you saw General Walker there in the southeast quadrant, with the time you saw the Highway Patrol leave?

A. You mean which came first?

Q. If you can, yes.

A. Well, my recollection is, sir, that the Highway Patrol —watching the Highway Patrol leave came before I saw General Walker.

Q. Would you say shortly before or could you fix any kind of a time bracket at all?

A. Certainly it was not too long before, but I couldn't give an exact time.

Q. Now, at the time the Highway Patrol left, did you hear any outcries by the students, "Governor Barnett sold us out, what are they leaving us for," or anything to that effect?

[fol. 1563] A. No, sir, the crowd that was gathered along each side of this University Circle, this part over in here, were cheering when the Highway Patrol pulled out.

Q. They were cheering the Highway Patrol?

A. Cheering the Highway Patrol for leaving.

Q. For leaving?

A. This was my impression, anyhow.

Q. Anyhow, they were cheering?

A. And they were pulling out.

Q. But you didn't hear anyone say they were cheering them for leaving?

A. Well, no, sir.

Q. Well, now, isn't it a fact that shortly after they left, or about the time they were leaving, many of the students were talking and spontaneously sounding off, "Well, Ross let us down, we have been betrayed," or something to that effect?

A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't hear that?

A. No, sir.

Q. All right. If you didn't hear it, you didn't hear it.

Now, then, from the time you encountered General Walker right here at this point. Let's work backward and you tell [fol. 1564] us, starting from meeting General Walker and talking to him, and work your course backward to the YMCA, and tell us in as much detail, because this is critical, if you can possibly remember just what you saw and what occurred?

A. To get these things in exact chronological order is a little difficult,—

Q. I understand.

A. Mr. Watts, but I can tell you a number of things that happened in the period of time before I saw him.

Q. Well, let's—excuse me. Let's try to do it this way, if you can.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have a very distinct recollection of meeting General Walker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, you can mentally close your eyes and go back and relive that experience. Could you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As nearly as you can from the time of that experience, I wish you would follow the same process of recollection and try to project to the Jury, and extend back just what occurred from the time you and General Walker were talking in this vicinity (indicating) until you worked your way [fol. 1565] back to the YMCA.

A. This is moving backward?

Q. Yes, sir, moving backward.

A. This happened prior to that time?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. I remember, of course, that I was standing approximately here when I saw General Walker.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. My recollection is that I had come from this section of the Grove, I mean the Circle, to that point. Because it had been over here that I had watched the Highway Patrol leave. I remember that very distinctly. I had been over talking to some of the students here, and my recollection places this as being before seeing General Walker. I know I had been back—I also remember that when I heard the students saying, "Now, we have a leader, now we have a leader . . ."

Q. That's right.

A. That this was down again in this general area closer to the monument. It was at a point where I would say perhaps—along the walk here, or in this general area to the south (indicating), but I was moving in this direction (indicating).

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And so that I would say that I remember hearing the [fol. 1566] students say this here (indicating), my recollection being this was just very shortly before I saw the General himself.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. So, that, reconstructing it again, I imagine it was moving back in this direction when I turned back in the direction of the Grove—of the flagpole and the Circle and saw him.

Now, I had also been in the Y, as I say, earlier. This second visit to the Y is hard for me to relate to this whole sequence we are now talking about, but apparently it must have been prior to my going over here to talk to the—I mean, where I was talking to the students in this street.

I know I was in the Y several minutes there, as I said.

Q. And then, meanwhile, working your way backward from the encounter with Walker timewise to your first appearance in the YMCA, you have pretty well summarized it, now. Did anything else happen prior to that, and working your way on back to the YMCA?

A. To get the time sequence here—

Q. That's right.

A. Prior to what?

Q. You are working your way back.

[fol. 1567] A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw Walker here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just before you saw him you said you had been strolling along in here (indicating).

A. I had seen him from approximately here (indicating).

Q. You think you had walked down here near the monument and walked back up, occupied this position here, and had seen him.

Now, prior to that, as I understand, you had been working around in this northeast—northeast quadrant, along in here, remonstrating with the students, taking bricks and rocks and bottles from them, and endeavoring to quieten them down?

A. This is when I first came out of the Y?

Q. Right.

A. Yes, sir, right after we stopped the Deputy Sheriff.

Q. All right. Now, working it again the other way, we have you coming out of the Y, spending about less than five minutes, coming on out, seeing the officer, or watching him leave. You drove—walked on down with Rev. Wofford Smith, down to the northeast quadrant, you spent some time down there, then you walked back here, walked back to this [fol. 1568] point, saw General Walker at this point, and talked to General Walker?

A. The only thing we left out there was the second visit to the Y.

Q. That's right, and in here sometime you said approximately five minutes that you were in the Y?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right, sir. Now, then, had General Walker come striding up University Avenue, met the leaders of the mob in a position near the Confederate monument, conferred with them a few minutes, held up by the portly dressed—portly well-dressed man that approached the group, two leaders of the mob, one waving a big Confederate flag, and each taking him by the arm, and they positioned themselves in front of 1,000 people in the vicinity of the Confederate monument, walked in a charge across the northeast quadrant of the Circle, arrived at a point just northwest of the Lyceum—flagpole, veered off to the left and rushed forward, through the missiles, the tear gas was fired, and they all raced back—had that occurred from the time you arrived at the YMCA and from the time you met General Walker here you undoubtedly must have seen it, wouldn't you?

A. Unless I was in the Y at the time, or perhaps down in this part of the Circle (indicating).

[fol. 1569] Q. Yes.

A. Now, there was some time in the Y, and there was the time here (indicating). I know that there had been a very heavy volley of tear gas fired just before I saw General Walker here, because this Circle had cleared out pretty well then, when he was out there with the group, when I first saw him.

Q. From the time you were walking down in here, went back over here, and saw General Walker, you didn't hear any comment among the crowd that Walker had led a charge, did you?

A. No, sir, I didn't hear that he had led a charge, no, sir. I heard the comment, "Now, we have a leader."

Q. "Now we have a leader," and that was when you were in the vicinity of the flagpole?

A. No, not the flagpole.

Q. Strike that, I mean in this vicinity (indicating).

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, in terms, you were there and you are endeavoring to relive that dramatic incident that I have outlined, 1,000 people following General Walker and two men in a charge against the Marshals across the northeast part of the Circle, they would have had to run over you to make that kind of a charge, unless it would have been in the five [fol. 1570] minutes you were in the YMCA?

A. The 1,000 people is the only thing, I believe, I would have seen 1,000. Now, there were lots of things going on that I couldn't see. I didn't know about during that period. But a crowd that included a thousand people—if they had all moved at once across the Circle.

Q. You must have seen them, if that had occurred?

A. Again, it depends on the size of the crowd, and it depends on whether I was in the YMCA, or perhaps down in this area (indicating).

Q. And from your knowledge of the students and from your observation of what was going on out there, if General Walker had led that charge during the five minutes you were in the YMCA you know that there would have been complete bedlam when you got back out there, wouldn't there?

A. Of course there was bedlam pretty well all the time.

Q. I know, but in other words, there was a lot of sporadic activity, wasn't there?

A. Yes, sir, quite a bit of activity along before then.

Q. Now, in your deposition previously taken in this case, I asked you questions and—I asked you questions at that time?

[fol. 1571] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wasn't it your testimony then that prior to the speech on the monument, there was no concerted activity that you saw, it was all sporadic, by groups of five or ten and so forth?

A. What I was trying to do was compare that with what took place after the speech on the monument and I said this, and I will say it now, that I saw nothing that involved the numbers before the speech at the monument—

Q. That's right.

A. That I saw after the speech at the monument.

Q. That's right.

A. After the speech at the monument, there seemed to be more coordination, or let's put it this way, they were moving more as a unit. There were more people involved. Now, there were a number of charges and advances on the Lyceum prior to the speech on the monument, but they were not of the magnitude that came after the speech.

[fol. 1572] Q. And didn't you previously testify that they were of a sporadic nature?

A. You asked me about if that word would be adequate and I said, "In a sense," as I recall.

Q. Yes, sir.

A. My testimony there. That certainly, by "sporadic," if we mean that it was not of the same magnitude as what happened after the speech, yes, sir.

But this did not mean that there were not groups that moved in the direction of the Lyceum.

Q. All right.

A. And did attack the Marshals.

Q. I didn't say that.

A. —before that, yes, sir.

Q. The previous testimony as I understood it, was—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —that you said before the speech on the monument, there were small, disorganized groups with apparently no unified leader, or words to that effect, wasn't that your concept of it?

A. Again, in terms relative to the size—

Q. Right.

A. —of after the monument, the charge after the monument.

Q. Now will you take your seat, please, sir.

[fol. 1573] A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now Reverend Gray, was there not a lull in the rioting shortly before General Walker mounted the monument and shortly before the Highway Patrol left?
